Re: Public Records Request 19-19

Dear Mr. Kasper:

The Office of Governor Eric J. Holcomb (Governor's Office) received your request for the following:

- 1. All communication of Governor Eric Holcomb, Chief of Staff Earl Goode, Deputy Chief of Staff Cris Johnston, Deputy Chief of Staff Allison Karns, Debbie Hohlt, specifically pertaining to the Northern Indiana Public Service Company rate case and integrated resource plan, and Senate Bill 472. Search terms that can be used in this request are limited to "Vectren", "CenterPoint", "NiSource", "NIPSCO", "Wheatfield", "Michigan City", "Schahfer", "Chancellor", "Hallaway", "White Stallion", "hhqventures", "IURC", "Utility Regulatory Commission", "coal", "eop.gov", "Soliday".*
- 2. Phone logs of Governor Eric Holcomb between March 25, 2019 and April 15, 2019.*
- 3. Calendars of Governor Eric Holcomb, Chief of Staff Earl Goode, Deputy Chief of Staff Cris Johnston, Deputy Chief of Staff Allison Karns, Debbie Hohlt for March 2019 and April 2019.*

Three days later, you revised your request by providing the following:

I'd also like to narrow Part 1 of my request. The timeframe can be limited to March 1, 2019, through the processing date of the request. Thanks.

Please find responsive records for parts 1 and 2 of your request. Please note that the search for records related to part 1, per your clarification, included a search for records through November, the final date of processing of your request.

Regarding item 3, we are withholding production of these record pursuant to Indiana law. Specifically, IC 5-14-3-4(b)(7) permits an agency to withhold diaries, journals, or other personal notes serving as the functional equivalent of a diary or journal. The calendars of Governor Holcomb, Chief of Staff Earl Goode, and Deputy Chief of Staff Cris Johnston fall under this exception. See Op. of the Public Access Counselor 05-FC-152 (upholding denial of Purdue University President's calendar in its entirety). In addition, Allison Karns was not an employee of the Governor's Office during the requested time frame and Debbie Hohlt is a contractor and this office therefore does not have access to her calendar.

Further, some records have been redacted and/or withheld from disclosure and are not being produced in this response, in accordance with, and as permitted by, the laws of the State of Indiana, as follows: Indiana Code section 5-14-3-4(b)(6), records that are advisory or deliberative material.

The person responsible for the denial and/or withholding of records is Mr. Joseph R. Heerens, General Counsel.

In light of the above, we have completed our response to your public records requests and are closing our file as to those requests at this time.

Sincerely,

/s/ Cynthia Carrasco

You have probably read this before but here is a good September 2018 article from the Rensselaer newspaper that discusses NIPSCO closure of Schahfer stations.

Breaking: NIPSCO may close all four Schahfer stations

NIPSCO's Schahfer Generating Station in Wheatfield as it appeared in 2011.

The Northern Indiana Publicity Service Company (NIPSCO) issued a press release on Wednesday, Sept. 19, disclosing tentative plans to close all four of its generating stations at the Schahfer Plant in Wheatfield by 2023, and not just the two originally planned.

Jasper County Assessor Dawn Hoffman notably approached the County Commissioners several weeks ago with an important warning about the NIPSCO plant, when just two stations were scheduled to be shut down. Those two alone were set to cause a potential, massive tax increase after 2023, exceeding the state's tax cap limit.

The county was originally forecast to receive a tax increase of as much as nine percent if only two of the generating stations closed. The potential closure of the other two now doubles this concern.

NIPSCO's Plans

Representatives from NIPSCO recently held a meeting on Wednesday to discuss its potential plans with other groups. Described as a "20-year planning meeting," it took place in the vicinity of Fair Oaks Farms.

"While not yet final, NIPSCO outlined the option for its electric generation strategy at a public meeting with customers, consumers, representatives, environmental organizations and other stakeholders taking part in the company's Integrated Resource Planning process," the company stated on Wednesday.

NIPSCO also stated that "the company has been — and will continue — working with stakeholders and regulators to solicit further input to aid in formulating its final plan, which the company plans to submit to the Indiana Regulatory Commission by [Monday] Nov. 1, 2018."

NIPSCO President Violet Sistovaris stated that the planning process will create "a vision for the future that is better for our customers and it's consistent with our goal to transition to the best cost, cleanest electric supply mix available while maintaining reliability, diversity and flexibility for technology and market changes."

The company's timeline currently shows "the expected retirement of its R.M. Schahfer Generating Station (Units 14, 15, 17 and 18) located in Wheatfield, Ind. no later than 2023."

The company further stated that its Michigan City Generating Station is also expected to close by 2028.

NIPSCO stated the closure means that approximately 1,800 megawatts of coal-fired generation will be retired, which the company said is meant to "significantly accelerate carbon reduction across the NIPSCO footprint and will result in further reductions, both in timing and magnitude, beyond previously announced targets."

Nick Meyer, NIPSCO's Director of External Communications, stated that the company will be relying on other sources, such as solar power and/or wind power to help make up for the tentative retirement of the stations, along with reserve battery power.

NIPSCO stated that more information about its electric supply strategies and the IRP process can be found at NIPSCO.com/IRP.

Environmental concerns

The company's decisions to retire the generating stations are apparently tied to pressure from environmental protection groups.

The Sierra Club, which has described itself as "America's largest and most influential grassroots environmental organization, with more than 3 million members and supporters," was in contact with those present during Wednesday's meeting. The club recently stated that NIPSCO's presentations during the meeting constituted "a plan to retire its last remaining coal-burning power plants within 10 years and replace them with renewable energy in Northwest Indiana."

The club further stated that community members shared a video montage that depicted "NIPSCO customer concerns which still must be addressed in the company's transition plan." "NIPSCO revealed that, based on their modeling, the most-viable option for serving electric customers would be to retire the Schahfer Super Polluter coal-burning power plant by 2023 and the Michigan City coal plant in 2028, noting that it is less expensive than keeping those plants running -- saving customers $4.3 billion over running those plants through 2035," the club stated.

Steve Francis, Chairperson of the Energy Committee for the Sierra Club's Hoosier Chapter, called the move "an unprecedented commitment in Indiana to a forward-looking plan that benefits ratepayers, reduces carbon emissions, and improves the long term health of the region."

"In recognizing the need to address pollution concerns in the next decade, we will continue to engage thoroughly in this process," he said.

According to the club, NIPSCO's modeling also showed that "renewable energy and energy efficiency are the best option to replace fossil fuels in all their retirement scenarios ... NIPSCO officials indicated they also plan to keep their existing gas power plant in West Terre Haute for at least 20 years."

"NIPSCO's announcement to retire coal is an important first step towards environmental justice; however, we must ensure NIPSCO meets all the demands of the communities they serve, and are not making profit a priority over the people," said La'Tonya Troutman, local volunteer for the Sierra Club's Northwest Indiana Beyond Coal Campaign.

The Beyond Coal Campaign has notably been holding community conversations on the topic as recently as last weekend, north of Jasper County.

Troutman added that, "while the modeling presentation shows us NIPSCO's viable plan, they must also work on steps needed to aid communities impacted by years of degradation."

The campaign's full demands for NIPSCO include the following:

1. Create a process that is participatory, inclusive and justice-driven while implementing their plan.
2. Prepare a cleanup and recovery plan for communities that establishes a course for the safe, steadfast and equitable decommissioning of NIPSCO's coal ash ponds as well as reclamation of coal plant and lakefront property for other uses as determined by the community.
3. Prepare a just transition for the impacted workers that includes comprehensive job training opportunities in renewable energy and energy efficiency technologies.

Troutman concluded by stating, "We will continue to advocate for communities all around the region who have expressed serious concerns with NIPSCO's two coal-burning power plants.

We will work to ensure that NIPSCO will do the hard work of planning these retirements in a way that listens to public concerns, helps transition workers, and cleans up and restores communities negatively impacted by their historic pollution."

The county's response

After Wednesday's meeting, Stephen Eastridge, Executive Director of the Jasper County Economic Development Organization, stated that the organization had spoken with NIPSCO about the decision.

"This decision was a part of [NIPSCO's] regular electric supply planning process - referred to as the Integrated Resource Plan (IRP)- which, has determined that the most cost-effective and feasible option for NIPSCO customers is to accelerate the retirement of coal-fired generation in the next five years," the JCEDO stated. "... This unfortunate development in the future of the R.M Schahfer Generating Station in Jasper County is a blow to our communities and tax payers; however, NIPSCO has determined that the most viable option moving forward is renewable energy systems."

The organization said it is now attempting to determine what the best path forward is for county investment, noting that "we are fortunate to have renewables in the pipeline - both prospective solar and wind developments."

"We have had the pleasure of working with NIPSCO and their team over the lifetime of the Schahfer Generating Station and are grateful for their many contributions to our community" Eastridge said. "We are disappointed in this news, but understand that the power generating industry is moving towards renewable energy alternatives."

Anyone seeking more information from the JCEDO is encouraged to call (219) 866-3080, or send a fax to (219) 866-3010.

The Rensselaer Republican will have more information as this story develops.

Good morning Earl,

My client, INDIEC (Indiana Industrial Energy Consumers) has asked me to see if we could meet with you to share our concerns about the IURC moratorium in SB 472. Along with the IEA, CAC, and others, INDIEC has concerns about the moratorium's impact on pending and future IURC matters, and we would appreciate getting on your schedule to discuss INDIEC's concerns in more detail.

Thanks very much,
Miriam

Gov Eric - good to chat yest. Outlined below is the economic impact and footprint of the three projects. We are a pretty new company to the state and you can see the size we are playing at. Our team is talking to John Hammond in your office and also meeting with Rep. Solidly tomorrow as well.

I attached some info and also the proposed legislative fix that would solve the Unintended (I think) consequences.

I'll touch base on weds as discussed.

Many thanks for guidance and consideration.

Phil

Here is our investment pipeline in Indiana:

Bluff Point wind $200 MM (already in service)

Jordan Creek wind: $530 MM in 2020

Jasper County wind: $530 MM planned for 2021

I have attached a fact sheet for the Jordan Creek project that we have a contract with NIPSCO that is pending before the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission (IURC) for approval.

Attached is language that would work for us to amend the bill. This is an update from what I sent to Phil yesterday based on some additional input from our outside legal team today.

The wind industry is meeting with Rep. Soliday tomorrow morning.

Jordan Creek Wind Energy Center

Overview

- » Located in Benton and Warren counties in Indiana
- » Developed, permitted and constructed by a subsidiary of NextEra Energy Resources, LLC
- » Expected maximum capacity of 400 megawatts produced by approximately 160 GE turbines
- » Each turbine will be 89 meters tall from the ground to the hub in the center of the blades
- » Commercial operation is currently targeted for November 2020

Benefits

- » Provides employment opportunities
- » Adds tax base to the counties
- » Delivers landowner payments
- » Creates no air or water pollution
- » Uses no water in power generation
- » Allows land to remain in agricultural use
- » Supports economy through purchases of regional goods and services

Projected Local Economic Impact

Construction Jobs:	Approx. 300
Full-Time Operations Jobs:	8 - 10
Capital Cost:	Approx. $530 Million*
Property Taxes:	Approx. $122 Million*
Landowner Payments:	More than $90 Million*

*Estimated over first 35 years of the project. All figures are estimated and subject to change.

About NextEra Energy Resources, LLC

- » We are a subsidiary of NextEra Energy, Inc., a leading renewable energy developer in North America.
- » We are the world's largest generator of renewable energy from the wind and the sun.
- » We operate more than 120 wind projects in 21 states and Canada with more than 14,000 megawatts of generation from more than 9,500 wind turbines.
- » Approximately 99 percent of our electricity comes from clean or renewable sources.

Sec. 6. The task force shall do the following:

- (1) Examine the state's existing policies regulating electric generation portfolios.
- (2) Examine how possible shifts in electric generation portfolios may impact the reliability, system resilience, and affordability of electric utility service.
- (3) Evaluate whether state regulators have the appropriate authority and statutory flexibility to consider the statewide impact of the changes described in subdivision (2), while still protecting ratepayer interests.

Sec. 7. The task force shall develop recommendations for the general assembly and the governor concerning the following:

- (1) Outcomes that must be achieved in order to overcome any identified challenges concerning Indiana's electric generation portfolios, along with a timeline for achieving those outcomes.
- (2) Whether existing state policy and statutes enable state regulators to properly consider the statewide impact of changing electric generation portfolios and, if not, the best approaches to enable state regulators to consider those impacts.
- (3) How to maintain reliable, resilient, and affordable electric service for all electric utility consumers, while encouraging the adoption and deployment of advanced energy technologies.

Sec. 8. The task force shall:

- (1) issue a report setting forth the recommendations required by section 7 of this chapter; and
- (2) not later than December 1, 2020, submit the report to the following:
 - (A) The executive director of the legislative services agency for distribution to the members of the general assembly. The report submitted to the executive director of the legislative services agency under this clause must be in an electronic format under IC 5-14-6.
 - (B) The governor.
 - (C) The chair of the Indiana utility regulatory commission.
 - (D) The utility consumer counselor.

1 Sec. 9. The legislative services agency shall provide staff support

35 (d) Not later than July 1, 2020, the commission shall issue to:

36 (1) the governor;

37 (2) the legislative council; and

38 (3) the 21st century energy policy development task force

1 established by IC 2-5-45-2;
 2 a final report containing the commission's findings and
 3 recommendations on the topics outlined in subsection (b). The 4 report to the legislative council under this subsection must be in an
 5 electronic format under IC 5-14-6.

6 (e) Subject to subsections (f) through (i), after April 30, 2019,
 7 and before January 1, 2021, the commission may not issue a final
 8 order in any matter or proceeding that:

9 (1) requests approval of:

10 (A) a certificate of public convenience and necessity; or

11 (B) a purchased power agreement;

12 (2) the commission determines would have a ~~an~~ negative impact on the 13 generation capacity, system reliability, or system resilience of 14 electric utility service on a statewide basis, whether in the 15 near term or on a long term basis; and 16 (3) is:

17 (A) pending as of; or

18 (B) filed on or after;

19 May 1, 2019.

20 This subsection does not apply to a general rate case or to an 21 electric utility's request for the approval of a retail rate adjustment
 22 mechanism.

23 (f) Except as provided in subsection (g), subsection (e) does not 24 apply in any individual matter or proceeding concerning a
 25 proposed:

26 (1) electric generation facility;

27 (2) change in fuel source or other resource used to generate
 28 electricity; or

29 (3) purchased power agreement;

30 involving less than five hundred (500) megawatts of 31 generating capacity.

32 (4) electric generation facility that has received a declination of jurisdiction order from the commission pursuant to I.C. 8-1-2.5-5 prior to May 1, 2019.

33 (5) purchased power agreement that is: (i) consistent with an electric utility's Integrated Resource Plan submitted to the commission prior to May 1, 2019; and (ii) entered into pursuant to an RFP bidding process conducted prior to May 1, 2019.

34 (g) Subject to subsections (h) and (i), after April 30, 2019, and 35 before January 1, 2021, the commission may not issue a final order
 36 in any individual matter or proceeding concerning a proposed:

37 (1) electric generation facility;

38 (2) change in fuel source or other resource used to generate
39 electricity; or
40 (3) purchased power agreement;

1 regardless of the number of megawatts of generating capacity
 2 involved in the individual matter or proceeding, once the total
 3 number of megawatts of generating capacity approved by the 4 commission after April 30, 2019, and before January 1, 2021, in all
 5 matters or proceedings described in subdivisions (1) through (3)
 6 exceeds ten thousand (10,000) megawatts on a statewide basis.

7 (h) If the commission determines under subsection (e) or (g) that 8 a final order may not be issued in a particular matter or 9 proceeding, the commission may, in an expedited proceeding not 10 to exceed ninety (90) days, grant relief from the commission's 11 determination and issue a final emergency order in the particular
 12 matter if the following conditions are met:

13 (1) The electric utility involved in the matter or proceeding
 14 files with the commission a petition seeking emergency relief
 15 from the commission's determination.

16 (2) The commission determines after:

17 (A) conducting a public hearing on the necessity for the 18 relief sought by the electric utility; and

19 (B) receiving public testimony from the appropriate
 20 regional transmission organizations;

21 that an emergency exists, or that delaying or denying the 22 issuance of an order in the matter would cause adverse impacts
 23 to ratepayers or present significant adverse risks to the statewide or regional electric generation capacity, system reliability, or system resilience.

24 (i) Subsections (e) and (g) do not prohibit any of the following
 25 after April 30, 2019, and before January 1, 2021:

26 (1) An electric utility from filing a petition for approval of:

27 (A) a certificate of public convenience and necessity; or

28 (B) a purchased power agreement.

29 (2) The commission, electric utilities, parties, or intervenors
 30 from conducting any procedural matters preceding a final 31 order in a pending proceeding, including establishing 32 procedural schedules, filing testimony and exhibits, holding 33 hearings, conducting conferences, and taking such other 34 actions necessary for the commission's final determination in 35 the matter.

36 (3) The commission from issuing a final order denying all or 37 part of an electric utility's petition for approval of:

- 1 (A) a certificate of public convenience and necessity; or
 - 2 (B) a purchased power agreement;
 - 3 if the denial of all or part of the petition would not have an

Indiana Republicans push for moratorium on new power plants | 2019-04-04 | Indianapolis Business Journal

6-7 minutes

In a sudden legislative move that is raising alarms for utilities and environmentalists alike, Indiana Republicans want to put a moratorium on new, large power plants just as several large electrical providers are gearing up to retire aging coal-fired generating units and replace them with renewable energy and natural gas.

The House Utilities Committee passed an amendment along party lines Wednesday that would prohibit state regulators from approving any new power plants, new power contracts or changes in fuel sources until Jan. 1, 2021.

The moratorium would apply to generating capacity larger than 250 megawatts, meaning huge generating plants.

The measure also would require the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission to conduct a comprehensive study of the transition away from coal to other fuel sources, including their impact on the electrical grid.

Rep. Ed Soliday, the committee's chairman, introduced the amendment, saying the state needs to take a close look at whether a big shift from coal to natural gas and renewables would throw the grid out of balance, make it less reliable or less resilient. He said the moratorium has the support of Gov. Eric Holcomb.

The amendment was attached to an unrelated Senate bill on sewer and water connections. The committee passed the amendment without taking any testimony. It must still go before the full House and the Senate for a vote.

The move comes just a few months after two major utilities announced plans to retire much of their coal-fired generating capacity and shift to cheaper fuel sources, and other utilities are still drawing up plans for how they will generate power. Utilities can sometimes qualify for millions of dollars in tax credits if they switch to cleaner energy.

"We're very concerned about this," said Mark Maassel, president of the Indiana Energy Association, which represents large, investor-owned utilities. "The interruption of the normal flow of things at the utility regulatory commission is problematic for us." He added that his association has expressed its concerns to Soliday.

Northern Indiana Public Service Co., based in Merrillville, wants to retire four of its five remaining coal-fired electricity-burning units within five years and the other within a decade.

The company has said the move will save it $4 billion over the next 20 years.

NIPSCO said it is still reviewing the legislation, and declined to say whether it would jeopardize its upcoming projects.

"It is too early in the process to comment on the potential impacts of this legislation," NIPSCO spokesman Thomas Stevens said in an email on Thursday. "As we have done in the past, we will continue to work with all stakeholders to find electric generation options which provide the most reliable and affordable electricity for our customers in northern Indiana.” Vectren Corp., based in Evansville, plans to retire three of its four coal-burning generating units by 2024, increase the use of natural gas as a fuel source and build a 50-megawatt solar farm. The company did not return a phone call seeking comment.

Whether the moratorium would affect any current plans by Indiana utilities is unclear. Maassel at the IEA said the measure could “potentially” stall plans that are now before state regulators. The bill contains an exception for emergencies, but does not define what would constitute an emergency.

“All utilities, frankly, are evaluating this amendment to see how it impacts them,” he said. The Office of Utility Consumer Counselor, which represents the interests of Indiana’s electrical customers, declined to comment. “We’re still reviewing the amendment and are not ready to weigh in,” spokesman Anthony Swinger said.

Several environmental and consumer groups blasted the moratorium, saying it could slow down investment in cleaner fuel sources, including wind, solar and natural gas. They also say it would prop up Indiana’s struggling coal industry, just as utilities are on the verge of retiring coal-fired generating units and switching over to other fuels.

“This could dampen utility-scale sustainable energy interest and investment in Indiana,” the Hoosier Environmental Council said in a statement. It also said the amendment was “rammed through with no public testimony.”

Citizens Action Coalition of Indiana, a grassroots consumer group, said the moratorium makes no sense because it flies in the face of a widespread national move toward cheaper, cleaner electricity.

“The only winner here is coal,” said Kerwin Olson, the group’s executive director. “This is absolutely a decision to slow down, if not stop, the planned retirement of multiple coal-fired power plants in Indiana and directly interferes in decisions Indiana utilities have already made to transition away from coal.”

The Indiana Coal Council, an advocacy group for the mining industry, did not have an immediate statement on the moratorium.

The coal industry in Indiana, like much of the nation, has been struggling as electric utilities have been retiring aging coal-burning units and moving to cheaper fuels. In recent months, two major utilities have announced plans to shift hard away from coal.

Indiana has been moving away from coal for years, but the shift has accelerated recently. In 2016, Indianapolis Power & Light Co. converted its Harding Street Station power plant—which used to burn 2 million tons of coal a year—to natural gas. It has also converted its Eagle Valley power plant in Martinsville to natural gas.

In 2010, Indiana had 26 active coal-burning power generating units. By 2016, that number had fallen to 13.

IURC's Study:

- Look at the Statewide impacts of:
 - Transitions in fuel sources and resources to generate electricity
 - New and emerging technologies for electricity generation, capacity, system reliability and resiliency, and cost
 - Evaluate the likely timelines for implementing these new and emerging technologies
- Interim progress report must be submitted to the interim study committee on energy, utilities, and telecommunications
- Completed study is due no later than July 1, 2020

Note: The IURC study is due in July 2020, whereas the Taskforce will be issue a report with recommendations in Dec 2020.

Note: The IURC study is focused on evaluating the impacts of the changing energy landscape, but it does not require study to evaluate the regulatory landscape and whether the has the necessary tools to manage impacts from the changing energy environment.

BUTTIGIEG TALKS CAPITALISM, FAITH ON MEET THE PRESS: South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg began the week he is expected to formally announce for the Democratic presidential nomination by talking about capitalism and faith on NBC's Meet The Press this morning (Howey Politics Indiana). Buttigieg will announce his candidacy in South Bend next Sunday. Host Chuck Todd asked the mayor, "Are you a capitalist?" Buttigieg responded, "Sure. America is a capitalist society, but it's got to be democratic capitalism and that part is really important. It's slipping away from us. When capitalism comes into tension with democracy, which is more important? I believe democracy is more important. When you have capitalism capturing democracy, when you have a regulatory capture where powerful corporations are able to arrange the rules to their benefit, that's not real capitalism. If you want to see what happens with capitalism without democracy, you can see it very clearly in Russia. It turns into crony capitalism and that turns into oligarchy. I know the temptation especially from the committariat is to align everybody as dots on a spectrum. That's not how most voters think. Think of the number of voters mathematically in St. Joseph County, Indiana who must have voted for Obama and Trump and Mike Pence and me. There's a lot more to this than an ideological analysis, especially with the ideology in our country so scrambled, having a president who doesn't even have an ideology, just a style, undertaking a hostile takeover of the Republican Party."

MAYOR PETE ON TRUMP AND GOD: Mayor Buttigieg was asked about President Trump and God, with Vice President Mike Pence and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo saying that "God" wanted him to become president (Howey Politics Indiana). Buttigieg responded, "It's something that really frustrates me because the hypocrisy is so unbelievable. Here you have somebody who not only acts in a way not consistent with anything I hear in Scripture and church, where it is about lifting up the least among us and taking care of strangers, which is another word for immigrants, and making sure you're focusing your effort on the poor. But also personally how you're supposed to conduct yourself, not chest-thumping and 'look at me,' but humbling yourself before others. Foot washing is one of the central images in the New Testament and we see the diametric opposite of that in this presidency. There was a process where he began to pretend to be pro life and govern accordingly, which is good enough to bring a number of evangelicals to his side. I can't believe someone who is writing hush money checks to adult film actresses is somebody they should be lifting up."

NISOURCE TO CUT GREENHOUSE EMISSIONS BY 90%: NiSource plans to slash greenhouse gas emissions from electricity generation by 90 percent by 2030, as compared to 2005, as it takes coal-fired plants offline in favor of greener energy sources (Pete, NWI Times). The Merrillville-based parent company of NIPSCO unveiled new emission reduction targets in its 2018 Integrated Annual Report that it says builds upon "the aggressive environmental targets the company announced in 2016." "NiSource has long been committed to improving the environmental performance of our energy systems and making it more affordable for our customers," NiSource President and CEO Joe Hamrock said. "The updated targets we're highlighting in our 2018 Integrated Annual Report demonstrate our continued progress doing just that. We'll continue to make our business more sustainable for our customers, the communities we serve, our employees and our investors." By 2030, NiSource aims to reduce nitrogen oxide, sulfur dioxide and mercury emissions by 99% as compared to 2005 levels. The utility hopes to reduce water withdrawal by 99%, wastewater discharge by 99% and coal ash generation by 100%. After being pressured by environmental groups like the Sierra Club to reduce its carbon footprint, the company now aims to retire all its coal-fired power plants by 2028. Instead, NIPSCO will generate power with wind, solar and battery storage technology.

SOLIDAY DENIES AMENDMENT AIMED AT 'SAVING COAL': At a time when two of the state's biggest electric utilities are planning to retire a majority of their coal power, a House committee has voted to put a moratorium on such decisions (IndyStar). The House Utilities committee voted 8-4 on an amendment that would temporarily prevent Indiana regulators from approving large projects that generate electricity for Hoosiers. The new amendment, which was added to Senate Bill 472 on Wednesday without testimony, would prohibit the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission from approving plans written by electric utilities to change the way they generate electricity. The moratorium would be in effect from April 30 to January 1, 2021. Rep. Ed Soliday, R-Valparaiso, said the amendment was necessary to slow down the rapid changes happening in Indiana's energy markets. It would give a statewide energy task force, formed by another amendment to the same bill, the time to properly study and make recommendations about the state's energy future. "If we don't do something that slows things down we will have a policy dictated by decisions" made by utilities and the IURC, Soliday said at a House Utilities committee meeting this week. Opponents of the measure say it's just another way to keep coal alive in the state, an idea that Soliday vehemently denied in this week's committee meeting. "Neither amendment is a coal amendment," Soliday said on Wednesday. But Kerwin Olson, executive director of the Citizens Action Coalition, said that he finds that hard to believe, as the only parties benefiting from the amendment are coal companies. "This is sort of the Hail Mary, in our opinion, for coal, because the only way that we can keep burning coal is to effectively stop the commission from issuing orders for new generation, which sort of requires the coal plants to stay open," Olson said.

TIPPING POINT REACHED ON COAL: Is the Indiana coal industry heading for the scrap pile? Its biggest traditional customers, electrical utilities, are quickly moving to less-expensive fuel sources—including natural gas, solar and wind—to power their generating plants. The shift, years in the making, is accelerating and shows no signs of letting up (Russell, IBJ). Three years ago, Indianapolis Power & Light sent a shudder through the coal industry when it converted its Harding Street Station power plant—which used to burn 2 million tons of coal a year—to natural gas, ending a coal tradition that began when the plant opened in 1931. A few months later, IPL converted the coal-fired units at its Eagle Valley power plant in Martinsville to natural gas. Vectren Corp., based in Evansville, plans to retire three of its four coal-burning generating units by 2024. In their place, Vectren will substantially increase the use of natural gas as a fuel source and build a 50-megawatt solar farm. “We have demonstrated a tipping point where coal is no longer the exclusive solution for southwest Indiana customers and continues to be highly risky due to plant age and environmental regulations,” Mike Roeder, Vectren’s vice president of government affairs, told the Indiana House Utilities Committee last month. And last fall, in the latest bombshell for the coal industry, Merrillville-based Northern Indiana Public Service Co. said it plans to retire four of its five remaining coal-fired electricity-generating units within five years and the other within a decade. The move will save NIPSCO $4 billion over the next 20 years, the company said. It plans to generate 65 percent of its power from solar, wind and other renewables by 2028, and at least 25 percent from natural gas, as it shifts toward less-costly energy sources. “As utilities look further into the future, where they expect things to trend, that dynamic is not changing,” said Doug Gotham, director of the State Utility Forecasting Group at Purdue University. “On an economic basis, coal has trouble competing.”

HAMILTON ELECTION BOARD TO PROBE CARMEL ALLEGATION: The Hamilton County Election Board plans to look into allegations that Carmel Mayor Jim Brainard’s re-election campaign offered money to his challenger to drop out of the race. But the meeting will be after the May 7 primary election involving both candidates (Quinn, IBJ). The board has tentatively slated a meeting for May 14 to meet with both campaigns and the two major political parties to hear testimony and determine whether the people involved have evidence supporting the claim. Election board member Ray Alder, a Republican, likened the meeting to a probable cause hearing in a court case. Last week, the Hamilton County Democratic Party called for an investigation into the allegations made by Republican mayoral candidate Fred Glynn that Brainard’s campaign offered him $140,000 to withdraw from the race. Joe Weingarten, chairman of the county Democratic Party, told IBJ he filed a request with the election board in order to get to the bottom of the claims, which were originally reported in a March 21 Current in Carmel article. Glynn told the Current that the alleged bribe took place during a Feb. 3 meeting involving Glynn’s former campaign manager Dan Hennessey, Brainard consultant Allan Sutherlin and Hamilton County GOP chair Laura Campbell, who is also a Carmel city councilor. Hennessey then reported the bribe to Glynn—who said he turned down the offer—before resigning from his campaign to work with Brainard, the Current reported. The Brainard campaign said it is not employing Hennessey or paying him directly. Stakeholder International, a consulting firm owned by Sutherlin, hired Hennessey. Sutherlin and Campbell told the Current there was a bribe offered during the meeting, but it didn’t come from Brainard’s team. Instead, Hennessey asked for the money on Glynn’s behalf, Sutherlin said.

FARMERS TELL PENCE TO PASS USMCA, END TARIFFS: It was anything but a typical day at Lamb Farms in Boone County when the Vice President and a gaggle of media showed up for a visit. “I told the President I was going home to Indiana to listen to farmers,” Vice President Mike Pence told the group of about 50 Hoosier farmers who gathered for the event. True to his word, Pence did more listening than talking during the 90 minute event (Truitt, Hoosier Ag Today). The message the former Indiana Governor heard was loud and clear: pass USMCA, remove the tariffs, strike a deal with China, and get the farm economy back on track. The listening sessions were emceed by Indiana Farm Bureau President Randy Kron who told HAT Pence got the message, “I think he heard the message that agriculture needs the USMCA. We have got to get this done.” In his closing remarks, the Vice President said the President is committed to getting the deal ratified by Congress this spring, “President Trump has done his job it is time for Congress to do theirs.” Kron said Farm Bureau has made adoption of USMCA by Congress its top legislative priority this spring. Jeff Demerly, from Wolcott, told Pence, “I know of some young farmers who will not be able to start their tractors this spring because they just don’t have the money to farm.” Mike Beard, a corn grower from Clinton County, told HAT that farmers are beginning to lose patience with the lack of progress on trade and continued low crop prices.

YOUNG SAYS USMCA PASSAGE UNCERTAIN : President Trump’s replacement for the North American Free Trade Agreement faces an uncertain path to approval by Congress (WIBC). Indiana Republican Todd Young says he supports the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement. He says Indiana’s heavy concentration of manufacturing and agriculture makes a trade deal with America’s neighbors critical. And he says the deal improves on NAFTA by covering services as well as goods. But Young says it’s unclear whether Trump’s renegotiated NAFTA has the votes to pass the Democratic House. He says many members have policy disagreements with the deal, and charges some Democrats want to deny Trump a victory. Trump added a complication with a threat to impose tariffs on Mexican auto imports even if the trade deal is approved, unless Mexico makes progress in controlling illegal border crossings. Young says he doesn’t expect that threat to affect the debate -- he says lawmakers are focused on the deal itself. He’s steering clear of commenting on the tariff threat itself.

KNIGHT RETURNS TO IU CAMPUS: Former IU men’s basketball coach Bob Knight returned to IU’s campus Saturday afternoon to take in a baseball game at Bart Kaufman Field (Drummond, Indiana Daily Student). The 78-year-old Knight arrived prior to the start of IU’s afternoon doubleheader against Penn State, marking his first public and most visible appearance on campus since he was fired in September 2000 and spoke to a crowd in Dunn Meadow. He entered the stadium on a golf cart driven by an IU official, and was followed in another golf cart by former Herald-Times sports editor Bob Hammel and IU Deputy Director of Athletics Scott Dolson. Knight watched the game from a suite inside the stadium press box. As he entered the suite, Knight said "it's nice being here." During his time at IU, Knight led the men's basketball program to three national championships over his 29-year career. The Hoosiers also reached five Final Fours under Knight and won 11 Big Ten Regular Season titles. IU Athletic Director Fred Glass told the Herald-Times in a text message he was happy to help Knight attend the baseball game, but hadn't talked to him yet and didn't expect to.

TRUMP TO SPEAK TO NRA CONVENTION IN INDY: President Donald Trump will be in Indianapolis on Friday, April 26 to speak at the NRA Annual Meeting, according to the NRA's Institute for Legislative Action (WIBC). For the third consecutive year, Trump will address NRA members at the NRA-ILA Leadership Forum, according to the group's website. It will be his fifth consecutive year appearing at the Annual Meeting. "Donald Trump is the most enthusiastic supporter of the Second Amendment to occupy the Oval Office in our lifetimes. It is truly an honor to have President Trump address NRA members for the fifth consecutive year," said Chris Cox, NRA-ILA Executive Director, on the NRA-ILA website. "Our members are excited to hear him speak and thank him for his support for our Right to Keep and Bear Arms." The NRA Convention will take place from Thursday, April 25 - Sunday, April 28 at Lucas Oil Stadium and the Indiana Convention Center.

WILL TRUMP'S ANSWERS TO MUELLER BE MADE PUBLIC? Investigators for the special counsel spent months trying to get answers from President Trump: what he knew about a meeting between senior campaign aides and Russians; about changes to the Republican Party platform making it more Russia-friendly; about his associates' outreach to WikiLeaks as it prepared to publish Democratic emails stolen by Russian hackers (Savage, New York Times). After months of resistance, his lawyers finally turned over written answers in November to those questions and others. But the public has not seen them. Now, the question of whether they become part of the available history of Russia's 2016 election interference and its aftermath — along with whatever else the special counsel, Robert S. Mueller III, may have gathered — turns on Attorney General William P. Barr. Since Mr. Mueller submitted a nearly 400-page report on his investigation two weeks ago, Mr. Barr, his aides and other law enforcement officials have been reviewing it to determine which portions to provide to lawmakers and the public — and what to black out. Mr. Barr has promised to give lawmakers — by mid-April, "if not sooner" — as much of the report as possible, subject to several categories of necessary deletions. But much will turn on how expansively or narrowly he interprets those categories.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: We are in for a compelling week, folks. Hopefully we'll see the unredacted portions of the Mueller report, as promised by Attorney General Barr. Next Sunday, Mayor Buttigieg kicks off his Democratic presidential campaign in South Bend. HPI and our commentators will be ready to report, analyze and weigh in. - Brian A. Howey

BIDEN STRUGGLES WITH ALLEGATIONS: If Joe Biden was hoping on Friday to move past the controversy over his unwelcome physical contact with women, he did not succeed (Politico). The former vice president, even as he inched closer to announcing a presidential bid, twice made light of his touchy, close-talking political style during a speech to a major labor union, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers — drawing further attention to a fraught issue that has generated damaging headlines for days. Biden opened his address to the IBEW conference at the Washington Hilton by joking about his embrace of the man who introduced him, union president Lonnie Stephenson. "I just want you to know, I had permission to hug Lonnie," Biden told the crowd, prompting laughter. Fifteen minutes later, Biden invited a group of children on stage with him, shaking each of their hands. He put his arm around one male child before telling the crowd: "He gave me permission to touch him," again prompting laughter from the crowd. "I'm sorry to take so long. Everybody knows that I like kids better than people."

PRIEBUS SAYS TRUMP MUST WIN PA, MI, WI: Former White House chief of staff Reince Priebus warned in an interview that aired Sunday that President Trump needs to repeat his success in Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin in 2020 to win re-election (The Hill). Priebus told AM 970's "The Answer" that the president's path to victory in 2020 lay in reigniting the support that he received in working-class communities across the Rust Belt. "[Trump] has to win Wisconsin and Michigan," Priebus told host John Catsimatidis. "We have to win Pennsylvania." "We're likely to have a battle in Arizona, which is new for the Republican Party. I think we have to be very careful in Georgia," he continued.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES DON'T HAVE TRACTION IN HOME STATES: Sen. Kamala Harris has been elected three times to statewide office, and she's one of the most popular politicians in California. Yet according to the latest Public Policy Institute of California poll, just 38 percent of likely state voters say she should be running for president (Politico). In New Jersey, only 37 percent of Sen. Cory Booker's constituents think he would make a good president. In Massachusetts, two-thirds of likely voters told a Suffolk University Political Research Center/Boston Globe Poll last fall that Sen. Elizabeth Warren shouldn't run for the White House.

Sunday Talk

MULVANEY SAYS TAX RETURN ISSUE ALREADY RESOLVED: Acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney said Sunday that congressional Democrats will "never" see President Donald Trump's tax returns, arguing that any controversy surrounding the elusive financial statements was "already litigated" during the 2016 campaign. "Oh no. Never. Nor should they," Mulvaney told host Bill Hemmer on "Fox News Sunday." "Keep in mind, that's an issue that was already litigated during the election," Mulvaney said. "Voters knew the president could have given his tax returns, they knew that he didn't, and they elected him anyway — which, of course, is what drives the Democrats crazy."

SEKULOW SAYS IRS 'WEAPONIZED': House Democrats' request for President Trump's tax returns amounts to "using the IRS as a political weapon," Trump's attorney Jay Sekulow said on Sunday morning. Sekulow told ABC's George Stephanopoulos on "This Week" that Congress may only request individual citizens' tax returns for a "legitimate legislative purpose," which he claimed House Ways & Means Committee Chair Rep. Richard Neal (D-Mass.) has not identified.

NADLER SEES 'COLLUSION IN PLAIN SIGHT': There was "open collusion" between President Trump's campaign and Russia regardless of whether special counsel Robert Mueller found evidence of criminal conspiracy, House Judiciary Committee chairman, Rep. Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.), said Sunday morning. Donald Trump Jr. and Jared Kushner's 2016 Trump Tower meeting with Russian associates allegedly indicates "there was in plain sight open collusion with the Russians," Nadler said on CBS' "Face The Nation." Mueller last month concluded his investigation into Russia interference in the 2016 election and possible collusion between Trump's campaign and Moscow. He did not find evidence of cooperation between Trump's campaign and Russia, according to a four-page summary of his findings provided to Congress by Attorney General William Barr.

GIULIANI SAYS NADLER WILL SEE FULL MUELLER REPORT: President Trump's attorney, Rudy Giuliani, said Sunday that House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) should "get all of the information" from special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation. Nadler should have access to "everything," including grand jury material, Giuliani said on CBS' "Face the Nation." "Except for little quibbles, I'm not worried about the report at all," Giuliani added. Giuliani also said that while Trump "can't waive all executive privilege," the president's team is eager to disclose as much information as legally possible. "The [attorney general] has said he's going to put up the maximum amount...possible," Giuliani said. "The only thing that will stop him will be legal barriers."

KUDLOW DEFENDS CAIN: Top White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow on Sunday weighed in on sexual harassment allegations against Herman Cain, whom President Trump plans to nominate to the Federal Reserve Board, saying accusations sometimes "don't necessarily pan out." "Look, we are going through a vetting process in the White House. I'm sure the Senate Banking Committee will do likewise," Kudlow, the director of the National Economic Council, said on CNN's "State of the Union" when asked if the allegations against Cain trouble him. "There's big disputes here. Mr. Cain disagrees with this point of view. I'm not going to litigate that here," he added, confronting past allegations by four women that ended Cain's 2012 presidential bid.

SCHIFF SAYS DEMS, JEWS WILL CEMENT: Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) on Sunday dismissed comments from President Trump, who the previous day said a "radical agenda" being pushed by Democrats could "very well could leave Israel out there all by yourselves." "I hate to even dignify those remarks, but look, it's not the Democratic Party that believes that there are good people on both sides of a Nazi rally. There's just one party and one party leader who believes that, and that's Donald Trump," Schiff, one of the highest-ranking Jewish members of Congress, said on CNN's "State of the Union." "If there's anything that is likely to cement the relationship between the Democratic Party and the Jewish community, it's the presidency of Donald Trump."

SCHIFF DEFENDS CALLING OUT TRUMP: House Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam Schiff defended his past comments about President Donald Trump on Sunday, disavowing calls from Republicans that he step down from leading the key committee. "I don't regret calling out this President for what I consider deeply unethical and improper conduct," Schiff said on CNN's "State of the Union" with Jake Tapper.

He continued, "Not a bit. And I think the moment that we start to think that we should back away from exposing this kind of malfeasance and corruption is a dangerous point."

ROMNEY BLASTS DEMS OVER TAX RETURNS: Sen. Mitt Romney (R-Utah) on Sunday called Democrats "moronic" for attempting to obtain President Trump's tax returns through legislative action. Romney added, however, that he wishes Trump would publicly release his tax returns. "[Trump] said he would be happy to release his returns. So I wish he'd do that. But I have to also tell you I think the Democrats are just playing along his handbook, which is, going after his tax returns through legislative action is moronic," he said during an interview on NBC's "Meet the Press." "That's not going to happen," Romney continued. "The courts are not going to say that you can compel a person running for office to release their tax returns. He's going to win this victory."

KILDEE DEFENDS TAX RETURN QUEST: Rep. Dan Kildee (D Mich.) defended Ways & Means Committee Chair Richard Neal's (D Mass.) authority to request President Trump's tax returns Sunday, calling Trump the "least transparent president in half a century." Contrary to language used by Trump's attorneys in a letter to the Internal Revenue Service Friday, Neal's request is "not a Pandora's box" and derives from "legitimate authority," Kildee told ABC's George Stephanopoulos. "We are looking very carefully right now as to whether or not the IRS is properly auditing and enforcing tax law on the President of the United States, and we're considering legislative changes to that end," Kildee said on ABC's "This Week."

General Assembly

HATE CRIME SIGNING HEADLINES WEEK: Gov. Eric Holcomb signed hate crimes legislation into law. Two anti-abortion bills are headed to the governor's desk. And the Senate approved a measure allowing pregnant minors to make their own health care decisions (Indiana Public Media). Here's what you might have missed this week at the Statehouse.

Hate Crimes Bill Signed: Gov. Holcomb quietly signed into law a bill that aims to create hate crimes protections – one day after the Senate gave final approval to the language sharply criticized by many hate crimes measure advocates as inadequate. The new law allows judges to enact harsher penalties for crimes committed because of bias and references a list of victim characteristics. But that list falls short of what advocates had long pushed for – it leaves out sex, age and gender identity.

Anti-Abortion Legislation: The Senate gave final approval to two anti-abortion measures. One allows pharmacists, nurses, and physician assistants to refuse to provide abortion services. Doctors and hospital employees already have that ability. The other bill largely bans dilation and evacuation abortions, second trimester procedures known as D&Es. Anti-abortion activists call them "barbaric." Many doctors say they're the safest way to end a pregnancy at that stage.

Pregnancy Care For Minors: Senate lawmakers approved a bill Tuesday allowing 16- and 17-year-olds to make their own decisions about pregnancy care. Indiana law generally doesn't let minors make their own health care decisions without a parent's consent. That includes 16- and 17-year-olds who are pregnant. But the Senate voted down such a bill earlier this year in part because of concerns the girl's parents were entirely left out. The new version requires physicians to try to contact the pregnant teen's parents.

School Safety Referenda: A proposal moving forward at the statehouse would allow school districts to ask voters for a property tax increase specifically to pay for school safety projects. School corporations can ask voters to approve two types of referenda, to fund construction projects or, general operations. Many districts have included school safety improvements as part of the reason for their referendum proposals, along with other expenses like teacher pay, but the House Ways and Means Committee approved a bill this week to let schools ask for tax hikes for safety costs alone.

Volunteer Coach Discipline: Senate lawmakers approved legislation Thursday that ensures Indiana law deals with how volunteer coaches at high schools are disciplined. State law already governs how coaches who are employees of a high school are treated when fired for criminal acts or misconduct. But the law didn't contemplate volunteers. The bill applies to public, charter and private schools. The Senate approved the measure unanimously. The House could vote to send it to the governor as early as next week.

House Rejects Rental Fee Cap Increase: The Indiana House rejected an attempt Monday to raise the cap on rental fees cities can charge to landlords. Current law says municipalities can't charge landlords an inspection fee of more than $5 per unit. Those charges are often passed on to renters. An amendment would have raised the cap for all cities to $150 per unit. It failed, 21 to 73.

TOWNSHIP SURPLUS BILLS ADVANCE: Legislation that would require officials of Indiana's townships with high budget surpluses to explain their plans for capital projects passed this week through the state Senate Committee on Local Government (Miley, CNHI). The legislation, House Bill 1177 by Rep. Cindy Ziemke, R-Batesville, now heads to the Senate floor. The bill has already passed the House. Ziemke's bill attempts to address excessive budget surpluses in many of Indiana's 1,005 townships. Across the state, townships had budgets totaling $389.3 million in 2017. But they had a total cash balance of $453.6 million, more than 16 percent above their budgeted amounts. That's enough for 14 months of operating revenues, as much as seven times the generally accepted threshold for government units. The bill is geared to townships that have capital improvement funds amounting to 150 percent of the total budget and exceeding $200,000. They would be required to complete a three-year capital improvement plan by Sept. 30, 2020. Without such a plan, the township wouldn't be able to receive property taxes. "After they complete the capital improvement plans (the bill would) allow them to transfer surpluses into another fund they can actually use. That's been a big issue with a lot of these townships," Ziemke said.

Congress

BRAUN ENJOYING 'GUMMED UP' SENATE: U.S. Sen. Mike Braun said Wednesday he has enjoyed his first few months on Capitol Hill even if Congress is "a gummed-up process." "I think it's been going great," he said during a conference call with Indiana news reporters (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Braun, R-Ind., said he plans to concentrate on legislation affecting health care, infrastructure and the budget, "and if I can do well in those three arenas, I think it's going to be well worth the price of admission." He said that price was an "acrimonious" campaign in 2018 that was "a long, hard journey to get here." Braun is the wealthy owner of a Jasper-based auto parts distribution business who lent millions of dollars to his campaign. He defeated U.S. Reps. Todd Rokita and Luke Messer in the Republican primary election and Democratic Sen. Joe Donnelly in the general election to reach the Senate. "The problem is, it is such a gummed-up process," he said about Congress. "It becomes so polarized. ... It's very congenial, even reaching out across the other side of the aisle, when you're not talking about anything important on policy. Once it becomes a significant policy issue, pretty well everybody gets into their own camp, nothing gets done. "That's disappointing. You could never run a school board, a state government, any business in that fashion. And to be honest, I don't see that changing for a while. I think it's been so built into the dynamic here," Braun said.

BRAUN PRAISES DONNELLY: U.S. Sen. Mike Braun praised Donnelly's constituent work (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). "Sen. Donnelly ran a very good operation back in Indiana. He interfaced with agriculture well, many of the other business interest groups. I built my business on customer service; that's how you distinguish yourself. ... I made it clear we want to emulate what Sen. Donnelly did and even make it better. I think we're off to a great start," Braun said. He said Donnelly's staff worked with his staff "to get our Senate office off to a good start, and I appreciate that."

EDUCATION: MORE STUDENTS PREPARED FOR COLLEGE - More Hoosier students than ever are prepared for college. That's according to the most recent College Readiness Report compiled by the Indiana Commission for Higher Education (Lanich, NWI Times). The 2019 report, released this week, shares data based on students who graduated high school in the previous academic year and enrolled in college within a year of their graduation. Major takeaways include data trends showing fewer college-age students are in need of remediation, and more high school students are receiving college credit early, as well as a decrease in Indiana high school graduates immediately enrolling in college. "While we understand that people are benefiting from a strong economy and job opportunities, we must continue to make a case for a quality degree or credential to ensure that Hoosiers are prepared for a dynamic economy," Indiana Commissioner for Higher Education Teresa Lubbers said in a news release.

HEALTH: MEASLES EXPOSURE IN ANGOLA - State health officials confirm a new case of measles in northern Indiana (AP). They're working with local health officials in LaGrange and Steuben counties to identify anyone who may have been exposed to the infected patient to prevent it from spreading any further. They're also consulting with their counterparts in Michigan and Texas because there may be exposure in those states as well because of this same case. Anyone who has visited these locations on the dates indicated may have been exposed: Friday, March 29, Cameron Memorial Community Hospital Urgent Care – 1381 N. Wayne St., Angola, IN 46703; 3:45 p.m. - 6:35 p.m. Saturday, March 30; Cameron Memorial Community Hospital Laboratory 5:30 p.m. - 8 p.m. Saturday, March 30.

ECONOMY: SHORT TERM RENTALS FACE NEW TAX - Ruth Floyd uses the income she earns from Airbnb to fund improvements to her circa-1880s home in downtown New Albany (Thomas, News & Tribune). A retiree and "not quite a spring chicken anymore," Floyd also is an unofficial ambassador of sorts for the Ohio River town, nudging guests toward places to grab a bite to eat and relax just a short stroll from her Mansion Row home on Main Street. But Floyd is concerned about an Indiana law, passed in 2016 but effective July 1, requiring the collection of sales tax from online short-term rental platforms like Airbnb. She's worried how potential guests might react to a possible increase in rates to compensate for the added levy. "A lot of people that I meet, if it weren't for Airbnb, they probably wouldn't travel as much," said Floyd. "They wouldn't be spending money in Indiana, so if the fees start going up and people start saying, 'well, I can't travel anymore,' then Indiana or whoever's trying to make some money will lose out on all of that." Indiana is one of three states that currently doesn't charge a sales tax for online short-term rental platforms, so how that levy will be collected and remitted is still up in the air. The law that will go into effect this summer stipulates that sales tax to be collected by a facilitator, like Airbnb, if the rental transpired on such a platform, or the property owner if the property owner makes the transaction directly. A short-term rental is defined as a period of less than 30 days.

INDOT: SECTION 6 WORK ON I-69 BEGINS - In Martinsville, it looks like a tornado hit right along the State Road 37 corridor (WRTV). Trees are down, homes and businesses are boarded up. Martinsville residents and those who drive through the Morgan County town are seeing sure signs that work on the next phase of I 69 is underway. Its official name is "Section Six," the 26 miles of highway between Martinsville and I 465 in Indianapolis which will follow the current State Road 37. When it's done, I 69 will be complete from Evansville to Indianapolis.

DNR: TURKEY RUN SP ON NATIONAL REGISTRY - Western Indiana's Turkey Run State Park has been added to the National Register of Historic Places more than a century after it opened (AP). The park near Marshall, Indiana, boasts scenic views of Sugar Creek, which meanders along sandstone cliffs and outcroppings and is traversed by a 200-foot-long suspension bridge. The Indiana Department of Natural Resources says Turkey Run State Park was added to the national registry because of its cultural value to Indiana and its national history. The park was founded in 1916 about 25 miles northeast of Terre Haute. It's Indiana's second-oldest park, after McCormick's Creek. Turkey Run includes the Lusk Home, which was already listed on the national registry.

SPORTS: GUY LEADS UVA TO FINAL GAME - Think of all the kids who spent 10,000 hours in practice, hoping for this moment. U.Va. will play for the national men's basketball title for the first time after pulling off a last-second stunner last night in the Final Four in Minneapolis (Axios). Kyle Guy of Indianapolis, 21, made three free throws with 0.6 seconds after a disputed foul call, steadily swishing each one to dance past Auburn, 63-62. Lookahead: The Virginia Cavaliers and Texas Tech Red Raiders, with two of the three best defenses in the nation, will meet for the title Monday night — the first appearance in the final for each program.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SEEKS QUICK FIX AS IMMIGRATION SURGES - More than halfway through President Trump's first term, unauthorized immigration has surged to the highest levels in a decade, leaving him searching for quick-fix solutions and his administration roiling with internal tensions over how to address a problem the president promised to solve (Washington Post). Trump sought to project confidence and strength on a visit to a renovated section of border fencing in Calexico, Calif., on Friday, amid warnings from federal authorities that the U.S. immigration system is at a "breaking point" in handling a record influx of Central American families. But his public indecision over the past week — threatening in a tweet to close the border with Mexico before reversing himself six days later — revealed an administration that is grasping to deal with a humanitarian challenge without a well-defined strategy and with significant divisions within Trump's team.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SAYS DEMS WOULD ABANDON ISRAEL - President Donald Trump warned on Saturday that a Democratic victory in 2020 could "leave Israel out there," as he highlighted his pro-Israel actions in an effort to make the case for Jewish voters to back his re-election (AP). Speaking at the annual meeting of the Republican Jewish Coalition, Trump touted his precedent-shredding actions to move the U.S. Embassy to Jerusalem from Tel Aviv and recognition last month of Israeli sovereignty over the disputed Golan Heights, a strategic plateau that Israel seized from Syria in 1967. "We got you something that you wanted," Trump said of the embassy move, adding, "Unlike other presidents, I keep my promises." The group, backed by GOP megadonor Sheldon Adelson, supported Trump's 2016 campaign and is preparing to spend millions on his 2020 effort. "I know that the Republican Jewish Coalition will help lead our party to another historic victory," Trump said. "We need more Republicans. Let's go, so we can win everything."

WHITE HOUSE: CAIN NOMINATION DRAWS FIRE - Payments to women who complained of sexual harassment. Accusations of groping. Allegations of a 13-year extramarital affair. As President Trump moves ahead with his plan to nominate Herman Cain, a 2012 Republican presidential candidate, for a seat on the Federal Reserve's board of governors, Republican lawmakers are being forced to confront a fresh round of uncomfortable allegations of sexual misconduct against women as the 2020 campaign begins. A day after Mr. Trump made the choice of Mr. Cain official, Senate Republicans expressed quiet anxiety over the prospect of another #MeToo minefield even as the White House exalted the decision. The choice of Mr. Cain comes as Mr. Trump's other pick to fill an open seat on the seven-member Fed board, the conservative economist Stephen Moore, has been under fire for ethical and financial lapses that emerged from his divorce records. In both cases, the White House has publicly backed Mr. Trump's selections despite criticism that he was installing loyalists with questionable credentials in two of the country's top economic policy jobs.

ECONOMY: 196K JOBS CREATED IN MARCH - Hiring in the United States rebounded in March as U.S. employers added a solid 196,000 jobs, up sharply from February's scant gain and evidence that many businesses still want to hire despite signs that the economy is slowing (AP). The unemployment rate remained at 3.8%, near the lowest level in almost 50 years, the Labor Department reported Friday. Wage growth slowed a bit in March, with average hourly pay increasing 3.2% from a year earlier. That was down from February's year-over-year gain of 3.4%, which was the best in a decade. The employment figures reported Friday by the government suggest that February's anemic job growth figure—revised to 33,000, from an initial 20,000—was merely a temporary blip and that businesses are confident the economy remains on a firm footing. Even with the current expansion nearly 10 years old, the U.S. economy is demonstrating its resilience.

PENTAGON: U.S. TROOPS MOVED IN LIBYA - American forces currently operating inside Libya have relocated temporarily outside the war-riven country due to growing unrest in the Libyan capital, the U.S. military's top commander for Africa said Sunday (Washington Post). "The security realities on the ground in Libya are growing increasingly complex and unpredictable," Marine Corps Gen. Thomas Waldhauser, head of U.S. Africa Command, said in a statement Sunday.

MUELLER: BARR DEFENDS HANDLING OF REPORT - Attorney General William Barr is defending his handling of special counsel Robert Mueller's report on the Russia investigation, saying the confidential document contains sensitive grand jury material that prevented it from being immediately released to the public (AP). The statement Thursday came as Barr confronts concerns that his four-page letter summarizing Mueller's conclusions unduly sanitized the full report in President Donald Trump's favor, including on the key question of whether the president obstructed justice. House Democrats on Wednesday approved subpoenas for Mueller's entire report and any exhibits and other underlying evidence that the Justice Department might withhold. The disparity in length between Barr's letter and Mueller's full report, which totals nearly 400 pages, raises the likelihood of additional significant information that was put forward by the special counsel's office but not immediately shared by the attorney general. Barr is now expected to release the entire report, with redactions, by mid-April. "Given the extraordinary public interest in the matter, the Attorney General decided to release the report's bottom-line findings and his conclusions immediately — without attempting to summarize the report — with the understanding that the report itself would be released after the redaction process," the Justice Department statement said.

CITIES: HOMICIDES UP IN GARY - Homicides and shootings have been on the rise this year in Gary, but police said gang-related cases are down and they've been able to secure charges or have a person of interest in a majority of the cases (NWI Times). Another positive sign is that the number of gang-related homicides is down, police Cmdr. Jack Hamady said. Of the 17 homicides this year, police currently think two were gang-related. Last year, nine of the 15 homicides reported during the first quarter were believed to be gang-related.

CITIES: BARNES & THORNBURG TO MOVE TO NEW DOWNTOWN SOUTH BEND SITE - Plans for the downtown's first new high-end office building in nearly three decades now include a major tenant (South Bend Tribune). The law firm Barnes & Thornburg LLC will occupy the middle three floors of a five-story modern glass and steel structure to be built at the southwest corner of Main Street and Jefferson Boulevard, and it will be called "The Barnes & Thornburg Building," the firm announced. The firm will remain in its First Source Bank Center space until the new building is finished, expected in the summer of 2021. A groundbreaking ceremony is set for Tuesday.

CITIES: NEWFIELDS GETS $22M GRANT - Newfields announced it has received nearly $22 million in grants and gifts that will go to upgrades to the popular attraction's infrastructure (WIBC). The money, which was gifted by private donors as well as foundations and public entities, will go to upgrading The Virginia B. Fairbanks Art & Nature Park: 100 Acres and The Garden. "Newfields is committed to strategic, impactful and sustainable growth that benefits the Indianapolis community. With these key infrastructure improvements, new contemporary art commissions and the addition of a Harvest festival, we will be able to welcome more people to Newfields for exceptional experiences with art and nature," said Dr. Charles L. Venable, The Melvin & Bren Simon Director and CEO. "Over the next 30 years the institution will expand its offerings in the Indianapolis Museum of Art, The Garden, the Lilly House and The Virginia B. Fairbanks Art & Nature Park. This funding lays the groundwork for the development of a campus and programs unlike anywhere else in the nation."

CITIES: FORT WAYNE CUTS PARK DEAL WITH RAILROAD - The plan for Headwaters Junction has chugged forward, moving closer to being part of the redevelopment of the North River property in Fort Wayne (Rodriguez, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The nonprofit organization behind the attraction has secured a purchase agreement with the Norfolk Southern railroad for 1.4 miles of railroad right of way. The acquisition would bring historic trains up to the approximately 30-acre former OmniSource property across Clinton Street from Science Central. The multimillion-dollar proposed attraction would offer the public a chance to learn about, view and ride trains headed by 20th-century locomotives already woven into the city's culture and history. Backers say the venue could attract 140,000 visitors and provide more than $63 million in economic impact annually.

CITIES: KOR'S MUSEUM SEEKS NEW HOME - The CANDLES Holocaust Museum in Terre Haute aims to give visitors more than a lesson in history (Indiana Public Media). That's because Holocaust survivor and Terre Haute resident, Eva Kor, founded the museum on a unique message she continues to spread to this day: forgiveness. Eva and her sister Miriam were among the thousands of twins who were subjected to disturbing genetic experiments at the Auschwitz concentration camp. Together, Eva and Miriam were among only a few of the children who survived. Holocaust survivor, Eva Kor founded the CANDLES Holocaust museum to spread her message of healing and forgiveness. In 1993, Eva conceived the idea for the CANDLES Holocaust Museum and founded it in honor of her sister who died that year.

Re: Energy Issues

Dear Governor Holcomb;

Your efforts to keep electric costs from increasing are very much appreciated. Low electric rates play a central role in growing the economy of our state. That's why we wish to make you aware that NIPSCO, in its application to the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission (IURC), is seeking an 11.2 percent average increase in electric rates. This rate increase could cost the customers of NIPSCO an estimated $180 million annually.

Unfortunately, NIPSCO has stated they plan to close the R.M. Schahfer and Michigan City plants and replace the megawatts with new generation. The electric utility has recently invested $775 million in environmental controls on these two power plants. A large portion is yet to be recovered and will still be charged to ratepayers if the plants close.

Adding to the economic concerns are the job losses associated with the closure of the power plants. A study just released by the Energy Ventures Analysis (distinguished economic research firm) notes that 850 jobs will be lost, unemployment in La Porte and Jasper county will increase by 40 percent and 150 percent respectively and property taxes will decrease by $74 million.

What is most troubling is that NIPSCO has announced that they have reached a partial settlement offer with several major parties (Office of Utility Consumer Counselor (OUCC), Sierra Club, Citizens Action Coalition, large Industrial customers). We fail to see how the OUCC could support a proposal that will increase electric rates for consumers.

We would like to point out the NIPSCO rate case includes a major shift from existing state policy. NIPSCO is seeking to allow its five largest customers which collectively account for 40 percent of load to leave its system and seek other sources of electricity. This is a monumental change in the way electric utilities have operated in Indiana. If this is allowed for NIPSCO, we might expect to see similar actions with the other electric utilities (Duke, IPL, Vectren). Such a major change in operation should be approved through law. You recently signed legislation calling for a comprehensive study of the energy future for the state. Shouldn't we wait for the study results before allowing such a major shift in energy policy?

The approval of any rate case in Indiana needs to be appropriately timed. Under the Indiana Administrative Code there is a policy regarding the obligations for the utilities to prepare periodic Integrated Resource Plans (IRP) and for the Commission to review them with stakeholder input. NIPSCO filed its rate case and IRP in separate proceedings on the same date. While NIPSCO's rate case is reliant on its IRP, the IRP has not been reviewed by the IURC and no draft or final Director's report has been filed. Any rulings by the Commission that are reliant on the IRP should follow the required Administrative review of the IRP.

We are thankful for your support of Chairman Soliday's Amendments to Senate Bill 472 during the recent legislative session. One of these amendments would have prevented approval of two NIPSCO wind proposals (Jordon Creek and Roaming Bison) without due consideration of their role in statewide energy planning. Approval of these proposals are premature as the IRP upon which they are justified do not even reflect the proposed change in NIPSCO load as a result of the tariff proposal. We are very concerned that these projects could be approved on May 29. Your common-sense approach to energy policy and continued efforts to defend Hoosiers from unnecessary increases in their electric bills are appreciated and does not go unnoticed.

Respectfully,

USA Today - Jul 6, 2019

Indiana is one of several states in the Great Lakes region to experience sluggish economic growth over the past several years. The GDP of Indiana grew at an average annual rate of 3.5% from 2013 to 2018, trailing behind the 4.1% national growth rate. In other measures of economic health, Indiana is roughly in line with the nation as a whole. Some 3.6% of the Indiana workforce is out of work and looking for a job – equivalent to the national unemployment rate – and 13.5% of residents live in poverty, compared to the 13.4% national poverty rate. To rank the best and worst state economies, 24/7 Wall St. factored in GDP and job growth, unemployment, poverty, and bachelor's degree attainment.

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

No clear 2020 vision for IN Ds

Governor's race has no frontrunner; AG race comes into play as well

Democrats simply don't have any obvious potential candidates for statewide office whom Republicans fear. That's a fact of life that takes into account the Donnelly and Bayh statewide losses in 2016 and 2018, but just as importantly, the long record of Democratic futility in state office races, punctuated only by the anomalous Ritz candidacy in 2012 (and the 2016 race showed why that was an outlier).

There are some who look at Democratic prospects in 2020 – even without consideration for how the Trump/Pence ticket might play Back Home (recall how the Trump presence skewed the 2016 Indiana races at all levels) – and believe that trying to win the Governor's office over a popular incumbent in a presidential year is a fool's errand.

No Republican governor (nor any Democrats, either) has ever been ousted from office since the state ended the one-term limit via a 1972 constitutional amendment, and Evan Bayh (D) in 1988 was the only Democrat to succeed a Republican governor while Hoosiers were still voting for a Republican for president that year (and Mitch Daniels (R) still won re-election 20 years later even as Indiana voted Democrat in the presidential race for the first time since 1964).

More cynical Democrats may quietly be considering effectively surrendering the gubernatorial race to an incumbent with whom they can work, and would leave the office open four years hence, with no clear front-runner (though U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) and U.S. Reps. Jim Banks (R) and Susan Brooks (R) and several state solons may be publicly jockeying for the starting gate by 2022, and you can't rule out any business leader or some up-and-coming metro mayors) in favor of focusing on the race for attorney general, should the Republican establishment be unable to shunt aside Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) . . . and could the Governor or Indiana Chamber of Commerce back Sen. Randy Head (R), a 2016 convention candidate for attorney general long considered an alternative to Hill, after Sen. Head voted with the majority of Senate Republicans to strip the list of covered classes from the bias crimes bill on the high-profile Second Reading action?

There are more moving parts than usual in looking at a 2020 GOP ticket.

Former two-term Evansville mayor Jonathan Weinzapfel (D), a key honcho for Ivy Tech (and hence education and workforce development guru) in Southwest Indiana, is the guy we're hearing is being eyed for that task. He would turn 55 in late 2020. At last glance, his political committee had a substantial six-figure balance, and the former state representative – who made an unsuccessful congressional bid in 1996 – has taken some serious looks at state and congressional runs in recent years before waving off because of conditions.

Weinzapfel would be a top-tier candidate for AG, which could encourage a potential Democratic candidate for governor to run, given that there would likely be a bigger confidence level in the entire ticket . . . but if Hill isn't on the ticket – and the Republicans manage to replace him early, that could keep Weinzapfel from making a race in which the dynamics would better resemble a traditional AG race, which the Democrats have not won outright when the office had just been held by a Republican since 1992 (and that was with a strong Democratic governor running for re-election).

Trust US(DOL) on UI Fund

New federal report a cause for concern

The U.S. Department of Labor (USDOL) just released its State Unemployment Insurance Trust Fund Solvency Report 2019. Spoiler alert: Indiana does not fare well.

Dating back more than a decade, we've been your UI Trust Fund warning system, and it may be time to sound the alarm again. While USDOL finds 23 states below recommended (1.0) solvency standards, our 0.38 solvency level tops only those of New York, Ohio, Texas, Massachusetts, and California. The Indiana reserve ratio is a mere 0.56; the most solvent state, Vermont, posts a 4.68 ratio . . . though we are in a better place from a structural standpoint than we were before the recession.

Remember the high-cost borrowing from the Feds our UI trust fund resorted to after the 2008-09 fiscal crisis? Hoosier businesses had to pay a substantial UI premium surcharge for several years. As things stand today, we are among the minority of states not meeting eligibility criteria for interest-free advances or loans. The last year Indiana achieved a 1.0 average high cost multiple was 2002, back in the O'Bannon Administration. Recall that a business-labor deal ratified by legislative Republicans and the Democratic governor slashed premiums effective in 2001. The 1.0 multiple must have been achieved within the last five years to make Indiana eligible for an interest-free loan. Stay tuned.

General Hill, by the way, was solidifying his street cred with the Trump base last week, simply by doing his job; he was part of a group of attorneys general who met with the President while the AGs were in Washington, D.C. for the annual Winter meeting of the National Association of Attorneys General.

The Democratic Attorney General Association (DAGA) did announce, however, its "1881 Initiative" initiative last week, a DAGA program "to encourage and inspire Democratic women to run for the Office of Attorney General in their home state." The goal: "to see women occupying half of the state Attorneys General seats held by Democrats."

In 2016, Democrats ran a retired Hispanic judge from Lake County for the post. Their 2012 and 2008 nominees were Female Indianapolis attorneys.

But back to the top of ticket.

The Democrats are clearly without a front-runner (and Victor Oladipo - Vic4Indiana - still recovering from a knee injury!), consensus candidate for governor in 2020. Some on both sides think that the best chance Democrats would have is to reach into the business community (recall the 2008 candidacy of Jim Schellinger which was torpedoed in the primary?), and particularly the new high-tech world, to find someone with deep pockets and millennial appeal.

Without such a white knight of sorts on the horizon, however, Demos will likely have to dip back into the political pool, and it's not very deep, with few promising Democratic big-city mayors who would be eager to make the move - or without baggage - and only 43 legislators (and some too young constitutionally, or too old practically to even be considered).

Former U.S. Sen. Joe Donnelly (D) - a Baby Boomer (a pejorative term in electoral politics outside, perhaps Democratic progressives, who decidedly do not rule in Indiana, despite the 2016 primary boogie with Bernie) - will not be a gubernatorial candidate in 2020. Two names that seem to emerge most often as traditional potential contenders are former U.S. Rep. Baron Hill (D) and former Rep. Christina Hale (D), both of whom lost their only statewide races (Hill for U.S. Senate in 1990; Hale for lieutenant governor in 2016).

Hill also lost his most recent bid to remain in Congress (2010) and though the Indiana Basketball Hall of Fame member still looks like he can defend his Seymour High School all-time scoring record, he would turn 67 during the 2020 campaign, and it will have been a decade since he was last on the ballot. He has not maintained a significant public profile in the past few years. Further, a lot of Democrats still bear some resentment for Hill so readily stepping aside from the 2016 U.S. Senate race in favor of former U.S. Sen. Evan Bayh (D), who went on to an ignominious defeat that Fall.

One name that we do keep hearing some Democrats tout is former Rep. Hale, who acquitted herself well in her 2016 LG campaign, and made a lot of new friends across the state in that race. Some Republicans have long considered her to be the most worrisome candidate to run against, given her hard work in winning a marginal House district; her ability to reach across and enlist policy support from the other side of the aisle; and political bases in both the north side of Indianapolis/Hamilton County area in which she lives and her Porter County roots, which allow her some credibility in The Region.

One personnel move last month raised some hopeful eyebrows among the Democratic cognoscenti, as Michelle Study-Campbell left her post as CEO of the Ronald McDonald House Charities of Central Indiana to join Kiwanis International as director of youth protection. Hale is executive director of Kiwanis Youth Programs. Study-Campbell has established a strong name and network for herself in the non-profit and philanthropic center after working in the O'Bannon Administration and then spending a year on the staff of the Indiana Democratic Party as the 20th Century ended.

Conspiracy theorists would also note that just after Study-Campbell joined the Kiwanis, Poonam Gill also made her way into the youth program inner circle. Gill, who ran a strong race as the Democratic nominee against House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) last year in a Northeast Indianapolis district adjacent to the one once represented by Hale, becomes the new executive director of the Maker Youth Foundation.

Hale was a high-profile leader in the Women for Donnelly 2018 Senate campaign, and remains a frequent speaker at assorted Democratic and bipartisan events, and conveys an effective message in the #MeToo era (note, however, that General Hill stole some thunder from Hale's own efforts on behalf of sexual abuse victims last week by launching his own surprise crusade to help victims of abuse by the clergy).

But while the Hale package might have been a formidable addition to the state Democratic ticket in a campaign against Gov. Mike Pence (R) in 2016 if that match-up had come to fruition, Republicans - at least at the state level in 2020, with Governor Eric Holcomb (R) - can be expected to play down the kind of social "wedge" issues that Democrats were prepared to deploy against the Pence ticket (Pence would not have been helped on that front by the loss of his female lieutenant governor).

But Gov. Holcomb, who has even carved out an advocacy role on a hate crime bill that includes the "full list" of covered classes, is certainly not going to provoke the same kind of feelings on exclusion that his predecessor did, and he will also be running with a popular lieutenant governor (and don't underestimate other things Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch (R) brings to the table; we expect her to transfer $1 million in campaign cash to the Holcomb committee literally on the day the team announces for re-election).

We thought it might be interesting to see the career trajectory of unsuccessful lieutenant governor candidates preceding 2016 nominee Hale over the years.

Unsuccessful Major Party Lieutenant Governor Nominees 1956 -2016

2016	Hale (D)	1984	DeLaney (D)
2012	Simpson (D)	1980	Peterson (D)
2008	Oxley (D)	1976	Teague (D)
2004	Davis (D)	1972	Bodine (D)
2000	Clark (R)	1968	Beatty (D)
1996	Witwer (R)	1964	Ryan (R)
1992	Green (R)	1960	Utterback (R)
1988	Goldsmith (R)	1956	Zandstra (D)

While Hale was clearly the Democratic rock star in 2016, that may not count for much moving forward. Let's just say that if a drinking game required you to down a shot of your favorite craft-distilled spirits for each name you remembered prior to this century, you'd probably stay stone-cold sober.

As best as we can tell, over the past 60+ years, only Steve Goldsmith (R) moved from an unsuccessful LG election to another significant office higher than one in which he or she held before running for LG. Goldsmith – who was later nominated for governor – was elected mayor of Indianapolis after his service as Marion County prosecutor. Some others sought or may have even been nominated for other office (including governor), but were not elected to higher offices than those which they held when they ran for the state's second-highest office.

So it's looking dismal again for Democrats as they look to 2020, split between progressives (which VPOTUS largely labels as Socialists) and moderates (and then there's the Hoosier version of moderates as well) . . . but as we recall, there wasn't a great deal of GOP enthusiasm headed into 2016 with an unpopular governor; an entirely unsettled Republican presidential field; no identified candidate to challenge a Democratic incumbent superintendent of public instruction; and a candidate for lieutenant governor who had lost his only run for public office and dropped out of a U.S. Senate primary after finding no traction.

IN Politics

Federal Office Races . . .

- U.S. Jim Baird (R) joins fellow freshmen U.S. Reps. Dusty Johnson (R-SD) and James Lee Hagedorn (R-MN) in forming a joint fundraising committee for their respective congressional campaigns. The new vehicle will be the Freshman Agricultural Republican Members Trust (FARM Trust).

IN Legislative Races . . .

- After the "Protection at Conception" bill failed to get a hearing in the House, pro-life activist James Silberman took to The Resurgent to take on pro-life Republican legislative leaders for refusing to advance the measure.

□ Silberman notes that Indiana Right to Life had endorsed House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R) in 2018 over challenger William Carlin (R), "who ran on a platform of supporting the Protection at Conception Act. Their endorsement was unqualified despite Smaltz's public support for the legality of murdering babies conceived in rape or incest. Carlin told The Resurgent he is unsure whether he will be the one to challenge Smaltz again, but Amy Schlichter, president of Hoosiers for Life, the group who backed The Protection at Conception Act and Carlin's campaign, said in a phone interview with The Resurgent that her organization intends to recruit candidates to primary Smaltz as well as other state-level Republican leaders in 2020. 'We absolutely will [keep challenging them],' Schlichter said. 'Until there are people in [the legislature] that will stand for life, all life, without exception, we will continue to find people to run in their districts.'"

IN Political News . . .

- Who would have ever thought (two months ago) that we'd be asking this question in March: Is Mayor Pete peaking too soon? And for the record, we can't recall anyone ever raising that thought with respect to the lackluster Quayle or Lugar 1996, or Bayh 2008 presidential campaigns.

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

- U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) becomes a cosponsor of S. Con. Res. 5, the "Local Radio Freedom Act (LRFA)" a resolution opposing "any new performance fee, tax, royalty, or other charge" on local broadcast radio stations." The measure opposes any potential legislation to impose new performance royalties on broadcast radio stations for music air play . . . Sen. Young allies with U.S. Sen. Tim Kaine (D-VA) to introduce a bipartisan bill to repeal the 1991 and 2002 Authorizations for Use of Military Force (AUMF) against Iraq. The legislation would formally end the authorizations for the Gulf and Iraq wars – 28 and 17 years, respectively, after these AUMFs were first passed – and reasserting what Sen. Young contends is Congress' vital role in not only declaring wars, but in ending them. He asserts that the repeal of these authorizations would also recognize the strong partnership the United States now has with a sovereign, democratic Iraq. "There is no obligation more sobering than considering an authorization for the use of military force, and it is critical that Congress exercise robust oversight once authorities have been granted. As a young high school student, I enlisted in the Navy mere weeks before the Gulf War began.

Now, 28 years later, those war authorities are still active and still in law. This illustrates the level of Congressional failure to perform its Constitutionally mandated oversight role" said Sen. Young. He believes his bipartisan legislation would send "a strong message that Congress is finally taking back its Article One responsibility. I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Foreign Relations Committee to advance this legislation and have this important debate" . . . the day after Sen. Young discussed non-compete agreements in a Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship hearing, he joined U.S. Sen. Chris Murphy (D-CT) in leading a bipartisan letter calling for a Government Accountability Office investigation into the use and abuse of non-compete agreements, which they contend subject too many workers to arbitrary limitations. and keep them trapped in their jobs. They explain that this hinders innovation and limits workers' ability to negotiate with their employer for higher wages or leave for a better opportunity, like starting a small business. "We are concerned that the use of non-compete agreements on a large scale could slow economic and wage growth, reduce productivity and competition in labor markets, and create significant barriers to entrepreneurship and innovation,” the senators wrote. “In recent years, the wide use of non-competes has spread from highly technical fields into less technical and lower wage work, where they might reduce wage and benefit competition among employers and restrict employees’ upward mobility – for no good reason.” They add, “Academic experts and commentators from across the political spectrum have raised serious concerns about the use and abuse of these clauses,” and both parties have sought “to reform them. At the same time, this discussion would benefit from more information regarding the prevalence of such contracts, in both low-wage and high-wage occupations, and their actual effects on employees, firms, and the economy,” so they request the federal review.

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) again joins with U.S. Sen. Rick Scott (R-FL) in introducing legislation aimed at what they say is ensuring that “the era of career politicians is over.” The “Banning Lobbying and Safeguarding Trust (BLAST) Act” that they are championing would impose a permanent ban on members of Congress becoming federal lobbyists. “One of the reasons I left the private sector for Washington was to help President Trump drain the swamp and we can accomplish this by permanently banning Congressmen and Senators from lobbying Capitol Hill,” said Sen. Braun. “Together we can end the revolving door of career politicians coming to Washington, spending time in Congress, then enriching themselves from their service to the American people.” Their legislation is a companion bill to H.R.1145, a measure introduced by U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) . . . Sen. Braun spoke to CBS News’ Red and Blue host Elaine Quijano early last week about the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions hearing on vaccine misinformation. His bottom line: “For me it would mean parents call that shot. I know that there’s a wide variety,” but “I’m a full believer that parents kind of guide the choice there . . . I think it’s a real tricky issue, but nobody’s better to make that decision than the parents themselves.” Asked about the President’s decision to use an emergency declaration to build The Wall, Sen. Braun responds that “It is a crisis at our southern border,” and He campaigned on it . . . he promised voters he’d do it. I don’t like the idea of when any one of our branches would get too declarative or out there. So the emergency – you know, I think it’s an emergency. Using it as declaration here, I had a little heartburn with it, but I’m going to be with the President to do it . . . I’d love to see Democrats what they come up with when it comes to smart technology – would they be willing to spend the money there? So there are going to be a whole lot of different methods used to secure the border, this is just the start of it.” In the end, however, “I think it’s important that he does stick with it because it was the primary centerpiece of, you know, what he ran on in 2016.” Sen. Braun – who spoke out against it on the Senate floor Wednesday, likening it to the Affordable Care Act, labels the proposed Green New Deal as a “complete disconnect with reality,” riddled with “preposterous components” that “completely gives no credit to the strides we’ve made over the last two or three decades.” However, he adds, “Until we get our house in order here with our budget, quit running trillion-dollar deficits, we’re going to have a hard time doing anything” . . . Sen. Braun chaired a hearing of his Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works Subcommittee on Clean Air and Nuclear Safety on the “States’ Role in Protecting Air Quality: Principles of Cooperative Federalism” . . . Sen. Braun was asked about rising health care costs by CBS News’ Quijano on Tuesday, and he told her, “We’ve got to get the industry involved in being transparent, in embracing competition, in doing things differently from what they’ve been doing, or they’re going to be part of a one-payor system. The other side, you know, is talking about ‘Medicare for All.’ ” He didn’t mention that on the following day he would be introducing three bills to lower prescription drug costs. He explains in a Washington Times op-ed before telling Indiana media about his package, “Before being elected to the U.S. Senate last year, I spent 37 years building a business in my hometown, hiring hundreds of Americans and taking on the insurance industry to give my employees quality affordable healthcare while covering pre-existing conditions. I’m offering solutions to address rising healthcare prices by adding transparency to our drug pricing, clearing the backlog on pending drug applications at the FDA, and providing oversight and accountability within the healthcare industry.” His “Drug Price Transparency (DPT) Act,” S. 567, would build upon a proposed rule released last month by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) that would eliminate current legal safe harbors for pharmacy benefit managers (PBMs) to receive rebates from drug manufacturers. Specifically, the proposed rule relates to price reductions offered by a drug manufacturer to a Medicare Part D plan sponsor and Medicaid Managed Care Organizations (government payors). The Braun DPT Act bill would extend the idea of the PBM rebate rule to the commercial insurance market and amend the Public Health Service Act (Title 42) to prohibit PBMs from receiving any rebates or reductions in price from drug manufacturers. The bill would also fold in the two new safeguards that would be created by the HHS rule. The legislation would also explicitly require any rebates (or reduction in price) from a drug manufacturer for any drug be reflected at the point-of-sale (i.e. pharmacy counter) to the consumer. The goal of the bill is to lower prescription drug prices and out-of-pocket costs for consumers by encouraging PBMs to pass discounts from drug manufacturers directly on to consumers and bring transparency to prescription drug market. The intent of the rule is to lower out-of-pocket costs at the pharmacy counter and add needed pricing transparency to the market. However, his office notes that there is some caution surrounding the issue as a whole, as some are worried about rising premiums as plans stop applying drug manufacturer rebates to reduce consumer payment obligations. He tells the Washington Post, “This bill doesn’t outlaw PBMs. It doesn’t even outlaw rebates. What it’s going to do is shed light on the process so they’re not going to be able to get by with the argument that there’s room for a whole other layer of a middleman. You don’t need it.” Sen. Braun’s “Accelerated Drug Approval for Prescription Therapies (ADAPT) Act,” S. 658, would amend the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to create an expedited drug approval process at FDA – with a six-month maximum review time – specifically for drugs that are currently approved for sale in developed countries. The legislation would encourage FDA to expeditiously review prescription drug applications for qualifying products (prescription drugs already approved and sold in developed nations with satisfactory history of clinical trials and data) under this new pathway. His bill would provide the commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration or HHS secretary authority to approve a drug if the FDA confirms: (1) the drug is lawfully approved for sale in a developed country; and, (2) is not banned by any current FDA standards. The goal of the bill would be to create more competition in the U.S. drug space. Sen. Braun believes that it would also address a long list of drug shortages managed by the FDA. While it would not be a pure drug importation bill, it would instead add a layer of FDA review that would focus on quality control, supply chain safety, manufacturing processes, and similar functions. etc. Sen. Braun also explains that “The bill is not a strictly reciprocity bill, either, because we have added an extra layer of FDA review.” His “Transparency in Petitions Act,” S. 660, would amend the Federal Food Drug and Cosmetic Act to require any petition submitted to the FDA about a pending generic drug application be submitted within one year of when the petitioner first discovers the issue that is the basis for the petition. The HHS secretary may use his or her discretion to grant a waiver of this one-year deadline.

- Former U.S. Sen. Richard Lugar (R), who chaired the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, testified before the House Committee on Armed Services Subcommittee on Strategic Forces at the end of February about the implications of the impending withdrawal of the United States from the Intermediate Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty and prospects for an extension of the New Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty (New START) with Russia. As you might expect, Lugar called for the preservation of INF and New START, explaining that countering Russia would be an easier task within the treaty confines than outside it. He also explained that the value of INF was not found just in its objective of limiting weapons, but in the verification process, which he said his experience has taught him forces both two sides to work cooperatively, an exercise that builds confidence. “There is safety in transparency,” he told the House panel, suggesting that the alternative – “drifting towards unrestrained arms competition” – would prove to be “an incredibly hazardous outcome.” He added that dropping out of either act “calls for a total new beginning and right now I don’t see that kind of initiative in the administration or the Congress,” noting that arms control has now “not been on the table for nine years.” He also called for deployment of a missile defense system even as the nation works toward extending New START and seeks new arms control agreements.

- U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) was pleased with Thursday night’s House vote that was initially intended to condemn anti-Semitism, but was expanded and included a condemnation of anti-Muslim bigotry as well. He tweeted, “After more than a decade in Congress, this was my first opportunity to vote on a resolution that condemned anti-Muslim hate. As a Muslim-American, this is an important step in the right direction – to condemn hate in all its forms.” He added, “We sent a clear message today that @HouseDemocrats are united in our shared opposition to hatred, bigotry and discrimination, but we can’t stop here.” In the final solo message in his trilogy, Rep. Carson is likely to raise some eyebrows among fellow Democrats when he tweets, “We must continue these tough but productive discussions about difficult topics – including Palestine and Israel. They won’t be easy, but we must have them in order to steer our nation in the right direction.” He also joined his fellow Muslim colleagues in Congress in a lengthier tweet recognizing the “historic” vote, even as others pointed out the irony given the need for such a vote at all.

- U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) introduces the “Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) Protections for Rural Women Act of 2019,” legislation that would add the Rural Housing Voucher program to the list of covered housing programs under VAWA. This bill would help victims of domestic violence by expanding protections in affordable housing, helping free women from cycles of abuse, what Rep. Hollingsworth says would prove to be a crucial step toward protecting victims of domestic violence from homelessness.

- U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) sees the House pass H.R. 501, the “Poison Center Network Enhancement Act of 2019” that she authored with U.S. Reps. Eliot Engel (D-NY), Diana DeGette (D-CO), and Jaime Herrera Beutler (R-WA) and which she says will assist with potential poison exposures and help combat the national opioid epidemic. This bipartisan bill would reauthorize funding for the Poison Center Network, including their national toll-free number, and also clarifies that poison control centers can be called upon to assist with public health emergencies, responses, and preparedness. The bill also requests that enhanced communications capabilities (such as texting) be established. “There is no one-size-fits-all solution to put a stop to the deadly opioid crisis that is devastating Hoosiers and Americans across the country. However, this bill is a critical piece of the puzzle because it allows the national network of poison control centers to help people who are struggling with addiction by offering free, confidential and expert medical advice at all hours, every day of the year. Their data is used to identify hot spots for opioid abuse and misuse, and with this reauthorization, will be able to continue combating the opioid epidemic and save lives,” said Rep. Brooks . . . Rep. Brooks and U.S. Rep. Yvette Clarke (D-NY), both members of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, introduce the “Mobile Health Records Act” (MHRA), a bipartisan measure that seeks to encourage Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries to own and access their medical records through the use of innovative mobile applications. The accessible health records and medical claims data would include medical conditions, detailed prescriptions and diagnoses, lists of tests and rendered services, and the contact and financial information for all of the providers seen by a particular patient. “Accessing, transferring, and sharing your health care records in order to receive quality care shouldn’t be a hassle,” says Rep. Brooks. “Improving access to health records through apps on people’s phones will make it easier for patients, wherever they are, to obtain their medical records with a tap of their finger in order to help them and their providers make informed health care decisions. Technological innovations have transformed the way we live our everyday lives, and I am proud to lead the effort to bring health care records into the 21st century with Congresswoman Clarke.”

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R), as a member of the GOP Doctors Caucus, signed a Monday letter with his fellow caucus members to U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar applauding the agency's proposed rule to limit the use of rebates through the pharmaceutical distribution system. "Far too many American seniors struggle to afford high out-of-pocket costs for their prescription drugs, and efforts like the Administration's proposed rule will help lower costs at the pharmacy counter for a majority of seniors. I support this effort and look forward to continuing to find ways to lower the out-of-pocket health care costs of patients," said Dr. Bucshon . . . after Democrats introduced net neutrality legislation that Rep. Bucshon said would slow internet growth, the cosponsor of the "Open Internet Preservation Act" in the 115th Congress observed that the Obama Administration's Federal Communications Commission (FCC) in 2015 "abandoned the light-touch regulatory approach to internet governance that both parties had previously pursued for almost two decades. Instead of working toward 21st century solutions to moderate 21st century high tech companies, they opted for an antiquated regulatory scheme designed for the monopoly telephone carriers of the 1930s. This caused investment in internet services to fall by 5.6%, or $3.6 billion. It is absolutely critical in a world and economy that is increasingly dependent on broadband internet access that we close the digital divide - especially for those who live in rural America. That is why in 2017, under Chairman Ajit Pai's leadership, the FCC adopted a rule restoring the light-touch approach to internet regulation, clearing the way for further innovation and investment that ensures a vibrant and competitive marketplace exists." However, he explains, "Democrats are now trying to reverse the ruling of Chairman Pai's approach for the same heavy-handed, antiquated regulations that caused the growth of the internet to slow down in the first place. Ultimately, the best approach is a robust and innovative marketplace that gives consumers ample choice. The Save the Internet Act would fail to close the digital divide - it would only widen it."

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) will serve on the Ronald Reagan Institute's Center for Peace Through Strength Task Force on 21st Century National Security Technology and Workforce . . . in his role as chair of the Republican Study Committee Budget and Spending Task Force, Rep. Banks met with the President at the White House Tuesday to discuss the shape of the Fiscal Year 2020 federal spending plan in the Democratic House. He says he told the President "of my commitment to work with him to help rein in government spending and put forward a conservative budget. As the Chairman of the RSC Budget and Spending Task Force, I had the opportunity to thank the President for his fiscally conservative leadership and look forward to working with his Administration to do right by the American taxpayer," Rep. Banks said.

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) joins forces again with U.S. Rep. Ron Kind (D-WI) on tariff issues, this time introducing the "Import Tax Relief Act," a bipartisan bill that would require the executive branch to create an exclusion process for List 3 (and any future list) of Chinese imports subject to Section 301 tariff imposition. Consistent with precedent and requirements placed on the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) in the recent government funding bill, American companies would also be able to apply for a refund for duties paid on imported good subject to these tariffs that are granted an exclusion. U.S. Sens. James Lankford (R-OK) and Chris Coons (D-DE) introduced companion legislation in the Senate. Rep. Walorski used a House Committee on Ways and Means hearing at the end of February to press U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer on the lack of a product exclusion process for the third round of tariffs on Chinese imports. Lighthizer indicated USTR would not meet the 30-day deadline to establish a process as directed by Congress in the recent funding bill. "I support President Trump's goal of stopping China's unfair trade practices, but we need to do so in a way that does not harm American farmers, manufacturers, and workers," Rep. Walorski said. "A fair and transparent exclusion process for the latest round of China tariffs is long overdue, but it is clear USTR does not intend to meet the deadline imposed by Congress to establish one. As a result, this bipartisan bill is necessary to provide much-needed relief to the American businesses and consumers paying the cost of these import taxes. I am hopeful the ongoing trade talks with China will lead to long-term benefits for our economy, but the administration must do more to create certainty for businesses and farmers and to stay focused on the goal of holding China accountable." You may recall that in October, Reps. Walorski and Kind led a bipartisan coalition of 169 members of Congress in calling on Lighthizer to establish an exclusion process in regards to Section 301 tariffs . . . Rep. Walorski joins U.S. Rep. Earl Blumenauer (D-OR), a Democratic tax writer, to introduce the "Move America Act of 2019," bipartisan legislation that the House Committee on Ways and Means duo contends would bring billions of dollars of investment to state and local governments to help grow and repair America's aging infrastructure. "State and local governments need cost-effective ways to revitalize our aging infrastructure and move America forward," says Rep. Walorski. "This bipartisan bill will give them the tools and flexibility they need to leverage private dollars for the infrastructure projects most important to our communities." The 36-page Move America Act of 2019 would create Move America Bonds to expand tax-exempt financing for public-private partnerships (P3s) and Move America Credits to leverage additional private equity investment at a lower cost for states. States will have the flexibility to choose which projects are most needed. Qualifying projects include airports, ports, transit, freight and passenger rail, roads, bridges, flood projects, inland and coastal waterway improvements, wastewater and sewage facilities, and broadband infrastructure.

IN State Circles . . .

● SB 12, the bias crimes bill, has been assigned to the House Committee on Courts and Criminal Code, chaired by Rep. Wendy McNamara (R). Like Sen. Ron Alting (R), chair of the Senate Committee on Public Policy, where the measure was heard in its chamber of origin, She is not an attorney.

□ We're expecting that the House sponsor of the measure, Rep. Greg Steuerwald (R), will strip the language in SB 12 as it came over from the Senate and insert the language from his HB 1093 that was not heard in the House in deference to the Senate. The majority caucus chair believes that the HB 1093 language "in his opinion, includes everybody" according to one GOP House colleague involved in the discussion . . . although he will face pushback from others, including Rep. Tony Cook (R) of Cicero, whose more specific HB 1020 was expected to be the focus of the House debate headed into session. Speaker Brian Bosma (R) said Thursday, "The goal is to get us off the list" of the five states without a hate crimes law.

□ Rep. Cook professes concern that judges are hesitant to use the hate crimes aggravator due to case law on discretion, and that judges need the language that had originally been featured in HB 1020 to properly perform their responsibilities.

□ Meanwhile, Hoosier high-tech companies and national civil rights organizations keep up their pressure on Republican legislative leaders for a comprehensive bill with a list.

● An intriguing Wednesday a.m. tweet from Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R): “As I travel across Indiana and speak to communities about K-12 education, it is clear from listening to our citizens that many of IN’s education policies are in question & do not represent the wishes of the majority of families.”

□ Just as interesting: the responses to this tweet from Hoosiers who suggested that Dr. J run for governor in 2020. The most recent superintendent of public instruction to make (an albeit short) bid for governor was Glenda Ritz (D), who sought to be a part of the 2016 field.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) authored another FoxNews.com op-ed (initially exclusive to that forum, and not to any Indiana outlet) contrasting the legacy of civil rights hero Clarence Henderson with discredited actor Jussie Smollett. General Hill met the man who participated in the 1960 Greensboro lunch counter sit-ins at F.W. Woolworth, at the White House last month. “While Smollett has now attained popularity,” through his alleged hate crime false reporting, “he may find respect a harder prize to grasp if allegations are proven to be true,” AG Hill writes. “Henderson is someone who has earned respect” with his participation in protests against segregationist policies that “inspired similar efforts across the South.” The AG repeats words of presidential praise for Henderson and adds, “A civil rights hero who chose not to be a victim, Henderson is the antithesis of one who would use his race to disgrace the memory of his ancestors – all for a little popularity In today’s culture of political correctness, shameless self-promotion and the need to be liked, Clarence Henderson might not win many popularity contests.”

● We told you last month that the big-buck rate hike case involving Indiana American Water Company has been withdrawn from the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission hearing agenda as it was ready for argument because the parties were negotiating in earnest good faith . . . and now we can report to you that Indiana American, the Office of the Utility Consumer Counselor, and additional parties have reached what they are labeling as “an agreement in principle” on the utility’s pending rate request, and you should anticipate the filing of a formal settlement agreement with the Commission by March 18.

● So you thought all the real scrutiny of bills in the second half would take place in the House . . . and that the Governor’s eye-opening budget request for the Department of Child Services, quickly ratified by the House, would be a given? Well, Senate Committee on Appropriations Chair Ryan Mishler (R) may have thrown down the gauntlet Thursday in a DCS budget hearing, questioning whether the $286 million additional annual ask – which most have taken as a given to this point – was justified . . . and hinting that a lot of calculators may be heating up between now and late April to determine an appropriate number. Sen. Mishler noted that caseloads are already down about 15% over the last year; while case manager turnover has fallen by more than 25% over the same period.

□ And weren’t some eyebrows raised when DCS officials couldn’t answer what seemed to be a simple – and helpful – question from Sen. Ed Charbonneau (R) about how many case managers the agency needed based on the number of cases today.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) launches a campaign to help Hoosiers “more easily report instances involving alleged abuse by clergy,” an initiative that seems to have come out of the blue, and which quickly attracted negative attention from detractors who quietly suggested that it was a bit cheeky of his office to do so given the recent investigations and pending civil actions regarding his personal conduct.

□ His office website now offers online form by which individuals may report abuse, which, in turn, may be disclosed by OAG “to appropriate law enforcement agencies in accordance with Indiana law. Anyone submitting a form may be contacted by an investigator.” While the website initially aired that OAG was “conducting an independent review for the purpose of public transparency and accountability,” that statement was quickly deleted, and it appears that the scope is far less proactive.

□ “Recent national and international reports of alleged abuse committed by clergy members have prompted widespread concerns,” General Hill said in announcing his outreach effort. “Hoosiers are understandably worried that this kind of criminal activity might go underreported even here in Indiana. As a result, we have decided to make sure citizens have an available means of reporting any potential abuse so that authorities at all levels of government can pursue justice for victims.” He continued, “Members of the clergy hold positions of great responsibility. People trust them and look to them for guidance. By providing this service, we help ensure that if ever a religious leader betrays that trust by committing an illegal act of abuse, he or she is more likely to be found out and investigated. Those who violate our laws must be held fully accountable for their actions.”

● Caldwell VanRiper, Inc. has been selected over five other bidders for contract negotiations leading to a three-year, $360,000 contract to provide marketing and public relations services for the Family and Social Services Administration.

□ The unsuccessful bidders were all also based in the metro area, and are well-known in state government circles: Tom Hiron’s Hiron & Company Communications, Inc.; Stephanie McFarland’s McFarland PR & Public Affairs, Inc.; Mike Snyder’s The MEK Group, Inc.; Sunny Lu Williams’ TechServ Corporation; and Guy Westermeyer’s Westcomm, Inc.

● Expect some interesting new videos to pop up from the Department of Child Services late this year courtesy of a new contract with Holsapple Communications LLC (for up to $35,000; but it also includes public relations services for up to $7,000, and no video may be billed at more than $4,000).

□ The contractor is to create and produce at least seven complete videos on topics to be determined and requested by DCS and may include topics such as: children in the child welfare system; a day in the life of a DCS family case manager; videos memorializing events and interviews; and public service announcements. At least four of the videos must be completed by November 30, and at least three more videos between December 1, 2019 and November 30, 2020.

● Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joined a coalition of all 50 state (and the three territorial) attorneys general in signing a letter to the U.S. Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation supporting enactment of the “Telephone Robocall Abuse Criminal Enforcement and Deterrence (TRACED) Act,” bipartisan legislation to curb illegal robocalls and spoofing.

□ In their letter, the attorneys general state that the TRACED Act enables states, federal regulators, and telecom providers to take appropriate steps to combat these illegal calls. The legislation would require voice service providers to participate in a call authentication framework to help block unwanted calls and creates an interagency working group to take additional actions to reduce robocalls and hold telemarketers and robocallers accountable. “Everyone deserves to be able to enjoy peace and privacy without the interruption of unwanted calls,” General Hill says. “We need stronger measures aimed at stopping illegal robocalling. This legislation would be a definite step in the right direction.”

● As the focus shifts from cleanup back to accommodating current and former area residents in the East Chicago neighborhood afflicted by lead contamination being addressed by Superfund action, look for Jake Sipe and the Indiana Housing and Community Development Authority to assume a greater public role. Sipe has earned plaudits for his work behind the scenes on working with residents of the evacuated housing complex, and IHCD will begin to emerge again as a big player in the process as it moves forward, particularly as EC Mayor Anthony Copeland (D) finds himself distracted by a May primary challenge from former Rep. John Aguilera (D).

□ IHCD’s Sipe’s involvement may also now increase as Mayor Copeland seems to have changed his mind about the fate of the contaminated former West Calumet Public Housing Complex, and now seems willing to consider it again for residential use . . . although there are some suggestions that he’s only raising the prospect (at primary time) to gain leverage with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency on the nature and extent of the Superfund cleanup efforts.

● The Indiana Department of Homeland Security will host a pair of public meetings to detail, answer questions, and receive comments about the 2019 State Multi-Hazard Mitigation Plan update. The plan, which identifies Indiana’s greatest risks for disasters and outlines strategies to mitigate these risks, must be updated every five years by the Federal Emergency Management Agency. The public meetings will be held at the Indiana Government Center South - Auditorium on March 14. The draft plan will be made available online to the public for review and comment after March 8.

● After the “Protection at Conception” bill failed to get a hearing in the House, pro-life activist James Silberman took to The Resurgent to assail pro-life Republican legislative leaders for refusing to advance the measure. He accuses House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R), who did not hear the bill in his panel for a second year, of making “verifiably false” claims when “[h]e contends that a hostile judge could strike down the sections of The Protection at Conception Act which end abortion while upholding the sections which repeal regulations.”

□ Silberman blames National Right to Life’s state- and county-level affiliates for the “misinformation,” observing that “Allen County Right to Life (Fort Wayne and surrounding area) made the argument on their Facebook page. Smaltz and Right to Life are either being dishonest or they don’t know what they’re talking about, and it’s very difficult to believe a State Representative and a major lobbying group, whose primary objectives are writing and lobbying for legislation, are unable to understand what a non-severability clause is. Indiana Right to Life declined to answer questions”

□ The opinion piece also explains that House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) “claims his hands are tied, ignoring the fact that his oath is to the Constitution, not the Supreme Court. That oath obligates him to ignore Roe v. Wade, which was a grievous and deliberate violation of the Constitution.” Rep. Curt Nisly (R), the bill’s author, said in an interview with The Resurgent “that while it’s too soon to say for certain, there’s no reason he wouldn’t introduce The Protection at Conception Act again in 2020. He also said he’s unable to tell whether he thinks Smaltz and Bosma are coming around and may be more open to ending abortion in Indiana next year.”

● The justices of the Supreme Court of the United States slate their the next conference for Friday, March 15, and the two big Indiana cases we have been telling you about for a few months now will likely be on the conference agenda again as the justices determine whether to add the matters to their docket.

□ Despite the (presumed) return of Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, the justices punted – for what is now a sixth time – on a decision on whether to review the State of Indiana’s October petition for a writ of certiorari in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-483. This is the challenge to provisions of HEA 1337-2016 that would (1) require health-care facilities to dispose of fetal remains in the same manner as other human remains, i.e., by burial or cremation; and (2) prohibit abortions motivated solely by the race, sex, or disability of the fetus and require physicians to inform patients of the prohibition.

□ Another Indiana case will presumably be relisted – for a 10th time now – on March 15 after having been rescheduled twice as well. Newton v. Indiana, No. 17-1511, involves the 1995 decision of a juvenile offender who, in exchange for the State’s agreement to no longer seek the death penalty, pleaded guilty to a sentence of life without the possibility of parole for a murder he committed at age 17 with two older co-defendants. If it is relisted for March 15, this case will likely been on the conference agenda more times than any other case up for consideration.

● The latest Choice Scholarship Program Annual Report from the Indiana Department of Education reveals that for the 2018-19 school year, 36,290 students took advantage of the state voucher program to attend 329 participating private schools, about 3.2% of total state student enrollment, at a cost to the state of $161.4 million. More than 1,300 households that participate in the voucher program report incomes greater than $100,000, and the largest over-the-year increase in household income type was found in the household income type of $100,000+.

□ The demographics: 12% of voucher students are African American, 21% are Hispanic, and 58% of the voucher students are white.

● Don’t be surprised if you see a push to allow the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the Indiana Department of Environmental Management to regulate certain “fugitive emissions” – specifically airborne ethanol – in light of a fascinating frustrating fight in Ripley County. MGPI of Indiana seeks to store up to 320,000 barrels of whiskey in a pair of warehouses at the former Deufol packaging plant in Sunman . . . and local residents are up in arms over the prospect.

□ The problem? While whiskey barrel storage sounds relatively benign, locals complain that the whiskey aging process allows ethanol to evaporate from the saturated wood barrels – the “angel’s share” – which in turn causes a sac fungus, Baudoinia compniacensis, a black, crusty growth, to disfigure nearby buildings and plants, potentially harming property values and crops. Sunman residents turned out en masse to recent IDEM public meetings about the MGPI air permit request to express their concerns about the whiskey fungus, which is already very much in evidence on buildings and residences in nearby Lawrenceburg (nicknamed Whiskey Town, U.S.A.), and Greendale, where distilleries have been in operation for more than 150 years.

□ Mike Perleberg, news director for Eagle Country 99.3-FM in Lawrenceburg, reports that some 10% of Sunman’s population (only 989 people) turned out for a recent IDEM public meeting about MGPI’s air permit request, complaining that MGPI’s “profits are being prioritized over the property values, crops, and health.” He explains, “The mold has been visible on structures ... where Seagrams first began producing whiskey at a distillery in 1857. MGPI now owns that distillery, but has been searching for more warehouse space to place barrels for the aging process. In Lawrenceburg and Greendale, the distillery predates many of the homes and businesses. In the Sunman case, it is the distiller looking to move in, bringing some undesirable side-effects.” However, “IDEM officials told citizens that the agency cannot regulate the airborne ethanol ... because it is classified as a fugitive emission and is not on the list of contaminants the agency is required to regulate. ‘Ethanol is not classified as a hazardous air pollutant. The EPA by statute or federal rule has set out 187 hazardous air pollutants by name and ethanol is not among them,’ explained Doug Wagner, technical environmental specialist with IDEM’s Office of Air Quality. Wagner said IDEM enforces regulations established by the Indiana Environmental Rules Board. He said citizens can ask the IERB to consider adding ethanol vapor as a pollutant.” Former Sen. Bev Gard (R), a biochemist by training, chairs IERB.

IN the Economy

● We recently told you about the plan by Ohio’s new Republican governor to raise the Buckeye State sales tax on gas by 18¢ per gallon from 28¢ per gallon to 46¢ per gallon ... and now Michigan’s new Democratic governor is proposing to raise the Wolverine State gas tax by a stunning 45¢ per gallon (adding a 15¢ increment per year for three years), bumping the gas tax north of our border from 26¢ per gallon to 61¢ per gallon.

□ Will Hoosier gas stations and truck stops on the northern and eastern borders suddenly become prime investment vehicles themselves?

● Shelby County and Jackson County rank first and second in Indiana for having the highest share of employment by a foreign-owned corporation, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. In Shelby County, 22.4% of workers are employed by a foreign-owned establishment; in Jackson County, the rate is 21.5 percent. By comparison, 6.4% of Hoosiers and 5.0% of U.S. workers are employed by a foreign company. Bartholomew County at 15.5% is the only other Hoosier county in double digits.

□ There are only eight counties nationwide in which the share of employment by foreign-owned companies exceeds 20% (Ohio is the only other state with at least two such counties). The data is actually from 2012 but was only just released in February.

● Take the following news in tandem with what we’ve been telling you about the rapid decline in RV production in North Central Indiana: Average weekly wages in Elkhart County during the third quarter of 2018 declined by 4.2% compared to the third quarter of 2017 – the largest rate of decline among the 350 largest U.S. counties (which together cover 73% of U.S. workers), according to Bureau of Labor Statistics data.

● Indiana’s Office of Work-Based Learning & Apprenticeship, housed within the Department of Workforce Development, says that it is well on its way to hitting – and even surpassing – a gubernatorially imposed goal of doubling the number of Hoosiers enrolled in various types of work-based learning programs, from 12,500 to 25,000 by the end of 2019. The office was created one year ago via an Executive Order.

● STAT offers a decidedly different look at the (locally) ballyhooed decision by Eli Lilly and Company to market a half-priced version of its best-selling insulin, Humalog. The influential Beltway health and life science industry information provider’s D.C. Diagnosis newsletter wrote Tuesday while the strategy “seemed like a stellar PR move for the company, which is facing no less than three congressional investigations about its pricing of insulin by midday Monday, it became abundantly clear that lawmakers in both parties weren’t willing to cut Lilly much slack, and in some cases, I think the decision may have backfired entirely,” writes the author, who serves up negative or at least skeptical reactions from key lawmakers, including the chair and ranking Democrat on the Senate Committee on Finance; the chair of the House Committee on Ways and Means Health Subcommittee; and the Diabetes Caucus co-chair. STAT’s drug industry newsletter similarly questions whether the action will “actually appease Lilly’s critics. (No surprise, after all those lawmaker reactions: It doesn’t look like it.)”

□ Calling diabetes an “epidemic,” one House Democrat from Chicago is also pushing the “Insulin Access for All Act,” which would eliminate cost-sharing on insulin for Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries.

● New data from the U.S. Department of Agriculture find that Indiana’s 2018 cattle inventory, at 880,000 head as of January 1, rose by two percent over 2017 levels. Broken down, beef cow numbers were up slightly to 209,000 head, while beef replacement heifers experienced a 10% decline to 45,000 head. The number of dairy cows was down by three percent to 181,000 head, while there was a seven percent growth in heifers for milk cow replacement, hitting 80,000 head. The 2018 calf crop was at 360,000 head, up by six percent from 2017.

□ Indiana’s sheep and lamb inventory in Indiana on January 1, 2019, was 60,000 head, up by five percent over 2017 levels.

● Rolls-Royce Corporation of Indianapolis is awarded a $19,459,236 delivery order as part of a previously awarded Air Force Life Cycle Management Center contract for C-130J Propulsion long-term sustainment. This delivery order provides for funding Option II flying hours. Work will be performed primarily at Robins Air Force Base, Georgia, and also at various locations that support the work, and is expected to be complete by January 31, 2020.

- Fast-growing Carmel-based KAR Auction Services Inc. lays off an undisclosed number of employees. After it committed to long-term growth in Hamilton County (including $80 million toward its corporate headquarters), KAR was offered up to $6.45 million in conditional tax credits and up to $500,000 in training grants by the Indiana Economic Development Corporation not even 18 months ago. IEDC also was to provide Hamilton County with up to $1 million in infrastructure assistance from the state's Industrial Development Grant Fund on top of additional incentives from the City of Carmel.

- Pinpoint Pharma, a West Lafayette-based startup that specializes in custom compounded medication for pets, plans to invest almost $240,000 to lease, renovate, and equip more than 2,100 square feet of lab space in West Lafayette as it ramps up operations to support the commercialization of its medicine-printing technology. Pinpoint Pharma has used several state-directed entrepreneurial resources and Purdue University programs to fuel its growth to date, and recently received its license from the Indiana Board of Pharmacy. The company plans to create more than 25 new, high-wage jobs over the next few years. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offers Pinpoint Pharma up to $243,000 in performance-based tax credits. Tippecanoe County and Greater Lafayette Commerce will provide training grants . . .

IN Transition

- The Indiana State Department of Agriculture hires Kimberly Barkman as ISDA's first Agricultural Education program manager. In that role, Barkman will serve as a liaison between ISDA and the Indiana Department of Education, and schools with an agriculture program. Barkman grew up on a tobacco farm in Switzerland County, participated in 4-H, and served as the 2003 District 12 FFA President. She earned her undergrad degree from Purdue University in Agricultural Education before working as an agricultural education teacher at Triton Central for two years and then teaching at Beech Grove City Schools for six years.

- Brandt Anderson is the new national security advisor for U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R), who serves on the Committee on Foreign Relations. Anderson had been a military legislative assistant to U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX).

- Grant County's own Joel Elliott, who was chief of staff to former U.S. Sen. Joe Donnelly (D) in both the House and Senate, is now chief of staff for freshman U.S. Rep. Abby Finkenauer (D-IA). Elliott also served on the staffs of former U.S. Sen. Evan Bayh (D), former U.S. Rep. Baron Hill (D), and former Lt. Governor Kathy Davis (D). The Butler University alum, who earned his law degree from the Indiana University School of Law, now has an excuse to spend time in Iowa heading up to the 2020 presidential race . . . which has to be good news for South Bend's Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D).

- U.S. Surgeon General Jerome Adams, a former Indiana health commissioner, is being whispered by some as a potential long-shot candidate for the open commissioner post at the Food and Drug Administration, where Dr. Adams could exert greater regulatory influence.

IN the Lobby

- Barnes & Thornburg LLP files a federal lobby registration on behalf of the Career Education Corporation, a higher education provider based in Schaumburg, Illinois, to "Assist client with legislation and regulations concerning higher education issues, including work with the Higher Education Act (HEA)" . . . Barnes & Thornburg also registers on behalf of the Vapor Technology Association, the Washington, D.C.-based national trade association for the vapor industry, to "Assist client with legislation and regulations involving vaping industry."

- The Washington, D.C. law firm Baker & Hostetler LLP files a federal lobby registration on behalf of medical technology provider Hill-Rom Holdings to lobby Congress on "Medicare coverage for medical technology."

- University of Notre Dame Associate Vice President for Federal and Washington Relations John F. Sturm retires from his in-house lobbyist post after almost seven years during which he opened the University's first office in Washington, D.C., where he was based.

□ Sturm, an Irish alum who earned his law degree from the Indiana University School of Law, had almost a generation of lobbying experience for NBC, then CBS, and finally the Newspaper Association of America before joining UND in 2012. He also served in several capacities at the Federal Communications Commission.

- Our sister Hannah News Service newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, reports that as SB 552, the omnibus gaming bill, left the Senate, a provision in the measure would remove the prohibition on horsemen's associations using their distribution from racino slot machine wagering adjusted gross receipts for lobbying.

INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT

The House holds Gary's cards now

Haute cuisine, casino condiments shift to the House menu

The Senate has advanced SB 552 and SB 66 to the House after some minor tweaks on Second Reading that, in part, paid lip service to some communities that would be impacted by changes in the gaming rubric - but removing some protections for others in just eight minutes of floor surgery.

All of the amendments were approved via voice vote. Four others had been prepared, but were not called by their respective authors.

SB 66 Senate Second Reading

A pair of minor amendments to SB 66 consumed two minutes of floor time.

An amendment offered by Senate Committee on Appropriations Chair Ryan Mishler (R) of Bremen was largely technical and had little to do with the gaming issues, and a Melton amendment, brought to him by Ivy Tech Community College, was just a clarifying provision that would better allow Ivy Tech to provide workforce alignment support. Sen. Melton thanked Sen. Mishler for his "hard work" on the measure.

SB 66 Senate Third Reading

Third Reading action on SB 66 consumed 10 times as many minutes as Second Reading action . . . a full 20 minutes.

Sen. Mishler (R) introduced his bill, effectively appropriated from Sen. Melton, promoting it as a "development bill for Gary and for the State of Indiana." But to achieve the lofty objectives, "This will require the relocation of two gaming boats." In exchange, the Buffington Harbor land on which the two Majestic Star Casino boats, pavilion, and hotel currently operate will be directed to a new "compact" under detailed agreement, and the waterfront will be developed.

Sen. Melton then rose to tell the chamber, "This means a whole lot to my community," touting a $300 million investment that "would go into the City of Gary," with attendant jobs and a significant new property tax base. "This can be transformational for the City of Gary, and this is just one aspect" of the bill, he proudly noted.

Passage would "send a sign" to all elements for people "to drive through and stop" in Gary, and not just for a new "gaming institution." He called the proposed transmodal logistics complex a "catalyst for opportunity." "This is not about gaming. This is about making history and using today as making a watershed moment." Pre-empting criticism about the lack of specifics to date about potential investors, how much would be required, and the extent to which any state, county, or local governmental dollars would be required, he contended that this is "not some type of pie in the sky" dream, but a serious proposal that had been "truly vetted by experts." The message: "Gary is open for business. You lookin' for water? We got that. You lookin' for trains? We got that Excuse how I say that, just keepin' it real today," explained an excited Melton.

He concluded, "This is not about creating another port; this is truly an opportunity to develop within the footprint of Buffington Harbor and also to attract national and international businesses into Gary due to the proposed partnership between the City of Gary and the State of Indiana."

IN luck with new Caesars CEO?

Wouldn't be his first time at this Rodio

After swooping in with a major stock purchase at a vulnerable time for Caesars Entertainment Corporation (a new CEO search and rumors of a corporate sale), veteran activist investor Carl Icahn cut a deal under which he now effectively controls 25% of its board, with the opportunity to add one more seat to his stockpile should Caesars fail to choose a CEO of whom he approves effectively by mid-April.

The potential good news for Indiana, where Caesars owns four properties and generally generates one-half of all casino revenue in a given month: Icahn is believed to favor Tony Rodio as the next CEO of the conglomerate.

Rodio, Affinity Gaming's CEO since October, was president, CEO, and a board member of Tropicana Entertainment, Inc. for seven years before the sale of the parent company of Tropicana Evansville to Eldorado Resorts, Inc. in late 2018. Rodio was GM of Argosy Casino Lawrenceburg and then Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg, from October 2008 until May 2011, overseeing the $336 million conversion from the original riverboat . . . and giving him an understanding of the Cincinnati market and Indiana dual-casino operator Penn National Gaming, Inc., which owned the Lawrenceburg property. Rodio's Affinity, with Z Capital Partners, also made a takeover bid in October for Full House Resorts, Inc., parent of Rising Star Casino • Resort.

Melton added, "This about rebuilding a community," and will mean "new jobs, an expanded tax base, and more funding for local schools."

Following her Democratic colleague, Sen. Jean Breaux (D) of Indianapolis spent a minute praising Melton's "outstanding job of explaining" why the measure was so important to the city and state. In a signal to her fellow senators from the Indianapolis metro area, Sen. Breaux likened the measure to SB 7, the Indianapolis Capital Improvement Board funding bill that would help expand the Indiana Convention Center, upgrade the Bankers Life Fieldhouse, and pave the way for a new soccer stadium and multi-use development, noting that SB 66 offered similar "excitement for Gary."

Sen. Rick Niemeyer (R) of Lowell, a member of the legislative interim study committee that examined the Gary port proposal and land-based casino, took five minutes to offer his cautious support.

Sen. Niemeyer began by reminding everyone that the sole negative vote on the interim panel final report "was mine." He explained that at the time, no one from the investment community and the national railroad lines showed up to express their individual or collective interest and involvement. This was a "great idea and concept," but no one was there to talk specifics and indicate an interest in becoming part of the project. Since then, however, the South Lake senator said that investment people had been in contact about putting money in, and "that changed the game."

The former county official – whose father was also a senator from 1973-84 – explained that he had always had an issue with Northwest Indiana development giving one area an advantage over another in training and related matters. "I get that," he acknowledged, but Sen. Niemeyer added that he remained "a little concerned" about the language. This needs to become "a Northwest Indiana project," and not just a Gary-centric deal. As the senator representing seven of the 11 Lake County townships, he noted how the Northwest Indiana Regional Development Authority (RDA) couldn't concentrate just on the northwest corner and had to look elsewhere for economic development in Lake County given that the "population explosion" was in these seven townships, and any new development deal will "need to look at this."

With prospective developers now coming forward, railroads becoming involved, and the gaming-related component getting cleaned up, "now it makes sense to me," so he said that he would vote for it. As for the sordid history of local government corruption in Gary, the senator said that his wife told him, "That stuff is history, you gotta go forward, Rick." This would be "one of the biggest bills helping Gary" that he has seen since being elected to the Senate, and he believed it had the potential to make Gary "what it was when I was growing up." He vowed, however, that "I'm gonna be fighting for this development stuff" in the other seven township "where the population growth is gonna be at."

Sen. Mishler closed by telling senators that during the interim study committee and leadership field trips to Gary last Summer, "we saw a lot of potential there." He also offered a shout out to "Sen. Rogers," former Sen. Earline Rogers (D) of Gary, the Mother of Casino Gaming, who was lobbying for SB 66.

SB 66 passed 43-6. Sens. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem; Vaneta Becker (R) of Evansville; Eric Koch (R) of Bedford; Dennis Kruse (R) of Auburn; Jim Tomes (R) of Wadesville; and Mike Young (R) of Indianapolis voted against it.

Sens. Becker, Houchin, and Tomes likely opposed it because of the problems they had with hold harmless language in the companion measure, SB 552.

SB 552 Senate Second Reading

February 25 floor amendments to SB 552 would establish a general framework for competitive bidding for the new Terre Haute casino license, hold some casino host communities harmless from the new competition, and set up a process for compensating Spectacle Entertainment, LLC for the value of its "floating" second Gary license if it is not ultimately chosen to operate a new Vigo County casino.

Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) of Jasper, the author of SB 552, offered cleanup language in the first amendment, restoring the original language about licensees, and re-establishing hold harmless provisions for the City of Evansville and the West Baden historical hotel fund, but with a three-year sunset provision and a $25 million hotel fund limit. Mandatory hold harmless language was re-inserted for both Hammond and East Chicago, and LaPorte County and Michigan City were added to the hold harmless umbrella under a change that would mean those units would effectively be guaranteed their current gaming tax revenue stream for three years after a Gary casino opens at a land-based site in the Steel City.

The hold harmless language as it left committee – which left such payments completely to the discretion of the City of Gary – prompted what could have been The Region equivalent of events at Fort Sumpter in 1861.

Former Rep. Gail Riecken (D) of Evansville, whose husband was involved in one of the original Evansville riverboat proposals back in 1994-95, writes for the City-County Observer, an online Evansville news and commentary site, "Why are the payments unequal to the Evansville and the West Baden Fund? If it is the problem of distance with the Vigo Co license where the transfer will take revenue from two other casinos, why aren't the payments ongoing?" She continues, "Evansville needs money. This could be a nice windfall. But, let's make sure we get all that we deserve. Let's make sure we get the same revenue for this bill as the West Baden Hotel."

Hammond Mayor Tom McDermott, Jr. (D) said on his paid political radio show on WJOB 1230-AM in Hammond February 22 that hold harmless was promised to Mayors McDermott and Anthony Copeland (D) of East Chicago "to our faces" by Sen. Messmer. "They wanted it in there to shut me and Mayor Copeland up," Mayor Tom told listeners.

Mayor McDermott said that Messmer's amendment protected the cities, but that casinos in Hammond and East Chicago were still at risk of losing big chunks of workers. He recounted Sen. Melton publicly asking local officials in assorted Senate proceedings not to scare Lake County residents with layoff talk. "That's the dumbest thing I've ever heard you say," Mayor McDermott mused. "There are going to be layoffs – that's a fact," he asserted. "Sen. Melton, there's going to be layoffs."

Hammond's mayor again took up the mantle for his less vocal EC colleague, Mayor Copeland, noting that 50% of the Ameristar Casino East Chicago workers live in the City of East Chicago. Beyond the loss of local jobs, there would also be a big hit to Horseshoe Casino Hammond (about 10% he says) and Ameristar (about 35% he approximates).

"It doesn't hurt Hammond as much as it devastates East Chicago," McDermott explains, largely because the new land-based Gary casino would cut off traffic to Cline Avenue. "This is way worse for East Chicago than it is for Hammond," says the mayor, observing that Mayor Copeland "did the right thing with his casino money" . . . and adding gratuitously that there were no East Chicago city government iPads "sold on the streets of Chicago," a reference to the January conviction of a Gary city department official, who was just ordered to repay $4.13 million in restitution for the computer equipment thefts.

And in case you're wondering about the apology publicly demanded by Sen. Melton after Hammond public safety employees disparaged Gary over city corruption in a Senate Committee on Public Policy hearing on the casino bill, he assures The Region that he had talked to Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) about that.

"I apologized and she accepted," hizzoner confirmed.

The Messmer amendment also would set the Indiana Gaming Commission up in the most important discretionary role for commissioners in at least 15 years through the process that would allow other operators to bid on the Terre Haute casino and evaluate the value of the second Gary license.

That valuation process would be used to compensate Spectacle Entertainment if the incoming owner of the Majestic Star Casino assets is not ultimately awarded the Wabash Valley license.

Sen. Chip Perfect (R) of Lawrenceburg, whose district includes both Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg and Rising Star Casino • Resort (which wanted to move just its "unused" gaming capacity to Terre Haute), tells Mike Perleberg of Eagle Country 99.3-FM in Lawrenceburg, "Each casino operator would put together a package, much like happened 27 (sic) years ago, to compete for the license. That package would include how much money they are going to spend on a casino, hotel, or local development, but also ask for that license. So everybody gets a fair shot," believes Perfect, who was part of the local investor team for an unsuccessful original Lawrenceburg riverboat applicant in the initial 1994-95 competition.

Perleberg reported that Sen. Perfect had planned to offer an amendment to SB 552 "to more clearly define casinos' adjusted gross revenue in an effort to protect local riverboat revenues for casino host communities like Lawrenceburg and Rising Sun. He decided not to after reaching an agreement with Senator Messmer, the bill author. 'This moving of the licenses is going to change the revenue picture. We want to make sure that all the adjusted gross revenue that is associated with all these different casinos and racinos is part of the new floor, because in 2020 we will set a new base for how hold harmless dollars (for host communities) are calculated,' said Perfect."

Sen. Messmer's changes would also allow the Gameboys to factor in any undue economic concentration of licenses after the cap on license ownership is lifted under SB 552.

Less noticed, but said to be critical to Caesars Entertainment Corporation: the Messmer amendment reinstated the 20% live dealer rate for the racinos "similar to how it left Public Policy," Sen. Messmer noted. The amendment creates a separate "gambling game tax" for table games, calculated on 88% of table game adjusted gross receipts, and equal to 20% of the AGR received by a licensee during the state fiscal year.

Sen. Eddie Melton (D) of Gary, author of the SB 66 companion bill, rose in support of the Messmer amendment to SB 552, citing the "significance and importance" of the project, and emphasizing the degree of collaboration that had been achieved in Northwest Indiana over the hold harmless language. He called this a "monumental day" in the history of both Gary and Northwest Indiana.

Sen. Lonnie Randolph (D) of East Chicago moved through an amendment of his own, with stated support on the floor from Sens. Messmer and Melton, consistent with Messmer's effort, but covering distributions to Lake County units, and holding harmless East Chicago and Hammond for any difference in dollars they might be losing once SB 552 would take effect.

An amendment to SB 552 prepared by Sen. Mike Bohacek (R) of Michiana Shores largely protected LaPorte County and Michigan City in the way that the Randolph amendment insulated the two cities in his own district.

Sen. Bohacek thanked Sen. Messmer for "looking out for all the other communities," observing also that the four cities "have not been known in the past to work together well, and it's nice that this is happening."

Sen. Melton added that this cooperation "sets a very strong precedent for the future" for working together.

The following day, the Senate spent only two minutes on educating itself, debating, and voting to send SB 552 across the Rotunda to the House.

SB 552 Senate Third Reading

Sen. Messmer (R) called down his bill, touting it as a “once-in-a-generation opportunity to reset the gaming industry in Indiana.” This “collaborative effort involving all the casino operators,” the Indiana Gaming Commission, senators, local government officials, and other state officials helps the existing operators be more competitive, and “will maximize our opportunity as a state to benefit from increased gaming revenues to our General Fund without increasing the number of licenses and staying within the caps that were established in 2013 for the number of positions at each facility.”

The majority floor leader explained that a big change from earlier versions was the creation of an open process under which other casino operators, freed of license ownership caps, could bid on the new Terre Haute casino, “This competitive proposal is important for Vigo County and the state,” and was designed to “ensure Vigo County and the State get the best proposal possible.” He told his colleagues that he had worked extensively with the Gaming Commission and the industry to “craft the mechanisms” that will allow this process to work.

Sen. Messmer offered an overview of the other provisions, particularly the ones through the Second Reading amendment that would allow the Department of Child Services to recover delinquent child support on sports betting winnings; Gaming Commission-sought language on undue economic concentration in lifting the ownership caps; and hold harmless benefits for all Lake Michigan municipalities, Evansville, horsemen, and the West Baden historic hotel preservation fund. He also noted that French Lick would be free to direct some AGR to support the fund. Messmer also mentioned the acceleration of the timeline for live dealers at the racinos, and the proposed increase in the free play deduction from $7 million to $9 million.

After the four-minute explanation, he yielded to Sen. Jon Ford (R) of Terre Haute to describe the sports betting provisions in SB 553. Sen. Ford said that the bill would allow casinos, racinos, and OTBs to apply for license from the Gameboys for “over-21 sports betting.” The bill would allow subcontracts with vendors to operate the sports wagering aspects of gaming facilities, and the sports wagering vendors would be required to obtain a license from the Gaming Commission. The measure does not include any tax provisions or rates for sports wagering because any new taxes must originate in House bills, and Ford promises that a tax regime for sports wagering will be debated and included in a relevant bill by the end of session.

Wagering could be conducted only on events approved by the Gaming Commission, focused upon professional and college sports. “High school sports, amateur sports [involving those under age 18], and competitive video games cannot be wagered on,” Sen. Ford summarizes.

Wagering could occur on site or on a “registered mobile device.” Obscured through the debate in both committee and on Second Reading was whether a mobile device user would be required to register in person at a brick-and-mortar site (or kiosk) or if a mobile device user could merely register online.

After a full five minutes of explanation about the bill, Sen. Melton rose to deem Sen. Messmer a “a true convenor” who brought people together with his “hard work.” After promising not to review the benefits for Gary, Melton proclaimed SB 552 to be “an extremely good complement to Senate Bill 66” and said that it would “support communities.” He added that “I don’t see this as an expansion of gaming. I see this as an opportunity to leverage our existing assets and allow us an opportunity to move forward” in Gary. With Illinois headed toward online gaming, he said that Indiana needed to “be proactive and not reactive.”

Sen. Becker of Evansville also took to the floor to recognize and appreciate Sen. Messmer’s work. But she reminded her colleagues that they had just “restructured casino rules not too many years ago,” and Evansville got permission to move from its riverboat onto land. Tropicana Evansville invested $45 million in this new land-based facility in downtown Evansville and opened just two years ago. She asserted that “this bill will hurt Eldorado” Resorts, Inc., the parent company of Trop, and that she had successfully offered an amendment in the public policy committee to help Eldorado and the City of Evansville . . . but the hold harmless language for Eldorado was pulled out of the bigger bill – and while the hold harmless clause for the Pocket City was restored, it is in line to quickly sunset. “I don’t think it’s fair to leave us high and dry after three years,” said Becker, who was a strong advocate of the 1993 riverboat authorization law when she served in the House. She says she hoped for appropriate changes as the bill moves over to the House, but told her colleagues that she would vote against SB 552 in its current form now.

Sen. Lonnie Randolph (D) of East Chicago followed Sen. Becker to the microphone, thanking Sens. Messmer, Ford, and Mishler before he echoed the same concerns as Sen. Becker – specifically the East Chicago hold harmless language. Sen. Randolph, whose district includes parts of Hammond and Gary as well as all of East Chicago, acknowledged that Gary has its “own style” as to how they handle some things, and while he added that he was “not here to apologize for the conduct,” he asked his fellow senators to “understand where they’re coming from” and the pressures that they are under. “I appreciate the consideration you’ve shown the riverboats in my district,” he concluded.

No senator chose to speak against the bulky legislation.

Sen. Messmer closed the discussion by thanking Sen. Ford for allowing the merger of Ford’s SB 439 sports wagering bill into 552, and Sen. Melton for his hard work on the package. He also gave a shout out to Sen. Breaux, and Senate Majority Caucus Chair Jim Merritt (R) of Indianapolis and Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D) of Anderson for their support. Messmer noted the unanimous votes for the bill in both panels which considered it, and asked for its approval.

The bill passed 38-11, and we can largely group most of the negative votes into three categories:

Unhappy with local hold harmless language. Sens. Becker, Houchin, Tones, and Greg Walker (R) of Columbus (some might presume his vote to have been simply prompted by being anti-gaming, but it goes deeper here: Sen. Walker’s parents were from Orange County; he is a strong admirer of the local recycling of casino revenues; and he wasn’t convinced that French Lick was well enough protected by the formula).

Unhappy with gaming expansion. Sens. Jim Buck (R) of Kokomo; John Crane (R) of Avon; Koch, Kruse; and Young (R).

Others. Senate Committee on Tax and Fiscal Policy Chair Travis Holdman (R) of Markle was probably a no vote because of his general views on gaming, but we hesitate to pigeonhole him there with the others. Sen. Jack Sandlin (R) of Indianapolis represents a district that includes the Winner's Circle Pub, Grille & OTB in Indianapolis, so we're not quite sure what he found objectionable in the bill.

Hammond's Mayor Weighs in Again. The leader of the opposition to a Gary inland casino move, Hammond's Mayor McDermott, continued to speak out (sometimes as the unappointed surrogate for East Chicago's Mayor Copeland) even after SB 522 passed the Senate.

Because of the importance of Hammond (and the former Lake County Democratic Party chair who also remains a statewide political player) in the mix as the bill heads to the House, where he should hold more sway, we're keeping close tabs for you on what the unfiltered mayor has been saying.

The day after the bill was formally referred to the House, Mayor McDermott joined Lakeshore Public Radio's Chris Nolte on Regionally Speaking (where you can also hear your favorite gaming newsletter's Ed Feigenbaum early next week) to outline his concerns with the measure.

Mayor McDermott believes that a high-profile inland location will not increase the market, but merely slice into the revenues for Horseshoe Casino Hammond and Ameristar Casino East Chicago . . . a situation that he thinks will be exacerbated by what may be coming in Chicago.

"I'm not really optimistic something good's going to come out of this," Mayor McDermott tells Nolte, although "it really depends upon from your perspective. If it's Gary, yeah, I think Gary is positive that this is going to be an improvement for them. But really what's happening is they're shifting [the revenue.] If the Chicago gaming market was a pie, and the slices were cut as they're cut, Hammond would have a big piece, I acknowledge that, but we're also the closest to our market, which is Chicago. East Chicago has the second-biggest piece, and they're also the second-closest to Chicago. Gary - even though they have two licenses - has two smaller pieces, smaller than East Chicago's piece, smaller than Hammond's piece, and then you've got Michigan City and that's the pie. Now the question is, if we allow Gary's casino to relocate to 80/94, which is what they want to do, is that gonna make the pie bigger, or are we just gonna cut the pieces differently? And it's my contention the pie's not gonna get bigger; all they're doing is cutting the pie differently. Which [means that] East Chicago is going to give up a lot of their piece. East Chicago is projected to lose anywhere from 30 to 50% of their gaming revenue if this happens, and Hammond's projected to lose about 10 percent. So it's really not a huge impact on the City of Hammond, but on East Chicago it's devastating. So if you're looking from East Chicago's perspective, this is the worst thing that could possibly happen to them. If you're looking at it from Gary's perspective, they think this is great."

He proceeds to explain just why.

"I don't think it's fair personally," said McDermott. East Chicago, in particular, Ameristar Casino just invested $25 - $30 million under the current Indiana law, which says 'build on your footprint.' And they did, and you're gambling on the footprint right now in East Chicago. And now Gary - instead of building on the footprint like the law says - they want to change the rules, and I don't think it's fair."

Hammond's mayor also contends that the SB 66 transmodal facility is just a ruse by which the license move can be rationalized and justified - an argument to watch for again in the next month.

He reminds listeners that "Gary for a long time has wanted to relocate their casinos. Now, they've approached it differently this year, and said 'We have this opportunity at Buffington Harbor to create a deep water port and an intermodal facility; that's why we want to relocate the gaming boat.' I don't really see it much different than any other argument, and quite frankly there's been no study on how much a deep water port would cost. I mean, just knowing what I know about the Hammond Marina, when we do our breakwall, and it's just for a little sailboat marina, okay when we do our breakwall, it's like $35 million. So if we're going to do a deep water port at Buffington Harbor, how much is- is that gonna cost $100 million? $150 million? Who's paying [for] that? Is it Gary? Is it RDA? Is the State of Indiana paying for it? These are questions nobody's talking about. But what they're very willing to do is possibly detrimentally harm the gaming by moving the casino license, which is contrary to state law, and they don't really know what they're going to do with Buffington Harbor after that."

Mayor Tom continues, "They talk about a lot of things [in Gary], but you know, I've talked about a lot of things as mayor, and then one thing I realize is that you can't really talk unless you have the money to back it up and get it done. Nobody's talking about how much that's gonna cost, and it's not going to be cheap."

Then he turns his attention to "the big gorilla in the room" - "Chicago, and what they're going to do in Illinois, what they're going to do with the gaming industry. Are they gonna build a casino closer to Hammond? If they do, we're gonna be fighting against Illinois and against Chicago, and you know, at the same time I'm sitting here looking over my shoulder in Indiana and I've got the state coming at us too! We're feeling a little lonely in East Chicago and Hammond right now."

What Should You Expect in the House? "I have a feeling it's going to change a lot" in the House, says Mayor McDermott, and no one would disagree with him on his point. "This bill's going to change every step of the way," Rep. Sean Eberhart (R) of Shelbyville told a late February Shelby County crowd.

"I can't predict what the House is going to do. Our case is made in terms of economic benefit," Sen. Melton told a March 2 legislative forum in Gary.

But the fact is that this is still largely an Inside the Limestone debate. The public has not been mobilized (at least, perhaps, outside of Terre Haute, where they are "All-in"), and without anyone but the industry and local officials truly involved in the measure, there will be an opportunity for House leaders to perform any desired surgery without much scrutiny beyond the State House.

Even Sen. Messmer, author of the omnibus gaming bill and maestro of the overall package, was somewhat dismissive of his measure in an online interview with 18 WJTS in his hometown of Jasper, saying only that SB 552 offered “updates to our gaming statutes,” and after touching on the Gary casino move, he merely noted that his bill had “a lot of other minor pieces and nuances to it.”

There is certainly not the public engagement seen with the 1993 riverboat authorization, the 2005 legalization of a casino for French Lick, or even the 2007 legalization of “slots at the tracks.” There was no noise during the 2015 deal that allowed land-based gaming within existing footprints, and even the sports wagering elements of the current package have failed to generate much public excitement, pro or con (recall that the majority of Hoosiers in the two most recent polls are not in favor of legal sports betting).

Another factor to consider is the uncertainty in the budget process this year, with both the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the Senate Committee on Tax and Fiscal Policy home to solons chairing their respective panels for the first time in a budget session, and Rep. Tim Brown (R) of Crawfordsville still recovering from a serious head injury and more than sharing his House Committee on Ways and Means chair with Rep. Todd Huston (R) of Fishers.

Neither chamber seems to have any budget primacy this year (as the Senate has enjoyed in recent years), and where deals might have been cut on the side with then-Sen. Luke Kenley (R) of Noblesville to include a gaming element in the budget at the last minute to avoid a floor fight, we’re not sure that those kinds of arrangements might be quite as easy to make this time around, with no single “go-to” guy playing point on the budget now. This is important to bear in mind, and could be more of a complicating factor than you might think.

While eventually Rep. Huston will likely assume the Kenley budget/gaming guru role, he may not yet have the clout this session to shape things flying solo.

- The Speaker is Not on Board. At mid-session, House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) of Indianapolis sat down with the media and faced a number of questions about the pair of bills, which will both be sponsored by Ways and Means Co-Chair Huston, who has been vocal in recent years about needing to reset the gaming rubric in the state in partnership with the industry and host communities to address current market realities, new competition, and changing demographics.

The cosponsors of SB 552 are House Majority Floor Leader Matt Lehman (R) of Berne, and Reps. Terri Austin (D) of Austin and Greg Porter (D) of Indianapolis. The Speaker says that both SB 552 and SB 66 will be assigned to the House Committee on Public Policy. Assuming they advance from there, both measures will also have to stop over in Ways and Means prior to hitting the House floor.

Speaker Bosma, who is both respectful and perhaps representative of those who served in the General Assembly during the legalization process from 1989-1993 and the early years of legalized gambling in Indiana, reminds Hoosiers that “any major expansion of gaming gets a lot of scrutiny in the General Assembly. I’m sure this one will as well. I do consider it a major expansion of gaming.”

Asked which part he considers a “major expansion,” the Speaker quickly responded, “All of it.” He explained that “It will be the largest one since perhaps the racinos were authorized to have games” 12 years ago, and “there will be those who are just anti-gaming generally” who will vote against it.

“It’s not an expansion of gaming. It’s just a relocation of assets,” Sen. Melton told the early March Gary event attendees in a preview of the House argument. “We’re not asking for more table games... I’m optimistic we had a great economic development case when it was in the Senate.”

One of those who has traditionally been opposed to gaming bills since he made his legislative debut a decade after the riverboat authorization passed in 1993, is Rep. Bruce Borders (R) of Jasonville. His district is one of four that includes Vigo County territory (bumping right up against Terre Haute city limits), and he is likely to be the sole vote in the VC delegation against any casino bill that includes Terre Haute and Vigo County.

Speaking on WVUT 91.1-FM’s Meet Your Legislators show in Vincennes, Rep. Borders says that he is not swayed by potential jobs and economic benefits for Vigo and surrounding counties. Rather, the former mayor of Jasonville views a casino facility as likely detrimental to smaller locally owned businesses. He contends that “a lot of your mom-and-pop businesses can’t compete with the low cost of the entertainment, the low prices of the meals, and so forth, and so what typically happens is that it doesn’t take too many blocks outside of those areas, and little restaurants start closing up, little dry cleaners, and so forth – and I think that it actually in the long-haul it creates addicts to gambling.” He adds that those who cannot afford to spend their paychecks on gambling end up hurting their families and falling into debt.

“There will be those who don’t like the impact on their local community – one of the other 13 – and those who don’t think the bill goes far enough, so it’s difficult to find the place where a large expansion like that can pass. I’m surprised that it passed the Senate,” Speaker Bosma added.

Pressed as to how simply moving an existing casino elsewhere constitutes expansion, the Speaker asserted, “If there’s a new casino facility, I don’t know how anyone can argue that is not an expansion, just because there was a ‘dormant’ license. Pressed further about whether the second Gary license was truly “dormant” as he contends, the Speaker details his rationale: “Well, they have one entrance and they pay one set of taxes, so you want to keep arguing about this, whether it’s one or two?” He continued, “they’re walking in the same turnstile, they turn the same turnstile”

His bottom line is that “I think it’s a major expansion, and it brings up the live games at the racinos. I haven’t even read how much money is exchanging hands among everyone, and there’s still winners and losers. And I’ve said this many times: every time – because of our limited market in this state for gaming and our saturation of gaming facilities – if you change something, even a small change, you’re turning a knob over here and as an ex-engineer that used to work monitoring air conditioning machines, dials move all over the place, and every little change changes dials all over the state, and a new casino would certainly do that in a major fashion.”

So could all of the changes requested actually amount to a bill with enough of something for enough districts that it could be successful instead of falling victim to its own weight? "If all the knobs are right, it could, I guess," Speaker Bosma concedes.

Speaker Bosma turned his attention to the sports wagering portion of the bill, which he seems to believe at least arguably may not constitute an expansion of gambling.

He explained that "After the Supreme Court [of the United States] said you could do it and it's going on – so I understand – it's going on in our state right now anyway; people are utilizing off-shore and generally illegal facilities to do so. There seems to be some sense behind it that is not unlike what we did with Cherry Masters here, collecting up 15,000 Cherry Masters from truck stops and bars and taverns, and allowing games to go in at the racinos [in 2007-08]. We convinced ourselves then that that was not an expansion, and this seems to be analogous. Again, I don't know what's going to happen to it here."

Asked about moving up the date for live dealers at racino table games from the 2021 date initially set during the Pence Administration, Speaker Bosma reminds everyone that "It was picked for a reason. The reason was to allow French Lick an opportunity to bring its facilities in a competitive position, and that was a date set for a purpose, and I do have concerns about moving it up."

Due to the then-governor's concerns about expansion, live dealers were set to become effective in the same month that Gov. Pence would have left office after completing a potential second term.

Can lawmakers overlook what could be hundreds of millions of dollars of new revenue?

The Speaker was dismissive. "That argument has been used for all sorts of nefarious activities: 'If only the state would legalize and tax our [idea], that would be the end of our woes.' I encourage our caucus literally to set aside that concern. Everybody shops their pet project with, 'Look at all the money that's coming your way,' [but] we need to make the best decision on policy for the citizens of the State of Indiana and not worry about the fiscal enhancements that might occur."

Rep. Huston, who will be carrying both measures in the House, echoed the Speaker's tax sentiments in comments captured by Dave Taylor of the Terre Haute Tribune-Star. "In any policy, particularly gaming policy, you can't chase the dollars," Rep. Huston said, just as he did during the Bingham Greenebaum Doll Legislative Conference back in December. "You have to think about what's the right public policy and what's the right long-term impact and the right positioning for Indiana."

Rep. Huston added that the state is also not in a situation "where we need to chase dollars."

Even accepting the premise that the package in front of the House would constitute an expansion of gaming, is that a proverbial red line for lawmakers? "Well, apparently not in the Senate," says the Speaker, even though "It was; it was for years."

Then Speaker Bosma drops this intriguing tidbit: "I actually had a discussion with the new Senate leader [Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) of Martinsville] about his position that because there had been this now-dormant license that had not been used since it was issued but now dormant, that it wasn't an expansion. And I said 'Are you telling me that a new brick-and-mortar facility that has gambling in it is not an expansion?' And he said, 'Well, if you say it like that' I'm not criticizing. Everyone's going to have a different position on this, and it's personal to them, and personal to what they think is best for the state and their constituents. So, maybe less of red line than it used to be."

So the Speaker is uneasy, other members of his leadership team confide to us that the unrefined bill as it came over from the Senate is simply too heavy a lift at this point, and Rep. Huston – one of the veritable handful of House members who understand the individual components, how everything meshes, and the implications of any little change for other pieces and the whole package – has yet to speak out substantively on the two bills.

- The Northwest Indiana House Delegation. Expect the Northwest Indiana House delegation to play a large role in reshaping the SB 552/SB 66 package in the House. Mayor McDermott asserted on his paid WJOB radio show March 1 (where he gave a much appreciated shout-out to your favorite gaming newsletter for its detailed coverage!), "The Senate doesn't even listen to my opinion; they don't even care." but he is confident that those who oppose a Gary move off the footprint strength (at least without major compensation for those casinos and communities negatively impacted) will possess significantly stronger voice in the House.

Mayor McD says this despite the fact that all of the NWI casinos affected by the move – positive or negative – are Democrats, who are the House superminority, and that his Hammond casino and the Michigan City casino are all represented by freshmen Democrats. Even the East Chicago property is served by a Democrat who is only serving his second term in the House (this lawmaker, Rep. Earl Harris, Jr. (D) of East Chicago, also has the two Gary casinos in his district, raising the same kind of intra-district conflict as Sen. Randolph, whose district include the same three casinos and Horseshoe Casino Hammond).

Rep. Carolyn Jackson (D) of Hammond is "ready and waiting for this bill; she's going to take it to town," says Mayor McDermott of the freshman representative who has Horseshoe in her district. The more experienced Rep. Mara Candelaria Reardon (D) of Munster, whose district extends into Hammond, is similarly "licking her chops."

Hammond's mayor expects his delegation to make the case that a new inland casino, despite how well it might perform, is not going to "create a whole bunch of additional gamblers ... because Gary's got a casino now." Rather, the casino will largely cannibalize the existing properties.

He also notes that Speaker Bosma is not interested in expanding gaming and the Governor's not pushing the package either. Hizzoner suggests that "A lot of people in Gary are 'high-fiving' about taking a piece of our pie, but it's not a done deal yet."

Others who are watching the debate from the 40,000-foot level suggest to us that the plethora of moving parts and the lack of Senate enthusiasm to seriously pick apart the parts suggests that when House members start to dissect things, the high-profile casino elements could simply disappear.

– Sports Wagering. Generally speaking, there seems to be an undercurrent of sorts suggesting that many on the House side would prefer to see the bill – if not broken off into bite-sized pieces – at least cleaved in two, with the more readily acceptable sports wagering component considered separately, and not potentially weighed down by the casino provisions (some were still telling us late last week that there still may be enough inter-casino and community conflict over hold harmless provisions alone to sink the entire package).

Asked Thursday about a bifurcation of the gaming bill, Speaker Bosma said, “That’ll be up to the chairman of the committee,” House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn, “and his members, I don’t know if that’s going to happen or not. There’s an awful lot in it, so it may make some sense to divide it into parts, but that will be entirely up to the committee.”

What about the details . . . which received short shrift in the Senate?

As the measure – pertaining to sports wagering – passed the Senate on Third Reading, it reads, “A patron may register under this section in person at the certificate holder’s licensed facility or online using an Internet form approved by the commission.” Watch whether this sentence attracts more attention among House members.

The bill as it crossed chambers also allows in-play wagering (so-called “prop bets”), but would require an operator to rely upon official league data for determination of payouts. There may be some general concern about prop bets, but they are likely to stay . . . and some casino operators, at least in the myriad of other jurisdictions where similar debates are playing out, have raised questions about the need to work with (and the efficiency of) sports leagues on the official data component.

The key task for the House is setting the sports wagering tax rates . . . and this will go hand-in-hand with the registration and renewal fees as well. Everyone seems to be on message with the need to keep tax rates low to ensure that the illegal operators are crowded out, as well as to boost payouts to winning bettors – no small deal especially for those close to the border with other sports wagering options. Early talk, beginning back with the interim study committee and the Indiana Gaming Commission’s Eilers & Krejci Gaming report, seems to have focused on a Nevada-like 6.75% tax rate (and nothing resembling the much-maligned 36% Pennsylvania tariff), but you shouldn’t be surprised to see the ultimate rate resemble that of New Jersey: 8.5% for in-person wagering at a casino, and 13% for online wagering.

Operators are hoping that the registration fees remain in the range initially proposed in the legislation, and that lawmakers don’t get stars (or dollar signs) in their eyes by glancing at the fees sought by Illinois’ new governor, who wants to raise $200 million from 20 sports wagering licenses at $10 million each, but coupled with a token annual renewal fee of $5,000.

That simply ain’t gonna fly in the Hoosier State (although some Hoosiers still warmly remember the total $500 million in property tax relief the General Assembly extorted from the two pari-mutuel horse racing tracks for being allowed the racino privilege in the final 2007 legislative flurry . . . while they may also conveniently forget that the exorbitant toll was a significant contributor to the properties ultimately filing for bankruptcy reorganization).

Will there be any talk about directing any potential state or local lucre from sports wagering to the Capital Improvement Board, Bankers Life Fieldhouse upgrades, or the Indy Eleven soccer team multi-use complex, which could solve a lot of dilemmas (although there seems not to have yet been any out-state legislative hand-wringing over help for any of these efforts this year, nor has there been any significant local opposition heard from on these prospective funding deals)?

And might Democrats seek to score some political points by hijacking the future revenue stream for teacher pay or school safety? Bear in mind that Rep. Porter, the Ranking Democrat on Ways and Means and a key player in the teacher pay and general school funding talks, is a cosponsor of SB 552 as it moved to the House.

We probably also ought to caution you that if the sports wagering provisions are split off into a separate bill (as Sen. Ford of Terre Haute initially intended it to be, perhaps believing it would make it easier for him to win a Vigo County casino), that also makes it easier for the casinos – for which sports wagering is an ancillary revenue-raising opportunity, secondary to what could be won or lost from the movement of casinos under SB 552 – to walk away if the provisions are not entirely to their liking.

While the operators should fear not over the tax rate debate, the casinos are wary about the prospect of having to use – and pay for – official league and sanctioning body data for in-game and in-event bets.

This could get particularly uncomfortable for some recalcitrant lawmakers should the sports leagues defer to, say, a pair of key locals like the Indianapolis-based National Collegiate Athletic Association’s Mark Emmert and IndyCar’s Mark Miles to make this tough sell . . . but we wouldn’t rule out this particular issue perhaps being the big nail-biter in the waning hours of the session.

– Questions for Gary About the Basic Premise. While there was literally no substantive questioning in the Senate about just how pie-in-the-sky the deepwater port and transmodal facility might be; the expected cost and financing mechanisms for such an effort; and what specific public and private commitments (or even expressions of private interest) there have been, there should be a sharper focus on this in the House, and we don’t think that general comments such as those on the floor by Sen. Niemeyer about investment types being in contact will suffice.

Complicating things is that Gary just lost to retirement one highly respected House member who had served for more than 35 years, and his replacement is a long-time political foe of Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D).

A lot of the Senate undercurrents (and some of the negative public testimony) centered on Gary's inability to get its collective act together, and while it seems like some of the other Northwest Indiana communities have managed to unite (if only to oppose the off-footprint Gary casino move and preserve their respective revenue streams), keep close watch on whether Gary's assorted factions and individuals can come together for an important economic development package – particularly in the midst of a big Democratic mayoral primary in the Steel City.

– Local Development Agreements. Look for lawmakers from Southeast Indiana to pay particular attention to how both SB 552 and SB 66 might treat local development agreements, and whether there appears to be a House predilection toward making interlocal agreements a matter of statute, or allowing them to continue via contractual agreements negotiated between units of government.

Like some of their counterparts in Lake County (at least on the Senate side) whose districts may include competing casinos and communities, lawmakers in the so-called Cincinnati market may face similar conflicts among the units of government they serve.

– Distributions of Slot Wagering Revenues. Expect to see Shelbyville Rep. Eberhart, a member of the House Committee on Public Policy, to push for a change to the proposed tax cap on local dollars, even though the pool is expected to expand with the addition of live dealers at table games and sports wagering at the racinos.

The weekend just before Second Reading amendments were considered, Rep. Eberhart was questioned at a Shelbyville legislative luncheon by a Shelby County judge about whether a better revenue-sharing package could be crafted under the pending legislation. “It’s in state law that says that local communities are entitled to three percent. It wasn’t negotiable,” responded Rep. Eberhart, explaining that “the county gets three percent of the adjusted gross revenue of the racino and that is spread amongst the communities. That will not change. What will change,” he noted, is the revenue side of the equation. “The projection is it will increase by $35 to $40 million with live table games, and (Shelby County) will get three percent of that.” While the county currently enjoys a bounty slightly in excess of $7 million, SB 552 would cap that amount at $8 million. Rep. Eberhart does the math and concludes, “You will probably hit that cap with the additional money coming from live games and sports wagering.” However, he adds, “That provision has not been debated yet.”

Expect Rep. Eberhart – who dropped his own HB 1483 in favor of the Senate bill – to tell his fellow committee members and colleagues on the floor that accelerating live dealers will “lead to several hundred jobs that pay on average of over $50,000 a year” at his county’s largest employer, and “spur economic development, we hope.”

– Terre Haute Convention Center Funding. Look for the House to strip a provision in SB 552 that would send almost $1 million annually to Terre Haute for its proposed convention center complex, and to do it with the support of Terre Haute. The appropriation is no longer needed thanks to the intervening approval of a local food and beverage tax for that purpose.

Terre Haute’s Sen. Ford still seems baffled about how the language from his original 2017 measure continues to pop up in 552 despite explicit instructions for its removal at assorted stages.

Where Does the Governor Stand on this Now? Governor Eric Holcomb (R) was asked about some of the issues involved in the gaming milieu during a news conference at the end of February.

He told reporters, “I understand and concur with leaders upstairs who mention that every reaction has an equal and greater reaction somewhere else. I understand that. We need to be very mindful of that. On the other side, I understand there were ‘haves’ some years ago and there were ‘have nots.’ So I’m not opposed to looking at new ways, with the existing licenses that are there, but this bill goes far beyond just that. And quite honestly, I need to do a lot more digging before I weigh in whether I’m for a final version of this bill.”

Regardless of Governor Holcomb’s reference to “expansion,” he’s never been opposed to expansion per se, preferring a deep look at where we’ve been and why, and where we want to be 10-20 years down the line, as he explained to your favorite gaming newsletter when he was a candidate for governor in 2016.

And if you harken back to what he said then and how we interpreted it for you, you’ll understand the context within which he will likely forge his decision. He spoke to us exclusively three years ago about the need to view things, as we wrote, “in the broader context, understanding the laws of intended and unintended consequences of changes to the gaming rubric in Indiana.” His actual words: “I want to encourage thoughtful discussion – long-term thinking – understanding that you don’t want to disrupt the market or destabilize the market with hasty decisions,” adding that he was concerned about “the facilities that we have right now around the state that are critically important to those communities, and so chaos in the market is not good, on one hand. Stability in the market is good; predictability is good. And that’s what gamers look for, too, is trying to be able to predict.”

The Holcomb bottom line, take from the most extensive interview he has given to date on gaming: “[W]e need to be careful and thoughtful because of the longstanding agreements that we’ve had and because of the community development that’s occurred and then the whole relationship that comes into the states and the cities, and the counties potentially.” He reiterated that given the significant investments by casino companies over the years, “Deals are deals, and we’ve made deals and we need to honor those.” When we challenged him on whether that meant the State effectively entered into lifetime deals with the casinos in 1993, especially given that we’ve significantly changed some elements, the then-lieutenant governor replied, “We’d have to discuss each of them.”

As for sports wagering in the 2019 legislature, the Governor was a bit more enthusiastic (perhaps realizing that he could potentially wager on his beloved Houston Astros to win the 2019 World Series!). He explains, “It’s happening now in Indiana. What we are doing in this bill would allow us to capture part of a market that already exists that we don’t capture now. I’m not quick to walk away from that.” However, there was another careful gubernatorial caveat: “But, again, I stress I want to look at every word.”

IN General

● In our last issue, we told you that Ice Miller LLP's John R. Hammond III testified before the Senate Committee on Appropriations representing Penn National Gaming, Inc., – but we added one too many references to “Hammond” on that item. He had lobbied on behalf of the original Lawrenceburg casino a generation ago (not the original Hammond Empress casino) – bringing some symmetry to the process, because Penn National owns what is now the Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg. We did accurately note the substance of his testimony – that a Gary land-based casino would cost his company's Ameristar Casino East Chicago some $35 million to $60 million in gross gaming revenues, leading to a reduction of 175 to 300 jobs, depending upon the ultimate location . . . and that moving up the date of live dealers for table games at the racinos from March 2021 to July 1, 2019 would impact Penn National's Lawrenceburg property to the tune of $7 million and 21 jobs.

□ Indeed, in a February 28 filing of its Form 10-K filed with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, Penn National raises the dreaded “material adverse impact” prospect. Penn National explicitly states that “In the event this legislation passes and a casino is developed in Gary or a nearby municipality in Northwest Indiana, this would have a material adverse impact on the results of operations of Ameristar East Chicago,” and “In the event this legislation passes and live dealer table games at the existing racinos are available in the summer of 2019, this would have a material adverse impact on the results of operations at Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg”

● Churchill Downs Inc. is poised to become the biggest head-to-head competitor with the two Caesars Entertainment Corporation Indiana casinos that bookend the diagonally opposite ends of the state on Lake Michigan and the Ohio River.

□ While Churchill's Churchill Downs in Louisville has not been a threat to Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana given the lack of any other gaming product beyond on-track and simulcast pari-mutuel wagering, when Churchill opened its Derby City Gaming facility with slot-like historical horse racing machines in September at a highly renovated former OTB, revenues in Harrison County immediately saw a highly discernible decline, and if sports wagering comes to the Commonwealth of Kentucky, Churchill is well-positioned to deploy and profit from the new option (even as Indiana is likely to beat the Bluegrass State to the starting gate, and HCSI is in the process of converting to a land-based casino to further address competition).

□ Long-time observers who remember the ill-fated Indianatied Rivers predecessor deal in Rosemont may wonder if “the Widow Payton” will end up being part of this deal after being a victim of the prior pact). The original deal called for Churchill to pay $326 million in cash for a 50.1% stake in the company, but after additional investors agreed to sell, it grew to $407 million in cash for an ≈ 62% ownership share. Neil Bluhm will stay on as chair, and Rush Street will continue to manage the Chicagoland casino.

□ After Rivers opened in July 2011, its location on the outskirts of Chicago proper next to O'Hare International Airport with easy interstate access and major local roads, ensured that it would quickly become the market leader, snatching the crown from Horseshoe Casino Hammond.

IN Sports Wagering

● Five days before the IndyCar 2019 season kicks off, Hulman & Co. top exec Mark Miles tells Brant James of Gambling.com he believes “that it's much better than 50/50 that something along the lines of what came out of the Senate will be passed and become law” before the 104th running of the Indianapolis 500 next rear. “The legislative proposals which we argued in support of are likely to be helpful to fans of the Indianapolis 500-mile race and IndyCar because they will facilitate deeper and broader fan engagement, simply. So that's primarily the reason that were supportive.”

□ According to James, Miles says that integral to IndyCar's support, would be licensing of official data from the series for in-race bets. “Presumably,” he told James, “we would be able to charge some kind of licensing fee to those who want to offer this bet.” “There's a lot of data to suggest what really drives interest, would be in our case to be able to bet on what happens on the next lap. And if that's true, then the question arises, well, where the data comes from, which will inform settlements of those bets and setting those odds, etc.,” Miles said. ‘And our view is thinking about racing, sometimes you finish a lap and it takes us another lap to figure out what happened on that lap. It has to happen in race control and it's totally driven by the data that is available real-time in race control. So we wouldn't want to see a situation where different offers of bets – in-race bets – somehow came to different conclusions about what happens. We think it's important that there be an authentic provider of the information for settling bets and we don't see any way that the licensees offering bets could get that real time if they don't have our real-time data.’ Miles said IndyCar collects upwards of 50 million data points from the track during a typical two-hour race. That, he said, would make a data-sharing partnership similar to those Sportradar has forged with the top pro leagues in North America a logical next step. IndyCar odds are sparse currently except for futures markets for an Indianapolis 500 win by former F1 driver Fernando Alonso.”

□ According to the article, as for “‘The 500, we take 80 million data records off the track, all real-time,’ Miles said. ‘So that's just not usable to the casino that wants to offer in-race betting. That has to be massaged so that it is usable and it's quick. We think there will be an opportunity to manage our data and provide it in a way that helps facilitate casinos who want to offer this.’”

□ Miles also revealed that the IndyCar “series is current reviewing its rules regarding betting, which already forbid anyone issued a full-season credential – called a ‘hard card’ – from betting on IndyCar events. ‘But I think that that’s, that’s inadequate,’ Miles added. “And so we will soon be communicating with stakeholders and then promulgating enhancements to the existing rules.’ ”

□ Look for the highly respected Miles – replete with the unparalleled imprimatur of the state’s one-of-a-kind international tourist destination – to return to the State House to testify in committee in favor of legalizing sports wagering, but this time he’ll be much more focused on winning language that would position the professional sports leagues and sanctioning bodies to be licensed and compensated for providing official data to decide in-event wagers.

● Suddenly of greater interest than perhaps when the bill left the Senate Committee on Appropriations at the end of February: A provision in SB 552 that would specifically permit the Indiana Gaming Commission to “act upon information received from a sports governing body in considering requests to prohibit wagering on particular events or to prohibit making wagers of a particular type.”

□ Note that Major League Baseball recently requested that Nevada and Pennsylvania not allow wagering on Spring Training games, events which are not as competitive as regular-season games, and which may be affected by more frequent substitutions or wholesale roster changes (given the prevalence of split-squad games).

● Indiana does not yet have legalized sports wagering, but Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana still manages to find a way to capitalize upon the NCAA men’s basketball tournament (though you’ll never see the kinds of magic words that would cause the NCAA lawyers – or Indiana Gaming Commission investigators – to come down on the property). “We know you’ve got your favorites when it comes to college basketball. Come in March 18 - 20 and make your selections,” Horseshoe entices patrons via social media. “You could walk away with a share of $15,000 in cash and free play! Winner alerted after the Championship Game, no need to be present to win!”

□ The top five guests with the highest number of points at the end of the championship game will share $10,000 in cash and free play, with the top player earning an additional $5,000 in cash.

● Spring must be approaching and you must be in Indiana, because two casinos in the same market are separately running promotions with John Deere mowers as prizes.

□ Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana’s “Mow Money, Less Problems” giveaway saw two lucky guests on March 9 each win a brand new John Deere lawnmower with even more winners awarded free play.

□ Meanwhile, just a few days later and a few miles to HCSI’s northeast, Belterra Casino Resort features a “Mower For Your Money” promotion of its own, with drawings from 6:00 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. in which one winner receives a John Deere lawn tractor every 30 minutes, and a finale drawing at 11:00 p.m. features one winner taking home a John Deere ZTR mower and a John Deere gator.

● The eighth annual Four Winds Invitational, part of the Symetra Tour – Road to the LPGA, will be held June 7-9 at Blackthorn Golf Club in South Bend. The Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians and its Four Winds Casinos have raised more than $545,000 in seven years for South Bend’s Beacon Health System through this regional event. The 2019 tournament will feature a field of 144 professional women golfers from around the world competing for a $150,000 purse in the official qualifying tour of the LPGA Tour.

□ The Four Winds Invitational is one of four Symetra Tour events that are part of the Potawatomi Cup. The Cup highlights the contributions of four member tribes from the Potawatomi Nation who host tournaments throughout the Midwest. As well as the normal purse payout for each event, a total of $40,000 in bonus money is available to players based on performance, including $6,000 to the winner of the Potawatomi Cup.

● As the Indiana Gaming Commission was preparing to approve the Spectacle Entertainment, LLC purchase of Majestic Holdco, LLC and the Majestic Star Casino properties in Gary on March 8, after we went to press with this issue, details were revealed about investors in the Spectacle project.

□ Centaur Gaming’s Rod Ratcliff brings in general counsel John Keeler, CFO Tammy Schaeffer, and a family trust for Centaur’s COO, Jim Brown. From Ratcliff’s work with Hoosier Park and Argosy Casino Lawrenceburg, he adds his former partner, Terre Haute native Steve Hilbert. Former Rep. Dan Domezich (R), of Schererville, a GOP powerbroker and financial benefactor and some of his family members are also involved. End Game Holdings LLC of Lafayette is also involved through local attorney Stuart Gutwein.

□ You’ve long known that Terre Haute business leader Greg Gibson and some of his related entities are involved, but he’s also tied in trusts for the children of former Indiana State University basketball star Larry Bird (who was involved in abortive bids for both rounds of the Orange County operating agent contract some 15 years ago).

□ Others popping up in the application include former Indiana secretary of commerce Dan Hasler, now executive vice president for communications at Purdue University, and Windy City H&C Investors LLC of Carmel, a newly formed entity which may be linked to Dave Shepherd’s Shepherd Insurance.

□ Summit Partners Credit Advisors LP of Boston, a global alternative investment firm, will serve as Spectacle’s lender.

● In the Boyd Gaming Corporation fourth quarter earnings call with investment analysts, top execs of the parent company of Blue Chip Casino are asked about whether prior expectations for EBITDAR cannibalization should be deleted out of 2019 models given the unexpected strong performance by Blue Chip after the opening of the Four Winds Casino South Bend to its eastern flank. Executive Vice President and Chief Financial Officer Josh Hirsberg explains that “the way we think about it is Blue Chip did a really good job of kind of managing to the competition that it had. The impact was not what we expected it to be, but I think we have felt largely the impact that we are going to see. And what we’re doing now is having a business that has the opportunity to grow off of the levels that it’s at. To the extent of competitive dynamics today essentially as they are today, we would expect Blue Chip to kind of go off this base going into 2019.”

□ President and Chief Executive Officer Keith Smith adds some color on how Blue Chip mined other markets to counter the impact. He explains that “we saw the impact that we expected to see out of the battleground markets between the new competitions in Blue Chip. We saw really significant declines. What the team was able to do ... was really grow the business in other areas that worked between them and the new competition that came out of Chicago and other places. And so the team did a remarkable job of being able to offset those declines by picking up business from other places. So as Josh said, I think we feel good about, we’re at a stable base now. The impact of the new competition has been felt, whatever it is, and we can grow off of this base at modest levels.”

Southern Market News . . .

● Due to the latest round of Ohio River flooding and the rise in river levels, the ferry operations at Rising Star Casino • Resort were suspended until further notice before dawn on February 21. The ferry service did not resume again until approximately 4:30 p.m. on Friday, March 1.

□ The flooding did not impact casino operations. The property posted a note on its website telling patrons “WE ARE OPEN! THE RIVER MAY BE RISING BUT RISING STAR IS FLOODED WITH CASH!”

● Full House Resorts, Inc. tells the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission that the company’s Rising Star Casino • Resort “continues to explore opportunities to develop a new casino in Terre Haute, Indiana. The state legislature is currently considering several changes in casino legislation, including legalization of a possible casino in Terre Haute. Should such a bill become law, we intend to compete with all interested operators to present the best proposal for Terre Haute and for Indiana. There is no certainty that any casino legislation will pass or, if so, that it will allow competition on fair terms for such an opportunity.”

□ Full House President and CEO Dan Lee expounds on this in the company’s fourth quarter earnings call with analysts at the end of February, saying “There’s lots of steps going on,” and the bill “keeps getting twisted and modified,” with everybody trying to “get some advantage out of it, including us. And we’ll see where it ends up I think it was Mark Twain who said nobody’s property] is safe when the state legislature is in session, and I’ve seen it go both ways, so the bill in Indiana seems like every day has some new twist and turn in it, and we watch it.”

● Full House Resorts, Inc. President and CEO Dan Lee uses the company’s fourth quarter earnings call with analysts at the end of February to outline some recent and pending changes at the property that might have flown under the radar. Lee explains, “We recently introduced a resort fee in the hotel, which is pretty common in hotels these days. We no longer operate our buffet at breakfast, but instead we offer a Fairfield Inn- or Doubletree Hotel-type of buffet that’s kind of free, and that’s what you get for your resort fee ... but it’s much less expensive for us to have that free buffet than it was to operate the full buffet at the volumes we were having.”

□ Another change he says to expect: “We’re actually going to modify one of the existing restaurants that we can operate at more meals [during] the day, and turn the buffet into something that just operates on weekends – which is frankly something most of our competition in that market is already at. We’re the only people who have been operating buffet three meals a day, seven days a week, and we’ve already stopped the breakfast portion. And frankly, we’re one of the very few people who operate seven days a week lunch and dinner, and when you really run the math on it, it’s not very economical for us to operate that mid-week on many days of the week.”

□ You will also soon be seeing some visible differences on the gaming floor, according to CEO Lee. “We are making some changes in the casino with some of these ‘stadium gaming facilities,’ which we are installing in the next few weeks. Once we have that installed, we will offer fewer $5 tables, and perhaps and not operate the casino – the table games part of the casino – in the wee hours of the morning. We do now at Rising Star, and we don’t in our other markets. So, when you get into 5 o’clock in the morning, Rising Star will have more employees at the table games area than there are customers,” Lee relates, but he also adds that “we don’t want to eliminate it until we have the kind of stadium gaming alternative, which gives you an ability to play craps or blackjack in kind of a table games type setting. If you really run the math on a $5 blackjack table, if the people sitting at that table are really betting only $5 a hand, even if the table is full, you don’t cover payroll, and so fewer other companies doing that as well – and- trying to move away from the $5 dealer-dealt game and move from that game to more of a mechanized one.”

□ Lee’s bottom line on the changes is that they constitute “a philosophy throughout the company and throughout the economy as minimum wages go up and unemployment goes down, [that] we’re looking for every way we can to substitute technology for payroll. And so that’s marketing kiosks, maybe it’s front desk kiosks, any way we can satisfy things with the kiosk or drive people to where we are improving our websites where people can make their reservations for hotel rooms and special events on line. and maybe we don’t to have the same staffing at the call centers and so on.”

□ Full House Chief Financial Officer Lewis Fanger dishes out some additional color on the earnings call, giving credit to Ben Douglass, the new general manager of some six months. Fanger says Douglass offers “fresh eyes,” and has “started reinventing some of the ways we do things,” starting to be seen “in the results. If you look at revenues there was a small decline, but when you look at adjusted EBITDA and improved pretty meaningfully. Last year’s EBITDA was only $7,000, my joke is we can buy a third of a slot machine with last year’s EBITDA. This year we got it up to about $706,000.”

□ Fanger also subtly preaches some patience, observing that “It takes time to ramp up those new services like the ferry boat and as an example if you use Google maps to navigate, it takes some time to get a ferry boat inserted as the fastest route option. It’s a process, but it’s one we have been making our way through and it’s starting to populate now.”

● At Rising Star Casino • Resort, parent Full House Resorts, Inc. reports that net revenues of almost $12.0 million for the fourth quarter of 2018 compared unfavorably to just under $12.3 million in the prior-year period. Adjusted Property EBITDA improved significantly, however, despite the revenue decline, to $706,000 from only about $7,000 in the fourth quarter of 2017, reflecting what the parent company says are “management changes, a focus on cost controls, and improved weather.” This is the strongest Q4 quarter-over-quarter improvement in four years.

□ For the full-year period, Rising Star’s 2018 Adjusted Property EBITDA improved 4.8% to $2.8 million from $2.7 million in 2017, despite a small decline in revenues. The full-year results reflect adverse weather in the first quarter of 2018, including a brief closure related to elevated river levels. Management says that this was offset, in part, by the Rising Star RV Park, which opened in August 2017, and the new ferry service between Rising Sun and Boone County, Kentucky, which began operations in September 2018.

● Performance during the second half of February through early March at Tropicana Evansville was boosted due to the flooding-related closure of Harrah’s Metropolis on the Ohio River, well within Trop’s downriver market. The Illinois land-based (!) property was forced to close at 6:00 a.m. local time on Monday, February 18, and the property remained closed through at least March 7. When Illinois’ February casino revenues were released, they showed that Harrah’s had taken in only about one-third of its February 2018 numbers.

□ As we were headed to press with this issue on Thursday, Harrah’s posted this note: “The Ohio River has started to recede and we anticipate reopening in the near future; however, the frequently changing river forecast makes it difficult to accurately determine a specific time and date.”

● Seems like it was just yesterday (actually it was four years and change) that we were telling you about an angry Adam “Pacman” Jones, then of the National Football League’s Cincinnati Bengals, being escorted out of Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg in early morning hours over what was described then as a dispute at the casino cage. Fast forward to the wee hours of Wednesday February 27, change the venue to a few miles south at Rising Star Casino • Resort, and you’ll see that Jones was arrested shortly after 3:00 a.m. after he allegedly reacted belligerently when confronted by Indiana Gaming Commission agents who told him that they had evidence showing he had capped his bets at a table game and told him further such action would not be tolerated. After he allegedly “became verbally combative and disorderly,” Jones was placed under arrest.

□ According to the Ohio County Circuit Court probable cause affidavit in State v. Jones, No. 58C01-1902-F6-000015, Gaming Commission enforcement agents were alerted to potential cheating by Rising Star personnel, quickly reviewed digital surveillance and found “what appeared to be one visible count of capping a bet by Jones.” An IGC agent “approached Jones’ table to advise Jones that if he continued to cap his bets, he would be charged with Cheating at a Gambling Game,” and saw him verbally harassing the table games director “with loud and abusive language ... while pointing and gesturing his hands” After IGC intervention, Jones “aggressively” addressed the agent, swearing at him and using his body “in a threatening manner.” During the altercation, Jones allegedly told the agent, “I will kill you” and then stated, “I will whoop your ass.” After Jones “continued his threatening behavior,” as he was being restrained he was reported to have gotten physical with the agent “and attempted to forcibly free himself,” and was then placed in handcuffs. The agents say “Jones continued to disrupt casino gaming operations by yelling and screaming and refused to calm down. During law enforcement’s encounter with Jones, he appeared to be intoxicated,” and he was placed under arrest and eventually transported to the Dearborn County law enforcement center (shared with Ohio County), a transition during which “Jones continued with verbal harassments” against law enforcement officers. Some of his alleged comments mirrored almost verbatim what we reported in 2015 that he was heard shouting on video recordings of that incident. “During the transfer of custody, while Ohio County Sheriff’s Department was switching out issued IGC handcuffs for those of Ohio County, Jones fled from the OCS Deputy and ran towards the door attempting to exit, grabbing and turning the door handle before being subdued by law enforcement officers. Jones also resisted other law enforcement officers by refusing/resisting their repeated requests to enter the Sheriff’s Department’s vehicle.” Jones was transported to High Point Health for medical evaluation, and allegedly directed a racial epithet toward a High Point employee.

□ The 35-year-old Jones was charged with three separate Felony 6 offenses involving intimidation of a law enforcement official, battery against a public safety official, and cheating at gambling. He also faces a Misdemeanor A count of theft, as well as a pair of Misdemeanor A charges resisting law enforcement for flight and forcible resistance. The final two charges against Jones are Misdemeanor A charges of disorderly conduct and public intoxication.

□ As of last week, Jones is now represented by David Zerbe of Lawrenceburg. Long-time readers may remember him as the city attorney from the early and mid 1990s who was involved in the original Lawrenceburg riverboat deal – attracting the negative attention of the Gameboys and other investigative bodies in 1994-95 (note also that the Bengals, the team most associated with Jones, have not won a playoff game since January 1991 – before casino gaming was even authorized in Indiana; for some historical context, the Indianapolis Colts were led that same season by Jeff George and Eric Dickerson). The original counsel for Jones, Delmar Weldon III of Lawrenceburg, issued a statement shortly after the arrest flatly asserting that his client had been “falsely accused of cheating,” and “was arrested merely for reacting in the way any of us would.” Weldon asked people “not to rush to judgment,” and contends that “the facts will show that Adam was not in the wrong.”

□ The day after the probable cause affidavit was filed, Weldon moved to have the judge strike “inflammatory and offensive language” – a racial epithet (one of two) that we mentioned above that Jones was alleged to have used, arguing that it “has no relevance to any of the charging information and serves no practical legal purpose whatsoever. The inflammatory and offensive nature of this word is beyond measure and beyond dispute.”

□ Dearborn-Ohio County prosecutor Lynn Deddens (R) was not at all pleased with Weldon’s statements and other interviews he gave to the media, nor with his effort to have an amended affidavit filed. She quickly countered with a “Motion For Order Restricting Public Comments and Public Presentation of Evidence,” which is better described as a gag order on Weldon. In her request, she states that “hours of video evidence” of Jones at the casino “showed him changing his bets after game outcome had been determined,” and “support all of the charges and all of the allegations in the Probable Cause Affidavit” Referring to Weldon’s actions, the prosecutor expresses her concern that “he elaborates on these allegations, in a manner which implicitly casts aspersions on the integrity of the Court and the Prosecuting Attorney. These statements of Attorney Weldon are materially false and were made with reckless disregard for the truth of what led to Defendant’s arrest. It is difficult if not impossible to understand Attorney Weldon’s purpose in issuing these false statements, other than to grandstand or mislead public perception of the truth.” Weldon filed a response the next day, asking the judge to dismiss the State’s motion “for the reason that it does not provide any legal authority, which prevents the Defendant from responding and the Court from making a ruling,” or in the alternative, asking “the Court order the State to provide legal authority and allow the Defendant an opportunity to review and respond and make argument at a hearing.” Such a hearing was set last week for March 21 . . . suggesting to us that the judge wasn’t particularly concerned about the defense speaking out and prejudicing the State’s case or impugning its witnesses. There was intense local interest in the matter given Jones’ 14-year career with the Bengals before ending in Denver, and even TMZ and ESPN jumped in on the coverage.

□ Jones was eventually released on surety bond set at $10,000 and cash bond at $1,000. Terms of his release include a ban on direct or indirect contact with Rising Star. A pre-trial hearing is set for April 29.

□ On Wednesday, TMZ Sports posted about four minutes worth of cell-phone video footage which the site says was shot by his wife shortly after he had been placed in handcuffs in the service area of the complex, “footage the NFL star believes will prove officials overreacted that day Jones believes the video will show he was NOT out of control but rather restrained considering he was being taken into custody in front of his wife and other people who recognized him Both Pacman and his wife repeatedly tell cops they can say whatever they want because of ‘freedom of speech.’ At one point during the incident, Pacman turns to one of the arresting officers and calls him a ‘bitch ass na.’ We spoke with Pacman’s agent, Peter Schaffer, who tells us, ‘Adam was very controlled. We think the authorities overreacted, they love the attention ... Adam showed great restraint.’” The video also captures Mrs. Jones telling the Gaming Commission agents that her husband had spent some $20,000 at the tables during that visit.

● A 29-year-old Lawrenceburg man has been charged with two counts of Criminal Confinement (Level 5 Felony) and two counts of Neglect of a Dependent (Level 6 Felony) after he allegedly left his three-year-old girl and a one-year-old boy alone at home while he first went to buy cigarettes, and then decided to visit Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg. State v. Elsen, No. 15C01-1902-F5-000024.

□ According to the probable cause affidavit, the children left the house despite a zip-tied gate and were wandering downtown streets on a cold morning until a citizen rescued them and brought them to the police department. Dearborn County dispatch used the Smart 911 system to involve local residents in tracking down the parents, while the fire department and county emergency management took to social media to share the information. The mother was located at work, and that eventually led to the father, who was supposed to be home watching the children, also being found. The Department of Child Services was also drawn into the matter.

● Curious about just what Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana now has to compete against across the Ohio River in Louisville? Churchill Downs Inc. reports that its new $65 Derby City Gaming facility, stocked with historical racing machines, resulted in a fourth quarter 2018 net revenue increase of $12.0 million and an Adjusted EBITDA increase of $2.1 million for the company. CDI also says that for the full year, net revenue for the company’s category which includes the new venue “increased by $14.1 million and Adjusted EBITDA $1.6 million primarily driven by the opening of Derby City Gaming in September 2018.”

Hoosier Lottery

● The Hoosier Lottery was running ads in the last week of February on the Indianapolis broadcast of the latest season of NBC's The Voice. The Lottery's eponymous scratch-off tickets for the reality show have been on sale since September 4, and the closing date for the "second chance" promotion is March 3.

□ The spot that ran on the show's opening night February 25 did not mention the related $5 scratch-off game (with its $100,000 top prize, two of which were still available last week).

● The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for Saturday, March 9, rose to $30.8 million, a $500,000 jump over the previous jackpot, following a $400,000 hike for the March 6 draw and a $500,000 lift for March 2 - constituting the three largest consecutive additions to the jackpot pool since the trio of draws that spanned October 31, November 3, and November 7. The draw on Wednesday, March 6 marked the first time in more than seven years (since February 18, 2012) that the Hoosier Lotto jackpot topped $30 million.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for March 9 ranks as the third highest offered in any jurisdiction in the country, behind only Powerball and Mega Millions. The jackpot was last hit on October 14, 2017, at $25.5 million, which at the time was the largest jackpot up for grabs since the matrix was revised in May 2014. The March 9 drawing represents the 18th consecutive draw above that previous record level. This is also the largest jackpot available in more than seven years, since the $34.50 million jackpot hit on February 18, 2012 (a similar-sized jackpot was also won October 30, 2010).

□ The current jackpot also still significantly lags the top two jackpots on record, $54.5 million (won more than 10 years ago, on November 7, 2007) and $42 million (won on June 5, 1999). The current jackpot has been growing since February 10, 2018, so it has now gone unclaimed for more than a full year, and has become the third-largest on record dating back at least 17 years.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot reigned as the nation's fourth-largest domestic jackpot from the $24.2 million December 19 draw until January 2, trailing the two multistate draw games and California's SuperLotto Plus . . . but after the California jackpot was hit, the Hoosier Lotto jackpot was third domestically, and the top non-multistate game (by a $14.1 million margin) since January 24.

● March is Problem Gambling Awareness Month, and the Hoosier Lottery is partnering with the Indiana Council on Problem Gambling (ICPG) to remind consumers to check the odds of each game. In addition, the Hoosier Lottery will sponsor an addiction and recovery guest speaker at ICPG's Problem Gambling Training Event scheduled for March 28-29.

IN Horse Racing & Racinos

● The Indiana Horse Racing Commission will hold a public meeting on Tuesday, March 12, at 1:30 p.m. local time in the Indiana State Museum Conference Room at 650 Washington Street in Indianapolis.

● Joyse Banister has been named the Standardbred Breed Development Program coordinator for the Indiana Horse Racing Commission after three years as IHRC's breed development residency coordinator. Her father, Royse Waltz of Fairland, was a trainer and driver on the Indiana fair racing circuit for years. While in college at Purdue University, Banister obtained her fair driving license in an era in which few females were racing. Her first foray into managing the regulations of the program were from 1980-1985 when she was the secretary for the Indiana Standardbred Board of Regulations under then Lt. Governor John Mutz (R), and later for the Commission in working in the test barn at Indiana Grand Racing & Casino for 14 years.

□ As the program coordinator, Banister will be in charge of maintaining nominations and points for the lucrative Indiana Sire Stakes and Indiana-Sired Fair Circuit. She will also be working with IHRC Director of Racing and Breed Development Jessica Barnes in continuing to build the harness racing programs.

□ Taking over for Banister as breed development residency coordinator is Lorelei Masshardt, formerly the breed development accountant. Masshardt, a graduate of Purdue University-Calumet with a degree in equine business management, was initially hired by the Racing Commission as a full-time Summer intern for the fair circuit in 2015, following a stint as a part-time intern during Summer 2014. She moved into her full-time post in late 2015. As the residency coordinator, she'll be working closely with Inspector Randy Dever and accepting registrations for all Standardbred stallions, mares and foals. Masshardt will also oversee the administration of the inspections for both the Thoroughbred and Quarter Horse Breed Development Programs.

● As SB 552 left the Senate, a provision in the bill would remove the prohibition on horsemen's associations using their distribution from racino slot machine wagering adjusted gross receipts for lobbying.

● While Indiana has long been able to boost purses to the detriment of Kentucky thanks to racino slot wagering dollars, Churchill Downs is now in a position to offer record prize money for horsemen at its 145th Spring Meet thanks to early returns from the historical racing machines at its new Derby City Gaming facility in Louisville. Purses for the 189 offered races will total $20.1 million – what Churchill boasts is “an unprecedented 46 percent increase from last spring’s $13.7 million. The daily average is $1,056,842 compared to $722,579 in 2018, or $106,243 per race versus $72,640. All purses include prize money from the Kentucky Thoroughbred Development Fund.” The track says that Derby City performance allows it to boost “purses with more than an additional $10 million as a result of handle generated by Derby City Gaming’s initial year of operation.”

□ You can bet that Hoosier horsemen and the Indiana Horse Racing Commission will be keeping a close eye on the impact of these larger purses on the quality of racing and field size at the two Indiana tracks, particularly Thoroughbred racing at Indiana Grand Racino & Casino.

● Daniel Politzer, a vice president at J.P. Morgan Securities LLC, takes a deep dive into the 2019 outlook for Caesars Entertainment Corporation, and estimates that the two Indiana racinos should add between $80 million and $85 million in cash flow to the parent after EBITDAR generated by the two properties during the 2018 fourth quarter was better than generally anticipated for the new acquisition.

□ Caesars CFO Eric Hession tells investment analysts on the company’s fourth quarter earnings conference call that “performance has been strong post-acquisition as we’ve realized operational and expense synergies from the integration. Post-acquisition, Centaur’s fourth quarter 2018 EBITDAR grew 21% year-over-year compared to five percent year-over-year in the second quarter of ’18 prior to the transaction.” Hession continues, “We are pleased with how Centaur is performing,” with EBITDAR “up significantly and a little bit faster in terms of realizing those synergies than we had anticipated. The revenues were generally flat because the marketing programs hadn’t yet kicked in and so that should happen in 2019 as we move forward. So we’re pleased with how it’s worked out. It’s very consistent with the model, consistent with what we’ve said before.”

□ As for “monetizing” the real estate Caesars owns in both Anderson and Shelbyville, Hession believes that “it’s still probably too early ... in an environment where we have some – the table games – potentially coming online, and an acceleration of our performance. We would either be selling the property at a very low coverage ratio and growing into it, or selling at a price that’s not necessarily optimal. So, I think at this point, we are still waiting until we see some more stability in the property, because we don’t want to sell it at a point where it’s growing so quickly.”

● HB 1196, a measure authored by Rep. Bob Cherry (R) of Greenfield that made some technical changes in authority sought by the Indiana Horse Racing Commission (the bill passed unanimously in both committee and the full Senate early in the session) has been referred to the Senate Committee on Public Policy for its second-half journey. The Senate sponsors are Public Policy Chair Ron Alting (R) of Lafayette, and Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D) of Anderson, who also serves on the panel.

● In a rare loss in the courts for the Indiana Horse Racing Commission, the Indiana Supreme Court unanimously declines to grant the Commission’s request for transfer in Baliga v. Indiana Horse Racing Comm’n, et al., No. 17A-MI-3009.

□ Last October, a Court of Appeals three-judge panel reversed the Madison County Circuit Court’s dismissal of veterinarian Joseph Baliga’s petition for judicial review after the Commission, in a disciplinary proceeding, found him in default for allegedly administering a banned substance to a racehorse in a 2016 incident. The appellate panel unanimously found that the Commission and its administrative law judge abused their discretion by finding Dr. Baliga in default, and effectively remanded the matter to the Racing Commission for a hearing on the merits.

IN Bingo and Charitable Gaming

● SB 393, a bill authored by Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem that would create an annual charity game night license for certain entities under certain conditions, was assigned to the House Committee on Public Policy, where you can expect Chair Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn, who authored the stakeholder-backed comprehensive charity gaming law overhaul for the Indiana Gaming Commission, to take a potentially skeptical eye to the measure, which generated lots of raised eyebrows, if not negative votes, in the Senate.

Hill v. Westercamp?

Well, it looks like incumbent Indiana Attorney General Curtis Hill may be getting his first official challenger, Indianapolis area attorney John Westercamp. How do we know? Because apparently, Westercamp has been telling everyone who would listen that he has the party's backing and they've been telling us.

Westercamp is an attorney at Bose McKinney & Evans. He graduated from IU School of Law in 2014. His background, according to the website, is in real estate and economic development. With respect to politics, he was a delegate to the Republican state conventions in 2008 and 2014. He also volunteered on Governor Eric Holcomb's 2016 campaign and chaired the Young Professionals Coalition.

Westercamp was apparently making the rounds at the Johnson County Lincoln Day letting everyone know that he was running and the party was backing him against Hill. He's also been making phone calls across the state as well, we are told. We know that Hill and the state party have had some issues, to put it mildly, but we haven't seen any evidence yet, either overt or covert, that Westercamp has their seal of approval.

We do know there have been a few other folks thinking about challenging Hill, should he choose to run again, however, the big question is whether they could get through the convention, seeing how Hill has been building and rebuilding a lot of relationships with folks outside of the donut counties who are likely to show up in 2020.

An S.O.S. for ES&S?

A story out of Johnson County regarding ES&S voting machines might have national implications. Fox 59 reported earlier this month that the Johnson County Election Board cut ties with ES&S after its voting machines crashed in the last election which left voters having to wait in long lines.

Fox reported, "An investigation by Ball State's VSTOP team, for the Indiana Secretary of State, determined ES&S systems were not properly set up for the high voter turnout the county saw on election day. A system slow-down quickly brought voting to a standstill at multiple voting sites across the county. Thousands of voters were left waiting in line for several hours as election officials and technical advisors struggled to get e-poll books back up to speed."

Well, this may have more legs than Johnson County. TCS is told there are several counties across the state that use ES&S including Brown, Carroll, Elkhart, Hancock, Monroe, Porter, and White. And red flags are reportedly going up with officials asking if ES&S is ready to deal with the high turnout expected in 2020.

By the way, ES&S is a national company, so this story out of Johnson County has the potential to spread not only throughout the Midwest but across the entire country.

Keep an eye on this one.

A Few Things We're Keeping Our Eyes On

There's some chatter that the omnibus gaming bill that passed out of the Indiana Senate may get broken up when it gets to the house into separate issues as some lawmakers reportedly aren't comfortable with such a massive change in the state's gaming law.

Apparently, there has been some polling in the race for Mayor of Indianapolis. We're trying to get our hands on the results, but TCS hears the race is closer than either the Joe Hogsett or Jim Merritt camps expected. We can tell you that we plan to do our own polling this summer and fall in our LNG capacity.

And speaking of Marion County, there seems to be a growing chorus of voices that want Marion County Democratic County Chairwoman Kate Sweeney Bell to resign after keeping two African-Americans off the ballot. And it is also heightening tensions among black Democrats, a large number who are seriously thinking about sitting out the Mayor's race which if you recall is part of what got former Mayor Greg Ballard elected back in 2007 and Republicans control of the Council.

Speaking of races, TCS is hearing a number of Republican County chairmen across the state are expressing concerns about 2020. While the GOP did well in the midterm taking back the U.S. Senate seat from the Democrats, they are worried that the Presidential election could bring out enough Democrats that could impact some down the ballot races.

HOLCOMB TO BUILD PUBLIC SUPPORT FOR HATE CRIME LAW: Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb said Wednesday he will try to build public support for a hate crimes law, a week after the Republican-dominated state Senate stripped out a list of specific protected traits he had supported to get Indiana off a list of five states without such a law (Callahan, AP). The Republican governor told a Statehouse news conference that he might not have stressed strongly enough to the public how important it is for Indiana to adopt a hate crimes law with a list of protected traits, such as race, gender, age, religion and sexual orientation. Social conservatives oppose such a list and Republican senators voted last week to remove it, replacing it in the bill with the words "including bias" to current state code on factors a judge may consider in determining criminal sentences. That move immediately drew criticism from Holcomb, civil rights activists and business leaders. Holcomb said he will encourage Indiana residents to contact their legislators and appeal to them to pass a law with a specific list of protected traits as the House takes up the issue in the coming weeks. "They need to contact the legislators that vote — their legislator — and respectfully appeal to their hearts and minds why this is important not to just to them but to the life of our state and the future of our state," he said. "This is about now, but also where we're going to be in 5, 10, 15 years."

CEOs PUSH FOR HATE CRIME LAW WITH LIST: More than 20 CEOs from some of the biggest companies in Indiana sent a letter to top Republican lawmakers Wednesday urging them to restore a list of victim characteristics in bias-crimes legislation being considered by the Indiana General Assembly (Erdody, IBJ). Indiana Forward, a coalition of business and not-for-profit leaders throughout the state, has been lobbying lawmakers to pass a bill that includes such a list as it seeks to get Indiana off the roster of five states without a bias-crimes law. "Being on this list is damaging to the state's image, which in turn is harmful to our businesses and employees," the letter says. When talented people choose not to come to Indiana or remain in Indiana for work, it puts the future of the state at risk." The letter, sent by some of the members of the coalition, was sent to House Speaker Brian Bosma, Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray and Rep. Greg Steuerwald, R-Avon. Steuerwald is the author of another hate-crimes bill that also does not include a list of victim categories, and the language from that bill could be adopted into the Senate version. "The bill in its current form is unacceptable, unenforceable and harmful to the state's economy," the letter says. The letter is signed by leaders from Cummins Inc., Eli Lilly and Co., Salesforce, Old National Bank, Simon Property Group, Anthem Inc., IU Health, Emmis Communications Corp., Roche Diagnostics Corp., Elanco Animal Health, Hulman & Co., Hillenbrand, Corteva Agriscience, NCAA, AT&T Indiana, Pacers Sports & Entertainment, High Alpha, Butler University, Indiana Sports Corp., Indiana Chamber, Indy Chamber and United Way of Central Indiana.

FARM DELINQUENCIES RISE TO 9-YEAR HIGH: The nation's farmers are struggling to pay back loans after years of low crop prices and a backlash from foreign buyers over President Donald Trump's tariffs, with a key government program showing the highest default rate in at least nine years (AP). Many agricultural loans come due around Jan. 1, in part to give producers enough time to sell crops and livestock and to give them more flexibility in timing interest payments for tax filing purposes. "It is beginning to become a serious situation nationwide at least in the grain crops—those that produce corn, soybeans, wheat," said Allen Featherstone, head of the Department of Agricultural Economics at Kansas State University. While the federal government shutdown delayed reporting, January figures show an overall rise in delinquencies for those producers with direct loans from the Agriculture Department's Farm Service Agency. Nationwide, 19.4 percent of FSA direct loans were delinquent in January, compared to 16.5 percent for the same month a year ago, said David Schemm, executive director of the Farm Service Agency in Kansas. During the past nine years, the agency's January delinquency rate hit a high of 18.8 percent in 2011 and fell to a low of 16.1 percent when crop prices were significantly better in 2015.

U.S., NKOREA BLAME EACH OTHER FOR SUMMIT COLLAPSE: The U.S. and North Korea blamed each other for their failure to reach an agreement at their second summit aimed at curbing Pyongyang's nuclear-weapons program, leaving uncertain one of President Trump's signature foreign policy issues (Wall Street Journal). Mr. Trump said North Korea sought sanctions relief without offering enough in return while the North's Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho said Pyongyang made reasonable proposals for partial sanctions relief that the U.S. rejected. The summit's unraveling demonstrated the perils of Mr. Trump's preferred top-down approach to diplomacy, which meant the two sides rolled into Vietnam's capital with fundamentally different expectations of the trade-offs that could lead to a deal—disagreements that would ordinarily be bridged during lower-level talks. "I am never afraid to walk from a deal," Mr. Trump told reporters after the summit ended abruptly on Thursday. But he didn't close the door to future negotiations between the two sides, saying that "eventually we'll get there." Mr. Trump said Mr. Kim was prepared to dismantle the North's Yongbyon nuclear complex, the site of a reactor and plutonium-reprocessing plant, if the U.S. would agree to ease sanctions. But Washington wanted any deal to include other parts of the North's nuclear program, Mr. Trump said, including undeclared sites for producing highly enriched uranium.

TRUMP'S HANOI DEBACLE: The problem with winging it on a nuclear deal is the inevitable disappointment that follows. Nuke talks are considerably more complex than a Manhattan real estate deal. We woke up Thursday morning to watch the collapse of President Trump's second summit with North Korean despot Kim Jong Un (Howey Politics Indiana). To his credit, Trump opted for dialogue as opposed to the reckless saber rattling we witnessed in 2017, but he did so without the necessary staff and spade work needed for success. "Sometimes you just have to walk," Trump explained. He is correct on that, but he didn't do the proper lower level work that could have yielded some success, so this is a huge missed opportunity. So, now what? Park Hyung-joong, head researcher at the Korea Institute of National Unification in Seoul, told ABC News that this collapse of talks will be seen as a significant blow to the young tyrant. "In North Korea, Chairman Kim is like God. They would think that he has been humiliated by Trump," Park said. "On top of that, Trump left Vietnam right away by plane. But for Kim, he's got no plane to take off like Trump did. Besides, it took a very long time for him to be in Vietnam." One can imagine a brooding despot taking the long way home. President Trump's other blunder was his acceptance of Kim's explanation on the death of Otto Warmbier, the University of Virginia student who was imprisoned for stealing a poster and returned to Ohio brain dead in 2017, dying soon thereafter. Trump said Kim "felt badly about it. He felt very badly. He tells me that he didn't know about it and I will take him at his word." It is stunning how Trump places any value on the "word" of tyrants.

TRUMP MET WITH KIM ONE-ON-ONE: Only four other ears on the planet heard what President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un said to each other Wednesday during a one-on-one chat that began their second nuclear summit (Washington Post). The two leaders' interpreters were the only others privy to their conversation, raising concerns about why Trump would risk meeting Kim, who has threatened the U.S. with nuclear strikes and has a dismal human rights record, without staff to take notes. Absent a detailed historical record and corroborating witnesses, the leaders could potentially leave a meeting and misrepresent what transpired, prompting a kind of he said-he said showdown of words. More one-on-one talks between Trump and Kim are scheduled for Thursday, when the two leaders dig into the meat of their nuclear talks.

GOP SENATORS TELL TRUMP TO BACK OFF EMERGENCY: Senate Republicans are offering a choice to President Donald Trump: Withdraw your national emergency declaration at the border or face a potential rebellion from the GOP (Politico). The message was delivered clearly on Thursday by Sen. Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.), part of an effort by senior Republicans to avoid a direct confrontation with Trump on the Senate floor. In a much-anticipated floor speech, the retiring senator declined to state whether he will become the deciding vote to block the president's maneuver. But he signaled broad opposition to the emergency declaration and sought to convince Trump that he has other ways to collect $5.7 billion for the border wall — the precise amount of money he demanded during the government shutdown fight. "He's got sufficient funding without a national emergency, he can build a wall and avoid a dangerous precedent," Alexander told reporters afterward, referring to billions from a drug forfeiture fund and anti-drug smuggling money at the Defense Department. In a contentious lunch meeting Tuesday, GOP senators demanded Vice President Mike Pence provide a list of military projects that would be cut to build a border wall (Wall Street Journal). Mr. Pence promised senators that would be provided before the vote. Mr. McConnell has said he isn't sure how his caucus will vote.

DANIELS MAKES PUSH FOR CIVICS EDUCATION: Purdue President Mitch Daniels' recent push for civic literacy education, had him explaining his reasoning behind mandating some kind of civics learning requirement for Boilermakers in his monthly email letter (Purdue Exponent). "My initial proposal to that group is that we simply hand each entering freshman the same 100-question manual given to immigrants reaching naturalization, with four years to pass a test abstracted from it," Daniels said. "The Senate has agreed to work quickly to consider this and other options, and we hope to have a 'civics certificate' option in place by fall. "There are numerous details to consider — Should this be required of all our students, including international students? What level of knowledge should we require as a passing grade? — and we're open to ideas and suggestions, from our faculty and from you."

COUNCILMAN CANNON ONLY CANDIDATE FOR PORTAGE MAYOR: The caucus of city Republican precinct committee members to elect a new mayor will be cut and dry Saturday morning (Russell, NWI Times). Councilman John Cannon, R-4th, was the only person to file the necessary paperwork by Wednesday's deadline, Mike Simpson, Porter County Republican Chairman, said. Cannon is set to replace convicted former mayor James Snyder. Snyder was found guilty in federal court on Feb. 14 of bribery and tax obstruction charges and is awaiting sentencing. His conviction removed him from office. Since Snyder's conviction, Councilwoman Sue Lynch, D-at-large, has been acting mayor due to her position as city council president. Lynch and Cannon have been working closely together for the last two weeks to run the city. Cannon will fill Snyder's term, which expires Dec. 31. He is also running for mayor in the November municipal elections. He is uncontested in the primary.

U.S. ECONOMY SLOWED TO 2.6% IN 4Q: The U.S. economy slowed in the final three months of last year to an annual growth rate of 2.6 percent, the slowest pace since the beginning of 2018, as the government shutdown and other factors took a toll on growth. Economists believe growth has slowed even more in the current quarter (AP). Growth in the gross domestic product in the October-December quarter was down from a 3.4 percent gain in the third quarter, the Commerce Department reported Thursday. The initial estimate, which is based on incomplete data, could be revised up or down. Updated estimates for the fourth quarter, based on more complete data, will be released March 28. The government cited slower consumer spending as the biggest factor in the slowdown. The 35-day government shutdown shaved an estimated 0.1 percentage point from growth in the fourth quarter. GDP growth for all of 2018 came in at 2.9 percent, the best showing in three years since 2015.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Support appears to be draining away among Republicans in the U.S. Senate concerning President Trump's emergency declaration. At least four GOP senators have expressed concerns about the need for the declaration, and Vice President Pence's pitch at the weekly Tuesday lunch was met with significant skepticism. We still don't have definitive stances from Indiana Sens. Todd Young and Mike Braun. Stay tuned. - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

CNN TO BROADCAST BUTTIGIEG TOWN HALL: CNN announced Thursday that it will feature South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg in a March 10 town hall, as the network has done with other Democratic 2020 presidential hopefuls (South Bend Tribune). Buttigieg will field questions from hosts Jake Tapper and Dana Bash before a live audience at the annual South by Southwest conference in Austin, Texas. Buttigieg will appear at 9 p.m., following candidates John Delaney at 7 p.m. and Tulsi Gabbard at 8 p.m. Buttigieg supporters on Twitter recently have increasingly tagged CNN and its journalists in tweets asking it to give him a town hall, as it's done for Bernie Sanders, Amy Klobuchar, Howard Schultz and Kamala Harris.

TRUMP'S AMERICA FIRST ACTION PAC IN DISARRAY: President Donald Trump wants to raise $1 billion for his reelection. But his top advisers worry that the super PAC at the center of that effort is hurting, lacking a high-wattage leader who can cajole millionaire and billionaire donors to fork over huge sums (Politico). Trump political aides, members of the president's family, and top Republicans have been considering potential candidates to spearhead America First Action's 2020 fundraising efforts. They want someone with deep ties to the president and the clubby world of major GOP donors. A former White House official who is close to many top Republican givers said Nick Ayres had been widely expected to take a senior advisory role with the super PAC after departing the administration late last year. But the 36-year-old Ayers, who's spent the last few months with his family and quail hunting in Georgia, has yet to sign on. Ayers, along with Trump campaign manager Brad Parscale and America First Action President Brian O. Walsh, met recently with attorneys at the Jones Day law firm in Washington.

MUNCIE MAYORAL CANDIDATE BOOTED FROM BALLOT: The Delaware County Election Board heard 17 challenges during Tuesday's meeting, and three candidates were removed from the primary ballot (Ohlenkamp, Muncie Star Press). The meeting Tuesday afternoon saw 40 candidates, party members and other concerned parties crowded into a small room at the county government center to hear the election board's results and state their defense against the challenges. Three people make up the election board, including county clerk Rick Spangler, Republican Party appointee Peter Drumm and Democratic Party appointee Ashley Nichols. Here's a look at what happened: Tony Cox, a Republican mayoral candidate, was removed from the ballot. According to the challenge filed by Republican party chairman Victor Whitehead, Cox had no Indiana Republican primary affiliation. Terry Whitt Bailey: The election board upheld the mayoral candidacy of Bailey after facing a challenge by current city council member Linda Gregory. Gregory's challenge cited that Bailey was in violation of the Federal Hatch Act of 1939.

HOWARD COUNTY ELECTION BOARD DISMISSES HAYES CHALLENGE: The Howard County Election Board voted unanimously Thursday to dismiss a challenge to the candidacy of Kokomo Common Council President Bob Hayes (Myers, Kokomo Tribune). The challenge, filed on Feb. 14 by a city resident, called into question Hayes' primary residence, saying it "may not be Howard County." But board members ruled the challenge did not meet the factual requirements needed to merit an official hearing, finding it "deficient on its face" and "invalid."

BOOKER BILL WOULD LEGALIZE MARIJUANA: With the support of several of his rivals for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination, New Jersey Sen. Cory Booker reintroduced a bill Thursday to legalize marijuana nationwide and expunge federal convictions for possession or use of the drug (CBS News). Four of Booker's opponents for the nomination are among the co-sponsors of his Marijuana Justice Act: Sens. Kirsten Gillibrand, Kamala Harris, Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren. Two more co-sponsors, Sens. Michael Bennet and Jeff Merkley, are openly considering runs of their own. Sen. Amy Klobuchar is the only Democratic senator running for president who did not sign on as a co-sponsor. The bill, which Booker first introduced in 2017, is the latest in a series of splashy proposals by the early field of 2020 candidates who are hoping to capitalize on the energy and enthusiasm of an increasingly progressive base. A CBS News poll in 2018 found 68 percent of Democrats support marijuana legalization, and the party added support for a "pathway to legalization" to its 2016 platform.

General Assembly

BILL WOULD CREATE FUND FOR EXONERATED PRISONERS: State lawmakers want to give exonerated prisoners money for their wrongful incarceration (Smith, Indiana Public Media). The legislation is now in the Senate after its unanimous passage by the House. Rep. Greg Steuerwald (R-Danville) says Indiana should provide exonerated prisoners an option: they can sue the state (as they can now) or take a payout from a fund created by his legislation. "They cannot do both," Steuerwald says. "If they take from the fund and are eligible, they receive $50,000 for each year that they have been wrongfully incarcerated." Steuerwald says working with the Innocence Project - a national group that seeks to overturn wrongful convictions - current Indiana exonerees who are already suing the state will get the same option: continue with their suits or take the money, paid out over five years.

FARM BUREAU PUSHES FOR RURAL SCHOOL FUNDING: The Indiana Farm Bureau says the state needs to increase funding for rural schools, but there are no proposals at the statehouse to address the issue (Turner, Indiana Public Media). The Farm Bureau says getting schools in rural communities the funding they need is difficult, because state funding follows the student. With declining enrollments, many schools are getting fewer state dollars. Some turn to referendums to keep their districts afloat. Justin Schneider is the Director of State Government Relations for the Indiana Farm Bureau. He says they'll continue to push for a solution beyond this session. "Education funding is something that is on the legislative calendar every year. I think it's one of those issues that I think we're going to continue to work on," Schneider says.

CASINO BILL WOULD PROVIDE FUNDS FOR TERRE HAUTE CONVENTION CENTER: A gambling bill that passed the Indiana Senate this week would send an estimated $900,000 per year in tax receipts from a Terre Haute casino toward operations of the city's new convention center (Taylor, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). But state Sen. Jon Ford has twice said that provision was included in error and will be removed. The language was copied into Senate Bill 552 from a 2017 casino bill that died in committee, Ford, R-Terre Haute, explained in a Feb. 22 phone message. That language would be deleted from SB 552, he said. After it was pointed out that aspect of the bill had not been changed, Ford said Thursday, "It won't be in there" in any final legislation allowing one of two Gary casinos to relocate to Terre Haute. "It's very frustrating to me," he said. "This [Legislative Services Agency] attorney who's writing this bill ... I don't know how many times we've told him to take it out." The bill is now before the House, where other changes are likely and Ford said the error can still be addressed. The 2017 bill was drafted prior to implementation of a 1 percent food and beverage tax that is expected to provide $1.2 million to $2.1 million in annual revenue for convention center operations.

MICHIGAN CITY, LONG BEACH OBJECTS TO SHORELINE BILL: Just days after the Indiana Senate approved a bill to spell out the rights of public recreational use of the Lake Michigan shore, environmental groups and municipalities are warning of another bill that could undermine those efforts and take away local control of the shoreline (Mayes, Michigan City News-Dispatch). "Michigan City Mayor Ron Meer has joined with the Long Beach Community Alliance and Save the Dunes to warn that Indiana Senate Bill 581 poses a grave danger for the Indiana public's rights on the shoreline, as well as the management of upland dunes, affecting more than just Lake Michigan's coastal communities," a statement from the two non-profits said.

Congress

SENATE VOTES TO CONFIRM WHEELER AT EPA: The Senate on Thursday confirmed former coal industry lobbyist Andrew Wheeler to lead the Environmental Protection Agency, despite concerns by Democrats and one Republican about regulatory rollbacks he's made in eight months as the agency's acting chief (AP). Senators voted 52-47 to confirm Wheeler, who was nominated by President Donald Trump after former administrator Scott Pruitt resigned last year amid a series of ethics allegations. Sen. John Barrasso, R-Wyo., chairman of the Senate environment committee, called Wheeler "uniquely qualified" to lead EPA and said that under Wheeler the agency is putting forward proposals that "both protect our environment and allow the country's economy to flourish."

YOUNG VOTES TO CONFIRM WHEELER EPA ADMINISTRATOR: U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R-Ind.) today issued the following statement after voting to confirm Andrew Wheeler as Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (Howey Politics Indiana): "Mr. Wheeler has demonstrated an ability to find reasonable solutions to difficult environmental issues. I look forward to collaborating with Administrator Wheeler to put forward sound policies that not only protect Indiana's environment but allow the Hoosier economy to flourish."

YOUNG SIGNS LETTER ON SAUDI, UAE ARMS TRANSFERS: Sen. Todd Young is joining a group of bipartisan senators in signing a letter to Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, urging him to put pressure on both Saudi Arabia and the UAE to stop giving U.S. weapons to militia groups in Yemen (Darling, WIBC). The small country that borders Saudi Arabia is locked in a civil war, which Young has referred to the worst international humanitarian crisis today. "A lot of problems persist," Young said on the Senate floor last year. "The longer the civil war persists in Yemen, the worse the humanitarian crisis will grow." In the letter, Young said the some of the weapons the Saudi's and Emiratis are giving away could be ending up in the hands of militias that are aligned with terrorist groups, such as Al-Qaeda. "We expect vital security partners like Saudi Arabia and the UAE to show due care with respect to protecting transfers of sensitive U.S. military technology," the senators said in the letter. "Negligent treatment of sensitive U.S. military technology, including the possible violation of important restrictions on third party use, could further destabilize the region."

CARSON COMMENTS ON COHEN: U.S. Sen. André Carson, a senior member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, released this statement following the committee's closed door hearing with former Trump lawyer Michael Cohen (Howey Politics Indiana): "Going into today's hearing, my objective was to learn more about alleged compromising engagements between President Trump, his associates, and the Russian government, including Trump Tower Moscow and the coordinated distribution of hacked documents by Wikileaks. Some of these issues have been addressed by numerous other witnesses, both publicly and privately. However, Michael Cohen's conviction for lying to Congress, as well as serious allegations leveled in his public hearing yesterday before the House Oversight Committee, raise critical concerns, as well as new lines of inquiry that must be fully pursued. While I cannot disclose the details of his testimony today, the aforementioned developments make clear that the House Russia investigation must continue and that my colleagues on both side of the aisle should participate fully in the interest of protecting our democracy and its institutions."

WALORSKI SEEKS DELAY IN HEALTH TAX: U.S. Reps. Jackie Walorski (R-Ind.), Ami Bera (D-Calif.), Kenny Marchant (R-Texas), and Josh Gottheimer (D-N.J.) this week introduced H.R. 1398, the Health Insurance Tax Relief Act. This bill would stop the Affordable Care Act's Health Insurance Tax (HIT) from going into effect until after 2021 and save consumers hundreds of dollars (Howey Politics Indiana). According to America's Health Insurance Plans, the HIT could increase premiums by over $470 per family in 2020 if not stopped. The tax would also hit seniors and those with disabilities particularly hard. "When it comes to health care, Americans are facing rising costs and fewer options," Congresswoman Walorski said. "Raising taxes on health coverage would only make matters worse for families, small businesses, and Medicare Advantage enrollees. As we continue working to lower premiums for families and seniors, we need to pass this bipartisan bill to provide relief from the burdensome Health Insurance Tax."

BUCHSHON ON DEMOCRAT'S MEDICARE FOR ALL: U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon, M.D. (IN-08) released the following statement after House Democrats introduced their Medicare for All legislation (H.R. 1384) (Howey Politics Indiana): "House Democrats have taken a massive step towards turning America into a socialist nation by introducing their government-run, one-size-fits-all, single-payer health care bill. This bill is a complete takeover of the health care system that will cost American taxpayers $32 trillion over ten years, would eliminate employer health care plans for 158 million Americans, would end Medicare for seniors as we know it, and by some estimates would eliminate up to two million American jobs. If House Democrats get their way, your health decisions will no longer be yours to make but rather that of a Washington bureaucrat deciding if your life fits within the bottom line. At the end of the day, one-size-fits-all health care fits no one."

BANKS ON CPAC PANEL: U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (IN-03) announced that he will be attending the Conservative Political Action Conference (CPAC) and speaking on a panel during a Breakout Session regarding the threats posed by cyber warfare and psychological operations (Howey Politics Indiana). The panel will be Friday, March 1st, 2019 at 6:00pm.

DONNELLY SAYS KIM IS A 'DESPOT': NewsCenter 16 caught up with former U.S. senator-turned University of Notre Dame professor Joe Donnelly. The former Democratic senator representing Indiana said he wasn't surprised that President Donald Trump and Kim Jong Un did not reach a deal. In fact, Donnelly said he believes it was unrealistic to believe Kim and North Korea would ever give up their nuclear weapons. This comes as Trump faces some backlash after saying he did not believe Kim was responsible for the death of American student Otto Warmbier. "Kim Jong Un is a murderer, he's a despot," Donnelly said. "Despite the warm and fuzzy comments that are made, he just killed an American citizen, Otto Warmbier, and he killed his own half-brother. He is extraordinarily dangerous, and we need to realistically look at who he is."

HOUSE PANEL TO INTERVIEW TRUMP ORGANIZATION OFFICIALS: House Democrats signaled Thursday they would seek testimony from Trump Organization officials who Michael Cohen alleged were involved in hush-money payments to a porn star, while Mr. Trump challenged his former lawyer's credibility, saying he "lied a lot" to Congress (Wall Street Journal). In his testimony to a House committee Wednesday, Mr. Cohen alleged that Mr. Trump and his company's chief financial officer, Allen Weisselberg, coordinated with him to pay for the silence of the porn star, Stephanie Clifford, and conceal Mr. Trump's role in the deal, using sham invoices to cover it up. Mr. Cohen showed lawmakers an Aug. 1, 2017, check to him signed by President Trump, and another signed by his son Donald Trump Jr. and Mr. Weisselberg. He said they were portions of the reimbursement for the $130,000 payment he made to conceal an alleged sexual encounter between Mr. Trump and Ms. Clifford, known as Stormy Daniels.

COHEN TO RETURN TO CAPITOL HILL NEXT WEEK: President Trump's former lawyer Michael Cohen is due back to Capitol Hill next week to continue what has been a dramatic series of public and private hearings, as he apologizes for lying to lawmakers and divulges what he says Trump knew about financial infractions and Russia's interference in the 2016 election (Washington Post). Cohen on Thursday spent almost eight hours behind closed doors with members of the House Intelligence Committee. One point of interest was the subject of pardons, according to people familiar with the interview. They were not authorized to disclose their knowledge of the meeting and spoke on the condition of anonymity.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB WANTS 'A LOT MORE DIGGING' ON CASINO BILL – Gov. Holcomb says he needs to "do a lot more digging" into the details of the casino bill which passed the Senate this week (Berman, WIBC). Holcomb has said previously he won't stand in the way of legalizing sports betting in Indiana. And he says he wants to support Gary's plans for a Lake Michigan shipping hub in the space now blocked by two casinos. But he says he's mindful that any action on one casino has repercussions for all the others. And he says the scope of the bill has expanded dramatically. It now legalizes sports betting, moves one Gary casino to Terre Haute, moves the other Gary casino to downtown Gary instead of the lakefront, and allows live table games in Anderson and Shelbyville. The bill still has to get through the House before it reaches Holcomb, and is likely to face changes. Speaker Brian Bosma has said he has reservations about expanding gambling, and says the Senate has assembled a bill where every provision does exactly that.

FSSA: HIP 2.0 WORK REQUIREMENT PROGRAM BEGINS - Indiana launched a new work requirement program through Medicaid on the first of the year. It's called "Gateway to Work" and is billed as a community engagement opportunity to help connect people with better employment opportunities (Sheridan, Indiana Public Media). But some worry the changes will result in Hoosiers losing health insurance. Indiana was one of the first states to apply for a waiver to implement work requirements for the statewide Medicaid expansion program: HIP 2.0. The Centers for Medicaid and Medicare, CMS, in Washington now supports many new state-led Medicaid changes. Indiana's Gateway to Work launched the first of the year. Jennifer Walthall is the state's Family and Social Services administration, FSSA, secretary. She says the program is about meeting unmet needs. "It's actually more about connecting people with things they haven't been connected with before," says Walthall.

STATEHOUSE: VW COMMITTEE TO MEET - The Indiana Volkswagen Environmental Mitigation Trust Fund Committee will hold a public meeting at 8:30 a.m. Monday, March 4, Indiana Government Center South, Conference Room C.

USDA: $10M FOR INDIANA REMC - Assistant to the Secretary for Rural Development Joel Baxley today announced that the USDA is funding $122 million to upgrade rural electric systems in Arkansas, Florida, Indiana, Oklahoma and South Dakota. Southern Indiana Rural Electric Cooperative Inc. will use a $10.5 million loan to expand 92 miles of line to enhance system operations for 600 rural users (McLaughlin, Inside Indiana Business). The funding also includes more than $7 million to finance smart grid technologies to improve system operations and monitor grid security. "Modern and reliable electric infrastructure is foundational to building prosperity in rural America," Baxley said in a news release. "Under the leadership of Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue, USDA is committed to being a strong partner in improving this essential infrastructure."

FBI: ARTIFACTS RECOVERED IN STATE GOING BACK TO CHINA - The FBI is returning more than 300 cultural artifacts to China years after they were part of a vast collection discovered at a central Indiana farm (WTHR-TV). Chinese Ambassador Cui Tiankai is expected to attend Thursday's repatriation ceremony at the Eiteljorg Museum in Indianapolis when the 361 artifacts are returned to Chinese officials. The artifacts were among thousands ranging from arrowheads to shrunken heads that federal agents removed in 2014 from a man's Shelby County farm. That man, Don Miller, amassed the collection over several decades. He died in 2015 at age 91. The FBI says artifacts have been returned to several countries, including Colombia, New Zealand and Spain, but it continues working with Native American tribes and foreign governments to determine their claims to any of the objects.

DOC: INMATE MURDERED AT PENDLETON - An Indianapolis man serving a 60-year sentence for murder has been charged with killing a fellow inmate at a central Indiana prison. The Herald Bulletin reports 34-year-old Devon L. Sterling is charged with murder and possession of a deadly weapon by a prisoner in the death of Ezekiel Jones of Fort Wayne. Authorities say Jones died at an Indianapolis hospital after being stabbed in the neck July 11, 2018 at Pendleton Correctional Facility. The attack was captured on video surveillance. An affidavit says investigators believe Sterling stabbed Jones "in retaliation for Jones stabbing Sterling over an incident at the shower" in 2017. Sterling was imprisoned for a 2007 fatal shooting at a near-northeast side block party.

ISP: AGGRESSIVE DRIVING TO BE TARGETED - It may still be pretty cold, but spring is just around the corner - meaning temperatures will rise and drivers may be tempted to increase speeds and take risks when hitting the roads (WRTV). To combat this, roughly 230 law enforcement agencies across the Hoosier state are increasing patrols beginning

March 1 through March 24. Officers will be targeting aggressive driving. Officials tell RTV6 that patrols will be looking for speeding, tailgating, unsafe lane movement, disregarding traffic signals or signs, improper passing and more.

EDUCATION: UofE PRESIDENT TALKS OF METHODIST LGBT DECISION - The University of Evansville is speaking out on the United Methodist Church's rejection of a call to lift the denomination's ban on LGBTQ clergy and same-sex weddings (Evansville Courier & Press). UE has a United Methodist affiliation. President Chris Pietruszkiewicz, in an email addressed to the "campus community," said the university is committed to an "inclusive environment." He said the campus is not impacted by the national church's decision. "As you may have read, the United Methodist General Conference voted Tuesday to retain its restrictions on performing marriages and ordaining LGBTQ individuals. Given the University of Evansville's affiliation with the United Methodist Church, I want to reaffirm our commitment to creating an inclusive environment in which all members of the campus community, whatever their backgrounds or beliefs, feel safe, valued and welcome."

EDUCATION: BSU STUDY CITES INNOVATION - A new Ball State University study suggests companies that place a higher emphasis on their employees may be more innovative and entrepreneurial (Inside Indiana Business). The study, "Social reactivity and innovation: The impact of stakeholder salience on corporate entrepreneurship," examined 200 senior-level managers and developed a social proactiveness scale which measured a manager's priorities toward internal and external issues. Mike Goldsby, executive director for the Institute for Entrepreneurship and Free Enterprise at Ball State, led the study and says companies that were more proactive on internal social issues saw greater innovation. The study was done in conjunction with researchers from Indiana University, New Mexico State University, Iowa State University and the University of Missouri-Kansas City. In an interview with Inside INdiana Business, Goldsby said the results of the study were surprising. "What drove innovation was socially-proactive, ethically-driven companies on the way they treat their people, on their HR practices," said Goldsby. "Essentially, the key finding is that if you want to drive innovation, be people oriented and as the people are taken care of, if you've got a progressive, inclusive and supportive internal culture, then people are going to be more engaged and there's going to be more innovations coming."

EDUCATION: MISUNDERSTANDING AT CORE OF PURDUE GLOBAL CONTROVERSY - The latest controversy over Purdue University Global all revolves around a misunderstanding, according to PUG Chancellor Betty Vandenbosch (Slater, Purdue Exponent). It was reported to University Senate last Monday that the University's former understanding that Purdue Global would not allow students to enroll as guests — students that are enrolled in single courses while also enrolled full-time at other universities — was false. The discrepancies in the University's understanding of Global's admissions practices and how the online university actually runs were brought to the committee's attention by Linda Prokopy, professor of forestry and natural resources, who spoke to Purdue Global recruiters while posing as a student. "I said, 'Hey, I'm interested in just taking one class, can I do it?'" Prokopy said, "and the answer was yes." This is in line with Purdue Global's recruitment procedures, which focus on immediate positivity about a student's prospects at the university, followed by further investigation into whether they would fit the school's admissions policies, according to Deborah Nichols, co-chair of the Purdue Global Select Committee. "Their position is to be open and welcoming," Nichols said in a phone interview.

MEDIA: JUDGE QUASHES ELKHART QUEST FOR TRIBUNE RECORDS - A federal judge this week rejected the city of Elkhart's attempt to force the South Bend Tribune to turn over records of its reporting on Keith Cooper, the Illinois man who is suing the city over his wrongful conviction in a 1996 robbery and shooting (Sheckler, South Bend Tribune). Lawyers for the city issued the subpoena in June, amid an investigation by The Tribune and ProPublica, a nonprofit news agency, into the flawed investigation that led to the convictions of Cooper and another man, Christopher Parish. The subpoena sought records of communications between Tribune journalists, Cooper and his lawyer. In subsequent filings, the city alleged The Tribune was conspiring with Cooper to write stories that advanced his lawsuit against the city. In his order quashing the subpoena, however, U.S. District Court Magistrate Judge Michael Gotsch said Elkhart's "suspicions about a conspiracy...are not supported by the evidence currently before the Court."

MEDIA: NEW PRESIDENT FOR FORT WAYNE NEWSPAPERS - Ogden Newspapers has named Scott Stanford president and CEO of Fort Wayne Newspapers, company officials announced Wednesday (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Stanford, 53, will replace former CEO Michael Christman, who is now Ogden's regional publisher, based in Wheeling, West Virginia. Stanford is the former publisher of the Lawrence Journal-World, an Ogden-owned newspaper in Lawrence, Kansas. Fort Wayne Newspapers is the business agent for The Journal Gazette, which is locally owned and independently operated, and The News-Sentinel, which is owned by Ogden Newspapers. Both The Journal Gazette and The News-Sentinel have offices at 600 W. Main St.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP ORDERED KUSHNER SECURITY CLEARANCE - President Trump ordered his chief of staff to grant his son-in-law and senior adviser, Jared Kushner, a top-secret security clearance last year, overruling concerns flagged by intelligence officials and the White House's top lawyer, four people briefed on the matter said (Washington Post). Mr. Trump's decision in May so troubled senior administration officials that at least one, the White House chief of staff at the time, John F. Kelly, wrote a contemporaneous internal memo about how he had been "ordered" to give Mr. Kushner the top-secret clearance. The White House counsel at the time, Donald F. McGahn II, also wrote an internal memo outlining the concerns that had been raised about Mr. Kushner — including by the C.I.A. — and how Mr. McGahn had recommended that he not be given a top-secret clearance. The disclosure of the memos contradicts statements made by the president, who told The New York Times in January in an Oval Office interview that he had no role in his son-in-law receiving his clearance.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP RESPONDS TO COHEN TESTIMONY - Michael Cohen's scathing congressional testimony Wednesday amounted to a "fake hearing," President Donald Trump said at a press conference following his nuclear summit here (NBC News). Trump said he watched as much as he could of the explosive House Oversight and Reform Committee hearing, in which Cohen, his former fixer and personal lawyer, accused him of being a "con man," a "cheat" and a "racist." Cohen also told lawmakers that Trump pushed to build a tower in Russia during the 2016 election and knew in advance that WikiLeaks was going to release emails that were stolen from the Democratic National Committee. "Having a fake hearing like that and having it in the middle of this very important summit is really a terrible thing," Trump said.

WHITE HOUSE: WEISSELMAN SCRUTINY TO INTENSIFY - In testimony before Congress this week, Michael Cohen cast himself as a central figure in schemes that could threaten the presidency of Donald J. Trump (New York Times). But Mr. Cohen said he didn't work alone, unexpectedly mentioning by name the involvement of another member of Mr. Trump's inner circle, Allen Weisselberg, more than 20 times. The revelations are set to intensify the scrutiny on Mr. Weisselberg, Mr. Trump's unassuming 71-year-old chief financial officer, who already is a focus for federal prosecutors in New York. On Wednesday, Mr. Cohen specifically identified Mr. Weisselberg as helping mastermind a strategy to mask reimbursements to Mr. Cohen for his payment to Stormy Daniels, the pornographic film actress who said she had an affair with Mr. Trump.

WHITE HOUSE: GROUND TROOPS DISPUTE TRUMP'S CLAIMS ON ISIS - President Trump declared on Thursday that "we just took over 100 percent" of territory controlled by the Islamic State in Syria — a claim that reports from the battle front suggested was 100 percent untrue (New York Times). "You kept hearing it was 90 percent, 92 percent, the caliphate in Syria. Now it's 100 percent, we just took over," Mr. Trump said in remarks to American troops in Alaska. "Now it's 100 percent, we just took over 100 percent caliphate. The battle was continuing on Thursday when officials with the Syrian Democratic Forces, an American-backed militia of Kurdish and Arab fighters, were told of Mr. Trump's announcement. "It's 100 percent not true," one senior official with the group said on Thursday afternoon. "The fighting continues."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP, PENCE AT CPAC - The Conservative Political Action Conference began Thursday, featuring appearances by Reps. Mark Meadows, R-N.C., and Jim Jordan, R-Ohio, Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., and Cabinet officials (UPI). The conference, or CPAC, is being held in National Harbor, Md., and the general session began Thursday. It's an annual event attended by conservative officials and activists. The opening session Wednesday was called "activism boot camp." President Donald Trump is scheduled to address the conference at 11:30 a.m. Saturday. It will be his third consecutive appearance at the event since taking office. Trump will be fresh off his trip to Vietnam, where he walked away from negotiations with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un Thursday after failing to reach an agreement on sanctions relief and nuclear disarmament. Other Cabinet officials set to speak at the conference are Vice President Mike Pence (Friday), Labor Secretary Alex Acosta (Thursday), White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow (Thursday), Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross (Friday), British conservative Nigel Farage (Friday) and White House adviser Kellyanne Conway (Friday).

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump returned from Hanoi around 8 p.m. Thursday. The president has no public events today.

ILLINOIS: CHICAGO COMMUTERS STRANDED DUE TO AMTRAK SIGNALS - Tens of thousands of downtown Chicago workers could be without a way home this evening because of an ongoing Amtrak signal problem (Chicago Tribune). Metra is advising people who leave out of Union Station to consider alternate commutes, since an Amtrak signal problem that disrupted morning travel was still not fixed early this afternoon.

ILLINOIS: MIDWAY PASSENGERS EXPOSED TO MEASLES - Health officials are warning of a possible measles exposure at a Chicago airport and hospital (AP). The Illinois Department of Public Health said a passenger who was diagnosed with the disease was believed to be infectious while traveling through Midway Airport, then later seeking treatment at Delnor Hospital, NBC Chicago reported. People who were at the airport between 9 p.m. and midnight on February 22 may have been exposed. Also, those who were at Northwestern Medicine Delnor Hospital from 4-6:15 p.m. on February 24 and 10 a.m.-1 p.m. on February 25 could have been exposed to the measles. The health department said the biggest concern was with people who have not been vaccinated.

CITIES: NEW DETAILS IN MARTINSVILLE PD CHIEF ARREST - New documents released Thursday are shedding light into why Martinsville's police chief is facing two felony charges for official misconduct and theft (WRTV). Chief Matthew Long received $8,316.20 in excess overtime and sick time to which he was not entitled, according to an audit released Wednesday by the Indiana State Board of Accounts. Indiana State Police Det. Craig Starr found in May 2016 Long made adjustments in the pay system to add 70 hours to his "sick bank" and in November added 72 hours to his "sick bank." According to court documents, at the end of 2016, Long submitted a pay voucher to pay himself for the 9 sick days allegedly accrued during 2016. The payouts resulted in Long receiving $1,530 in sick pay to which he was not entitled, prosecutors allege in a probable cause affidavit unsealed Thursday. An audit just released Thursday by the Indiana State Board of Accounts says Long also received $6,786 in excess overtime pay he didn't earn.

CITIES: EVANSVILLE FIREFIGHTER WAS SHOT TO DEATH - An autopsy has confirmed that Evansville firefighter Robert F. Doerr died as a result of a gunshot wound from a shooting Tuesday night on Evansville's North Side (Stubbs, Evansville Courier & Press). Doerr's autopsy was released by the Vanderburgh County Coroner's Office Thursday morning. His death was ruled a homicide. No arrests have been made yet in the killing of Doerr, 51. The shooting occurred in the 2700 block of Oakley Street, near the Walmart Neighborhood Market on First Avenue. Police said they received several calls from residents of the neighborhood about hearing gunshots around 7:05 p.m. One of the callers reported seeing a person laying on the ground in front of a home on Oakley Street.

CITIES: SERVICES SET FOR EVANSVILLE FIREFIGHTER - Memorial arrangements have been announced for an Evansville firefighter fatally shot outside his home earlier this week (Evansville Courier & Press). Robbie Doerr, 51, will be buried in St. Joseph Catholic Cemetery on Mesker Park Drive, according to Evansville Fire Department. Visitation will take place from 2-8 p.m. Sunday and 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday at Christian Fellowship Church, 4100 Millersburg Road in Evansville. The funeral service will begin at 1 p.m. at Christian Fellowship Church.

CITIES: GARY ALARMED BY SPIKE IN HOMICIDES - Alarmed by a homicide spike since Jan. 1, city leaders are urging people to come forward with tips as the Police Department crafts an action plan to curb violence. Those efforts include emergency hires (Cross, NWI Times). Twelve people have been murdered within the city limits since the start of the year — mostly by gunfire. That's up from nine homicides reported around the same time last year, according to police. Officials say 18 people have been wounded by gunfire since Jan. 1, compared to 12 at the same time last year. Police Chief Richard Allen is urging the public come forward with information to aid investigators. "If something happened to you, I know you would want someone with information to contact the police and assist with holding the perpetrator accountable," Allen said. The city's 12th homicide was reported Wednesday when authorities found 42-year-old Pamela Crider shot in the face and lying unresponsive in the roadway in the city's Tolleston section.

CITIES: CLARKSVILLE HOSPITAL TO CLOSE - A southern Indiana hospital that's struggled financially will close this spring after a decade of operation (AP). A required state notice sent this week to the Kentuckiana Medical Center's employees says the Clarksville hospital will close April 27, at which time its employees' benefits will end. WorkOne Southern Indiana's director of operations, Jacqueline James, tells the News and Tribune the hospital's closure will have "a big impact" on the Ohio River city that's just north of Louisville, Kentucky, because about 200 people will lose their jobs.

CITIES: LAFAYETTE TO BUY THEATER - Lafayette Mayor Tony Roswarski calls the the center of Lafayette's entertainment opportunities the three L's: Loeb Stadium, the Long Center, and now the Lafayette Theater (WLFI-TV). The city got the go-ahead to buy the property at the Lafayette Redevelopment Commission on Thursday. Mayor Roswarski said he has consistently heard that Lafayette lacks in the nightlife and entertainment areas. So he proposed that the city buy the old Lafayette Theater for $290,000. He said that's a steal of a price; the property was appraised in the five to $600,000 range. He hopes the three L's will help improve quality of life for Lafayette residents, as well as bring new visitors to the city. "Aquiring the Lafayette theater is going to give us that option, we're working with the the Long Center, working with the new baseball stadium and the events we'll have there to really be able to coordinate what types of entertainment we bring to the community," he said.

CITIES: 'REVOLUTIONARY' LOW INCOME HOUSING APPROVED IN LAFAYETTE - Construction, and the city, are making headway on the new H38 East apartments in Lafayette. The Lafayette Redevelopment Commission approved a tax abatement for the low incoming housing complex on Thursday (WLFI-TV). Tax abatements are generally reserved for industrial or commercial business. However, Lafayette's Economic Development Commissioner Dennis Carson said in the meeting that abatements can be used for other purposes. The 10 year abatement will help the complex get local families out of generational poverty. "It's not our usual affordable housing project, it really isn't," said Elva James, Executive Director of Agency IV Housing. "You do not just come there to live, you come there to make a difference in your life and your future."

As News 18 previously reported, the complex will have a variety of resources to help low income families. That includes transportation options, career connections, community gardens, a learning kitchen and a tech center. They broke ground on the site in December. The complex will also be net zero, meaning the solar panels it has will generate enough energy as the complex will use. Mayor Tony Roswarski spoke on behalf of the project at the LRC meeting, saying that opportunities like this complex are what the city needs. He did not hide the fact that previously, he has vocalized his disapproval for other low-income complexes being built in Lafayette.

CITIES: ALLISON TO BUILD TEST FACILITY AT SPEEDWAY - Allison Transmission Holdings Inc. announced Thursday that it plans to build a multimillion-dollar vehicle-testing facility in Speedway that will be the only one of its kind in the Midwest (IBJ). The Vehicle Environmental Test facility is expected to open in 2020 on the campus of Allison's global headquarters, south of Indianapolis Motor Speedway. "Industries around the globe depend on Allison Automatics to power highly specialized vehicles that must perform under all kinds of extreme conditions," Allison CEO David Graziosi said in written comments. "The Vehicle Environmental Test facility will provide Allison engineers with enhanced capabilities to conduct testing replicating vehicle environments and duty cycles."

CITIES: IPS BEGINS SUPT SEARCH - Indianapolis Public Schools has begun the search for a new permanent superintendent. The search comes nearly two months after former Superintendent Lewis Ferebee resigned in order to become chancellor of the District of Columbia Public Schools (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). The IPS Board of School Commissioners held the first of three community meetings Wednesday to gather public feedback as part of the search process. The next two will take place March 7 at Arsenal Technical High School and March 13 at George Washington Carver School 87. Both meetings are scheduled for 6:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. The board will also hold three additional board meetings, the first of which takes place tonight, followed by meetings on March 19 and March 21. All are being held at the John Morton-Finney Center for Educational Services in downtown Indianapolis and begin at 6:00 p.m.

CITIES: STUTZMAN BUYS KRUSE AUCTION - About a month from now, new owners of the giant Kruse museum building south of Auburn plan to share their vision for its future (Kurtz, Auburn Evening Star). The property "can be a huge future growth and impact area for Auburn and DeKalb County," said John Kruse of Auburn, one of three new owners who bought the building at 5634 C.R. 11-A in December 2018. Former U.S. Rep. Marlin Stutzman of Middlebury and entrepreneur Jason Bontrager of Elkhart joined with Kruse to buy the museum from Kruse's uncle, Dean V. Kruse, who opened it in 2003. In preparation for a late-March news conference, the owners are conducting a public-opinion survey and asking permission of the Auburn Plan Commission to split the property into three parcels.

CITIES: ALBION GETS TELEPHARMACY - Albion, which hasn't had a pharmacy in more than a decade, is stepping into 21st-century health care with a new kind of pharmacy – one based on telemedicine (AP). It's believed by its owner to be among the first in the state. The Pill Box pharmacy at 903 Northridge Road is designed to serve customers with the chance to talk to a pharmacist via video chat – even though there's no pharmacist in the store. Prescriptions are dispensed by a nationally certified pharmacy technician and double-checked via photos and computer messages by one of three pharmacists at a companion Pill Box pharmacy in Warsaw, said Greg Winn, an engineer who has been working about five years to have telepharmacy legally approved in Indiana.

CITIES: PENDLETON PD CHIEF WANTS COUNCILMAN DISQUALIFIED - Embattled Pendleton Police Chief Marc Farrer is seeking the to have Town Council President Jessica Smith from voting on upholding Farrer's dismissal (Anderson Herald-Bulletin).

CITIES: PERU LOSING PD, FD OFFICERS - Peru will be down one police officer and one firefighter the rest of the year to make up for a budget shortfall after city officials miscalculated how much pay raises, approved last year, would cost the city (Gerber, Kokomo Tribune). Officers and firefighters received a 1.5-percent increase in their longevity pay as part of across-the-board raises approved for city workers that took effect this year. Peru Clerk-Treasurer Tish Soldi said the longevity pay, combined with the base salary of an officer or firefighter, determines how much the city pays towards that employee's retirement fund. The initial combined salaries certified to the state understated how much the longevity pay increased, which led officials to underestimate how much the city would pay towards retirement funds. Soldi said they realized the mistake, which was approved last year by Peru City Council as part of the budget, after an officer came to ask about retirement policies.

CITIES: HAMMOND SAYS PARASITES KILLED SWANS - Parasites were behind the deaths of several swans found around Lake George since October — and not lead poisoning as once suspected, according to the mayor's office (Cross, NWI Times). Indiana Department of Environmental Management officials informed Mayor Thomas McDermott Feb. 22 that the parasites not only impacted the body organs, but also reached the swans' brains, according to a news release. Six of the more than a dozen mute swans reportedly also had elevated lead levels in their kidneys, some to toxic levels. Tests for avian influenza, botulism and other toxins were negative. The discovery sparked public outcry, with environmental activists, city officials and others quick to point the finger at the nearby former Federated Metals facility. The company, Whiting Metals, now operates a metals reclamation facility at the former 36-acre Federated Metals property on the lake's northeast shore and has a permit to emit lead. McDermott and his environmental management director, Ron Novak, previously said they believed the mute swans might have ingested lead released during a baghouse fire Sept. 20. The company vehemently denied the allegations.

COUNTIES: TIPPECANOE SHERIFF REACTS TO 3 DEATHS IN JAIL - A sheriff says a review of the deaths of two inmates who fell ill in their cells at the same northern Indiana jail and a man who died after fighting with jail officers found the response from staff was adequate (AP). Tippecanoe County Sheriff Bob Goldsmith says state police also determined jail procedures were adequate. The sheriff has said 42-year-old Isaiah Powe and 56-year-old Bonny Ahlrich were in separate parts of the jail's holding area in Lafayette when they were stricken hours apart Jan. 12. The Tippecanoe County coroner's office says Powe died accidentally from drug intoxication and Ahlrich died of natural causes. Also that day, 40-year-old Salvador Perez-Rivera collapsed while fighting with jail officers before booking was completed. He died Jan. 18 at a hospital of accidental acute methamphetamine toxicity.

COUNTIES: VIGO JAIL GETS RULING FROM JUDGE - A federal judge today issued a judgment ruling "conditions in the Vigo County Jail violate both the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution" (Greninger, Terre Haute Tribune-Star) The ruling was not unexpected, as lawyers for the inmates and the county agreed to such a judgment following a settlement conference Monday. The county has, in essence, conceded the existence of unconstitutional conditions, and it and the inmates' attorneys have agreed on how that will be remedied. The order signed today by U.S. Chief District Judge Jane Magnus-Stinson -- a "final judgment as to all claims for injunctive and declaratory relief" -- establishes what the county must continue to do. Among the conditions: • The county must appear at least every three months before the court and provide de iled updates on site selection, planning, and construction of a new jail. Dates will be set by the judge. • The county must "commit sufficient staff and take all other steps necessary to ensure that all prisoners are offered, at a minimum, at least three hours per week of recreation outside of their cell areas and (to) ... commit sufficient staff to make sure that the health and safety of prisoners is safeguarded." • The county must continue to file reports on how it is fulfilling staffing requirements set by the court.

INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT

Guide to House GOP budget

GOP retort to Demos on lack of teacher base salary cash: local control

Our handy cheat sheet for the education spending plan designed by the House Republican majority and approved by the House on a party line vote shows that total state investment in K-12 education would increase by $611 million over the biennium . . . which Republicans are happy to inform you equates to more than three percent in new money per year – and amount exceeding the inflation rate.

Here is your breakdown of where the education funding items stand as HB 1001 moves across the Rotunda to the Senate:

K-12 Formula Funding

- Formula dollars grow by $461 million over the biennium – up by 2.1% in 2020 and 2.2% in 2021. That's a shade better than the 2.0% increase proposed by the Governor.
- The foundation amount rises from $5,273 per pupil in 2017 and $5,352 in 2018 to $5,442 in 2020 and $5,549 in 2021 – equating to a 1.7% bump for 2020 and a 2.0% gain in 2021.
- The complexity grant holds steady in both years at $3,539 per student, after several biennia of declines.
- Preschool special education funding increases from $2,750 in 2019 to $2,875 in 2020 and $3,000 in 2021 – the first increases since 1991.
- The ADM cut-off date for kindergarten students who are at least five-years-old moves from August 1 to September 1 in 2020 and then from September 1 to October 1 in 2021 – capturing an additional 2,000+ students each year.
- Per-pupil funding for traditional public school corporations for students who receive more than 50% of their instruction virtually will decline to 90% of the foundation amount – bringing into conformity the funding for traditional virtual students and charter virtual students.
- English Language Learner (ELL) funding in the Non-English Speaking program increases by $2.6 million per year. Per-student grant amount grows from $300 in 2019 to $325. Additional funding tiers for districts with the highest concentration of ELL students are eliminated.
- Beginning in the second year of the biennium, the Career and Technical Education (CTE) funding formula would be standardized across program credit hours, and reimbursement for the highest-value CTE programs would nearly double to $1,020. Funding for apprenticeship and work-based learning program would rebound from the current $150 (!) to $500.

Teacher Compensation

- Teacher Appreciation Grants that the Governor had proposed for elimination would be sustained at $30 million per year. However, the teacher tax credit that the Governor wants to increase to $500 would remain unchanged at $100.
- Teacher career ladder programs per House Bill 1008 are funded at $5 million and the teacher residency training pilot program in House Bill 1009 would receive $1 million.

Do dropouts need more?

Bill welcomes Graduation Alliance to IN

The Senate votes 47-2 to approve a new pay-for-performance statewide adult workforce diploma program. SB 607 was authored by Senate Committee on Education and Career Development Chair Jeff Raatz (R) of Centerville on behalf of Graduation Alliance.

Advocates contend that even though the state's existing providers of adult dropout recovery services are performing well, Indiana has so many underskilled Hoosiers that need to be reached that there's ample room for an alternative approach to operate alongside the adult basic education system and adult charter schools such as the Excel Center.

Graduation Alliance would offer a free high school diploma pathway, free career-specific credentials, and direct connections to employers for job placement opportunities.

Adults over the age of 22 would be eligible to enroll in the online curriculum. Graduation Alliance would be reimbursed by the State of Indiana for each credit completed, diploma conferred, and credential attained.

As introduced, the program would have been funded out of the same pot of money that pays for high school equivalency, but references to funding have since been taken out. The bill will be sponsored in the House by Rep. Holli Sullivan (R) of Evansville.

- The budget bill as it passed the House includes the ingenious proposal announced by Governor Eric Holcomb (R) in his State of the State address that would transfer $150 million from state reserves to the 1996 account of the Teachers' Retirement Fund, which should result in $70 million in annual local savings by reducing the contribution rate paid by school employers from 7.5% to 5.5%. Cost savings would likely increase through 2023 and then decrease in subsequent years.

- No money was appropriated directly to teacher base salary increases, which House Committee on Ways and Means Co-Chair Tim Brown (R) of Crawfordsville said is a decision best made locally. "For us to become the deciding influence and body for teacher contracts is the wrong approach," declared Rep. Brown in a policy position roundly endorsed by his entire caucus.

Student and Parent Choices

- The Charter and Innovation School grant would double from $500 per student in 2019 to $1,000 per student in 2020. Starting with the second year of the biennium, FY 2021, the grant is scheduled to increase annually by the assessed value growth quotient.

- The annual cap on the Scholarship Granting Organization (SGO) Tax Credit rises from $14 million in 2019 to $15 million in 2020 and up to $19.2 million in 2021. An escalator has been added so that anytime the cap is hit, the amount of tax credits available in the following year would automatically increase by 20 percent.

- An additional tier has been added to the Choice Scholarship formula so families with an income between 100% and 125% of the free- and reduced-price lunch threshold would qualify for a voucher worth 70% of state tuition support, up from 50% currently, a change that would cost about $4 million.

- The cap on adult charter school funding increases by 250 students.

STEM, Safety, Summer

- Perkins authority would transfer from the State Board of Education to the Governor's Workforce Cabinet.

- The Indiana Department of Education would see $700,000 annually for STEM program alignment. IDOE and the STEM council requested $10 million.

- Professional development and technical assistance to pilot the new high school-to-postsecondary transitions math course is slated to receive $300,000 annually.

- The Governor's Next Level Computer Science program would be appropriated $3 million per year.

- School resource officers are in line for a boost as funding for the Secured School Safety Grant would increase by $5 million per year. Grants would also be allowed for student mental health services.

- School corporations would be allowed to keep the 3.0% share of Medicaid reimbursement they are currently required to deposit in the state General Fund.

- Why did you not increase funding for summer school when we know at-risk kids are highly vulnerable to a Summer learning slide?, inquired Rep. Vernon Smith (D) of Gary on the House floor. House Committee on Ways and Means Co-Chair Todd Huston (R) of Fishers replied, "It has been our philosophy to put as much money as possible into the formula amount, and we let the local schools decide how they want to use that money for their students. If they want to use that on Summer School, they have every right to do that, and I think it would be appropriate."

Talent and Workforce

- The Office of Work-Based Learning and Apprenticeship that the Governor created via executive order is in line to snag $1.8 million over the biennium. The Governor's Workforce Cabinet will be expected to operate on $385,000 per year.

- Money committed to Workforce Ready Grants and Next Level Employer Training Grants is set to double.

- The Governor's Workforce Cabinet would have $2 million in new dollars annually at its disposal to spend on a new model for Career Navigation and Coaching.

Postsecondary

- Funding for higher education operations is expected to grow by $27 million across the biennium – about 1.0% more per year, which is right in line with the Governor's recommendations. The Indiana Commission for Higher Education had proposed 2.5% new funding in FY 2020 and 4.0% in new dollars in FY 2021.

- State financial aid obligations would be fully funded.

- Each institution's top capital project priority has been endorsed under the budget bill as it now stands, as has the Purdue University Veterinary Teaching Hospital. Total bonding authority for all higher education projects now comes in at $359.1 million.

- Dual credit has been flat-lined – a big surprise, especially given that the Indiana Commission for Higher Education just reported earlier this year that dual credit saved Hoosier students approximately $69 million (and dual credit is sometimes referred to as a "middle class tax cut").

- Medical residency graduate education grants are projected to grow by $1 million per year. The maximum amount of a primary care scholarship awarded at the Marian University College of Osteopathic Medicine in the first class year is also granted an increase from $10,000 per year to $15,000 per year.

IN Elementary & Secondary Ed

IN General . . .

- The procurement process is underway by the Indiana Department of Education via the Indiana Department of Administration for a new early childhood assessment. Responses are due March 12, a contract award is expected by mid- to late-April, and IDOE hopes to be ready to deploy the exam in August.

□ The current assessment instrument, ISTAR-KR (Indiana Standards Tool for Alternate Reporting of Kindergarten Readiness), is mandatory for the state's approximately 15,000 special education preschool students, as well as On My Way Pre-K, and is also available on an optional basis for local administration. IDOE estimating an opt-in population of as much as 215,000 students. But ISTAR-KR is not aligned to the Indiana Early Learning Development Framework and Foundations, which this procurement will fix.

● An Indiana Department of Education procurement for a new teacher licensing exam requested that prospective vendors propose an Indiana-specific, custom-designed solution and a national off-the-shelf product. The procurement has now resulted in a separate recommendation for each option. Pearson would be the winning vendor if the state chooses the Indiana-specific option. But if IDOE opts for the off-the-shelf route, the procurement recommends Educational Testing Services and its Praxis exams. Praxis comprises over 90 different assessments, and ETS has produced crosswalks for all of the Praxis titles confirming substantial alignment to the Indiana teaching standards. Indiana is one of only seven states that does not rely on Praxis for some part of its education licensure exam requirements. IDOE aims to fully implement the new testing system by September 1, 2021.

● On Indiana Lawmakers, the statewide television and radio show airing on Indiana's Public Broadcasting Stations on the first weekend of March, K-12 education funding, teacher pay, testing, and virtual schools take center stage as host Jon Schwantes is joined by House Committee on Education Chair Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis; Rep. Greg Porter (D) of Indianapolis, the ranking Democrat of the House Committee on Ways and Means; Teresa Meredith, president of the Indiana State Teachers Association; and Dr. Chris Himsel, superintendent of Northwest Allen County Schools. Contributing commentary on this week's topic, as always, is Hannah News Service's Ed Feigenbaum.

□ Check local listings statewide for airings; you can also watch online: <https://www.wfyi.org/programs/indiana-lawmakers>

● The Governor's Workforce Cabinet spent most of its first eight months hunkered down in action teams to produce legislatively mandated reports with recommendations for workforce coordination that Governor Eric Holcomb (R) adopted for his 2019 legislative agenda.

□ The Cabinet is still evolving as it takes a more holistic approach to making recommendations on an ongoing basis to streamline and align the workforce system, says Executive Director Danny Lopez.

□ Cabinet responsibilities will be parceled out through a committee structure:

- An executive committee to drive the overall strategic vision
- An industry committee focused on industry insight into current and future skills needs
- A constituent support committee to identify barriers to knock down
- A Workforce Innovation and Opportunity Act (WIOA) committee to develop the WIOA combined plan
- A policy committee.

● The Indiana Department of Education is seeking a vendor to provide Cultural Competency Training and Support to the lowest-performing five percent of schools. The vendor will develop and deliver cultural competency training to schools to identify how the systems, structures, policies, and practices affect specific student groups and will create resources aligned to the training to support schools as they address issues of equity and the root causes of student group achievement gaps. Responses to the Request for Services are due March 28.

● The Division of Mental Health and Addiction of the Family and Social Services Administration intends to award $1.2 million in grants to establish or expand programs in substance use prevention and mental health promotion that serve public school students, parents, teachers, and the community at varying levels of risk. Indiana public schools, school corporations, local education agencies, community mental health centers, and other social service agencies are eligible to apply and must demonstrate partnerships with the local System of Care. Up to seven proposals will be awarded, and the maximum award will be $200,000. Proposals are due March 15.

● The Mississinewa Community Schools receives school board approval to install walk-through metal detectors at the high school and middle school. "We'll probably have it set up to be at the middle school one or two times a week and 2-3 times week at the high school on a random basis," said Superintendent Tab McKenzie, reported the Marion Chronicle-Tribune.

- New school buses purchased by the Vigo County School Corporation will be outfitted with a quintuplet of cameras – two facing the interior and two facing out to catch stop arm violations.

IN Administration . . .

- The Ripley-Ohio-Dearborn Special Education Cooperative will lose its largest member, the Sunman-Dearborn Community School Corporation, as well as the Batesville Community School Corporation. Both districts have indicated their intent to withdraw at the conclusion of the 2019-2020 school year.

- Thanks to a Managed Security Services grant from the Indiana Department of Education, the Plainfield Community School Corporation selects Five Star to provide 24/7 active, real-time threat monitoring for the district's network environment.

- The Metropolitan School District of Wabash County school board approves the addition of two student resource officer positions, one at Northfield Junior-Senior High School, and one at Southwood Junior-Senior High School.

- The Indiana State Police has concluded the departmental investigation into the fatal shooting at Dennis Intermediate School in Richmond on December 13. The results have not been publicly released, but the findings have been forwarded to the Wayne County Prosecutor's Office for review and potential charges.

- Expect the Board of Trustees of the Smith-Green Community School Corporation in Churubusco to switch to a self-funded insurance plan after it selected an insurance consultant to help district officials navigate the process.

IN Budgets & Finance . . .

- Administrators with the Union County College Corner Joint School District (UCCJSD) notify the Indiana Department of Education that the school corporation has been erroneously "receiving more funding per student than they are supposed to. Typically, they are supposed to be paid per student minus Ohio students, however, since November they have been getting paid for all 1,295 kids instead of the 1,185 Indiana students," reported the Liberty Herald.

- The Lakeland School Corporation Board of Trustees tabled a vote on the proposed closure of two elementary schools until at least March 25. School board members want to give stakeholders another 30 days to review the deficit-reduction plan and consider alternative options to closing Lima-Brighton and Wolcott Mills elementary schools. Shuttering the underutilized buildings and reducing staff accordingly would save approximately $1 million.

- The South Knox School Corporation had to cut more than $260,000 from its 2019 operating budget after learning from the Department of Local Government Finance that overall assessed valuation declined by five percent, or more than $27 million, largely due to falling farmland values, reports the Vincennes Sun-Commercial. South Knox will make up the difference with reserves. The AV decline translated into a 9.0% increase in the tax rate.

- West Vigo High School in West Terre Haute was home Wednesday to a dodge ball tournament fundraiser for its ninth year. There were 22 teams with six people per team registered for the event, which provides $500 scholarships for seniors through the Linc program, which helps freshmen get acclimated to high school with the assistance of upper class mentors – many of whom return to West Vigo to participate in the annual event as college students.

IN Compensation . . .

- About one-third of school buildings in the Evansville Vanderburgh School Corporation have an "excess" of teachers due to declining enrollments, reports the Evansville Courier & Press. Excess teachers will be relocated before the start of the next school year to buildings where enrollment is growing. The district says this is an annual process and that no teachers are being laid off.

- The Indiana Education Employment Relations Board receives a petition from the Indianapolis Teachers Society seeking a local election to replace the Indianapolis Education Association, which is an affiliate of the Indiana State Teachers Association and the National Education Association.

- The Triton School Corporation increases the daily pay to $75 for substitutes with a high school diploma, $80 for substitutes with at least 60 hours of college credit, and $85 for substitutes with a teaching license.

IN Non-Public Schools . . .

- Steve Hesse, principal of Shawe Memorial Jr./Sr. High School in Madison, resigns to move to Kentucky.

IN Charter Schools . . .

- The Daleville Community Schools board of trustees votes to initiate the charter revocation process for the Indiana Virtual School and the Indiana Virtual Pathways Academy.

□ Data released by Daleville shows that 504 of the 851 students who attended Indiana Virtual for the entire 2017-2018 school year were reported as earning zero credits that year. Not a single one of the more than 2,000 students who attended Indiana Virtual for the entire 2016-2017 school year earned at least five credits during semester one . . . and only 144 students earned at least five credits during semester two. In addition, 499 students were reported as having zero course assignments in 2016-2017.

□ Daleville Assistant Superintendent Dave Stashevsky told the Anderson Herald-Bulletin that the operator of the sister schools had stonewalled the district's requests for data over the past year. "Our supposition is they went into the data, saw it was awful and didn't want to give it to us," he said. The newspaper went on to write, "That changed last year, however, when the Indiana General Assembly passed a law allowing authorizers to have direct access to reporting data. But it took till August 1 for Daleville to receive the relevant data and until recently to go through it to determine the progress of the charter schools, Stashevsky said." Daleville Superintendent Paul Garrison said the sister schools appear to have engaged in a practice of transferring students between schools to exploit the provision that students must be enrolled in a school for a minimum of 120 days for their standardized test scores to count in A-F school accountability determinations.

□ Daleville's notice of revocation also cites the schools' noncompliance with Indiana State Board of Accounts annual audit requirements; violations of Indiana Department of Education ISTEP testing protocol; testing security concerns; and noncompliance with special education statutes.

□ State Board of Education member Gordon Hendry, who led a committee in 2018 to review virtual schools, told Shaina Cavazos of Chalkbeat, "If this isn't a scandal, I don't know what is." The school will have an opportunity to respond at a public meeting on April 1.

● Natalie Wenzler, director of workforce education at the Indiana Department of Workforce Development, joins the board of directors for the Invent Learning Hub.

IN Programs & Curriculum . . .

● The Huntington Community School Corporation will divide its preschool program currently located at Flint Springs Elementary School into two buildings. Two of the four preschool teachers will stay at Flint Springs and two will move to Lincoln Elementary School.

● The Plainfield Community School Corporation intends to participate in the Indiana Bond Bank's HELP Program to fund the purchase of approximately 3,400 laptop computers to be used for four years at the middle school and high school level.

● Southmont High School would open its advanced manufacturing wing to Ivy Tech Community College students training to be welders, according to the Crawfordsville Journal Review. Ivy Tech students currently have to drive to Lafayette for courses to earn welding or industrial maintenance certifications.

● Discussion rights at Bon Air Elementary School and Bon Air Middle School have been eliminated as part of the transformation zone implemented by the Kokomo School Corporation with the approval of the State Board of Education, reports the Kokomo Tribune. Superintendent Jeff Hauswald explained to the paper that KSC committed to the state board of education to do things differently to drive academic improvement at the low-performing schools, and "One of those commitments was that we would have not only meetings with professional development but meaningful discussions and dialogue with all stakeholders. The KTA had expressed to us that they only wanted us working and communicating with union members, specifically their words. So when we looked at Bon Air Elementary, for example, we looked at a school where the membership was under 50 percent. So they had eight union members out of the entire school out of between 20 and 25. Our concern was to meet the requirements of the grant as we submitted it, and in order to truly get participation from all teachers and input from all teachers, we wanted a process for councils and meetings where all teachers were able to participate."

□ But Indiana State Teachers Association UniServ Director Heidi Miller is concerned that without a requirement for mandatory discussion, there won't be any discussion at all, with either union or non-union teachers.

● The Health and Wellness initiative at New Albany High School is in line for a significant boost courtesy of a $100,000 grant from the New Albany Redevelopment Commission.

● The Maconaquah School Corporation received state grant funding for an ultrasound machine so students can "watch the gestation process of goats as part of an initiative to grow the state's livestock sector," reports the Kokomo Tribune. Maconaquah also recently purchased its first set of Polled Hereford heifers.

● After a few stops and starts, the South Bend Community School Corporation receives approval from the school board to create a transformation zone for Navarre Middle School and four elementary feeder schools. Navarre earned a sixth consecutive F on the state accountability scale for 2017-2018 after missing a D by only one point.

IN Policy . . .

● The Westfield Washington Schools Board of Trustees will meet March 5 to consider shifting the high school and middle school start time from 8:00 a.m. to between 8:30 a.m. and 9:00 a.m. and moving the elementary bell from 9:10 a.m. to around 7:50 or 8:00 a.m.

□ Pointing to research from the American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Psychological Association, WWS officials believe the changes could lead to attendance increases, higher student grade point averages, fewer students sleeping during class, and an increase in the quality of student-family interactions. The adjustments would also generate transportation efficiencies by allowing for the elimination of shuttle bus routes and should also help alleviate traffic congestion at the beginning of the school day.

□ You may recall that the Zionsville Community Schools recently implemented a similar change, and the Noblesville Schools adopted new start times to take effect with the 2019-2020 school year.

● School board members in the Duneland School Corporation didn't realize that the 100 pages of policy updates they adopted in August included closing the district to non-resident transfers, reports the Chesterton Tribune.

□ The school board held a special meeting on February 28 to gather public input on whether the policy should be rescinded and open enrollment restored.

● The Madison Grant United School District approves a school calendar for 2019-2020 that includes parent-teacher conferences as e-learning days and e-learning days on Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Day and President's Day.

□ The M.S.D. of Bluffton-Harrison amends its policy on e-learning days to allow up to three e-learning days in a row.

□ The 2019-2020 school calendar for the Duneland School Corporation has e-learning days slated on both election days.

● The school board and the superintendent of the Eastern Greene School Corporation weren't on the same page about a recent personnel decision.

Thank you for being a member of IAPSS!

□ The EGSC school board voted not to renew the teaching contracts of the head football coach and athletic director and apparently did not provide context or explanation for the decision. Some parents and residents were incensed that the school board made the decision unilaterally and without a recommendation from the school superintendent.

- The Hamilton Southeastern Schools Board of Trustees directed a committee to take another look at the wording of a proposed nondiscrimination policy after some board members advocated for a list of specific classes of protected groups.

□ The committee previously recommended a policy that reads: "The school corporation will not discriminate in its educational or employment activities on any basis prohibited by applicable federal or state laws."

IN Referenda . . .

- The Hanover Community School Corporation proposes a referendum levy of 56 cents to finance improvements to Hanover Central middle school and high school, construction of a new facility for upper-grade elementary students, and assorted other efficiency and security upgrades. The total cost is estimated at $44 million.

- The River Forest Community School Corporation in Lake County seeks a referendum levy increasing the property tax rate by $1.19 to fund teacher and staff pay and educational programs.

- The Elkhart Community Schools beseeches voters to approve the property tax referendum on May 7 to ensure adequate funding for teacher and staff compensation, competitive starting teacher salaries, reasonable class sizes, safety and security measures, mental health counselors and social workers, and new programming.

□ ECS contends that its state funding has gone up by only 1.67% over the past nine years. The request for $0.5800 rate would replace the 2014 referendum rate of $0.1315, resulting in an incremental increase of about $15.7 million.

□ If approved, more affordable insurance benefits would be a top priority. Only about one-half of ECS employees even choose coverage through the ECS medical plan because of the high cost, and of those who do, the majority select the single plan even if they have family due to the family plan's high premiums. During staff exit interviews, insurance is often cited as a reason for leaving, according to the district.

□ Hourly wages also need to rise for food service, nurses, social workers, and clerical staff to be competitive with the private sector, the district asserts.

- Three of the hardest-to-bear cuts if voters fail to renew the referendum levy for the M.S.D. of Wayne Township: the much-lauded Wayne Township Preschool; the pioneering Ben Davis University, where 100% of students in 2018 graduated on time with a Core 40 diploma for the eighth year in a row and more than 100 students also earned an associate degree from Vincennes University; and the Wayne Preparatory Academy alternative school.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- The Westfield Washington Schools rejects bids for door security after they came in at about $400,000 over the $1 million budget. The district will reevaluate the scope and plans to re-bid the project at a future date.

- Summer capital projects in the Plainfield Community School Corporation include $1 million for playground upgrades, $1 million for high school site improvements, $500,000 for security camera replacement, and $300,000 for exterior lighting.

- The Plainfield Community School Corporation selects The Skillman Corporation as construction manager for the Guilford Elementary School project and Hagerman Group as construction manager for the Plainfield Community Middle School project.

- The M.S.D. of Washington Township is in the middle of the design process for additions to Eastwood Middle School, with site plans expected before Spring break or shortly thereafter. An analysis is also currently underway by a professional arborist on the health and viability of a prized, 200-year-old tree . . . and alternative options that might allow construction to occur around the tree.

□ The district recently received 60 bids across 21 bid packages for the Eastwood Middle School work, but even so, the project scope had to be reduced after the low bids exceeded the $29 million budget by more than $3 million. That means no entry canopies, bleacher replacements, large gathering stair case, expanded wrestling room, or additional stage lighting.

- The Southwest Allen County Schools held a hearing on the construction of a replacement for Homestead High School. Due to the retirement of existing debt, the project will be accomplished without a tax increase.

- The Greater Jasper Consolidated School District plans a March 25 board meeting to vote on $11 million in bonding authority to pay for school security, updates to Jerry Brewer Alumni Stadium and Ruxer Field, and a bevy of other projects.

- The New Castle Community Schools Board of Trustees schedules a March 4 work session to delve into the recommendations from its Long-Term Planning Task Force to pursue a referendum to renovate New Castle Middle School to accommodate all sixth-, seventh- and eighth graders . . . and to add preschool classrooms at each elementary school.

- The MSD of Wabash County works with the Fort Wayne architectural and engineering firm Barton-Coe-Vilamaa on an approximately $1.6 million project for new paint, new flooring, and collaborative media rooms in the libraries at Northfield and Southwood high schools.

- The M.S.D. of Martinsville contemplates a bond issue to finance a new STEM laboratory and an athletics fieldhouse at Martinsville High School.

- The Garrett-Keyser-Butler Community School District receives school board approval to advertise a hearing for energy-efficiency projects provided by EMCOR Group.

- The Community School Corporation of Southern Hancock County is mulling major renovations to New Palestine High School and intends to make a recommendation later this Spring. Feedback has focused on redesigning the main entrance, increased hallway width, bringing more natural light into the building, and adding collaborative spaces. The district has been working with The Skillman Corporation.

- The Monroe County Community School Corporation plans to sell real estate to its Building Corporation for up to $58.9 million and to use the proceeds for the construction of a new Tri-North Middle School, renovation and demolition of the existing Tri-North Middle School, renovation of and improvements to Bloomington North High School, and districtwide safety, security, and efficiency projects.

- The Clark-Pleasant Community School Corporation moves ahead with a $35 million bond issue for construction of a new elementary school.

- As we were heading to press with this issue on Thursday night, the School Town of Munster School Board was slated to review competing proposals from two Indianapolis firms (design-build team Performances Services, as well as architects Lancer and Beebe working locally with CORE Construction) for what should be about a $4 million project housing technology, special education, and maintenance facilities on land behind the STM's Wilbur Wright Middle School. The new construction will be funded via dollars derive from the district's May 2017 construction referendum.

□ Look for construction to occur through the Summer, with the facilities expected to be operational for the opening of the 2019-2020 school year.

IN Transition . . .

- Ty Mungle has been named interim superintendent of the North Lawrence Community Schools. He's formerly served as superintendent of the Eastern Greene School Corporation.

- The Indiana Afterschool Network has hired Derrick Carnes as communications and engagement coordinator and Keith Monfreda as training and development manager.

- The Muncie Community Schools hires Charles Reynolds as associate superintendent. The Muncie native and Ball State University alum is currently the assistant superintendent of Richmond Community Schools and is the former decorated band director of Muncie's Southside High School.

- The Indiana State Department of Agriculture hires Kimberly Barkman as ISDA's first Agricultural Education program manager. In that role, Barkman will serve as a liaison between ISDA and the Indiana Department of Education, and schools with an agriculture program. She grew up on a tobacco farm in Switzerland County, participated in 4-H, and served as the 2003 District 12 FFA president.

□ Barkman earned her undergrad degree from Purdue University in Agricultural Education before working as an agricultural education teacher at Triton Central for two years and then teaching at Beech Grove City Schools for six years.

IN Government . . .

- House Bill 1052, legislation authored by former math teacher Rep. Jeff Thompson (R) of Lizton, chair of the House Committee on Ways and Means House K-12 Subcommittee, includes a provision requiring that the Department of Local Government Finance prepare a report by January 1, 2020, with revenue estimates for each school corporation if a school corporation were allowed to enact an income tax. The bill passed out the Indiana House by a vote of 73-23.

- As anti-Semitic incidents seem to be on the rise and teenage boys nonchalantly make Nazi salutes, the Senate did not move legislation authored by Sen. Jon Ford (R) of Terre Haute to expand mandatory Holocaust education into all middle schools. Sen. Ford worked on the legislation with the Jewish Federation of Greater Indianapolis and celebrated Holocaust survivor Eva Mozes Kor of Terre Haute.

- The House approved HB 1089, a bill authored by Rep. Jeff Thompson (R) of Lizton that would establish employee training requirements for treating seizure disorder and require the State Board of Education to adopt rules to implement a seizure preparedness program.

- Six days after the House voted to make it easier for work-based learning opportunities to count toward a high school diploma, the Senate approved a bill permitting schools to grant academic credit toward graduation for off-campus religious instruction.

□ Senate Bill 373, authored by Sen., Dennis Kruse (R) of Auburn, would allow students to receive up to two elective credits for release time religious instruction imparted off campus - but during school hours - by organizations such as Child Evangelism Fellowship. Students who partake in released time religious instruction would be permitted to receive academic credit only as long as the local school board evaluated the instruction solely on the basis of secular criteria and without consideration of religious content or denomination.

□ Language in the Kruse bill as introduced on Bible literacy education that attracted the support (via tweet) of President Donald Trump (R) is no longer a part of the bill.

- "Golden parachutes" would be prohibited for assistant superintendents, principals, and assistant principals under Senate Bill 281 approved by the Senate.

□ The bill is a follow-up to Senate Enrolled Act 182 -2017, which addressed excessive contract buyouts for departing superintendents, but left a loophole for other administrators. The author of both is Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem. The House sponsor of SB 281 will be House Committee on Education Chair Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis, who also sponsored the 2017 version.

- The Senate voted to allow the Indiana Education Employment Relations Board to assess a civil penalty on an exclusive representative that commits an unfair labor practice. Senate Bill 390 is a follow-up to Senate Enrolled Act 407-2017, which provided that teachers must be notified when membership in the bargaining unit drops below 50 percent.

- The chair of the Senate Committee on Education and Career Development, Sen. Jeff Raatz (R) of Centerville, read from a statement on behalf of the bill's author Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem. "Teachers should not be afraid to influence who represents them in collective bargaining with the school district," read Raatz, moments before the committee sent the bill to the full Senate. "The bill gives teachers a way to seek damages against powerful interests. There are also numerous school districts across the state where teachers unions represent only a small percentage of the actual teachers in the district. There is an incentive for these unions to only look out for teachers who are members and pay dues. Oftentimes unions are led by long-term teachers resulting in stagnant pay and salary increases for new teachers and middle earning teachers. This bill coupled with IEERB's new fairness rules will discourage unfair practices and intimidation by powerful union interests."

- Brent Wilson, superintendent of the M.S.D. of Steuben County, testified in support during committee after discussing the aborted attempt by district teachers to change their exclusive representative in Fall 2017. Sen. Jim Tomes (R) of Wadesville offered an amendment on Second Reading that would have allowed IEERB to fine a school corporation employer, but the amendment was defeated. Sen. Houchin said on the Senate floor that allowing civil penalties to be assessed against school corporation employers would be inappropriate because the fines would be paid out of taxpayer dollars that would not be going to teacher pay or into the classroom. "I wanted protections for individual teachers, so if they did feel they wanted to be forming their own unit, others would be deterred from intimidating practices," said Sen. Houchin. The bill, which passed 33-16, will be sponsored by Reps. Chuck Goodrich (R) of Noblesville and Todd Huston (R) of Fishers.

- The House voted 72-25 to fund handgun training for teachers, bus drivers, cafeteria workers, and other school staff who have been authorized by the local school board to carry a firearm in or on school property. Grants for firearms training would be administered by the Indiana Criminal Justice Institute. Prospective grant recipients would need to provide proof of having completed a psychological test. The author of House Bill 1253 is Rep. Jim Lucas (R) of Seymour. Senate sponsors are Sens. Jim Tomes (R) of Wadesville, Travis Holdman (R) of Markle, and Jeff Raatz (R) of Centerville.

- The House voted 67-33 to require future Core 40 college preparation curriculum models adopted by State Board of Education to include a requirement that each graduating high school senior complete the FAFSA (Free Application for Federal Student Aid) unless a principal, parent, or emancipated student provides a waiver.

- House Bill 1629 also would allow school corporations to charge a fee for a search of electronic records if the search exceeds five hours – similar language has twice before passed the General Assembly only to be vetoed by the Governor.

- The bill would require schools to give suspended students the opportunity to complete any school assignments missed during the period of suspension. The bill also proposes to expand the EARN Indiana work-study scholarship program to secondary students. EARN Indiana provides employers with half of the federal minimum wage for each hour of the student's work-study. School corporations would be required to provide equal access to career and technical education programs to students from a charter or nonpublic school. Language that special education advocates assailed for impacting parent due process rights was dropped from the bill. Language requiring completion of a career and technical education course was also stricken. The bill was authored by House Committee on Education Chair Rep. Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis and will be sponsored by Senate Committee on Education and Career Development Chair Sen. Jeff Raatz (R) of Centerville.

- The Indiana House voted 58-38 to approve House Bill 1404 that would allow high schools to count work-based learning courses, career and technical education courses, and internships toward high school diploma requirements. The bill also would require the State Board of Education to establish new A-F school accountability rules for high schools based on the percentage of students who complete graduation pathways. SBOE would also have to consider calculating high school letter grades on the basis of postsecondary outcomes like student employment and earnings. The bill mandates that SBOE "shall consider" "how to account for adverse life experiences or other unique circumstances that occur after graduation." High school accountability grades are currently based on graduation rate; the percentage of students who earn AP, IB, dual credit, or industry-recognized credentials; and performance on the state assessment. The bill would also voids 511 IAC 6.2-10 – the A-F rules for both elementary and high schools – even though the bill's focus is high school accountability. The bill does not specify that high school graduation rate be a metric in the high school accountability model, although language in the bill is sufficiently generic to give SBOE the discretion to do so. High schools would no longer be graded on whether students pass end-of-course assessments or the 10th grade ILEARN test. Last year's HB 1426 eliminated the high school graduation exam effective with the 2023 graduating cohort. To meet the federal requirement that students be tested at least once in high school in math and English, last year's HB 1426 provided that beginning with the 2020-2021 school year high school students will take a nationally recognized college entrance exam aligned to national college-ready benchmarks. Whether this assessment would be the PSAT, SAT, ACT, or some other exam has yet to be determined by the State Board of Education.

- Arguably, earning an A or a B isn't much of an accomplishment for high schools these days. Last year, 87.4% of all Indiana high schools received an A or B – largely because the bar is so low for the percentage of seniors earning AP, dual credit, IB, and industry recognized credentials.

- The House votes to approve House Bill 1628, legislation that would expand the On My Way Pre-K program from 20 counties today to every county in the state, with a hold harmless provision so existing counties will not receive fewer funded seats unless they have less demand.

□ The bill would also allow up to 20% of the funding to be awarded to children who do not qualify for the federal CCDF program. About $15.2 million appropriated to the pilot program has gone unspent and would be carried forward into the next biennium.

□ On Third Reading for HB 1628, Rep. Jim Lucas (R) of Seymour passionately explained why he would be a no vote: “Government runs education in this state and across other states, so instead of public education I refer to it as government run education. We have to take a step back and take a look at what we are getting on return on investment. I keep hearing this ROI, ROI, not just in education but in everything. Since government has run education throughout the decades, where we are at right now as a society. Last year Medicaid paid for over half of our births. The generation ahead of that: Over half of our kids are on free and reduced meals. The generation above that, the kids that go to college were $1.5 trillion dollars in higher education debt. Now, the State of Indiana devotes over half of our state budget to government run education, K-12. They get over 40% of our property tax dollars, over a billion more in federal dollars We devote another 12% towards higher education. So two-thirds of our state budget goes into education What we are getting, our tenth graders, two thirds are flunking our own state test in math. Two-thirds. So, this system is not working, by any way, shape, or form. Our current system is not working. Now, we have a federal PreK program known as Head Start. Health and Human Services has a report out. Fifty years and $180 billion dollars spent on Head Start. By third grade those students had no appreciable gains. They were all gone by third grade. So, when I look at that as a whole I cannot personally justify taking a system by all measuring, statistics, anything, is a complete and total failure. I cannot justify expanding it. Ladies and gentlemen, we have a house, roofs leaking, pipes are leaking, windows are broken out. We shouldn’t be adding on rooms to that house. We need to be fixing that house before we go adding on to it. That’s the reason I am voting no for this.”

● The House voted to enhance the sharing of investigatory and student discipline records between law enforcement and schools. House Bill 1398 is authored by Rep. Tony Cook (R) of Cicero and will be sponsored in the Senate by Sen. Mike Crider (R) of Greenfield.

● The House votes 97-2 to prohibit growth-only calculations of school letter grades. About 50 public, charter, innovation, and private schools received an A-F letter grade based on growth only last year. Moving forward, if requested by a charter school during its first three years of operation, the Indiana Department of Education may issue no grade. The bill also would require the Indiana Department of Education to obtain approval from the State Board of Education prior to assigning a school a new identification number.

□ House Bill 1630 also includes language requiring formative assessment providers to have their testing instruments reviewed by a third party for alignment with the state’s standards in order to participate in the state’s formative assessment grant program.

□ This bill was authored by House Committee on Education Chair Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis and will be sponsored in the Senate by Senate Committee on Education and Career Development Chair Jeff Raatz (R) of Centerville.

● The Senate voted to approve Senate Bill 632. This bill would require the Indiana State Department of Health to include recommendations on radon testing in schools in its manual of best practices for managing indoor air quality in schools.

● The Indiana Senate voted to require the drinking water in every school building located in East Chicago or Hammond to be tested annually for lead and copper. “Right now, schools are not required to carry out lead testing of the drinking water,” proclaimed Sen. Lonnie Randolph (D) of East Chicago, the author of Senate Bill 297. “In 2017, there was a one-time voluntary program that schools could enroll in to undergo lead testing, and only eight of East Chicago and Hammond’s 31 schools participated. That is not enough. My SB 297 will mandate that all of these schools get their drinking water tested each year. Our kids deserve that.”

● The Senate approved Senate Bill 421, a measure regulating school district annexation, but only after approving a Second Reading amendment that narrowed the scope of the bill to the dispute in Greene Township of St. Joseph County. Township residents disillusioned with the closure of their only remaining public school building are seeking to secede from the South Bend Community School Corporation and attach to the John Glenn School Corporation.

● The public school community notched a victory when Sen. Blake Doriot (R) of Syracuse declared on the Senate floor that he didn’t have enough votes to pass his Senate Bill 246, a measure limiting school referenda to the general election (there was a straw vote in the Republican caucus), and therefore he would not be calling it down for a Third Reading vote.

□ An immense grassroots response over the preceding weekend helped turn the tide, and lobbyists with the Indiana School Boards Association, Indiana Association of School Business Officials, and Indiana State Teachers Association worked senators throughout the day Monday to secure commitments against the bill.

□ In an email to supporters, the Indiana School Boards Association expressed special appreciation for the work of IASBO’s Denny Costerison, Roni Embry from ISTA, Republican Sens. Ron Alting, Vaneta Becker, and Randy Head, and IUSA, ISRSA, IDOE, AIA Indiana, IAPSS, and the Coalition of Growing and Suburban Schools.

● The Senate Majority Caucus says that Republicans in that body are supporting teachers this session by increasing the school-supply tax credit, streamlining training requirements, requiring the State Board of Education to replace the current teacher licensing exams, and giving school corporations more flexibility in setting teacher pay by removing the current cap on how much teachers’ years of experience and academic degrees can impact potential raises.

- By a vote of 29-20 - narrowly by Senate standards - senators approved the chamber's major school safety bill, despite conservative objections to the children's social, emotional, and behavioral health plan and what they saw as the collection of data on children from the time they are born. Sen. Mike Young (R) of Indianapolis derisively referred to the bill as "SB 1984."

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- The Portage Township Schools says it terminated former high school assistant diving coach Jatwone London immediately upon learning about allegations that he had inappropriate sexual relationships with female students on the swim team during 2017 and 2018, including with one girl beginning when she was 14, reports the Times of Northwest Indiana. The district has been hit with a lawsuit claiming that administrators were negligent in not taking adequate steps to respond when they were warned by the father of one of the girls months before the coach was arrested.

- The Elkhart Community Schools is on the receiving end of a lawsuit alleging that female administrators and staff are underpaid compared to men in violation of the federal Equal Pay Act. Filed by two former assistant principals and one current administrator, the complaint seeks up to three years of back pay and a court order forcing ECS to adopt policies "on equal employment opportunities and standards for evaluating performance and determining pay and promotions," reports the Elkhart Truth. Women are "marginalized, under-valued, and often passed over for promotions," according to the complaint, and are held to higher standards that force them to work twice as hard without equal pay. "Despite the fact that women are far over-represented among the administrative and/or professional jobs that ECS has, even a brief review shows that over-representation does not equate to an equal distribution of the high-paying positions within ECS," the filing states. "In fact, the high paying jobs massively and disproportionately are filled by male employees, while an inversely small amount of men make up the lowest paying positions."

- A 12-year-old girl and former student of Highland Hills Middle School was arrested for what the Floyd County sheriff said were threats on Instagram and SnapChat that put three separate school districts on heightened alert.

- A teen who attends Indian Creek High School was taken into custody by Trafalgar Police after allegedly posting on social media: "Can I get a RIP because the school's probably gonna get shot up. LOL"

- An 18-year-old female student was arrested at Crown Point High School and charged with felony possession of a firearm on school property after a handgun was discovered in the center console of her vehicle. She had aroused the suspicion of police with a social media post.

- A Kekionga Middle School student in the Fort Wayne Community Schools allegedly pulled out a knife in front of another student in class on Tuesday . . . and FWCS is also reviewing security procedures after a Northrop High School student is accused of shooting a gun at a bus stop after disembarking from a school bus last week.

IN Higher Education

IN General . . .

- As of February 25, 43% of the enrolled class of 21st Century Scholars in the graduating class of 2019 are on track to complete all 12 Scholar Success steps and earn scholarships. Of the 14,418 Scholars in the 2019 graduating cohort, 21% haven't completed activities they were supposed to complete when they were freshmen. Students who fail to complete the required Scholar Success activities before June 30 of their senior year will lose up to four years of paid college tuition.

IN Administration . . .

- Purdue University President Mitch Daniels announces tuition for the 2020-2021 academic year will stay frozen at 2012 levels, the eighth consecutive year without an increase. Today's freshmen were in elementary school the last time Purdue announced a tuition hike. Total Purdue student borrowing is down by 31% since 2011-12.

- Purdue University will provide a one-time $500 "appreciation payment" this Spring to all West Lafayette campus staff who earn $75,000 or less and who were employed as of December 31, 2018. Eighty-three percent of all non-faculty Purdue associates will receive the one-time payment. In addition, Purdue will offer a 2.5% merit raise pool for West Lafayette faculty and staff for FY 2020, representing the fifth consecutive year for a merit increase.

- Indiana State University establishes an annual address in honor of slain Washington Post journalist Jamal Khashoggi, a 1983 ISU alumnus. The Jamal Khashoggi Annual Address on Journalism and the Media will examine current and critical issues related to journalism, the first amendment, and freedom of the press.

- Indiana State University students should expect the rate for a traditional residence hall room with a standard meal plan - the plan serving the majority of on-campus rooms - to increase by 2.0% for the next school year.

□ ISU administrators also anticipate that enrollment will dip by some four percent during the Fall 2019 semester.

- Ball State University is considering enrolling all new employees into a university-owned defined contribution retirement plan and withdrawing from the Indiana Public Retirement System. BSU and Indiana State University are the only remaining public institutions that continue to allow new employees to enroll in INPRS.

□ BSU is also looking into discontinuing its retiree health care plan. A benefits benchmarking analysis found BSU in the minority among public peer institutions in offering a subsidized retiree health care plan. No other Indiana public post-secondary institution apparently offers subsidized retiree health care for new employees. By 2046 Ball State's actuarial liability in the retiree health care plan is projected to grow to nearly $1 billion. Ball State will ask the Board of Trustees to consider both changes later this year.

- DePauw University seeks to get a handle on its finances by laying off 56 current employees (41 full-time and 15 part-time), and will not fill 14 currently vacant full-time and two part-time positions. DePauw hopes to save $4.3 million alone by cutting jobs. The university also offers a voluntary retirement incentive plan to some 100 full-time faculty.

IN Programs & Policy . . .

- The University of Saint Francis Kinesiology and Nutrition Department inks an affiliation agreement with Manchester University for athletic training. USF students who meet Manchester University's Master in Athletic Training program entry requirements will be guaranteed a seat.

- Ivy Tech Community College's Lawrenceburg Campus enters into a new dual-admission agreement with Northern Kentucky University that officials promise will promote and simplify transfer from Ivy Tech to NKU. The agreement expands the "2NKU" program, an effort designed for students to transfer to NKU after earning an associate degree.

□ Ivy Tech 2 NKU will offer dual-admission at Ivy Tech and NKU. While earning an associate degree at Ivy Tech, students also have access to a NKU advisor, campus resources, and student activities.

- The University of Saint Francis enters into a collaboration agreement to allow Indiana Tech's elementary and special education majors to complete their remaining education coursework and licensure requirements through the University of Saint Francis. They will finish their remaining non-major specific coursework at Indiana Tech and will earn an Indiana Tech degree upon completion. The Indiana Tech education program was recently informed that its application for accreditation was denied.

- Indiana University opens the IU ASEAN Gateway in an office suite in central Bangkok to serve as a hub for IU in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations region. This is IU's fifth global gateway. IU ASEAN is officially registered in Thailand as a branch of IU International Consulting and Research, LLC, an IU-affiliated entity. IU has approximately 1,020 cumulative international alumni from Thailand (but only 18 from neighboring Laos).

- The Manchester University Board of Trustees votes unanimously to approve the development of a Bachelor of Science in Nursing degree program. Manchester has hired Lea A. Johnson as vice president for health and science initiatives to develop and launch the new nursing program and other health profession degrees.

IN Gifts and Fundraising . . .

- The Vincennes University Foundation received its largest individual donation in history - a $4.5 million bequest from the late Alexandra Page Clark. The Alexandra Clark and Oscar Dunn Scholarships will benefit students in the Practical Nursing and Music programs at Vincennes University. The gift will be divided into a $3.5 million permanent scholarship endowment for students studying music and performing in the band or other music ensembles and a $1 million endowment for students pursuing the one-year certificate to become a licensed practical nurse.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- The Indiana Commission for Higher Education approved Ball State University's request to spend $4 million on a new multicultural center, but as Indiana Public Radio reported, the vote wasn't unanimous. Commission member John Popp objected, saying "We spent 50 years making sure that we integrate the minorities in our schools. And it seems to me counterproductive to set up a $4 million facility to segregate." In an interview with the Muncie Star Press, Popp elaborated on his vote, saying a more cost effective approach would be to locate the space within the existing student center. "If we want to try to have our various nationalities and races work together, it seems like they ought to be together ... I just thought that seemed more logical than ... galvanizing ourselves over here and not socializing with the rest of the crowd It's kind of creating their own fraternity to themselves."

IN Government . . .

- The Indiana Commission for Higher Education heard during its February meeting from each of the public colleges and universities on how they work to help their at-risk student populations succeed. At some point, if students aren't succeeding, how do we pivot them to a different pathway?, asks ICHE Commissioner Teresa Lubbers.

- The House voted 55-41 to approve House Bill 1596, legislation intended to ensure that TIF funds are spent by redevelopment commissions in the right way, explains the bill's author, Rep. Ed Clere (R) of New Albany. TIF-funded programs entered into after June 30, 2019, must be open to all individuals who reside within the redevelopment commission boundaries; must include any public or private, accredited or nonaccredited secondary or postsecondary school; must apply to training for occupations that pay above-average wages; and must require participants to maintain a minimum grade point average. The Senate sponsor will be Sen. Ron Grooms (R) of Jeffersonville.

- Despite surpassing 35,000 online inquiries, fewer than 250 Workforce Ready Grants were doled out by the Indiana Commission for Higher Education during Fiscal Year 2018. The House Republican state budget plan sets aside money to expand marketing to convince Hoosiers to return to school to acquire the skills they need for the 21st century, even as a recent report indicates that Indiana is the state most likely to be impacted by automation.

- Senate Bill 374, which would have undone reforms that limited fee remission for children of certain veterans and public safety officers based on the percentage of the veteran's disability rating, never received a hearing in the Senate Committee on Appropriations, despite garnering strong support from veterans groups.

- The Senate voted 45-5 to approve SB 563, which would establish the Small Business Innovation Voucher Program providing vouchers to small businesses toward the purchase of research and development services or technical assistance from an Indiana institution of higher education. The program, advocated by the Governor, would be administered by the Indiana Economic Development Corporation.

- The Indiana House votes 85-13 to approve anti-hazing legislation despite some unanswered questions about which of the bill's provisions apply to private colleges. House Bill 1526 authored by Rep. Terri Austin (D) of Anderson would mandate that higher education institutions report hazing incidents on their websites, develop and implement a hazing education program for all new students and certain staff members, report serious hazing allegations to law enforcement, and investigate hazing allegations through the standard campus disciplinary process. The bill also aims to require national fraternity and sorority organizations to provide anti-hazing education to Indiana affiliate chapters. Ivy Tech Community College is specifically exempted from the bill. HB 1526 also would enhance criminal penalties for hazing and create a Class A misdemeanor crime of contributory hazing for anyone, including officials of national organizations, who fail to report hazing.

- The Senate voted 48-0 to approve SB 93, which would establish the Let Indiana Work for You program. The Indiana Commission for Higher Education would furnish marketing materials and information to colleges and universities for distribution to students regarding benefits and opportunities of residing and working in Indiana after graduation. SB 93 was authored by Sen. John Ruckelshaus (R) of Indianapolis and is sponsored by Rep. Tony Cook (R) of Cicero.

- The Senate advanced Senate Bill 158 directing Ivy Tech Community College to establish and administer the Indiana Youth Service Program providing high school seniors with "the skills that will enable them to successfully make the transition from high school" to college or the workforce. Ivy Tech would recruit an array of private, public, and non-profit employers to serve as youth service program host sites. The youth service program established by Ivy Tech must encourage young people to remain in Indiana, provide a model of social engagement, encourage relationships across diverse communities, and foster a culture of civic participation and respect for democracy. The bill was authored by Sen. John Ruckelshaus (R) of Indianapolis and will be sponsored by Rep. Mike Karickhoff (R) of Kokomo, who serves as executive director of facilities for the Kokomo campus of Ivy Tech Community College.

- The House votes to approve House Bill 1613, which would remove restrictions that prevent the sale of 41 acres of land owned by the University of Evansville. UE and the State traded parcels in 1979, and as part of the swap, a restriction was placed on the acreage requiring it to be used for UE purposes. This land no longer fits UE's strategic plan, and the private school would like to sell it.

- U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) teams with U.S. Rep. Emmanuel Cleaver II (D-MO) to reintroduce the "Student Loan Disclosure Modernization Act." Their measure would require the U.S. Department of Education to simplify the legal and financial information provided to student borrowers so they better understand the terms, conditions, and debt they are incurring before they sign for a federal loan.

IN Transition . . .

- Indiana University names four finalists to be the next executive dean of the College of Arts and Sciences: Norma Bouchard, dean of the College of Humanities and Social Sciences at San Diego State University; Christopher Long, dean of the College of Arts and Letters at Michigan State University; Susan Roberts, associate provost for internationalization at University of Kentucky; and Rick Van Kooten, vice provost for research at IU Bloomington.

- Carol Anne Murdoch-Kinch will be the next dean of the Indiana University School of Dentistry at IUPUI. She will be the 10th person and first female to serve as dean in the school's 140-year history. Murdoch-Kinch previously served as associate dean for academic affairs at the University of Michigan School of Dentistry.

- The Kenzie Academy coding apprenticeship school appoints Kathy Hubbard to its inaugural Board of Trustees.

- Joshua Powers has been appointed provost and senior vice president for academic affairs at William Paterson University. He currently serves as an administrative fellow for the Vermont State Colleges System and previously held multiple positions at Indiana State University, including associate vice president for academic affairs.

- Ivy Tech Community College taps Stephanie Amos as the new vice chancellor for its Franklin Campus. Amos had been serving as executive director of finance and operations at Ivy Tech's Shelbyville campus.

- Saint Mary's College names Robert Post as director of campus safety. Post, whose career in law enforcement spans 25+ years, spent the last two as a Saint Mary's on-call officer.

- Manchester University names Abby Van Vlerah as vice president for student affairs. She was most recently at Long Island University as dean and chief operating officer for the Suffolk County regional campuses.

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

Halfway there; full speed ahead

At session midpoint, no flashpoints; would bias vagueness impel veto?

We're halfway through the session and no lasting damage has seemingly been inflicted, and signs point toward the ability of the Republican supermajority to finish the 2019 session with action on all of the key items – many of which weren't on the agendas of the respective caucuses before the session started.

House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) checked off a litany of objectives his caucus had successfully pursued from the start of the year, albeit a rather limited agenda and less bold than in recent years. With a supermajority, it would have been a surprise if any of the goals had failed to progress. The biggest deal was the budget sent to the Senate for an overhaul there, with the education components looking good on paper, but tougher to tout in context. Because the Senate will certainly offer its own significant refinements – particularly as both chambers jockey for primacy in budget matters under new fiscal leadership – there's no reason to get excited now. Teacher pay will be a big Senate focus, but still through the prism of local control.

The major issues to be resolved largely didn't show up on the pre-session priority lists of the players, save perhaps, a desire by the Governor and legislative Democrats to pass a bias crimes bill that addressed certain groups by explicit reference. That comprehensive measure sailed through a substantive Senate committee with only one vote against it, but didn't pass muster with the Senate Majority Caucus. A version without the list was the subject of hot speeches by several Senate Democrats, but was largely devoid of floor debate as few Republicans rose to defend the bill as it passed in committee.

The stripped-down measure, satisfying virtually no one, is now in the House, where Speaker Bosma has made it clear that his caucus is not comfortable with enumerated classes – “The List.” As the bills were preparing to cross the Rotunda, business leaders started to ramp up direct pressure on Speaker Bosma, and the Governor said Wednesday that he will become directly involved in advocating the more explicit measure, despite the reluctance of his party in the legislature to stand with him . . . and he reiterated that he doesn't like “vagueness” in the bill, would be happy to see the list in the sentencing section of the bill (since the federal hate crimes law applies to states), and believes that “This is not a heavy lift.”

While some are trying to elevate the stripping of the list in the Senate to RFRA levels, we're certainly not there yet, and Speaker Bosma rejects the comparison, noting that RFRA was an affirmative action and this was not doing something.

And while business community, public, and gubernatorial pressure will come to bear on lawmakers, Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) doesn't sense the urgency to pass something, even after three previous tries. He tells his constituents in a local television interview, “If we don't deal with it this year, we'll deal with it next year or the year after, or the year after,” because “sometimes those things take a while.”

Meanwhile, Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) has been a cipher of sorts on this, paving the way for the list by allowing it to exit his Committee on Rules in a vehicle bill. But after it passed overwhelmingly (9-1) in the Committee on Public Policy, he was one of the 33 Republicans who voted for the amendment by Sen. Aaron Freeman (R) to delete the list from the bill on the floor.

More Electoral Dysfunction

Additional local troubling details emerge

Hoosiers continue to learn even more troubling information about just how some county election systems almost caused a disaster on Election Day. In a state where one statewide recount in a U.S. Senate race (1970) went to the Supreme Court of the United States; a congressional election recount (1984) was effectively decided by the U.S. House of Representatives; and the outcome of a state Senate race was reversed by the Senate (1994), even races involving a significant amount of territory (and votes) can be decided by a literal handful of votes.

That's why the latest news about the discovery of approximately 1,100 valid absentee ballots turning up uncounted in the Howard County Clerk's Office was so disturbing. Errors by representatives of both parties (how deliberate they might have been is being debated) led to the ballots stashed uncounted, and though no races were at risk of being changed by the new count, the positions in some multi-candidate races did change.

After an Election Day meltdown in Johnson County, a vote-counting fiasco in Porter County that delayed final results in two legislative races, other issues with election equipment and software, and now this, don't be surprised to see an interim or “blue-ribbon” study organized.

The public and private interplay between the legislative leaders (and Governor) will be fascinating . . . as will be just how delicate a touch the Gov takes in urging the public to lobby lawmakers.

Several other “non-agenda” issues will dominate the proceedings ahead.

Casinos and Sports Betting. The public debate thus far on the two big gaming bills, SB 66 and SB 552, has focused on the feel-good Gary economic development elements that would convert the Buffington Harbor area into a new port and transmodal facility – after the Gary casinos are moved off the site.

There has been little substantive discussion about just how practical the proposal is, and how much state and local money would be needed, given that there has not been any real public indication of private investors eager to sink in the kind of dollars that would be required. Watch to see if House members are more inquisitive of (or skeptical about) just how this project could come to fruition.

On the casino side, there will be lots of tweaking of the hold-harmless formulas for communities and casinos (in Hammond, East Chicago, and Michigan City) affected by a land-based Gary move . . . and those who would be impacted by a new “casino-lite” in Terre Haute (although a minimum $150 million investment would be about triple that just spent by Tropicana Evansville for its new land-based facility, and is just under one-half the $85 million being spent now by Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana to move to land in Harrison County).

French Lick and Evansville want compensation (note that some senators from those areas voted against the bill on Third Reading because of the revenue changes anticipated), and assorted versions to date have also directed a tithe toward the historic hotel preservation fund in Orange County.

There will also be changes to the competitive process quickly cobbled together toward the end of Senate deliberations that would allow operators other than Spectacle Entertainment, LLC to seek the Terre Haute license (and how to compensate Spectacle if it is not the successful bidder).

Speaker Bosma says that he and many of his members perceive a Terre Haute casino as an “expansion” of gaming. While this used to be an effective tool against a given concept, he concedes that it doesn’t seem to have the same negative cachet that it once had.

While the assorted provisions governing tax changes and expenditures, loosening the ownership limits, and the like seem to be largely noncontroversial, Speaker Bosma is concerned about the impact of moving up the date of live dealers at the racinos, and he frames it not only in the impact to French Lick, but more generally to the number of moving parts in the bill that can blow things up. Expect, however, that the industry will work out its concerns in a final bill.

Perhaps most interesting – the lack of any substantive discussion of the sports wagering provisions in the Senate. Indeed, there has been little legislative attention publicly directed to sports wagering – which had originally seemed to be the raison d’être for the entire gaming package this year – since interim study committee members were educated on the topic.

This will be a key focus of House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R), who will work through the types of activities on which wagers will be accepted, the types of bets allowed, how bettors must register and how they can bet outside a casino, and how the sports wagering “partnerships” will operate.

There may also be a discussion of regulating “parlors” which might operate like sports books, but with bettors wagering on their own mobile devices through whichever sports wagering vendor they have chosen (can operators sign up such bettors at in-person kiosks at such facilities, even if they do not operate them?).

In the end, a major package will pass – even if it takes the same kind of (wink, wink) subterfuge employed in the past in denying that something constituted an expansion of gaming. This time it would be the fact that we are cracking down on illegal gambling and overseas operators . . . and perhaps also that the state is not actually increasing the number of gaming “games” or positions.

Indianapolis CIB and Sports Facilities. As is typical with sports facility funding ventures in the past three decades, the longer the process drags out, the more “skin in the game” we seem to see from operators. That phrase was a favorite demand from then-Sen. Luke Kenley (R) when he chaired the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and now that he’s advocating for the Pacers, he seems to have convinced them to do the same as they seek additional dollars and authority for what is now Bankers Life Fieldhouse.

So too for the Indy Eleven soccer team and its ambitious proposal for a mega-multi-use development at a site to be named later that would rely upon TIF assistance. After less ambitious proposals in recent years (albeit with bigger public dollar “asks”) have been rebuffed, this deal seems to be more palatable to most, particularly as it is lumped into the larger Pacers and Capital Improvement Board package.

The CIB portion has seemed to be the least controversial component of the package, as members from out-state seem to believe that there is benefit to the state as a whole, and local legislators are more convinced of the tangible return from the convention and tourism business than they might have been in the past (and there is less talk about developers and hotels having “skin in the game” than before). The high-profile NFL Combine seemed to have come to Indianapolis at fortuitous time.

There are still lots of moving parts here, and while there seems to be symmetry in the inclusion of the three elements, there may not be a symbiotic relationship between the soccer deal and the other two components . . . and the Indy Eleven aid could be most easily excised from the package without damaging the remaining parts (bear in mind that most of the soccer team support comes from the same natural backers of the Pacers and CIB assistance).

Abortion. The dismemberment measure authored by Rep. Peggy Mayfield (R) wasn’t as publicly debated on its Third Reading as it will be if it comes up for final passage, but you can expect Democrats in the Senate to remind Hoosiers of the long litany of (expensive) federal court rulings against recent Hoosier abortion restrictions.

What to watch for this time: Will Democrats seek to further embroil Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) in this – his office has been zealous in its defense of the challenged laws – by calling upon him to issue a pre-passage opinion on the constitutionality of the Mayfield bill?

That could potentially force him to either label the bill unconstitutional under current law and derail it, or put him on record as finding it permissible, and embarrassing him if it passes, is challenged, and found to be unconstitutional.

Consumer Lending. This issue wasn't on the public radar screen at the opening of session, though community action and social interest groups were pushing hard to cap payday lending rates, even as the lending industry was seeking to expand their ability to offer high-interest or high-fee short-term loans.

There was some early hope that Senate Committee on Insurance and Financial Institutions Chair Eric Bassler (R) could bring the two sides together in a compromise, but that proved impossible.

Further complicating matters in the Senate was that the two competing bills, the consumer measure advocated by Sen. Greg Walker (R) and the industry bill authored by Sen. Andy Zay (R), were heard in different committees.

The close defeat of the Walker bill on Third Reading Tuesday and the subsequent complicated and emotional debate on the Zay measure a few hours later underscored the fact that there is no easy solution, and few areas for finding potential common ground.

This is decidedly not a partisan issue, and Speaker Bosma and Sen. Bray may also feel differently than each other about the subject.

Whether there will be a groundswell on this topic beyond the social services and financial communities that will motivate more people is uncertain, but there appears to be more passion on both sides of this debate – and there was real debate over this issue, and not just competing speeches – portends the prospect for this transforming into an issue that could cause some hard feelings.

The Governor also acknowledged Wednesday that the version which emerged from the Senate “just didn’t sit well.” His one word description: “heartburn,” and he even hinted more broadly about a veto of this measure than any other he was asked about.

The Budget and Education. The budget is the key priority for everyone this session, and almost two-thirds of it is devoted to K-12 and higher education, but there is still debate over many of the education components in particular (principally the size of the increase each year; how much will be directed to public vs. charter and private schools; what specifically will be done about teacher pay increases; and how dollars will be directed within the public school milieu) . . . and you can expect the higher education institutions to be a bit more public engaged in the Senate and conference.

You will also see continued discussion of teacher grants and related tax expenditures going forward, and we are certainly not done with a debate over school safety. This will come both in terms of policy – such as allowing employees to carry firearms in schools and firearms training for school employees – and spending for “hard” safety measures as well as student mental health. The student mental health issue is not an easy one to grapple with, and Sen. Jim Tomes (R) raised some lingering doubts about possible policy changes when he used Third Reading debate Tuesday to rattle off a list of potential future consequences of early identification of student problems “in the birthing room.” This was reinforced by one off-hand comment on the Senate floor by Sen. Mike Young (R) a few minutes later, who blithely labeled the bill in question as “SB 1984.”

Keep Your Eyes Open. In general, there may be some public – and lots of private – jockeying for control of the process going forward as a new Senate Republican leader feels his way forward with a fiscal team involved in its first budget process as leaders themselves . . . and as the most-experienced House speaker in state history protects his turf even as his fiscal team was shaken up just before the session, and he faces his third Democratic leader in three years.

You may not see much outwardly from internal squabbles, but lots of insiders will be parsing the public comments of Speaker Bosma for clues, because any inter-chamber power struggles can impact output.

So too for any tug-of-war between 206 and the Third Floor. The House budget bill made some significant changes to the Governor’s education preferences – while leaving intact his big ask for the Department of Child Services – and the more global question of how lawmakers (perhaps egged on by leadership) might decide to treat the Governor’s Indiana Toll Road amendment pact and attendant spending priorities has yet to be resolved.

Federal Office Races . . .

● Indiana Democratic Party Chairman John Zody called on U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) to donate $5,400 in campaign contributions he has received from “a billionaire donor caught up in a Florida prostitution sting.” Private equity firm owner John Childs is accused of soliciting prostitution in a Florida spa tied to an international human trafficking ring, according to Zody. “Mike Braun should stand with the victims and reject any connection to this odious activity. That starts with donating every dime tied to Mr. Childs.” The Braun campaign is in the process of donating the $5,400 to the Julian Center.

● U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) is raising money from supporters at the end of February saying that “the obstructionist Democrats have made it clear they’ll stand in the way of EVERY goal President Trump has for America. That’s why he needs every conservative to stand with him. Not just this month – but for all of 2019 – if we want to get things done in this political climate.”

IN Legislative Races . . .

● K. Jasen Lave (D) opens a campaign committee for a 2020 HD 42 race against Rep. Alan Morrison (R). Lave, of Covington, is a progressive Democrat who ran unsuccessfully in the 2018 CD 06 Democratic primary across the state from his home. He describes himself as “a musician/writer - turned politician.”

IN Mayoral Races . . .

● Cordelia Lewis Burks, the campaign chair for Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett (D), sends an email to Hogsett supporters blasting Senate Majority Caucus Chair Jim Merritt (R) for his vote to move the now-diluted bias crime bill to the House. “Despite these calls to action, broad consensus that a watered-down bill would do more harm than good, and protests from the business, academic, and legal communities, Jim Merritt proudly cast a vote to move forward legislation opposed by the Indianapolis corporate and civic community,” writes Burks, who spent many years on the State House Third Floor. While Democrats signal that this will be an issue in the mayoral race, Burks did not point out that Sen. Merritt was one of only seven Republicans to vote – and speak – against the Second Reading Amendment that she found offensive.

□ The Burks email also includes a quote from Indiana Democratic Party Chair John Zody saying that “For nearly three decades, Senator Jim Merritt opposed and killed hate crimes legislation. And in 2015, Merritt linked arms with Governor Mike Pence and supported RFRA legislation – the same legislation that did significant damage to the state and to Indianapolis. Four years later, it’s clear Merritt is still more interested in being all things to all people, rather than fighting for equal protections for all Hoosiers.”

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) endorses Noblesville Common Councilmember Chris Jensen (R) for mayor in a multi-candidate race that includes one other elected official.

● Former Rep. John Aguilera (D) successfully rebuffs a residency challenge to his East Chicago mayoral candidacy filed by the campaign of his primary opponent, Mayor Anthony Copeland (D), but Team Copeland may appeal the Lake County Election Board ruling to court.

● Portage City Councilmember John Cannon (R) will fill the city’s mayoral vacancy, and he’s running for a full term as well.

IN Political News . . .

● Expect to learn soon that Brooks Kochvar will be named campaign manager for the Howard Schultz (I) presidential campaign and Brendon DeToro will be his deputy. The team has quite the North Central Indiana flavor, given that the duo ran campaigns and congressional offices for former U.S. Reps. Chris Chocola (R) and Marlin Stutzman (R), as well as U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (D). They also have other GOP campaign and private sector experience.

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) – now edging into the one percent range and registering on some bigger polls – will be sharing a CNN town hall stage at SXSW in Austin, Texas (no better forum for a millennial hopeful), on March 10 with two U.S. House members who also opened presidential exploratory committees – but each will receive an hour of their own, with Mayor Pete slated for the 9:00 p.m. ET Sunday slot.

● California-based multinational biopharmaceutical company Amgen Inc. registers its federal Amgen Inc. Political Action Committee with the Indiana Election Division to make “Contributions to candidates for state and local office” . . . the Communications Workers for America registers its federal PAC, Communications Workers of America COPE Political Contributions Committee, in Indiana. “CWA COPE-PCC is a federal pac whose primary purpose is to support federal and non federal candidates.”

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

● Former U.S. Sen. Richard Lugar (R), is one of 23 former Republican House and Senate members who sign an open letter to Republicans serving in the current Congress urging them to rebuff the President in his emergency declaration paving the way for building a wall on our border with Mexico, effectively answering the President’s Monday tweet, “Why on earth would any Republican vote not to put up a Wall or against Border Security. Please explain that to me?”

□ The former Senate Committee on Foreign Relations chair joins his colleagues, who include former ambassadors and Cabinet secretaries, in the two-page letter. The ex-lawmakers contend the declaration would “circumvent congressional authority” under the Constitution to make appropriations. They also ask current congressional Republicans how they would react if the shoe were on the other foot: “[W]hat will you do when a president of another party uses the precedent you are establishing to impose policies to which you are unalterably opposed? There is no way around this difficulty: what powers are ceded to a president whose policies you support may also be used by presidents whose policies you abhor.” The retired solons ask current members, “how much are you willing to undermine both the Constitution and the Congress in order to advance a policy outcome that by all other legitimate means is not achievable?”

□ Some former Hoosier Republicans notably not signing on (although we're not sure they were asked): former U.S. Reps. John Hiler (R) (a former Reagan department head and fiscal expert); Steve Buyer (R) (steeped in military experience); Dan Burton (R) (a foreign affairs panel chair); John Hostettler (R) (a limited-government advocate); and Chris Chocola (R) and David McIntosh (R) (Club for Growth presidents who are concerned with fiscal austerity). While we understand why former U.S. Sen. Dan Coats (R) isn't giving such advice publicly, this could have been an interesting opportunity by which former U.S. Sen. Dan Quayle (R), a VP in an administration frequently discredited by the current president, to weigh back in on national (and international) issues.

● Former U.S. Rep. Tim Roemer (D), a U.S. ambassador to India during the Obama Administration, tells the Wall Street Journal that the escalating tension between Pakistan and India "is something that the Trump administration and the world needs to keep a very careful eye on, to urge full restraint and to try to come up with a creative solution." Former 9/11 Commission member Roemer, "now executive director and strategic counselor at APCO Worldwide LLC, a public-relations firm, said the U.S. needs 'all hands on deck' to help resolve the conflict, engaging in conversations with India and Pakistan on multiple levels of government. 'You can't be distracted from something like this, because a miscalculation, an error, a mistake on one side could quickly escalate up the chain to catastrophe,' he said."

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) sees the President sign into law his National FFA Organizations Federal Charter Amendments Act. He says that this package will update and modernize the charter for the Future Farmers of America to better reflect agriculture education in the 21st Century . . . Sen. Young applauds new U.S. Department of Health and Human Services regulations that will prevent Title X family planning funds from being used for referral to facilities where "abortion activities" are performed. Sen. Young was among 41 senators and 153 House members who sent a letter asking the Trump Administration to take this action. "As cruel abortion practices are being pushed in states like New York and Virginia, we at the federal level are moving away from such atrocities," Sen. Young said. "This rule will ensure family planning funds are not being used to subsidize abortion procedures." He adds that "In light of the barbaric and widely condemned state-level efforts in New York and Virginia to legalize abortion up until the moment of delivery, we need to ensure that all newborns receive appropriate care and medical treatment." The "Born-Alive Abortion Survivors Protection Act," for which he voted early last week, "bans the horrific act of infanticide by ensuring that babies who survive attempted abortions have the chance at life that they deserve," Sen Young added . . . Sen. Young teams up with U.S. Sen. Ed Markey (D-MA), a fellow member of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, to introduce the "Blockchain Promotion Act of 2019." This bipartisan legislation would establish a working group of stakeholders across the federal government and private industry charged with establishing a consensus-based common definition of blockchain technology – the bedrock of modern cryptocurrencies and a technology that could also have a tremendous impact in nonfinancial industries including supply chain management, cybersecurity, artificial intelligence development, or healthcare. The Young-Markey measure would also consider recommendations for the Federal Communications Commission and the National Telecommunications and Information Administration to undertake a study that would examine the potential impact of blockchain on spectrum policy and opportunities for the adoption of blockchain to promote efficiencies within the federal government. "Blockchain has the potential to be a catalyst for sustained economic growth across all industries in America. If America leads in its development, we can ensure that it's benefits will be shared far and wide. Blockchain has the potential to not only provide financial and economic benefits at home, but humanitarian and social support in developing countries will benefit from American leadership," says Sen. Young, who believes that passage would "ensure the U.S. is at the forefront of this revolutionary technology" . . . the Senate passes a resolution recognizing February 2019 as Career and Technical Education (CTE) Month, a measure authored by Sen. Young and his fellow co-chairs of the Senate CTE Caucus: U.S. Sens. Tim Kaine (D-VA), Rob Portman (R-OH), and Tammy Baldwin (D-WI). Their resolution was cosponsored by a total of 50 senators representing both parties . . . Sen. Young joined U.S. Sen. Bob Menendez (D-NJ), the top Democrat on the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and other members of the panel on a letter to Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and Acting Secretary of Defense Patrick Shanahan calling for answers regarding recent media reports that Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) transferred U.S. origin weapons to dangerous Yemeni militias, including groups aligned with al Qaeda. If accurate, the senators note, Saudi Arabia and the UAE could be in violation of U.S. law and be endangering the lives of American service members. The senators requested an immediate briefing by senior Trump Administration officials. Citing recent confirmation by UAE officials to congressional staff that at least some of the reported transfers did in fact occur, the senators laid out the serious implications of the allegations and expressed alarm that such actions would be taken by American allies. "We expect vital security partners like Saudi Arabia and the UAE to show due care with respect to protecting transfers of sensitive U.S. military technology," wrote the senators, who concluded their letter with a list of specific questions intended to shed light on the startling accusations in the media reports. "Negligent treatment of sensitive U.S. military technology, including the possible violation of important restrictions on third party use, could further destabilize the region, endanger U.S. personnel and worsen the suffering of ordinary Yemenis by intensifying the fighting and making a peaceful political solution for Yemen more difficult to reach," they added.

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) writes in an op-ed for The Hill that although he recognizes “a centuries-long tradition that freshman senators abstain from speaking on the Senate floor for months to several years before delivering their so-called ‘maiden speech[.]’ After watching Democrats propose or pass laws to legalize abortion up to the moment of birth,” and hearing Virginia’s Democratic governor, a physician, discussing “denying life-saving medical care to children born alive after failed late-term abortions, my core convictions moved me to speak up for the unborn.” On his 33rd day of service, Sen. Braun used his maiden speech to support a bill “to protect born-alive abortion survivors and conveying my outrage that the highest legislative body in the greatest country in the world was debating not just protecting the unborn, but protecting children after they are delivered.” He adds, “this shouldn’t be up for debate: it’s a simple up-or-down vote on whether a child who has been born has rights, including the right to not be left to die. I truly hope that the Democratic Party has not moved so far ... that whether or not a born infant deserves medical care has become a contentious issue. I implore my Democratic colleagues to disregard the extreme voices of the abortion industry and radical pro-choice activists in favor of the loud, clear voice of the American people: Late-term abortion is a step too far, and post-birth abortion is horrifying.”

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) rides tandem with U.S. Sen. Jon Tester (D-MT) to reintroduce the “Developing Responsible Individuals for a Vibrant Economy (DRIVE-Safe) Act,” a measure that seeks to address the driver shortage in the trucking and logistics industry, and enhance safety training and job opportunities for young truckers. U.S. Sens. Tom Cotton (R-AR), Jim Inhofe (R-OK), Angus King (I-ME), Joe Manchin (D-WV), and Jerry Moran (R-KS) joined as cosponsors of the tri-partisan bill. Though many states allow individuals to obtain a commercial driver’s license at the age 18, federal law currently prohibits those operators from moving goods from state to state until they are 21. The DRIVE-Safe Act would establish an apprenticeship program allowing operation of a commercial motor vehicle in interstate commerce by CDL holders under the age of 21. The program would help ensure these drivers are trained beyond current standards while instituting rigorous safety standards and performance benchmarks. The program established by the DRIVE-Safe Act would require young drivers to complete at least 400 hours of on-duty time and 240 hours of driving time with an experienced driver accompanying them. All trucks used for training must be equipped with special safety devices including a video event capture system, and a speed governor set at 65 MPH or below. Sen. Young says that Hoosiers “understand more than anyone the need to develop a responsible pathway to safely train more drivers. This apprenticeship program will address the driver shortage, create new career opportunities for young Hoosiers, and substantially raise training standards to ensure safety on the roads.”

□ U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R), whose CD 09 relies upon commerce across the I-64 and I-65 interstate bridges to Kentucky, authors a companion House bill. “Indiana is the ‘Crossroads of America’ and a national hub of transportation and logistics that keeps our economy going,” he says. “The current driver shortage puts our dynamic economy at risk and closes off high-paying trucking careers to young Americans. The DRIVE-Safe Act is an opportunity to improve the lives of many young Americans, give them opportunities for advancement, increase safety and skills training, and enhance the economy by eliminating the obstacles currently preventing the trucking industry from alleviating its workforce shortage.”

● The League of Conservation Voters issues its congressional vote scorecard for 2018:

CD	Lawmaker/Party	2018 Score	Lifetime Score
01	Visclosky (D)	94%	82%
02	Walorski (R)	3%	1%
03	Banks (R)	0%	0%
04	Rokita (R)	0%	4%
05	Brooks (R)	6%	4%
06	Messer (R)	0%	1%
07	Carson (D)	94%	93%
08	Bucshon (R)	3%	5%
09	Hollingsworth (R)	11%	9%
USS	Donnelly (D)	71%	60%
USS	Young (R)	7%	3%

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) released this statement after being one of 182 House members voting against H.J. Res 46, the resolution to cancel the emergency declaration by the President to secure the border: “Democrats held a show vote to cancel President Trump’s recently issued emergency declaration, which he declared only after Washington Democrats blocked Republican efforts in Congress to provide much-needed funding to secure our southern border. This is just more political theater showing that Washington Democrats are seemingly more concerned about opposing President Trump than supporting policies that put the safety and security of our communities first and address the humanitarian crisis taking place along our southern border” . . . after he voted against what his office describes as “two attempts by House Democrats to keep law-abiding Americans from being able to purchase guns,” the Bipartisan Background Checks Act of 2019, and the Enhanced Background Checks Act of 2019, Rep. Bucshon said, “While well-intended, neither of these bills would solve the problem Washington Democrats are claiming – an end to gun violence. Instead of working on common sense solutions that will actually make our communities safer, Washington Democrats have made this a partisan show. In fact, the changes made to background checks in these two pieces of legislation will not stop criminals from acquiring guns – criminals do not follow the law and they do not go through background checks. These bills are nothing but a ploy to make it more difficult for law-abiding citizens to purchase firearms and protect themselves and their families” . . . Dr. Bucshon on Thursday castigated the “Medicare for All” legislation, saying that with H.R. 1384, “House Democrats have taken a massive step towards turning America into a socialist nation by introducing their government-run, one-size-fits-all, single-payer health care bill. This bill is a complete takeover of the health care system that will cost American taxpayers $32 trillion over 10 years, would eliminate employer health care plans for 158 million Americans, would end Medicare for seniors as we know it, and by some estimates would eliminate up to two million American jobs. If House Democrats get their way, your health decisions will no longer be yours to make but rather that of a Washington bureaucrat deciding if your life fits within the bottom line. At the end of the day, one-size-fits-all health care fits no one.”

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) took to the House floor Thursday afternoon to speak against H.R. 8 and H.R. 1112, a pair of firearms background check bills. Rep. Banks expressed his “strong opposition to the majority party’s attempts to take away Americans’ Second Amendment rights,” explaining that “The legislation before the House this week is a Constitutional overreach that would limit the rights of law-abiding citizens and does not address the serious issue of illegal gun transfers.”

● U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) tweets on Wednesday that “Something is wrong when nearly 30 million people are uninsured in the richest country on Earth, and millions more struggle to afford their co-pays and deductibles. That’s why I’m proud to cosponsor the #MedicareForAll Act to help ensure every American’s right to health care,” one of more than 100 House Democrats to sign on . . . Rep. Carson a member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, said this Thursday following the panel’s closed-door hearing with former Trump lawyer Michael Cohen: “[M]y objective was to learn more about alleged compromising engagements between President Trump, his associates, and the Russian government, including Trump Tower Moscow and the coordinated distribution of hacked documents by Wikileaks. Some of these issues have been addressed by numerous other witnesses, both publicly and privately. However, Michael Cohen’s conviction for lying to Congress, as well as serious allegations leveled in his public hearing [Wednes]day before the House Oversight Committee, raise critical concerns, as well as new lines of inquiry that must be fully pursued. While I cannot disclose the details of his testimony . . . developments make clear that the House Russia investigation must continue and that my colleagues on both side of the aisle should participate fully in the interest of protecting our democracy and its institutions.”

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) joins U.S. Rep. Judy Chu (D-CA) to re-introduce bipartisan legislation to ensure breast cancer survivors who have undergone mastectomies are able to access custom breast prosthetics under Medicare. Their “Breast Cancer Patient Equity Act” would provide coverage for custom fabricated breast prostheses, the only human body part not currently covered by Medicare. “Breast cancer patients and survivors should have access to the latest in custom breast prostheses to help improve their quality of life,” Rep. Walorski asserts. “As we continue working toward a cure, this bipartisan bill will ensure Medicare beneficiaries battling breast cancer have the option to choose the prosthetics that work best for them.” Companion Senate legislation is authored by U.S. Sens. Tammy Duckworth (D-IL) and Lisa Murkowski (R-AK).

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) voted late Tuesday to support the President’s national emergency declaration that he says addresses the immigration crisis at our southern border. She explains, “Congress gave the President statutory authority to declare national emergencies. When Congress did so, they did not specifically define what can be designated as a ‘national emergency’ or not. The resolution the House passed today to end the President’s national emergency declaration undermines the statutory powers granted by Congress to the President to declare national emergencies. As I witnessed during my trip to the Texas border last year, we are seeing floods of families and unaccompanied children reaching our southern border in an attempt to illegally enter the United States. While this is a humanitarian crisis that must be handled with compassion, this ongoing problem is overwhelming our resources to adequately address thousands upon thousands of people, particularly of children, who are coming to our border. Strong borders must be in place in order to keep the American people safe and the situation at our southern border can no longer be ignored. There are already over 650 miles of barriers in place at the southern border. Apprehensions of people trying to illegally enter our country at these barrier locations have gone down dramatically. I support the President’s national emergency declaration designed to strengthen our borders with additional border barrier systems as quickly and efficiently as possible.”

IN State Circles . . .

● In the first Indiana civil forfeiture case considered by the federal courts since the Supreme Court of the United States issued its ruling in the “excessive fines” forfeiture case earlier this month, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit rejects an attempt by the Marion County Prosecutor’s Office to dismiss a class action constitutional challenge to Indiana’s vehicle forfeiture statute. Washington, et al., v. Marion Co., Prosecutor, No. 17-2933. Writing for the appellate panel, Circuit Judge Daniel Manion, a former Indiana state senator, explains that “After the judgment, and while this appeal pending, Indiana amended its vehicle forfeiture statute.” Marion County Prosecutor Terry Curry (D) “argues the amendments fix any constitutional problems, but Washington disagrees [and] argues the amendments are superficial, the same or similar problems exist, and the statute as amended remains unconstitutional.” The appellate panel remands the matter to district court to Chief Judge Jane Magnus-Stinson of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana “to address the amendments.”

● U.S. Attorney for the Western District of Virginia Thomas T. Cullen authored a New York Times opinion piece last week explaining that federal law enforcement believes “white supremacy and far-right extremism are among the greatest domestic-security threats facing the United States,” but “law enforcement, at both the federal and state levels, has been slow to respond. This is in part because of the limited number of enforcement tools available to prosecutors. But there are steps that can be taken to help the police and prosecutors address this growing threat – including, on the federal level, a domestic terrorism law.” He proceeds to detail how the growth in hate crimes generally as well as “Killings committed by individuals and groups associated with far-right extremist groups have risen significantly,” and acts have become more heinous.

□ Cullen, a Trump Administration appointee, calls not only for strengthening federal hate crime provisions, but for greater state-level activity. “State officials can update and strengthen existing hate-crime laws, many of which do not include protections for some of the categories of people listed in the federal hate crimes law.” Then he directly calls out Hoosiers: “Although many states have expanded these protections, the Indiana State Senate this week moved to weaken a proposed hate crime bill. In addition, states can authorize localities to place reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions on demonstrations that will likely result in widespread violence and other criminal activity, like the rally in Charlottesville. At both the federal and state levels, immediate steps are required to curtail the alarming rise of hate crimes and extremist violence in this country.”

● The Governor’s Next Level Trails grant program receives 82 applications from 42 counties requesting a total of almost $144 million in funding for more than 240 potential miles of hiking, biking, and riding trails.

● The Governor’s $100 million program to expand broadband internet services across rural parts of the state is attracting positive public attention, even though lawmakers of all stripes continue to question the chief executive’s derivation and direction of the funds: cash from the payout from an amendment of the Indiana Toll Road lease. Lawmakers continue to insist appropriations are a legislative prerogative.

□ Regardless of the source and controversy, the Governor believes that his Next Level Broadband effort will further serve to bridge the state's growing digital divide, allowing rural Hoosiers to access the internet more efficiently for business, educational, or personal use in greater numbers. He calls the internet "just as essential to Indiana's prosperity today as highways were a century ago." Under the new gubernatorial initiative, broadband providers may apply for funding of as much as $5 million to expand service to unserved areas if the provider posts a match of at least 20 percent.

□ Only because of the high level of personal popularity that the Guv enjoys among both Republicans and Democrats has he been able to avoid the kind of situation that the President faced last week in the congressional vote on his emergency declaration for The Wall. Both parties were concerned about the Governor bypassing the legislature on the Toll Road amendment and appropriation of resulting revenues, but lawmakers didn't make a huge public fuss over separation of powers and "rule of law" issues (can a governor bypass the General Assembly and spend dollars as he or she pleases?). While similar issues at the federal level impacted the U.S. House vote last week, that exercise also served as a test vote of sorts on the number of Repubs willing to break away from the President on an extreme issue in which it wasn't that difficult for GOP lawmakers to justify opposition . . . but there is no similar anti-Eric sentiment among Republican legislators in Indiana, even as some extreme grassroots groups (the far end of the old tea party-types) are more than ready to make that break.

● In its new ranking of the nation's Top 1000 Retirement Funds, Pensions & Investments slots the Indiana Public Retirement System in 62nd for the 12 months ended September 30, 2018, the same place it landed on the previous year's list. The fund is home to $54.578 billion in assets, up by 6.2% over the year from $29.127 billion. The asset mix:

Stocks	Bonds	Cash	Other
23.0%	26.7%	1.6%	48.7%

□ Only one other fund with more assets (or even among the top 125) has a larger percentage of assets in "Other" than INPRS. Only seven other funds have more Direct Benefit assets invested in direct hedge funds than the $868 million Indiana's public retirement system has directed in that manner.

● As many users in communities hit hardest by the opioid epidemic shift to meth - either in tandem with opioids or as a less expensive and more accessible alternative - the Centers for Disease Control finds a sharp increase in syphilis rates, particularly among newborns. In Indiana, the situation is particularly pronounced, given our general proclivity for neglecting prenatal care complicated by addicted pregnant women skipping such care to avoid drug testing and thus child custody issues.

□ A CDC review of reported cases and rates of congenital syphilis from 2013 to 2017 finds that Indiana, which was one of 25 states with no congenital syphilis cases in 2013, has progressively increased to eight such cases in 2017, a rate of 9.6 per 100,000 births, lower than Illinois and Ohio, but higher than Kentucky and Michigan. CDC reports that as many as 40% of babies born to mothers with untreated syphilis may be stillborn or die as a newborn.

● Seniority has privileges. Sen. Vaneta Becker (R), who had longer legislative tenure than anyone present in the Senate chamber Tuesday when you add her 24 years of House service to her 14 years in the Senate (all consecutive), was a bit free with her thoughts on some Third Reading measures authored by Republican colleagues. She called key elements of a virtual charter law "ridiculous" in questions of the author before being prompted by the presiding officer, Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch (R) (who succeeded Becker when she left the House in 2005 to fill a Senate vacancy), that if she were to want to comment on it, she should ask to be recognized to speak on the bill. Later, speaking on the second payday loan bill of the day, SB 613, she took aim at the huge amendment unveiled the night before the hearing that changed everything, and put committee members in an uncomfortable position. "Yes, payday loans were studied," she allowed, "but the rest of this crap wasn't studied. Sorry about that - the rest of the bill wasn't studied."

● Almost two-dozen CEOs of some of Indiana's leading employers and high-profile not-for profits and educational institutions - including Cummins, Eli Lilly and Company, Salesforce, Old National Bank, Simon Property Group, Anthem, IU Health, Hillenbrand, Indiana Sports Corp, Butler University, United Way of Central Indiana, and the NCAA - pen an open letter to Republican legislative leaders under the Indiana Forward imprimatur, urging legislators to consider the economic and workforce impact that the failure to pass a comprehensive bias crimes law with a list of characteristics would have on the ability of Hoosier employers to attract and retain the talented workers they need.

● The Supreme Court of the United States again holds off - for what is now a fifth time (despite the participation of Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg) - on a decision on whether to review the State of Indiana's October petition for a writ of certiorari in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-483.

□ The Court relisted the Indiana case for consideration at its March 1 conference after not deciding in its February 22 conference. This is the case addressing provisions of HEA 1337-2016 asking the Court to determine: (1) whether a state may require health-care facilities to dispose of fetal remains in the same manner as other human remains, i.e., by burial or cremation; and (2) whether a state may prohibit abortions motivated solely by the race, sex or disability of the fetus and require physicians to inform patients of the prohibition.

□ Another Indiana case that was on the February 22 conference agenda also was relisted - for a ninth time - on March 1 after having been rescheduled twice as well. Newton v. Indiana, No. 17-1511, case involving the 1995 decision of a juvenile offender who, in exchange for the State's agreement to no longer seek the death penalty, pleaded guilty to a sentence of life without the possibility of parole for a murder he committed at age 17 with two older co-defendants. This case has been on the conference agenda more times than any other case up for consideration this week.

● Hoosier Democrats are privately grumbling about how being in the legislative minority right now prevents them from doing what legislative Republicans in Virginia are doing: taking steps toward holding a public hearing featuring the women who accused the commonwealth's lieutenant governor of sexual assault - even as a potential criminal investigation looms.

□ Indiana Democrats were rebuffed in their bid to pursue impeachment charges against Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) over sexual harassment allegations which have been investigated to a conclusion by a criminal prosecutor (but if they grumble too loudly now about the Virginia situation, they only emphasize publicly that the top three Virginia officials who are all now tarnished happen to be Democrats).

● Even as Johnson County looks to extract itself from a deal with Election Systems & Software (ES&S) after a disastrous November general election (and the county election board and board of commissioners in a joint session Wednesday voted 5-1 to part ways with ES&S and bring aboard MicroVote), four Indiana counties recently designated ES&S as their election management vendor of choice. ES&S reports that more than 930,000 registered voters in Marion, Porter, Elkhart, and Dearborn counties will soon cast their ballots on ES&S voting systems. These counties join at least five other Indiana counties already using the ExpressVote Universal Voting System.

● While pedestrian deaths nationally soared to what was almost a 30-year high in 2018, according to the nonprofit Governors Highway Safety Association, (which blames to smartphone distraction and the growth of SUVs in the vehicle mix as potential factors), Indiana was one of only six states to post a double-digit decline in both the number and percentage of pedestrian deaths during the first half of 2018 compared with the same six months in 2017.

□ This news comes even as a spate of stories on Indianapolis television news made pedestrian deaths in the Circle City seem like an almost routine occurrence (due to the lack of sidewalks along busy southside streets or unshoveled sidewalks forcing pedestrians into roadways).

IN the Economy

● The Governor will lead an economic development mission to Europe this week, visiting France, Belgium, and Germany. He will be accompanied by Secretary of Commerce Jim Schellinger, Indiana Economic Development Corporation Board of Directors members John Thompson (chairman and CEO of Thompson Distribution) and Mark Neal (principal of Bradley Company), as well as IEDC staff. The delegation will depart for Europe on March 6, and return to Indiana on March 14.

● One quiet indicator of just where discretionary spending and the Hoosier economy may be headed continues to trend south. The RV Industry Association's January survey of manufacturers finds that total RV shipments ended the month with only 25,540 wholesale shipments, a decrease of almost 40% (- 39.8%) from the 42,441 units shipped in January 2018. Towable RVs, led by conventional travel trailers, totaled 21,623 units for the month, a decrease of 41.0% compared to the prior January's total of 36,622 units. Motorhomes finished the first month of the year with just 3,917 units, down by almost one-third (- 32.7%) compared to the January 2018 total of 5,819 units.

□ Total RV shipments have now lagged the prior-year numbers in each month beginning in August 2018 (after the first four months of 2018 showed gains over shipments in the corresponding months of 2017).

● Midwest municipal bond debt sold during 2018 totaled $59.9 billion 2018, according to data from Refinitiv, down by 28.1% from 2017, with refunding activity plummeting and "new money borrowing was barely better than flat," writes Bond Buyer.

□ The Midwest volume decline was the most of any of the nation's five regions, with only 3,145 deals last year, compared to 3,882 transactions in 2017, according to the trade publication. "In Indiana, municipal bond volume decreased by more than 26% to $3.5 billion from 2017 volume of $4.8 billion, but new money increased by 38%."

● Following three consecutive months of decline in the adjustable Indiana gas tax, the rate will rise to 11.4¢ per gallon for March. While this is an increase, you should also note that the tax in each month of the first quarter of 2019 is lower than it was during any month in 2018. A close look at the numbers, however, also suggest that first quarter taxes are typically a shade lower than they tend to be throughout the final three quarters of a given calendar year.

Month	2019	2018	2017	2016	2015

● Our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, serves up some positive news about the Hoosier Lottery. For the first seven months of the current fiscal year, lottery sales of $782.73 million grew over the prior year period by $40.7 million (5.5%). With fewer than five months to go in Fiscal Year 2019, the updated forecast shows lottery ticket sales breaking the $1.3 billion mark for the first time in history, which would result in more than $300 million in income transferred to the State of Indiana.

□ But the other hand taketh away, our sister publication also reveals. The 13 Hoosier gaming properties rang up win of only $158.87 million in January, plunging from January 2018 by 5.77% (- $9.73 million) - the second-lowest monthly win over the past 15 years, and the lowest in any month since January 2014, a month that you will (unfortunately) remember as being impacted like no other by record snow, ice, and cold. And this should have been an easy comparison given that January 2018 was decidedly not a good month - down by 4.77% and the 2019 calendar was neutral. The state has now recorded three consecutive January-over-January declines in revenue.

□ Prospects are not good for a quick recovery, either. Tax refunds seem to be down, and a lot of people use this discretionary income to gamble with; the economy seems to be tightening, with two consecutive quarters of GDP decline; gas prices are no longer falling; consumer confidence as measured by the University of Michigan continues to slip; people just generally seem to be hinky about what's ahead; and gaming companies are waiting to see what comes out of this session before committing short-term cash in long-term investments.

- “If I were relocating into some state that had a huge unfunded pension plan, I am walking into liabilities,” mega-investor Warren Buffet tells CNBC last week, in good news for Indiana, sandwiched as we are between two major offenders on that front: Illinois and Kentucky. “Because I mean, who knows whether they’re gonna get it from the corporate income tax or my employees – you know, with personal income taxes or what. But that – that liability isn’t gonna – you can’t ship it offshore or anything like that. And those are big numbers, really big numbers. But the politicians are the ones that really haven’t attacked it in a good many states. And when you see what they would have to do – I say to myself, ‘Why do I wanna build a plant there that has to sit there for 30 or 40 years?’ [Because] I’ll be here for the life of the pension plan and they will come after corporations, they’ll come after individuals. They – just – they’re gonna have to raise a lotta money.”

- Fitch Ratings assigns an ‘AA+’ rating to the Indiana Finance Authority’s $12.755 million of lease appropriation refunding bonds (Indiana Convention Center expansion project), series 2019B. The ‘AA+’ rating reflects ultimate access to legislative appropriations and the bonds are rated one notch below IFA’s ‘AAA’ issuer rating. The rating outlook is “Stable” . . . Moody’s Investor Service assigns an ‘Aa2’ rating to the bonds, also with a “Stable” outlook. Look for the bond sale on March 14.

- DePauw University seeks to get a handle on finances going forward by laying off 56 current employees (41 full-time and 15 part-time), and will not fill 14 currently vacant full-time and two part-time positions. The university also offers a voluntary retirement incentive plan to some faculty members . . . after Schneider Electric announced that it would be shifting production from its Miami County plant out of state, ending more than 300 jobs, the Kokomo Tribune reports that local officials are working with the Secretary of Commerce Jim Schellinger, Sen. Randy Head (R), and Rep. Ethan Manning, (D) on developing a plan to help convince the company to reverse its decision to split the Peru-based manufacturing work between Mexico, Texas, and another Schneider facility on the East Coast . . . Galichia Hospital Group will close its 80,000 square-foot Kentuckiana Medical Center off U.S. 31 in Clarksville at the end of April, along with its ancillary clinics and other facilities, ending work for more than 200 people. The 10-year-old facility was home to some 50 patient beds, six operating rooms, 10 ICU beds, and eight telemetry beds. with a fully staffed 24/7 emergency room . . . Matthews International Corporation, a casket manufacturer in Richmond, plans to close its local casket plant after consolidating operations elsewhere, ending jobs for more than 120 workers ending in phases that will commence during the first week of May.

- Retail revival coming to southwestern Indiana? Gordmans, the department store chain that closed its Evansville store in 2017, will be opening new bricks-and-mortar units in Mount Vernon, Princeton, Tell City, and Washington in March . . . ActiveCampaign, a provider of intelligence-driven sales and marketing automation for small businesses, plans to invest more than $10 million in its Indianapolis operations over the next several years, and add more than 200 employees, specifically focusing on engineering roles with plans to add 10 engineers each month. ActiveCampaign will continue to operate at 55 Monument Circle for now, but is actively looking for a more permanent site as it rapidly expands locally. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation is expected to offer ActiveCampaign up to $6.2 million in performance-based tax credits over three years . . . Wood-Mizer, a Batesville manufacturer of sawmill and wood processing equipment, plans to expand its local manufacturing facility by 53,000 square feet in a renovation that will begin this month . . . don’t be surprised if you hear an announcement before July 4 that Halador Energy, the parent company of Sunrise Coal, will be moving its corporate offices from Colorado to the Wabash Valley – likely Terre Haute . . .

IN Transition

- Duke Energy appoints Marya Rose, chief administrative officer at Cummins Inc., to the utility’s board. Rose was a senior staff member in the Governor’s Office during the Bayh and O’Bannon administrations, where she worked closely with former Duke top exec Jim Turner, who was then Indiana’s utility consumer counselor.

- Matt Smith is leaving his role as political reporter with Tribune Media’s WXIN-TV Fox 59 and WTTV-TV CBS4 in Indianapolis to join WISN-TV 12News in Milwaukee, Southeast Wisconsin’s ABC affiliate and a Hearst television station.

IN the Lobby

- Jennifer Ping leaves Bose Public Affairs Group to join Krieg DeVault LLP as executive director of governmental affairs. Her concentration will include legislative and executive branch lobbying, federal, state and local procurement, political consulting, government regulatory consulting, and grassroots and grassroots consulting.

- Barnes & Thornburg LLP files a federal lobby registration on behalf of an individual, Donald A. Jordan, an “Investment and financial services advisor” from Novi, Michigan, to “Assist in identifying opportunities for investment in community or educational projects supported by governmental entities” . . . and also registers on behalf of the Portland Cement Association, an “Association involved in policy, research and education for cement manufacturers in US,” with respect to “Infrastructure and government relations.”

- Bose Public Affairs Group files a federal lobby registration on behalf of Visionary Private Equity Group, a St. Charles, Missouri-based consortium of “Investors in healthcare, security, and technology companies,” to lobby on “Issues Related to Federal Procurement Policies.” Two of the lobbyists are former Indiana secretaries of commerce, Mitch Roob and Victor Smith (and Roob was also FSSA secretary).

- Greg Fennig, who had served as vice president of public affairs for Indianapolis Power & Light Company, joins his former boss at United Way of Central Indiana where he will serve as chief marketing, communications, and community relations officer.

SEN. YOUNG UNDECIDED ON EMERGENCY DECLARATION: U.S. Sen. Todd Young said Friday he is undecided on President Trump's emergency declaration (Howey Politics Indiana). "I haven't made up my mind with respect to the emergency declaration," Young told reporters at Carter Logistics. "I, of course, want to make sure it is consistent with the law and the constitution." Young explained further, "My disposition hasn't changed, informed by my own experience and by knowledge at the situation of the border now. We really do need to act to further secure the southern border. That means not just boots on the ground and investments in technology, but also investments in a physical barrier. Being a U.S. Marine back in the mid-90s, I served in the Yuma sector in Arizona, an area of heavy narco and human trafficking. In the years of George W. Bush a physical barrier was erected and trafficking went down over the next decade by 95%. This didn't used to be an ideological issue. The reason we are here is because Democrats suddenly decided post election they are going to change their position on this." HPI asked about the congressional "power of the purse" that could be abrogated by Trump's declaration as well as setting precedence for future presidents to declare emergencies over climate or guns. "Of course I want to protect the power of the purse," Young said. As for precedence, Young explained, "That's what we're looking at. I am going to review every conceivable statute that might be invoked under the emergency powers act. There are potentially over 100 of them. I've asked for that list of statutes from the administration so I should be receiving those in the coming days." The Senate is expected to vote in two weeks.

YOUNG SEEKS TO ADDRESS TRUCKER SHORTAGE: Sen. Todd Young was in Anderson to announce revival of the DRIVE-Safe Act, which would allow 18- to 20-year-olds who have trained to drive "interstate" (across state lines) (Howey Politics Indiana). "As our economy continued to grow, this issue has become increasingly serious," Young said, noting that the DRIVE-Safe Act "will help alleviate the driver shortage issue by allowing qualified commercial drivers between the ages of 18 and 20 in interstate commerce." Young said that 48 states already allow this age group to drive "intrastate." Young added, "This means a 20-year-old truck driver can legally drive across Indiana from Mount Vernon from Angola, but they can now drive from Jeffersonville to Louisville, from Lawrenceburg to Cincinnati, from Gary to Chicago. It would remove the costly the burdensome impediment to commerce by establishing a rigorous apprenticeship program." Indiana Motor Truck Association President Gary Langston added, "It is a common sense approach to one of the most significant issues we have in the trucking industry which is the driver shortage." Langston put the shortage at 50,000 and explained, "It's not just efforts to fill seats, but it is equally focused on our No. 1 focus every day which is safety." He said apprentices "will be in state of the art technology ... and they'll be with the best trained and best recorded safety drivers."

TRUMP FACES OBSTACLES IN NBC/WSJ POLL: A year and a half before the 2020 presidential election, President Donald Trump faces formidable obstacles in his bid for re-election, according to the latest NBC News/Wall Street Journal poll. Just four in 10 voters say they would re-elect him next year; 58 percent don't think he's been honest and truthful regarding the Russia probe; and 60 percent disapprove of his recent national emergency declaration to build a border wall. But Democrats who want to defeat Trump have hurdles of their own. The president's job rating remains stable with nearly 90 percent of Republicans approving of his job. And a majority of Americans remain confident in the economy, believing that there won't be a recession in the next year. Add it up, and 2020 is shaping up to be yet another close presidential race, say the Democratic and Republican pollsters who conducted the NBC/WSJ survey. "It's a 45-55 against the president at this stage of the game," said Democratic pollster Peter Hart. Bill McInturff, a GOP pollster, added, "As long as these economic numbers look like this, that always keeps an incumbent president in the race. And Fred Yang, another Democratic pollster, argues that the contours of the race will change once there's an official Democratic opponent to Trump. "Another lesson we painfully learned from 2016 is that elections are a choice between candidates and not a referendum on one candidate," he said. With 46 percent of Americans approving of Trump's job performance — up three points from January, although that's well within the poll's margin of error.

NFL COMBINE BECOMES A NATIONAL SPECTER: "Welcome to the Underwear Olympics," New York Giants General Manager Dave Gettleman declared late Wednesday morning, standing on a riser in front of a pack of reporters in a cavernous hall inside the Indiana Convention Center (Kilgore, Washington Post). Gettleman had come here with the rest of the NFL universe for the annual scouting combine, an event that has exploded into one of the marquee weeks on the league calendar. It didn't even used to be an event, really. A small contingent of reporters would come to observe prospects — who perform testing drills in tight shorts and sleeveless shirts — and chat up NFL types. Other reporters saw the value in the unique access, and the country became more obsessed with the NFL, and now the combine is covered by more than 1,000 media members. In a sign of our national football affliction, the drills will be aired this weekend on network television. One coach said rumor has it that next year the NFL will move the sprinting, throwing, jumping and bench pressing to a night time slot, to turn the Underwear Olympics into a prime-time show. But those drills are just a sliver. While the football world ostensibly descends on Indianapolis for inspecting and interviewing draft prospects, the combine entails so much more. It is a convention, a trade show, a spring break. Nowhere does this strange football dreamworld burst more vividly than after midnight at Prime 47. Everybody calls it "Prime." In the course of conversations regarding later plans, you'll hear voices quiver with a mix of excitement and resignation, saying something like, "Yeah, I think this is a Prime night." Agents, reporters, coaches, executives pack the place, swapping rumors, trading information and tipping back heavy glasses filled to the point of surface tension. It stays open past last call, often until around 5 a.m.

U.S. MANUFACTURING REBOUNDS: America's factories are hiring again. After years of job losses, U.S. manufacturing employment has risen for 18 straight months among those holding production or nonsupervisory jobs, the longest stretch of gains since the mid-1990s. Employers have added 274,000 non-managerial manufacturing jobs since July 2017, Labor Department figures show (Wall Street Journal). While few economists predict a return to an age when manufacturing accounted for the top job in dozens of states, many say the industry has stabilized. Much of the recent job growth has come from companies producing long-lasting goods, such as transportation equipment and machinery, a point of pride for those who recall America's manufacturing roots. "Manufacturing is critical for the nation," says Dave Petratis, chief executive of security products maker Allegion PLC, which employs 2,500 at production and assembly facilities across the U.S. that make locks, electronic card readers and doors, among other items. "The largest economy in the world has got to have the factories and production." Overall employment in the sector peaked at 19.6 million people in 1979; today, the industry employs about 12.8 million. But that figure is up from a nadir of 11.5 million in 2010.

TRUMP TAKES AIM AT MUELLER AT CPAC SCREED: Donald Trump said Saturday that Special Counsel Robert Mueller and his team are targeting him with 'bulls'. (The Mail). "We're waiting for a report by people who weren't elected," he complained in a speech at the annual Conservative Political Action Conference. In a slashing speech packed with braggadocio and grievance, Trump denounced Democrats as the party of "the socialist nightmare," relitigated his crowd sizes back to the inauguration and took on "sick," "lunatic" and "dirty" foes at every turn, earning him the unvarnished adoration of cheering conservatives (AP). After a trying week of tumult and setbacks, Trump delivered a stemwinder Saturday that extended beyond two hours and hardly left him winded. Trump let loose against House Democrats, who are broadening their investigations of him, predicted he would win re-election by a greater margin than his 2016 victory, taunted his potential White House challengers and sounded themes that are staples of his rallies. He complained often of getting "no credit" for his achievements as he proudly drifted "off script" at the Conservative Political Action Conference.

PENCE CITES 'SOCIALIST' DEMS AT CPAC: Vice President Mike Pence delivered a fiery speech to CPAC on Friday, connecting Democrats with "socialism" (Howey Politics Indiana). "Under the guise of Medicare-for-all and a Green New Deal, Democrats are embracing the same tired economic theories that have impoverished nations and stifled the liberties of millions over the past century," Pence said. "That system is socialism." He pointed to the Green New Deal and Medicare-for-all, saying Democrats "papered over the failed policies of socialism with bumper-sticker slogans and slick social media campaigns. But what they're actually offering is just more of the same: more taxes, more spending, more government and less freedom."

WARMBIER FAMILY REBUKES TRUMP: The family of Otto Warmbier rebuked President Donald Trump on Friday for siding with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, who denied knowledge of their son's maltreatment during his imprisonment (CNN). "We have been respectful during this summit process. Now we must speak out. Kim and his evil regime are responsible for the death of our son Otto. Kim and his evil regime are responsible for unimaginable cruelty and inhumanity. No excuses or lavish praise can change that. Thank you," Fred and Cindy Warmbier, Otto's parents, said in a statement provided to CNN. After a second summit with Kim in Vietnam, President Trump said Thursday he does not hold the North Korean dictator responsible for Warmbier's death. "He tells me that he didn't know about it and I will take him at his word," Trump said during a news conference, also claiming Kim "felt very badly. But he knew the case very well, but he knew it later." Trump weighed in on Twitter Friday, arguing that he was being "misinterpreted" after successfully getting Warmbier out of North Korea and professing to hold the country accountable for Warmbier's death -- though he did not mention Kim's role. "I never like being misinterpreted, but especially when it comes to Otto Warmbier and his great family," the President tweeted Friday. "Remember, I got Otto out along with three others."

NUVO FOLDS PRINT EDITIONS: NUVO has ceased print publication and is eliminating most of its staff, the editor of the 29-year-old local alternative newspaper announced Saturday on social media (IBJ). "I've done everything in my power not to have to share this news but it has happened," Editor Laura McPhee said on Twitter. "Wednesday's edition of @NuvoIndy was the last issue of the paper and the staff's last week of employment." McPhee told IBJ that a significantly different form of Nuvo would continue to exist online. She said the company would maintain three employees to continue those operations but was shedding eight full-time workers. She is among those losing their jobs. Ceasing print publication also will have an impact on as many as 40 people who do part-time work for Nuvo, including freelance writers and drivers, McPhee said. News Editor Rob Burgess, who joined Nuvo in August, will continue to work for Nuvo along with a web designer and an IT employee, McPhee said. Nuvo's problems are similar to those seen throughout the newspaper industry, she said. Advertising dollars are harder to attract, and even though people still want content to read, many are unwilling to pay for it. McPhee said publisher and owner Keven McKinney, who founded the newspaper, is exploring turning Nuvo into an online-only, membership-supported publication with no advertising.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: The atrophy of Indiana journalism continues with the collapse of NUVO. This is a significant blow to Indianapolis and its journalism, where the IndyStar has been decimated by budget and staffing cuts. Many other medium-sized newspapers around the state have also experienced flesh and bone staffing cuts and are shells of their former selves. Indiana needs a non-profit news foundation that has been developed with the Texas Tribune, the MinnPost in Minnesota, and the Voice of San Diego. Without non-profit journalism in Indiana, the 4th Estate watchdog will recede, and we find corruption filling the void. - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

GOP ACQUIESCENCE NEAR COMPLETE: When President Trump's longtime fixer Michael Cohen testified last week that his former boss was a "racist" and "con man" who routinely skirts the law, Republicans showed little interest in following up on his claims (Costa, Washington Post). They shrugged when Trump called murderous dictator Kim Jong Un a "real leader" and once again elevated the North Korean leader on the world stage. And faced with a vote on Trump's legally contested declaration of a national emergency at the Mexican border, just 13 of 197 House Republicans opposed him. Acquiescence to Trump is now the defining trait of the Republican Party more than two years into his presidency — overwhelming and at times erasing principles that conservatives viewed as the foundation of the party for more than a half century. Trump's ownership of the GOP was on vivid display again Saturday, when the president appeared at the Conservative Political Action Conference (CPAC) in Maryland, an annual gathering that has transformed into a raucous celebration of Trump, featuring propaganda-style art and a speaker who declared that the president was "chosen by God."

VANDERBURGH DEMS DENY $50K RENT DEBT: $50,000-plus back rent problem? What $50,000-plus back rent problem? There's not a trace of it on the Vanderburgh County Democratic Party's 2018 financial report filed Friday (Langhorne, Evansville Courier & Press). The debt built over several years as the party repeatedly failed to make the roughly $1,600-per-month rent payment on a lightly used headquarters in the Walker Building at 401 SE 6th St. Blaming the problem on a fundraising drought exacerbated by election losses, Democratic leaders in 2017 praised landlord Walker Building Development LLC — owned by developer Ben Kunkel — for being patient. They included the debt on their required annual campaign finance reports — but no more. Attorney Scott Danks, the party's chairman for the past two years, no longer believes the money is owed. Democrats submitted a finance report Friday showing $6,086 cash on hand with no debt. "It's my position at this time that we don't owe any money. I've never seen a lease that would obligate anybody to it," Danks said Friday.

SANDERS KICKS OFF CAMPAIGN: It isn't a coincidence that Sanders is holding two kickoff rallies this weekend in Brooklyn and Chicago: He spent his childhood in a small apartment in the Flatbush neighborhood, and attended Brooklyn College for one year. The University of Chicago is where he earned his college degree, and joined the Congress of Racial Equality (Politico). "I grew up a few miles away from here in Brooklyn in a three-and-a-half-room, rent-controlled apartment. My father was a paint salesman who worked hard his entire life, but never made much money," Sanders is expected to say Saturday, according to his prepared remarks. "Coming from a lower-middle-class family I will never forget how money — or really lack of money — was always a point of stress in our home. My mother's dream was that someday we would move out of that rent-controlled apartment to a home of our own."

GOV. INSLEE ENTERS AS CLIMATE CHANGE CANDIDATE: Washington Gov. Jay Inslee announced Friday that he is running for president, centering his campaign around climate change, calling it "the most urgent challenge of our time" (NBC News). "This crisis isn't just a chart or graph anymore," Inslee says in a video released by his campaign. "The impacts are being felt everywhere. We have an opportunity to transform our economy, run on 100 percent clean energy that will bring millions of good paying jobs to every community across America, and create a more just future for everyone."

WARREN ASSAILS BIDEN OVER PENCE: Sen. Elizabeth Warren said she disagrees with former Vice President Joe Biden that Vice President Mike Pence is a "decent man" (CNN). Biden was criticized for referring to Pence as a "decent man" during a foreign policy speech Thursday. Some took issue with Biden's comment given Pence's position on LGBTQ rights. "I've followed Pence's history on LGBTQ Americans and I don't think that is a decent position," Warren told reporters Saturday in Waterloo, Iowa. "I disagree." Asked if she thinks Pence is a decent man, Warren flatly said, "No." Then asked if she views anyone in the Trump administration as decent, Warren said, "It's a tough question." "The Mueller investigation has already produced 34 indictments or guilty pleas out of people within the President's inner circle," she said. "Ten Cabinet officials have left, four with huge scandals, and others with the threat of scandal at the door. This is the most corrupt administration in living memory."

Sunday Talk

BOLTON CALLS SUMMIT A SUCCESS: National security adviser John Bolton on Sunday declared President Trump's summit with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, which ended without an agreement between the two sides, was a "success." Bolton, who was scheduled to appear on a trio of Sunday talk shows, said on CBS's "Face the Nation" that there's "no expiration date" for the Trump administration's push to rid North Korea of its nuclear arsenal. He acknowledged, however, that Pyongyang has not committed to abandoning its nuclear weapons. "I think (Trump) remains optimistic that this is possible," Bolton said.

NADLER CLAIMS TRUMP HAS 'OBSTRUCTED JUSTICE': House Judiciary Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) said on Sunday that his panel will request documents from dozens of entities and individuals close to the White House as part of his panel's investigation into "obstruction of justice, corruption and abuse of power." "Tomorrow, we will be issuing document requests to over 60 different people and individuals from the White House to the Department of Justice, Donald Trump, Jr., Allen Weisselberg, to begin the investigations to present the case to the American people about obstruction of justice, corruption and abuse of power," Nadler said on ABC's "This Week." Nadler said during the interview that he thinks President Trump obstructed justice. "It's very clear that the president obstructed justice," he said.

DEMS DEMAND RELEASE OF MUELLER REPORT: On Sunday, Democrats including one 2020 presidential candidate framed the conclusion of Mueller's nearly two-year investigation as a crucial moment for transparency. The chairman of the House Intelligence Committee pledged to subpoena the report on Russia's election interference if necessary in order to make it public, while at least one legal expert suggested the path to making the report available to the public might be "circuitous." "This is an extraordinary moment in terms of the need that the special counsel has to investigate the conduct of the president of the United States's campaign and issues surrounding it," Sen. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) said on CNN's "Inside Politics." "I believe that given in particular all the misinformation that we can, I think, rightly believe we've heard, that it is important that the American public receive as much information and that we be as transparent as possible," the 2020 presidential candidate added. "So I am an advocate for transparency. I am an advocate for a public report. And certainly that we in the United States Congress would receive all of the supporting information, be it in a classified hearing or not."

SCHIFF PRESSES FOR REPORT RELEASE: Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.), the chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, vowed to take legal action if necessary to ensure Mueller's findings were available to the American people. "We will obviously subpoena the report, we will bring Bob Mueller in to testify before Congress, we will take it to court if necessary," Schiff said on "This Week" on ABC. "And in the end, I think the department understands they're going to have to make this public." Schiff, who has said he believes there's evidence of collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia "in plain sight," said he's "absolutely" willing to take the administration to court.

SEN. BLUNT URGES CAUTION: Sen. Roy Blunt (R-Mo.), a member of GOP leadership and a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, cautioned on Sunday against forcing the report into the public via subpoena regardless of its contents. "The weight of the government here is very strong," Blunt said on CBS's "Face the Nation." "And people need to think about that when they begin to demand we need to know what you found out, whether it led anywhere or not."

BHARARA BELIEVES REPORT WILL BE RELEASED: Former U.S. Attorney Preet Bharara said on CNN's "State of the Union" that "ultimately" he thinks the report will be released to the public. "How circuitous a route it will be until we get to that point, it's unclear," he added. He noted that any report given to Congress is likely to be scrubbed of certain classified information or materials relevant to a grand jury investigation. "The reason why I have some optimism that we will ultimately see it is that there's so much public interest," he said. "There's been this long investigation over a period of time, that it would seem odd and unusual if, at the end of the day, we didn't get the gist of what was going on."

General Assembly

TEACHER PAY PROPOSALS UNLIKELY TO CHANGE IN 2ND HALF: Statehouse Democrats say Republicans are only "nibbling around the edges" to solve the state's problems (Smith, Indiana Public Media). Senate Minority Leader Tim Lanane (D-Anderson) compares the session to a Broadway show that's reached intermission. "How would the audience feel at the end of Act I? My thinking would be that they'd probably be headed for the exits or going to the box office to seek a refund," Lanane says. Democrats feel that way particularly about teacher pay. But House Speaker Brian Bosma (R-Indianapolis) says he's happy with his caucus's approach on the issue. That includes their plan to publicly shame schools that don't spend a certain amount of their funding in the classroom. "Where we monitor and encourage every school at the local level to make those decisions but to prioritize teacher salaries," Bosma says. Democrats argue that falls far short of a guarantee. But Republicans, including Gov. Eric Holcomb, aren't offering teachers much more. "They're going to see the increase that their school is getting," Holcomb says. "And they're going to see the increase that their paycheck received, in the short term."

SKINNER URGES TEACHERS TO STRIKE: A retired Vigo County teacher and former Democratic state senator has turned to social media to gauge educator interest in a teacher strike (Loughlin, Terre Haute Tribune-Star) He believes that public education has been the target of the Republican Party for the past 15 years and refers to "senseless budget cuts, expansion of vouchers and crippling regulations." Furthermore, he doesn't believe the Indiana State Teachers Association is taking a strong enough stand in response. Skinner believes ISTA President Theresa Meredith "is exactly wrong about what teachers should be doing. Teachers have been turning the other cheek for the last 15 years, and the ISTA still doesn't realize that they are getting the hell beat out of them," he wrote in an email to the Tribune-Star. He also questioned why ISTA would conduct a rally at the Statehouse on a Saturday "when no legislators will be there."

ISTA RESPONDS TO SKINNER: In response to Skinner's comments, Kim Clements-Johnson, ISTA director of communications, stated (Terre Haute Tribune-Star): "ISTA is leading the effort statewide to get teachers pay in line with their expertise and adequate funding for our community public schools, where more than 90 percent of kids attend. In this era of deep political polarization, it's imperative we work with policymakers from both sides of the aisle to make real progress. We'll continue to push our elected leaders to do what's best for educators and the kids they serve. On March 9 educators, community leaders, parents and students will make their voices heard. Sen. Skinner's welcome to join us."

DEMS UNHAPPY WITH SESSION: The first half of the legislative session was generally quiet (save an emotional debate about a hate-crimes bill) but that might just be the calm before the storm (Erdody, IBJ). Republican lawmakers say they're pleased with the progress they've made on their top priorities: drafting a balanced budget while increasing support for education and youth services. But Democrats argue that Republicans, who have quorum-proof majorities in both chambers of the Indiana General Assembly, haven't done nearly enough to help Hoosiers. "I was thinking about that and [about], how would the audience feel at the end of Act One?" Senate Minority Leader Tim Lanane of Anderson said. "My thinking would be, they'd probably be headed to the exits or going to the box office to seek a refund." Only a handful of issues caused turmoil—the most notable being when Senate Democrats walked out and refused to return after the Senate voted to strip a hate-crimes bill of a list of specific victim categories.

WEEKLY UPDATE ON LEGISLATION: The 2019 legislative session's first half ended as the House passed the budget, the Senate approved a major gaming bill, and Gov. Eric Holcomb stood firm on hate crimes (Indiana Public Media). Here's what you might have missed this week at the Statehouse.

House Budget: The House approved the $34.5 billion, two-year state budget along party lines. GOP leaders say the spending plan is fiscally responsible and funds their priorities – including increases in education spending that keep pace with inflation, but not much more.

Gaming Bill: One of the most significant gaming bills since the industry's beginnings in Indiana easily passed out of the state Senate Tuesday. Sen. Mark Messmer (R-Jasper) calls his Senate-approved gaming bill a "once-in-a-generation" reset for the state's casinos. The measure allows a Gary casino to move to a more attractive location on a major interstate, opens the door to a new casino in Terre Haute, and legalizes sports wagering statewide.

Holcomb Pushes Hate Crimes Law: Gov. Eric Holcomb wants Hoosiers to call their lawmakers to urge them to support a hate crimes bill that includes a list of victim characteristics. Senate Republicans removed that list and House GOP leaders aren't inclined to support it. But Holcomb says anything less isn't good enough.

Underground CO2 Storage: State legislators hope to study carbon dioxide storage in Indiana this summer. A bill to form the committee passed in the state Senate Tuesday. It's much different from the original bill which would have made it easier for companies to get approval to inject CO2 into the ground. The bill to create a committee to study the process now moves on to the state House for consideration.

Foster Parents And DCS: The Senate approved legislation Monday that aims to improve the relationship between the Department of Child Services and the state's foster parents. The measure makes several changes to the way foster parents interact with both the agency and the court system. For example, it creates a new definition of a long-term foster parent – someone who's care for the child for at least 12 months.

Voucher Anti-Discrimination Bill Dead: Efforts at the Statehouse to keep state money out of private schools that openly discriminate failed in the first half of the legislative session, but the lawmakers behind the proposals say they aren't done focusing on the issue. Roncalli High School in Indianapolis put guidance counselor Shelly Fitzgerald on leave last year because of her marriage to a woman. The private religious school receives state dollars through the school choice voucher program. The situation inspired state Sen. J.D. Ford (D-Indianapolis) to file a bill aimed at keeping that funding out of schools that discriminate. His bill never got a hearing before a key legislative deadline this year, effectively killing the measure.

Hemp Regulation: A bill that would regulate hemp production in Indiana has passed out of the Indiana Senate. Last year, the House overwhelmingly passed a bill doing something similar, but failed to remain intact in the Senate by being turned into a summer study committee instead. Hemp was removed from the federal controlled substances list in December.

Military Family Relief Fund: The Indiana House unanimously passed legislation Monday to tighten the controls on the state's Military Family Relief Fund. The bill is a response to controversy last year at the Indiana Department of Veterans Affairs.

School Mental Health Care: A bill to provide mental health care for Indiana students narrowly passed the Senate this week. The legislation was written in response to school safety. The bill's author says the creation of an integrated mental health system is a key step in preventing school violence.

Exonerated Prisoners: State lawmakers want to give exonerated prisoners money for their wrongful incarceration. The legislation is now in the Senate after its unanimous passage by the House. Rep. Greg Steuerwald (R-Danville) says Indiana should provide exonerated prisoners an option: they can sue the state (as they can now) or take a payout from a fund created by his legislation.

"Dark Box" Tax Assessments: A bill creating a uniform property value assessment passed smoothly through the Senate Tuesday afternoon. The legislation aims to help local governments struggling against retailers who want even lower taxes. Big box stores have come under scrutiny of governments for using tactics to reduce property tax payments – a move some Indiana cities say is costing them dearly.

Radon Testing: A bill that passed the state Senate on Tuesday recommends schools test for radon. Exposure to radon is the leading cause of lung cancer in people who don't smoke in the U.S.

Cigarette tax increase: A coalition of health and business entities has been behind a substantial cigarette tax hike for years – as a way to pay for smoking-related health care costs and cut the state's smoking rate (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). And House Republicans were once on board – when they wanted the revenue for a road funding plan. But this year the caucus killed the proposal in the House without a hearing. At the same time, the chamber sent a new vaping tax over to the Senate. Holcomb said he didn't oppose an increase but checked with legislators regularly and "there was next to nil appetite for one, and so I never pursued it."

Redistricting: For years, Democrats and good-government groups have pushed for an independent redistricting commission to draw congressional and legislative boundaries, and believe the current system leads to gerrymandering and little competition (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). But Republicans – who drew the maps after the last census – see nothing wrong with the current districts. While the GOP Senate passed a minor bill putting into code some court precedents on what can be considered, it has avoided the larger issue.

Medical marijuana: Another year with no movement on medical marijuana in Indiana – even as 33 other states have legalized marijuana in some form (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Holcomb has been particularly strong against legalization – even as he admitted last week that he smoked marijuana in college. "We're following the law and I'm proud of that fact," he said, noting he is waiting for the federal government to take action. Federal law classifies marijuana as a Schedule I drug having "high potential for abuse." Until that changes, research and scientific evidence cannot come to the forefront, he said. "I'm not convinced other states have made a wise decision," Holcomb said. "Other states don't persuade me." Lanane said those pushing for legalization are not "wackos" – they are veterans groups and average citizens who see an opportunity to help those hooked on opiates.

SOUTHERN INDIANA TEACHERS RALLY FOR PAY: Some of Erin Braune's first memories are playing school with her younger sister, at a chalkboard and an old desk set up in the basement at home. As she got older, she tutored other kids. That's why it made sense when she later decided to become a teacher (Rickert & McAfee, News & Tribune). But Braune, now an English teacher at Silver Creek High School, said it's getting increasingly difficult for educators in Indiana to provide students with the education they need. Growing class sizes, shrinking pools of new teachers and stagnant wages below other states all are cause for concern, educators say. That's why Braune intends to stand alongside other teachers and allies at the Red for Ed rally March 9 at the Indiana Statehouse. The goal is to get the attention of legislators and tell them the current situation has to change. Mark Felix, president of the Greater Clark Education Association, said Gov. Holcomb's proposed increase in funding to districts of 2 percent each year for the next two years isn't sustainable. "We've had these small increases every year for about the past decade," Felix said. "But if you adjust that for inflation, we've taken a loss since about 2006; we've been losing money."

STUDENTS RALLY FOR GUN REFORMS: High school students from around central Indiana made some noise at the Statehouse on Saturday afternoon (WTHR-TV). They came out to rally for universal background checks on all gun sales. Many students held signs and came up from the crowd to show their solidarity. One student from Noblesville says this hits close to home after last year's shooting at Noblesville West Middle School. They believe they can make a difference by voting. "I just voted last year for the first time," said Carly Chier, who is a senior at Noblesville High. "I know students in upcoming years will be doing the same thing that I did and they'll be wanting to vote for candidates that are supportive of common sense gun laws and that's going to be the biggest part of it."

BILL WOULD ALLOW TOWNSHIP TO LEAVE SOUTH BEND SCHOOLS: A bill that would allow students in St. Joseph County's Greene Township to leave the South Bend Community School Corp. — and take the state tuition support that follows each of them — and join the John Glenn School Corp. in Walkerton easily passed the Indiana Senate this week with a 44-4 vote (South Bend Tribune). Senate Bill 421 now moves on to the Indiana House of Representatives for consideration. South Bend closed Greene Intermediate Center, 24702 Roosevelt Road, in June 2018, moving students into other schools in the district for the current school year. Since then, Greene Township's trustee and board have pushed for a bill to allow students to merge into the nearby John Glenn district. "The South Bend School Corporation has a lot of failing schools," said Greene Township trustee Sandra Ort. "There's so much busing and across so many big highways, and with all the busing issues, that's a big concern. But it's mostly that John Glenn has a good education at all levels," she said.

REGION DEMOCRATS SEEK TO EDUCATE: Democratic state representatives serving in the Republican-dominated Indiana House typically face a choice during chamber policy debates: fight or educate (Carden, NWI Times). Last month, when amendments to the GOP state budget were up for consideration, three Region Democrats chose the second course, and it ultimately may help ensure the needs of their communities get addressed in the legislative session's second half that starts Monday. State Reps. Earl Harris Jr., D-East Chicago; Chuck Moseley, D-Portage; and Vernon Smith, D-Gary, unlike many of their Democratic colleagues, did not file budget amendments that forced members of the Republican supermajority to vote against popular policies, such as a minimum wage increase or anti-discrimination standards at religious schools where student tuition is paid using state tax dollars. Instead, they focused on critical issues facing residents of East Chicago, Porter County and Merrillville, explained how state assistance would benefit all of Indiana, and accepted the assurance of the GOP budget leader that their concerns will be seriously considered and possibly resolved.

BANKS JOINS REAGAN INSTITUTE: U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (IN-03) was named to the Ronald Reagan Institute's Center for Peace Through Strength's Task Force on 21st Century National Security Technology and Workforce (Howey Politics Indiana). This inaugural Task Force will build on many of the policy conversations had at the 2018 Reagan National Defense Forum which Rep. Banks attended. To learn more, please see the below press release from the Ronald Reagan Institute. "I look forward to collaborating with distinguished members of academia, public policy, and private enterprise to help make America stronger and safer," Banks said.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB ENCOURAGES STEM STUDIES - Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb, State School Superintendent Jennifer McCormick and State Treasurer Kelly Mitchell are encouraging high school students to apply for the 2019 Governor's STEM Team (AP). The program honors four outstanding high school students for their exemplary performance in one of the STEM subjects: science, technology, engineering and math. Nominees also are judged on extracurricular activities, work or research projects, leadership and community service. Winning students each receive a $1,000 college scholarship from Indiana's College Choice 529 Direct Savings plan and letter jackets identifying them as members of the STEM Team. The nominations may be submitted online. The deadline is March 31.

AGRICULTURE: INDIANA FARM DELINQUENCIES UP ONLY 4% - Farm loan delinquencies across the country are up significantly from this time last year, but the situation isn't as grim in Indiana (Indiana Public Media). While the national rate is nearly 20 percent, Indiana remains near the bottom with about 4 percent of borrowers delinquent. Greg Foulke is the Farm Loan Chief for the Farm Service Agency in Indiana. The organization provides loans to farmers across the state. He says the overall financial health of Indiana farmers is good. "Especially in 2018, they made up for lower prices with higher yields," he says. "It kind of works out that way sometimes, but in general the financial health of our Indiana farms is pretty good." The low rate of delinquencies in the state comes at a time when farmers are experiencing lower profits and increasing uncertainty due to trade disputes with China.

EDUCATION: IU FACING ENROLLMENT CLIFF - Indiana University is staring down an enrollment cliff, and this drop in students will have a big impact on IU's bottom line (Bloomington Herald-Times). "This is probably a dramatic decade ahead," said Robert Kravchuk, chairman of the Bloomington Faculty Council's budgetary affairs committee.

EDUCATION: BELL NEW WGU CHANCELLOR - WGU Indiana has named Alison Bell chancellor. Her 20-year higher education career includes four years as general manager of the public, online school's operations. She succeeds Allison Barber, who led WGU Indiana since it launched in 2010, and is now president of WGU Advancement (Ober, Inside Indiana Business). Bell most recently served as director of degree completion at IUPUI. She holds degrees from Indiana University and Ball State University. "I'm honored and excited to return to WGU Indiana as Chancellor, to sustain and grow the University's commitment to helping Hoosiers return to college to fulfill their dream of degree completion and career advancement," said Bell in a news release. "I look forward to building on the strong foundation WGU Indiana has built over the past eight years, continuing to advance the university's mission in our state."

ECONOMY: FEW MASS LAYOFFS SO FAR - The number of mass layoffs in Indiana has shrunk so far in 2019 to fewer than a fifth of what it was at the same point last year (Pete, NWI Times). During the first two months of 2019, Indiana companies have announced four mass layoffs through Workers Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act, or WARN, notices to the state, down from 15 at the same point in 2018 and 10 at the same point in 2017, according to the Indiana Department of Workforce Development. The federal WARN Act requires 60-day advance notification of a plant closing or a mass layoff, which includes the layoff of at least one-third of the workforce at a business with 50 to 499 employees, or the layoff of 500 or more employees at larger businesses. A total of 432 workers in Indiana have lost their jobs in mass layoffs so far in 2019, according to the DWD. That's down from 2,626 workers laid off in the first two months of 2018, 3,082 laid off in the first two months of 2017, 1,104 in the first two months of 2016, 1,523 in the first two months of 2015, and 700 in the first two months 2014. January and February are common times for mass layoffs as companies often try to cut costs if they're struggling while entering a new fiscal year.

TRANSPORTATION: SOUTH SHORE TO PROVIDE BUS SERVICE MONDAY - Because of the forecast for frigid temperatures, the South Shore Line will provide temporary substitute bus service between South Bend and the Michigan City Carroll Avenue station on Monday and Tuesday for three morning trains (South Bend Tribune). The trains impacted by busing on Monday and Tuesday are Eastbound Train 403, Westbound Train 6 and Westbound Train 14. Regular train service between South Bend and Carroll Avenue is expected to resume with Eastbound Train 7 on both days. Eastbound Train 401 will be canceled both days. Service is canceled to and from Hudson Lake while substitute bus service is in effect and is expected to resume with Train 7. Hudson Lake passengers should board at the Carroll Avenue Station for train service during this time.

HEALTH: IU HEALTH EARNINGS DOWN - Indiana University Health said earnings from operations rose 4 percent last year, but total earnings fell 70 percent due to investment losses "in a year of turbulent financial markets" (Russell, IBJ). The state's largest health system, with 16 hospitals, released year-end results Thursday afternoon. Earnings from operations came in at $612 million, but total earnings were $296 million, down from $989 million in 2017. Despite the investment losses, IU Health said operations were strong overall, with patient volumes increasing in most categories, including surgeries and inpatient admissions. The system reported revenue from operations of $6.43 billion, up 1.4 percent. Operating expenses climbed 1.1 percent, to $5.82 billion. IU Health said 2018 was busy year for capital construction, with seven major projects under way. That included moving maternity services from Methodist Hospital to Riley Hospital for Children, building a brand-new replacement hospital in Bloomington, creating a cancer center at North Hospital in Carmel, and expanding and renovating West and Ball Memorial hospitals.

HISTORY: RESTORATION SOUGHT FOR HOUSE OF TOMORROW - Indiana Landmarks is accepting proposals to restore a house built for the 1933-34 Chicago World's Fair. The structure, known as the House of Tomorrow, currently sits in Beverly Shores as part of the Indiana Dunes National Park (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). It has been vacant since 1999 and needs rehabilitation that will cost up to $3 million. The House of Tomorrow was designed by Chicago architect George Fred Keck and was meant to inspire fairgoers to want what they saw, which included floor-to-ceiling glass walls, central air conditioning, and an attached garage that opened with the push of a button, according to Indiana Landmarks.

MEDIA: CUMULUS AXES 2 RADIO PERSONALITIES - Cumulus Media officially took over programming on Friday of three local Entercom Communications radio stations—WZPL-FM 99.5, WNTR-FM 107.9 and WXNT-AM 1430—but big changes already had been made earlier in the week (IBJ). Two high-profile, on-air personalities were let go on Tuesday, among a dozen total employees who were laid off: WXNT sports talk show host Kent Sterling and WNTR afternoon disc jockey Kari Johll. "I was called on Tuesday and they said we're making a change," Sterling told IBJ. "There were 12 of us that were let go." Known on the air as "KJ," Johll was on Entercom's local top 40 station WZPL for more than 17 years before her four-year run as afternoon host on adult contemporary station WNTR. IBJ was unable to get in touch with Johll, but her departure was confirmed by industry sources and she no longer appears on WNTR's website.

SPORTS: FISCHER SAYS KNIGHT'S HEALTH 'IN DECLINE' - Legendary Indiana basketball coach Bob Knight is struggling with health issues, according to longtime Hoosiers radio voice Don Fischer (IndyStar). On Wednesday, on "The Drive with Jack & Tom," a radio show based out of Lansing, Michigan, Fischer was asked what it would take for Knight to mend fences with IU and return to Assembly Hall. In his response, Fischer said the 78-year-old Hall-of-Fame coach is "not well." "I hesitate to say anything about that right now because coach Knight is not well," Fischer said. "He's going through some major issues and it hurts me to even talk about it just because a man with that kind of a mind, who was so tremendous at coaching the game of basketball, and you know, at the age that we get to at this point in our lives, you want to keep thinking that that brain is never going to go away, and it appears that's a real problem for him right now and what he's dealing with."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SAYS HE WAS IN 'HORRIBLE POSITION' ON WARMBIER - President Trump on Saturday lamented his "horrible position" of negotiating with North Korea following the death of Otto Warmbier, after the president drew criticism for saying that he accepted Kim Jong Un's word that he didn't know about Mr. Warmbier's abuse in Pyongyang's captivity (Wall Street Journal). Speaking at the Conservative Political Action Conference in Oxon Hill, Md., Mr. Trump said, "I'm in such a horrible position because in one way I have to negotiate. The other way, I love Mr. and Mrs. Warmbier and I love Otto. And it's a very, very delicate balance."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP ASKS CHINA TO LIFT AG TARIFFS - President Donald Trump asked China in a tweet Friday to lift all of its tariffs on American agricultural products, pointing to his decision to delay a second round of tariffs and to improving trade relations with China (CNN). Trump had announced the decision to delay the tariffs, as well as a planned summit to wrap up the trade agreement with Chinese President Xi Jinping at Mar-a-Lago, in a tweet Sunday. The tariffs had been set to go into effect Friday if no trade deal were reached. China is the United States' second largest agricultural market, according to data from the Office of the US Trade Representative. US agricultural exports to China hit $20 billion in 2017, with soybeans, the largest sole export, accounting for $12 billion. Trump on Sunday had lauded "substantial progress" in the talks covering "important structural issues including intellectual property protection, technology transfer, agriculture, services, currency, and many other issues" and resulting in "a very good weekend for U.S. & China!"

WHITE HOUSE: IVANKA DOES THE GRIDIRON - There were several crucial questions surrounding Saturday night's Gridiron dinner, that exclusive, annual white-tie gathering hosted by a club made up of Washington's most elite journalists: first of all, would President Donald Trump turn up? (Washington Post). The answer to that one came early in the evening — nope, the president wouldn't attend, as he did last year, and instead, his daughter and top White House adviser, Ivanka Trump, gave remarks. Ivanka Trump, who said her father had asked her just that afternoon to represent him got off a cringey laugh with a line that poked fun at her conservative bona fides — and her notoriously difficult boss/dad. "The press seems to think it's ironic that I, born of great privilege, think people want to work for what they are given," she deadpanned. "As if being Donald Trump's daughter isn't the hardest job in the world."

MUELLER: STONE MAY HAVE VIOLATED ORDER - Republican operative and longtime Trump friend Roger Stone faced fresh legal trouble Friday after a federal judge ordered his attorneys to explain why they failed to tell her before now about the imminent publication of a book that could violate his gag order by potentially criticizing the judge or prosecutors with special counsel Robert S. Mueller III (Washington Post). The order by U.S. District Judge Amy Berman Jackson of the District of Columbia late Friday came barely eight days after Jackson barred Stone from speaking publicly about his case, prompted by a photo posted on Stone's Instagram account that placed a crosshairs next to a photo of Jackson's head.

ECONOMY: RETAIL APOCALYPSE - The 'retail apocalypse' is alive and well this week with major chains such as Gap, JCPenney, Victoria's Secret and Foot Locker all announcing massive closures, totalling the death of more than 465 stores over the last 48 hours (Fox News). All four companies reported its fourth quarter results this week during the critical holiday period, with three of them (Gap, JCPenney and Victoria's Secret) reporting declining in same-store sales, while Foot Locker reported growth that more than doubled expectations. Still, despite the good news. Foot Locker announced Friday that it plans to close around 165 stores across the country, during its investor call. That comes less than 24 hours after Gap announced it would close 230 of its namesake stores over the course of the next two years after the brand's same-store sales fell 7 percent during the holiday quarter. It also announced that it will separate its sister company Old Navy into its own publicly-traded company and create a new firm to house its remaining brands.

ECONOMY: MALLS TAKE A BEATING - The dying-mall narrative isn't a new one, with the phrase "retail apocalypse" making its way into the American lexicon years ago as America's over-stored suburbs and the continued gains of online shopping took their toll (Fortune). But after a brief period of shopper stabilization — fueled by rising consumer confidence and low gas prices — it appears another culling is in order for the industry. The vacancy rate in U.S. malls was 9 percent in the fourth quarter, up from 8.3 percent a year earlier, Barbara Byrne Denham, a senior economist at Reis Real Estate Solutions, wrote in a retail sector report. Even though Sears shuttered some locations earlier in 2018, causing vacancies to rise to an even higher 9.1 percent in the third quarter, the so-called "dark" stores did not impact occupancy for most malls, according to the report.

NORTH KOREA NUKE ARSENAL GROWS: North Korea is steadily adding to its nuclear stockpile, the L.A. Times' Victoria Kim writes from Seoul: What's new: "U.S. intelligence last summer estimated North Korea may have anywhere from 20 to 60 nuclear weapons. In 2018, North Korea probably produced enough plutonium and uranium for an additional five to seven nuclear weapons, researchers at Stanford have estimated." Why it's happening: "Many of the country's nuclear facilities are camouflaged, tucked away in mountains or hidden underground. Analysts scouring satellite imagery spotted signs of continued buildup at a network of at least 16 secret missile operating bases never acknowledged by North Korea."

CITIES: MAYOR CANNON TAKES OATH IN PORTAGE - Following a former mayor who is awaiting sentencing in federal court, Portage swore in a new leader two weeks after James Snyder's conviction (Ortiz, NWI Times). The city's new mayor, Republican John Cannon, said he's hitting the ground running to rebuild public trust. "I have prepared my entire life for this job," Cannon said. "I'm excited and I'm very optimistic. I'm ready to lead and bring people together and move forward from the divisiveness in the community from the past." Cannon was sworn in Saturday morning at the Portage Public Library with residents, City Council members, precinct caucus members, city employees and Cannon's friends and family in attendance. Cannon, a City Council member of seven years, said being Portage's mayor has been a longtime goal. Cannon was the only person to file the necessary paperwork by Wednesday's deadline for the position. Previously, Councilwoman Sue Lynch, D-at-large, has been acting mayor until the caucus was held. "I take this oath in assuming the mayor's office in extraordinary circumstances never experienced by Portage residents,"

CITIES: PORTAGE PUTS $200K IN SHORELINE EROSION STUDY - The city's Redevelopment Commission might contribute $200,000 toward a federal study which would develop long-term solutions for the continuing erosion along Lake Michigan's shore (NWI Times). The contribution, approved Thursday, is contingent on the state funding an already existent beach nourishment fund, Colin Highlands, RDC administrator said. State Rep. Chuck Moseley, D-10th, has been attempting to secure funding for the project in the state's budget for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers study along with some immediate erosion control measures. As of Thursday, the funding had not been placed in the state's upcoming budget. Other agencies, including Indiana Dunes Tourism and National Park Association, have also been lobbying for funding towards the study. The shoreline along the Lakefront Park and Riverwalk, which is owned by the National Park Service but managed by the city of Portage and town of Ogden Dunes, has suffered significant erosion the past several years.

CITIES: SOUTH BEND AIRPORT TRAFFIC UP 20% - Project Propel was rolled out nearly a year ago to boost business travel through South Bend International Airport (South Bend Tribune). On Thursday, those behind the initiative celebrated some favorable data at a news conference inside the Renaissance District's Studebaker 113 building. "Across the country the growth of people flying in and out of airports this year was about 3 to 4 percent," said Chris Murphy, chairman and CEO of 1st Source Bank. "I'm pleased to report to you today that South Bend International Airport experienced a 20 percent increase in passenger traffic last year." According to Murphy — who spearheaded the effort to encourage local business to commit to flying out of South Bend International more often — that increase represents 339 more passengers flying in and out of the airport each day.

CITIES: MUNCIE COMMISSION SUES DELAWARE COUNTY - The Muncie Redevelopment Commission this week filed suit against the Delaware County commissioners, alleging it is owed tax revenue generated by the planned location of a new county jail (Muncie Star Press). Todd Donati, executive director of the MRC, said Friday he believed more than $400,000 in taxes assessed on the property — at 3100 S. Tillotson Ave. — during the period it was owned by ASONS Construction Co. should have been designated as TIF revenue, available to the MRC for economic development-related projects. The building did not generate tax revenue during its years as Wilson Middle School. According to attorney Jason Delk, representing the MRC in the Delaware Circuit Court 1 lawsuit, the former school property was included in a TIF district — the South Muncie Economic Development Area — created in the spring of 2015. A few weeks later, the property was sold to ASONS.

CITIES: PATRIOT FD CHIEF ARRESTED FOR THEFT - A four-month investigation by the Indiana State Police Organized Crime and Corruption Unit ended in the arrest of the former Patriot, Indiana, fire chief on charges of theft and official misconduct related to money from the Patriot Volunteer Fire Department (Madison Courier). A news release from the Indiana State Police said they were contacted in October, 2018, to investigate after an audit by the Indiana State Board of Accounts discovered funds missing from the Patriot Volunteer Fire Department in Switzerland County, Indiana. During the course of the investigation, Detective Tim Denby learned that the thefts took place between 2014 and 2018 when Gordon W. Turner Jr., 45, of Patriot, was the fire chief. More than $28,000 was taken from the fire department's bank accounts and, police discovered, used to pay bills for Turner and for other personal gain. Police turned over the results of the investigation to the Switzerland County Prosecutor's Office.

CITIES: DELPHI OPENS COMMUNITY CENTER - The City of Delphi is celebrating the grand opening of the Delphi Community Center. The community has gone nearly seven years without one (WLFI-TV). The facility was created with senior citizens in mind. It doubles as community space and a place to house the city's senior family services. The facility was built almost entirely through monetary donations and volunteer work. It includes a full functioning kitchen, a work out room and open space for events. Delphi City Councilman Dale Seward said this facility is long overdue. "It brings your community together," said Seward. "It shows the senior community that we care about them, that they are valued and they are part of the community and up until this got open, that was a question."

CITIES: INDY'S DITCH ROAD CLOSING MONDAY - If you live on the north side and have an emotional connection to the Ditch Rd. over bridge over I-465, I'm about to break your heart (WIBC). Starting this Monday, March 4th, the Ditch Rd. bridge is going to close until the end of September. According to the Indiana Department of Transportation (INDOT), the bridge's "service life is up," and has to be mauled, gutted, destroyed, and eventually replaced. In the meantime, INDOT's suggested reroute has drivers using Spring Mill Rd. and 96th St. to get around.

CITIES: LOGANSPORT RAISING TRAIL FUNDS FOR SECURITY - The City of Logansport is raising money to make its walking trails safer. The goal is to raise $25,000 for trail security cameras (WLFI-TV). "I think this is the prettiest trail we have," said Deputy Mayor Mercedes Brugh of the Little Turtle Waterway trail. The money would add cameras to this trail as well as, River Bluff and Hervey Preserve, Huston Park and Sims Connector, and Cole Bridge, Eel River Run & Stonewall Park. "We've had several citizens stress that they have used the trail and felt unsafe at some point or felt scared and are reluctant to get back on them but with the security cameras, they're excited and ready to try them again," said Marla Evanich, Administrative Assistant to the Mayor. Mayor David Kitchell has vocalized his support for the crowdfunding campaign. If the city can raise $25,000, the Indiana Housing and Community Development Authority will match that.

COUNTIES: VIGO JAIL RULED UNCONSTITUTIONAL - A judge says the current conditions at the Vigo County Jail violate both the 8th and 14th amendments to the Constitution (Indiana Public Media). The ruling signed yesterday by U.S. Chief District Judge Jane Magnus-Stinson lays out what the county has to do to address the issues outlined in the suit. Among them the county has to submit regular updates on the progress of a new jail and when it will open. The judge says the inmates' attorneys have a right to monitor that progress. The judge ordered that they have access to daily jail population reports and incident reports from the jail. The county also has to appear in court each month to provide detailed updates on planning and construction of a new jail. The Vigo County Council is expected to move forward on the issue at a meeting this month.

COUNTIES: JEFFERSON HIRES JAIL CONSULTANT - Jefferson County officials hired RQAW Architecture in February 2018 on a recommendation from the county's Exploratory Jail Committee, which received applications and saw presentations from RQAW and at least one other interested firm (Madison Courier). RQAW's task was to create a study that looked at the state of the jail on Walnut Street downtown — including the building's capacity, population history and trends, operational costs, maintenance costs — and predict the trends that are key determining factors in the needs for a new jail facility. RQAW began collecting data in March 2018 and presented a finished feasibility study in September 2018. Their methodology for learning about the current facility's ins and outs included data collection and interviews with county personnel and leadership. According to the study: "Generally, all the statistical information gathered shows the factors that impact jail population have been increasing."

COUNTIES: HOWARD BEGINS TEXTING DEFENDANTS - Howard County has kicked off a new service to remind criminal defendants of upcoming hearing dates — an effort officials hope will limit jail population figures and the resources law enforcement spends on tracking down people who failed to show in court (Myers, Kokomo Tribune). "As most of you probably know, the two highest categories of people who are housed in the Howard County jail are those who have failed to appear for hearings, or probation violations," Superior Court 1 Judge William Menges told Howard County Council members this week. Last fall, Menges explained, the county transitioned to the Odyssey Case Management System, which maintains court records and dockets. The Indiana Judicial Branch describes Odyssey as "a person-based system, which allows for a directory of people and entities. For example, a judge has the ability to access all criminal cases that a defendant has in other courts around the state."

COUNTIES: LAKE FACES FOSTER CHILD SUIT - Lake County is among three Indiana counties being sued in federal court for not providing attorneys to kids in child welfare cases. More than 30 states require that youths in the child welfare system be given legal representation, yet Indiana is not one of them (Bruce, NWI Times). The suit, filed in the Southern District of Indiana, claims this contradicts the U.S. Constitution's equal protection clause. "Where someone's going to live, who their family's going to be, where they're going to go to school — the kids are at the total mercy of the court," said Steve Keane, a San Diego attorney with Morrison & Foerster, a law firm representing the plaintiffs. "Other states have recognized that kids need an attorney in those circumstances: to navigate those options and the proceedings and advocate for what the kid wants." Tony Overholt, an attorney hired to represent Lake County in the case, declined to comment because the litigation is pending.

HOLCOMB, RUDD PUSHING RURAL BROADBAND: Broadband Internet access is sorely lacking in rural parts of Indiana. A new push from the Holcomb Administration looks to change that (Darling, WIBC). Citing a Purdue University study that said Indiana could gain billions of dollars from the full-deployment of broadband Internet in rural areas, Governor Holcomb is implementing the Next Level Broadband Initiative will dedicate $100 million to bring broadband service to the entire state. "Folks from children to seniors, to businesses are struggling with this issue," said Indiana's Director for Broadband Opportunities Scott Rudd, who has only been on the job for six months traveling around the state and getting a feel for what areas need broadband access the most. "I live next to a public library," Rudd said to Inside Indiana Business. "Everyday when I'm going to work, I see people parked in their cars with the lights on on their phones or laptops. They're using a technology that they don't have access to at home and that might be due to a lack of affordability." Rudd said the Next Level Broadband Initiative will be carried out in a partnership with INDOT and The Indiana Office of Community and Rural Affairs (OCRA). "We'll go to providers or folks who may want to provide service to these un-served areas," he added. "An un-served area is the definition of an area that does not have at least 10/1 Mbps speed." Rudd said that this is a "local economic development issue" and that he is seeing many small community leaders getting together to help bring Internet access to their area. He said they have already had success in some initial pushes in rural parts of Brown and Crawford Counties.

MORE INDIANA STUDENTS TAKING ADVANCED EXAMS: More Indiana students are taking and passing advanced placement exams. The Indiana Department of Education announced last month that about 1,200 more public school students in the class of 2018 took AP exams than those in the previous year's graduating class (Lanich, NWI Times). The IDOE's data show that the rate of Indiana public school students earning a passing grade of 3 or higher has increased 12.6 percent in the last three years. "Our recent data show more Hoosier high school students are earning early college credit through AP and dual credit courses than ever before," Indiana Commissioner for Higher Education Teresa Lubbers said in an IDOE news release. "We are encouraged by this trend, as early college credit leads to higher success rates and cost savings for students and the state." A score of 3 or higher is needed to pass the exam, evaluated on a 1 to 5 scale. Each AP course is modeled off of comparable college courses, allowing high schoolers both an opportunity to excel in rigorous courses and develop study habits in preparation for higher education.

U.S., CHINA NEARING TRADE DEAL: China and the U.S. are in the final stage of completing a trade deal, with Beijing offering to lower tariffs and other restrictions on American farm, chemical, auto and other products and Washington considering removing most, if not all, sanctions levied against Chinese products since last year (Wall Street Journal). The agreement is taking shape following February's talks in Washington, people briefed on the matter on both sides said. They cautioned that hurdles remain, and each side faces possible resistance at home that the terms are too favorable to the other side. Despite the remaining hurdles, the talks have progressed to the extent that a formal agreement could be reached at a summit between President Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping, probably around March 27, after Mr. Xi finishes a trip to Italy and France, individuals with knowledge of the plans said. As part of a deal, China is pledging to help level the playing field, including speeding up the timetable for removing foreign-ownership limitations on car ventures and reducing tariffs on imported vehicles to below the current auto tariff of 15%. Beijing would also step up purchases of U.S. goods—a tactic designed to appeal to President Trump, who campaigned on closing the bilateral trade deficit with China. One of the sweeteners would be an $18 billion natural-gas purchase from Cheniere Energy Inc., people familiar with the transaction said.

RURAL NURSING HOMES CLOSING: More than 440 rural nursing homes have closed or merged over the last decade, according to the Cowles Research Group, which tracks long-term care, and each closure scattered patients like seeds in the wind. Instead of finding new care in their homes and communities, many end up at different nursing homes far from their families (New York Times). In remote communities like Mobridge, S.D., an old railroad town of 3,500 people, there are few choices for an aging population. Home health aides can be scarce and unaffordable to hire around the clock. The few senior-citizen apartments have waiting lists. Adult children have long since moved away to bigger cities. "How often have you heard somebody say, 'If I go to a nursing home, just shoot me?'" said Stephen Monroe, a researcher and author who tracks aging in America. "In the rural areas, you don't have options. There are no alternatives." The relocations can be traumatic for older residents, and the separation creates agonizing complications for families. Relatives say they have to cut back visits to one day a week.

ENOUGH VOTES IN SENATE TO DEFEAT EMERGENCY DECREE: Opponents of President Donald Trump's declaration of a national emergency at the U.S.-Mexico border appear to have enough Senate votes to reject his move, now that Republican Rand Paul of Kentucky has said he can't go along with the White House (ABC News). The House has voted to derail the action, and if the Senate follows later this month, the measure would go to Trump for his promised veto. Three other Republican senators have announced they'll vote "no" — Susan Collins of Maine, Lisa Murkowski of Alaska and Thom Tillis of North Carolina. Paul makes it four, and assuming that all 47 Democrats and their independent allies go against Trump, that would give opponents 51 votes — just past the majority needed. Congress is unlikely to have the votes to override. "I can't vote to give the president the power to spend money that hasn't been appropriated by Congress," Paul said at a GOP dinner Saturday night at Western Kentucky University, according to the Bowling Green (Ky.) Daily News. "We may want more money for border security, but Congress didn't authorize it. If we take away those checks and balances, it's a dangerous thing." U.S. Sen. Todd Young told HPI last week he is undecided.

DEMOCRATS WARY OF IMPEACHMENT: House Democratic leaders worry impeachment proceedings could backfire if they move too fast (Allen, Axios). So they plan to pursue a slow-bleed strategy with lengthy public hearings and scores of witnesses to methodically pick apart President Trump's finances and presidency. What's new: In an investigation being coordinated among six to eight House committees, Trump will essentially be on public trial for months to come, with topics that include abuse of power, obstruction of justice, conflicts of interest (including profit from the Trump International Hotel on Pennsylvania Avenue) and money laundering. Why it matters: Democrats want to create a large, damning public record of testimony, documents and investigative reports. Speaker Pelosi and other top Democrats don't want to take up impeachment if it's going to go nowhere in the Republican-controlled Senate.

TRUMP'S LIES, MISLEADING COMMENTS TOP 9K: Powered by his two-hour stemwinder at the Conservative Political Action Conference on March 2 — which featured more than 100 false or misleading claims — President Trump is on pace to exceed his daily quota set during his first two years in office (Washington Post). The president averaged nearly 5.9 false or misleading claims a day in his first year in office. He hit nearly 16.5 a day in his second year. So far in 2019, he's averaging nearly 22 claims a day. As of the end of March 3, the 773th day of his term in office, Trump accumulated 9,014 fishy claims, according to The Fact Checker's database that analyzes, categorizes and tracks every suspect statement uttered by the president. Trump's performance at CPAC is emblematic of his version of the truth during his presidency — a potent mix of exaggerated numbers, unwarranted boasting and outright falsehoods. His speech helped push March 3 to his fourth-biggest day for false or misleading claims, totaling 104.

POLITICAL LOCAL WEBSITES POPPING UP ACROSS NATION: An investigation by fact-checking company Snopes finds that a series of seemingly innocuous local websites, which have popped up all over the country, are being run by GOP consultants whose businesses are funded in part by candidates the websites cover, Axios' Sara Fischer reports. Why it matters: The consultants setting up these websites, first reported last year by Politico, are expanding their efforts to more battleground states in the run-up to the 2020 presidential election. They claim that the sites are funded by ads. But the Snopes investigation found that the websites are often supported by wealthy benefactors. Details: Michael Patrick Leahy, a Tea Party-connected conservative activist that is tied to one of the sites, Tennessee Star, wrote in an email to Snopes: "We are in business to make a profit, and have a number of advertisers to prove it." But Snopes found that Tennessee Star runs ads from political groups such as the Koch-founded Americans for Prosperity and local GOP fundraisers. The big picture: It's difficult to draw a line between political activism and journalism in the digital era, in part because activists have gotten so good at using technology to blur lines by creating news outlets that look impartial.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: The Holcomb administration's push for rural broadband has been long needed. It is as vital of connecting Indiana as the I-69 to Evansville and the evolving U.S. 31 freeway have been. The day is approaching when any Hoosier can conduct business from virtually anywhere in the state. - Brian A. Howey

BUTTIGIEG RETURNS TO IOWA TODAY: Mayor Pete Buttigieg will return to Iowa today for his second trip since announcing his presidential exploratory committee (Howey Politics Indiana). He will be hosting meet and greets with Democrats in Davenport, Iowa City, and Cedar Rapids. The schedule: 12:00 PM: Davenport - Meet and Greet, Brew in the Village, 1104 Jersey Ridge Rd, Davenport, IA 52803 Host: Scott County Democrats; 2:30 PM: Iowa City - Meet and Greet, Location: The Airliner, University of Iowa College Dems/Spectrum UI; 4:30 PM: Cedar Rapids - Meet and Greet, Dublin City Pub, Host: Linn County Democrats.

MUNCIE MAYORAL CANDIDATES DEBATE: Muncie's mayoral candidates had their first chance to publicly discuss issues facing the city and how to better improve neighborhoods on Saturday at the 4th annual IDEA Conference (Slabaugh, Muncie Star Press). There were four major questions/topics: What can each candidate bring to the table, the drug epidemic in the city, the state of Muncie's schools and how each candidate would address the corruption issues in city government. "The next mayor of Muncie is in this room," Mitch Issacs said to crowd members, who responded with applause. Each candidate was given a minute to talk about their platform and answer several questions selected from the nearly 50 questions posed. The candidates in attendance at the forum were Democrat Terry Whitt Bailey, Republican Tom Bracken, Democrat Andrew Dale, Republican Nate Jones, Republican Dan Ridenour, Democrat Saul Riley and Democrat David Smith. Democrat Kenneth Davenport, a perennial candidate for Delaware County offices, was the only mayoral candidate not in attendance.

MUNCIE CANDIDATES INTRODUCE THEMSELVES: What quality makes you the best candidate? (Muncie Star Press). Terry Whitt Bailey: "I'm the best candidate because I have the experience," Bailey said. She explained her career at Ball State and her work as the director with the City of Muncie's Community Development office. Bailey also cited numerous boards that she has, or is currently, serving on. Tom Bracken: He cited his work with Ball State University and how having served on the finance committee he helped oversee the money coming into the community. "I like to see things working smoothly and when they don't, I look to fix it," Bracken said. "For the city, that problem is in the mayor's office," he added. Andrew Dale: He cited his work in co-founding the Shafer Leadership Academy more than a decade ago. "I can't tell you how many people, seasoned leaders, that didn't think it could happen," Dale said. "I have the skills to bring people together and get things done." Nate Jones: He said his leadership roles in the military and his work with the Delaware County veteran's affairs office was proof that he can take a government office above and beyond what it was when he first took over. Dan Ridenour: He said that he's served on the city council for several years now, and that he's been involved in the community through different neighborhood associations. He said he's also worked with 14 different non-profit organizations across the community. Saul Riley: He said that while working at the crisis center for seven years he learned to listen. "It's a good quality the mayor should be able to do is listen to the people," Riley said. David Smith: He said that he already has experience in government operations. He's familiar with administrative code for cities and towns because of his work with Indiana State Police. Trust would be a big thing, and something he would focus on bringing back to the office. He's also a small business owner.

HICKENLOOPER ENTERS 2020 RACE: A new campaign committee popped up this morning on the FEC's website: Hickenlooper 2020. A document filed with the commission says that John Hickenlooper, Colorado's former Democratic governor, is launching a bid for president (Politico Playbook). Hickenlooper was a two-term governor of Colorado, and before that, was a restaurateur who had a big hand in the revitalization of downtown Denver. You don't need us to tell you this, but he's entering a large Democratic primary field.

Sunday Talk

NADLER WILL SEEK TRUMP DOCS: House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) said on Sunday that his panel will request documents from dozens of entities and individuals close to the White House as part of his panel's investigation into "obstruction of justice, corruption and abuse of power." "Tomorrow, we will be issuing document requests to over 60 different people and individuals from the White House to the Department of Justice, Donald Trump Jr., Allen Weisselberg, to begin the investigations to present the case to the American people about obstruction of justice, corruption and abuse of power," Nadler said on ABC's "This Week." Nadler said during the interview that he thinks President Trump obstructed justice. "It's very clear that the president obstructed justice," he said. "It's very clear — 1,100 times he referred to [special counsel Robert Mueller's] investigation as a witch hunt ... he tried to protect [former national security adviser Michael] Flynn from being investigated by the FBI. He fired [former FBI Director James] Comey in order to stop the 'Russian thing,' as he told NBC News. ... He's intimidated witnesses. In public."

MCCARTHY LASHES OUT AT NADLER: House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) on Sunday dismissed the Democratic House Judiciary Committee chairman's plans to investigate whether President Trump merits impeachment, saying "there's nothing that the president did wrong." "Show me where the president did anything to be impeached," McCarthy said on ABC's "This Week." "I think Congressman Nadler decided to impeach the president the day the president won the election," he added. Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) said earlier on the Sunday show that "it's very clear that the president obstructed justice." He added that before Democrats could seek impeachment proceedings against the president, they need to "persuade the American public that it ought to happen." "We do not now have the evidence all sorted out to do the impeachment," he told ABC.

MCCARTHY CONTRADICTS TRUMP ON WARMBIER: House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy (R-Calif.) said Sunday that he believes Kim Jong Un knew about the treatment of Otto Warmbier, days after President Trump said he took the North Korean leader at his word that he was unaware of the American student's treatment. "Look, North Korea murdered Otto," McCarthy said on "This Week" on ABC. "I think Kim had all authority to do that. I mean, I think Kim knew what happened, which was wrong. That's why when we passed sanctions we named them after Otto Warmbier." McCarthy said he believes Trump clarified his comments, a reference to a tweet in which the president claimed he was "misinterpreted." Host George Stephanopoulos noted that the president's tweet said he holds North Korea responsible for Warmbier's death, not Kim specifically. "Well, I think Kim knew," McCarthy responded.

WARNER BELIEVES TRUMP COLLUDED WITH RUSSIA: Sen. Mark Warner, D-Va., on Sunday said there are "enormous amounts of evidence" linking the Trump campaign to Russia — the same day House Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam Schiff, D-Calif., said there's "direct evidence" of collusion between the two. The top Democrat on the Senate Intelligence Committee disputed on NBC's "Meet the Press" recent remarks by Sen. Richard Burr, R-N.C. claiming that the committee hasn't found "factual evidence" of collusion between Russia and the Trump campaign. Warner, referring to "the litany of what we know," said, "the ongoing negotiations about Trump Tower, well into the campaign, I believe the fact that Mr. Trump knew about the dump of the Wikileaks material, the fact that clearly the meeting at Trump Tower meeting which was not described appropriately, in terms of offering dirt," were all evidence. "To me, that's all evidence," he said. "There's no one that could factually say there's not plenty of evidence of collaboration or communications between Trump Organization and Russians."

INSLEE WILL FOCUS ON CLIMATE CHANGE: Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D), who announced a 2020 presidential bid last week, said Sunday that there will be an "enormous cost" if the U.S. does not act to combat climate change. "If you net this out, what's going to require sacrifices is the course of inaction. You've got to understand there's enormous cost of doing nothing here," Inslee said on ABC's "This Week." Inslee warned that communities could be flooded and there could be additional damaging fires like the ones last year in California if nothing is done about the climate. "There's a huge cost to our economy, to our health, to our national security if we do not act," he said. "But there's an enormous economic advantage if we embrace clean energy."

SCHIFF BELIEVES TRUMP OBSTRUCTED JUSTICE: House Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) said Sunday that he believes a Russian lawyer's 2016 offer of damaging information on Hillary Clinton to members of the Trump campaign and their subsequent meeting amounts to "direct evidence" of collusion. "I think there is direct evidence in the emails from the Russians through their intermediary offering dirt on Hillary Clinton as part of what is described in writing as the Russian government effort to help elect Donald Trump," Schiff said on CBS's "Face the Nation," in response to a question about collusion. "They offer that dirt. There is an acceptance of that offer in writing from the president's son, Don Jr., and there is overt acts and furtherance of that," he added, citing a summer 2016 meeting at Trump Tower between the Russian lawyer and members of the president's team. "That to me is direct evidence," Schiff continued. "But there's also abundant circumstantial evidence."

JORDAN DOESN'T BELIEVE COHEN: Rep. Jim Jordan (R-Ohio) said Sunday that Michael Cohen's testimony that he has never been to Prague "undermines" the so-called Steele dossier, which alleges connections between President Trump and Russia. "He said that, and that's something you can verify. You can look at passports, you can look at travel," the conservative lawmaker said on NBC's "Meet the Press" when asked if he believes that Cohen, who served as Trump's personal attorney, has never been to Prague. "So that undermines this whole dossier, which remember, was the basis for this whole crazy investigation to begin with," Jordan added.

BOLTON TALKS ABOUT TRUMP, KIM: National security adviser John Bolton said Sunday that his opinion "doesn't matter" when asked if he believes North Korean leader Kim Jong Un was responsible for the death of Otto Warmbier, the American college student who died after being imprisoned there. "My opinion doesn't matter," Bolton said during an interview on CNN's "State of the Union" when pressed on the subject by host Jake Tapper. President Trump said last week that he would take Kim "at his word" after he said the reclusive leader denied being involved in Warmbier's death. Bolton noted Sunday that he's no longer a Fox News contributor and said it's not the job of administration officials to give opinions "from the distance."

BOLTON WANTS TO KEEP KOREA TALKS GOING: President Trump walked away from his second summit with North Korean dictator Kim Jong Un in Vietnam without a firm agreement in hand, failing to secure a deal to get the North to give up its nuclear program. But John Bolton, the White House national security adviser, argued the meeting was far from a failure and said Mr. Trump expects to be back at the negotiating table sometime in the future. "I don't consider the summit a failure. I consider it a success, defined as the president protecting and advancing American national interests," Bolton said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. After "extensive" preparations and discussions with the North Koreans, Bolton said "the issue really was whether North Korea was prepared to accept what the president called the 'big deal,' which is denuclearization entirely, under a definition the president handed to Kim Jong Un, and have the potential for an enormous economic future, or try to do something less than that, which was unacceptable to us. So the president held firm to his view."

SEN. JONES WANTS TEETH IN VOTING RIGHTS ACT: Sen. Doug Jones, the first Democrat to represent Alabama in the Senate in 25 years, urged his congressional colleagues to "put some teeth back" in the landmark Voting Rights Act of 1965, saying he believes Republican lawmakers across the country are working to suppress African-American votes. "You have to look at the state legislatures, governors and members of Congress that are Republicans," Jones said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. "For whatever reason they do not want African-Americans and other minorities to vote." "Rather than trying to get those votes, they seem to want to restrict those votes," he added. Last week, House and Senate Democrats introduced legislation to restore a provision of the Voting Rights Act struck down by the Supreme Court in the controversial Shelby County v. Holder ruling in 2013. That ruling required certain jurisdictions with a history of voter disenfranchisement to seek approval from the Justice Department before rolling out changes to their voting systems.

General Assembly

MINIMUM WAGE UNLIKELY TO CHANGE: Indiana's minimum wage is staying put for now (WIBC). Lawmakers at the statehouse rejected an amendment last week to the state budget that aimed to raise Indiana's minimum wage to $8.50. The current minimum wage is $7.25 an hour. Democrat State Representative Cherrish Pryor of Indianapolis said on the House floor that Indiana is behind other states on this issue, saying that Indiana has not raised its minimum wage since 2008. "All other states, with the exception of Kentucky, their minimum wage is higher," Pryor said. "Illinois just voted to raise their minimum wage to $15 an hour. Of course that is not what we are asking for." Pryor said something needs to be done since she said $7.25 is not enough to live on or support a family these days. She added, the increase would put an extra $2,600 a year in to the paycheck of an average Hoosier employee that gets minimum wage for a 40-hour work week.

Congress

HOUSE TO VOTE ON ANTI-CORRUPTION PACKAGE: The House will vote on a sweeping 571-page bill this week that would strengthen federal ethics laws, expand voting rights and require presidential nominees to release their tax returns, Axios' Alayna Treene reports. Several Democratic House candidates made the For The People Act, also known as H.R. 1, a hallmark of their 2018 midterm campaigns, and the legislation was formally introduced on the first day of the new Congress. Why it matters: "We have a broken political system and a corrupt finance system today," Fred Wertheimer, president of Democracy 21 and a longtime proponent of campaign finance reform, told Axios. "H.R. 1 is the most important reform legislation to repair our democracy since the post-Watergate reforms. ... There has never been a bill as broad in its scope and coverage as this bill, and we will work from here."

PAUL WON'T BACK NATIONAL EMERGENCY: U.S. Sen. Rand Paul will not support President Trump's national emergency (Fox News). "I support President Trump, but I can't support this National Emergency Declaration," Paul said. "Every single Republican I know decried President Obama's use of executive power to legislate. We were right then. But the only way to be an honest officeholder is to stand up for the same principles no matter who is in power. I stand with the president often, and I do so with a loud voice. Today, I think he's wrong, not on policy, but in seeking to expand the powers of the presidency beyond their constitutional limits. I understand his frustration. Dealing with Congress can be pretty difficult sometimes. But Congress appropriates money, and his only constitutional recourse, if he does not like the amount they appropriate, is to veto the bill."

NOT ENOUGH VOTES TO OVERRIDE TRUMP VETO: There aren't enough congressional votes to overturn President Trump's veto (Politico Playbook). It would take 290 votes in the House to overturn a presidential veto, which would mean 55 Republicans would need to vote with all Democrats, and that isn't happening. There aren't 67 senators who will vote to overturn Trump's veto, either.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP BLAMES COHEN FOR NORTH KOREA - President Trump on Sunday blamed the congressional testimony of Michael Cohen, his former personal lawyer and fixer, for the collapse in negotiations with North Korea over its nuclear program last week — continuing to vent about the investigations encircling him and his associates (Washington Post). During seven hours of testimony on Wednesday, Cohen said that Trump manipulated financial records and that the now-president knew in advance about WikiLeaks' efforts to release damaging information about his Democratic opponent, Hillary Clinton, during the 2016 campaign, among other allegations. The testimony unfolded as Trump had traveled to Hanoi to try to forge a deal with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un over curbing his country's nuclear program. Although Trump, while in Vietnam, said he walked away from the nuclear summit with Kim because of a disagreement about economic sanctions on North Korea, he gave another explanation for the failure of the talks on Twitter on Sunday evening. "For the Democrats to interview in open hearings a convicted liar & fraudster, at the same time as the very important Nuclear Summit with North Korea, is perhaps a new low in American politics and may have contributed to the 'walk,' " he tweeted. "Never done when a president is overseas. Shame!"

WHITE HOUSE: INTEL CHIEFS CHANGE TRUMP BRIEFINGS - Intelligence officials who brief the president have warned him about Chinese espionage in bottom-line business terms. They have used Black Sea shipping figures to demonstrate the effect of Russia's aggression in Ukraine. And they have filled the daily threat briefing with charts and graphs of economic data (New York Times). In an effort to accommodate President Trump, who has attacked them publicly as "naïve" and in need of going "back to school," the nation's intelligence agencies have revamped their presentations to focus on subjects their No. 1 customer wants to hear about — economics and trade. Intelligence officers, steeped in how Mr. Trump views the world, now work to answer his repeated question: Who is winning? What the president wants to know, according to former officials, is what country is making more money or gaining a financial advantage.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP CHANGES STANCE ON 5G - The Trump re-election campaign sparked widespread confusion inside the Trump administration and the cellular wireless industry on Friday night when it advocated for a nationwide "wholesale" 5G network, which is 180 degrees from official White House policy (Swan, Axios). Driving the news: For months, 2020 campaign manager Brad Parscale had been arguing for this policy on Twitter, but he had been clear it was his "personal opinion." Now, Politico had a Trump campaign spokesperson, on the record, seeming to present a major government intervention in 5G as the campaign's official position. 5G stands for "fifth generation" wireless technology that promises to deliver mobile connections that are 100 times faster than the current 4G networks we rely on today. Verizon and AT&T have made huge business bets on building their own 5G networks on top of the current 4G networks. The result? Mass uncertainty. Administration officials who work on 5G freaked out. And industry leaders were perplexed.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP/PENCE SCHEDULE - President Trump will meet with the North Dakota State University 2018 Division I FCS National Champions football team at 11:30 a.m. for a photo in the East Room. At 12:30, he will have lunch with VP Mike Pence in the private dining room. Trump will sign an executive order in the Oval Office at 2:30 on "Supporting the Transition of Active Duty Service Members and Military Veterans into the Merchant Marine." He will also deliver remarks at 4:15 p.m. in the State Dining Room to the National Association of Attorneys General.

CITIES: MERRILLVILLE SEEKING TOWN MANAGER - The search for a new town manager has begun. Town Manager Bruce Spires is retiring at the end of August. Spires has served in the position for about six years (NWI Times). Efforts to find a new town manager will start by posting the position internally for two weeks, Town Councilman Shawn Pettit said. If that produces no applicants, the council will discuss its next method to attract candidates for the administrative role. Pettit said he wants to have the next town manager hired by July 1 so that person will have sufficient time to train with Spires before he leaves. Pettit said Spires will be missed in the municipality. Spires has been involved in numerous major road enhancement projects in town. He also has played a role in several other endeavors, including planning for the new community center.

CITIES: WHITESTOWN APPOINTS TEMPORARY TOWN MANAGER - The Whitestown Town Council won't select a permanent replacement for town manager Dax Norton until 2020 (Quinn, IBJ). Norton, who was hired as town manager in 2013, resigned in January to take a job as municipal administration and management consultant at Indianapolis-based MS Consultants. He submitted his resignation to the town council on Jan. 2. For now, the town has appointed an interim town manager who will serve in the role until January, when a newly elected town council will choose a permanent replacement. Jason Lawson, a town employee for 11 years, was named acting town manager. Most recently, he served as director of the department of public works. Prior to Norton's departure, Lawson was No. 2 in command and led the town when Norton was on vacation.

CITIES: IPS PUSHES BACK ON MANUEL, HOWE CHARTER SCHOOLS - Indianapolis Public Schools is asking the state to hold off on a decision next week about the future of three schools transitioning out of state control (IBJ). A special task force is recommending to the state that Howe and Manual high schools be converted to charter schools run by Charter Schools USA, the private management company that has been tasked with turning around the schools over the last eight years. It's an option that would keep the schools open, which many community members have said they want, though the schools have had mixed academic results so far. But IPS said it's unclear how the district could be financially affected by the schools becoming independent charter schools. The district owns the two high school buildings and said there are "several uncertainties related to the debt financing."

BIDEN, SANDERS LEAD IN IOWA POLL; BUTTIGIEG AT 1%: The field of Democrats seeking the party's nomination for president in 2020 is one of the largest the party has seen, but for Iowa's most likely caucus attendees, two names stand above the rest: former Vice President Joe Biden and Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont. The latest CNN/Des Moines Register/Mediacom poll finds Biden and Sanders near even at 27% and 25% respectively, with no other candidate earning even 10% support. South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg comes in at 1%, with another 1% listing him as a second choice. It's the first time he's registered in a poll, coming on the eve of his 9 p.m. CNN town hall tonight. Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts (9%) and Sen. Kamala Harris of California (7%) come closest, and of the rest of the 20-person field tested in the poll, just former US Rep. Beto O'Rourke of Texas (5%), Sen. Cory Booker of New Jersey and Sen. Amy Klobuchar of Minnesota (3% each) rise above 1% support.

MAYOR PETE CALLS FOR EXPANDED SCOTUS, ELECTORAL COLLEGE REPEAL: While he lacks the name recognition or fundraising skills of many of his Democratic presidential rivals, Mayor Pete Buttigieg of South Bend, Ind., spent his Friday visit to the Granite State using a bold set of reforms to set himself apart from the growing pack of 2020 contenders (Union-Leader). Buttigieg, who made headlines last month for appearing to entertain the idea of packing the Supreme Court, doubled down on his call for adding additional members to the high court by publicly endorsing a plan that would grow the nine-member body by six additional justices. Signaling his preference for a plan he says originates from the Yale Law Review, Buttigieg described his ideal Supreme Court as a 15-member body composed of five justices appointed by a Republican President, five justices appointed by a Democratic President and the remaining five appointed from the appellate courts by the unanimous approval of the other 10 justices. "It takes politics out of it a little bit," said Buttigieg of the proposal. "We can't go on like this where every time there's a vacancy, there are these games being played and then an apocalyptic ideological battle over who the appointee is going to be." Describing the Electoral College as part of a system that has "overruled the American people" twice in his lifetime, Buttigieg also repeated his call for the election of the President by popular vote. "It doesn't matter most years what we think because our state is too conservative to matter in the Electoral College," said Buttigieg of his native Indiana. "And if you live in California, it doesn't really matter what you think because your state's too liberal to matter in the Electoral College. I just believe that we'd be better served if we had a system where the person who wins the most votes actually wins the election."

HOOSIER FARMERS FEELING THE FINANCIAL SQUEEZE: It's a daily ritual. A group of farmers gather around 8 a.m. each day at Frick Services in Wyatt to talk about the weather, news of the day and issues facing farmers. It's a scene that plays out in agricultural communities across the country. They know crop farmers who are struggling. They know dairy farmers who have folded in recent years as agriculture has been battered by low commodity prices, tariffs that have withered their markets and even changing consumer preferences (Semmler, South Bend Tribune). Some have been forced to take jobs outside of farming in the worst down cycles, coming home at night to work the fields. "That's why the equipment has lights," one quipped. The sums, which only include the cost of seed, fertilizer, crop insurance, herbicides and fuel, are staggering — $196,000 to plant 500 acres of corn and $141,000 to plant soybean — and the costs to borrow have gone up thanks to higher interest rates. Though it might be possible to squeak by, even modest profit margins disappear when the cost of land, labor and machinery is included in the equation, said Michael Langemeier, an agricultural economist at Purdue University. The fact is that more farms are starting to show stress as a result of commodity prices, which have been sliding since 2014, said Langemeier, adding that farm liquidity has been declining "rather dramatically" over the past few years. "It seems high only compared to the historical lows in 2013 to 2014," Brady Brewer of Purdue said. But after a few years of lower commodity prices and other issues, it's clear that farms are starting to feel the effects. If the trade war doesn't come to an end, there could be dire consequences for years to come. "It could create an incentive for other countries to put more soybean into acreage," Brewer said. "If that happens we could lose market share that's difficult to get back."

TEACHERS TELL HOLCOMB, LEGISLATURE 'COME CLOSER': Sandy Heath held a handwritten sign inside the Indiana Statehouse on Saturday that described her frustration with funding for teachers (Miley, CNHI). Her daughter, who is a teacher in Lafayette, makes about $36,000 a year. The daughter's student loan totals $50,000. Heath's sign noted that the combined figures "equal no money to live." "Our kids are suffering," she said. "They want to have a family and they can't." Heath was among more than 1,000 educators, retired teachers and school board members who filled one end of the Statehouse in a sea of red shirts worn to show support for increasing school funding and pay for Indiana teachers. The afternoon rally, held despite the weekend absence of the Indiana General Assembly, was hosted by the Indiana State Teachers Association (ISTA). Gov. Eric Holcomb has recommended a 2.1 percent funding increase for next year but teacher groups say they need at least 3 percent increase to cover inflation. "The governor has said that he is walking toward us, that the Legislature's working on this and they hope we don't walk out on them, but I would say to the governor, 'Come closer,'" ISTA President Teresa Meredith said. "We get it that they can't fix it overnight, but we know they can fix it if they're willing to sit down and talk with us and build a long-term plan."

LEGISLATORS FIND ANGRY CROWD IN KOKOMO: Local Statehouse lawmakers and event organizers clashed with area teachers at a public forum Friday, with much of the anger aimed at education funding and teacher pay (Myers, Kokomo Tribune). Included in the frustration was the disrespect felt by some teachers over how the event was managed and the actions of one state senator. On the stage were state Sen. Jim Buck, R-Kokomo; Rep. Heath VanNatter, R-Kokomo; Rep. Mike Karickhoff, R-Kokomo; and Rep. Tony Cook, R-Cicero. Teachers shouted at lawmakers multiple times through the event as they attempted to discuss education issues — teacher pay comments sparked the most anger — causing a Chamber leader to tell teachers their behavior caused the Third House's premature end. Kimberly Pinkerton, manager of the Greater Kokomo Chamber of Commerce, told the crowd that "it's just like in a classroom, when the kids become disruptive" its time to end. Her comments, prompted by someone shouting the time, were in large part drowned out by sarcastic laughter and hollering from frustrated teachers and their supporters.

REGION DRUG OVERDOSE DEATHS DECLINE IN 2018: After a record-setting 2017, drug overdose deaths were down last year in Northwest Indiana, and local officials are cautiously optimistic that the opioid epidemic is slowing down (Bruce, NWI Times). "I would like to hope — I think that would probably be the best word — that we have reached the peak," said former Porter County Coroner Chuck Harris, who in 2019 became that county's recorder. "It's been a long, hard-fought battle," he said. In 2018, Lake County had 152 overdose deaths, Porter County had 46 and LaPorte had 17, compared to 196, 50 and 26 the year before, according to their county coroners. Northwest Indiana had its most drug deaths in 2017 — 268 vs. 215 last year. Experts attribute the decline to the widespread use of the overdose-reversal drug naloxone, an increase in treatment availability and more awareness about the crisis, among other reasons. Deaths involving heroin in the Region were down in 2018, but local experts say cocaine and methamphetamine use are both on the rise. "We have an opioid epidemic going on, but truly overall we have a drug and alcohol epidemic," said Megan Fisher, director of medication-assisted treatment for Porter-Starke Services.

GAMING COMMISSION APPROVES GARY CASINO PURCHASE: The Indiana Gaming Commission voted on Friday afternoon to approve Spectacle Entertainment's acquisition of both casinos in Gary (Erdody, IBJ). The acquisition will give Spectacle control over Majestic Holdco LLC, which owns the Majestic Star Casino and the Majestic Star Casino II, both located on Lake Michigan's Buffington Harbor in Gary. Spectacle is a relatively new company led by some of the same individuals who controlled Centaur Gaming before Centaur was bought by Las Vegas-based Caesars Entertainment Corp. Rod Ratcliff, former chairman and CEO of Centaur Gaming, is the chairman and CEO of Spectacle, and John Keeler, the former general counsel for Centaur, is general counsel for Spectacle. Ratcliff and Greg Gibson, an entrepreneur from Terre Haute who will serve as vice chairman of Spectacle, are the principal investors. Spectacle hopes to close the gambling boats on the harbor and use the licenses attached to the casinos to open two new venues—one along the Interstate 80/Interstate 94 corridor in Gary and one in Terre Haute—as a way to generate more revenue from the licenses. Majestic Star and Majestic Star II are among the smallest casinos in the state. In fiscal 2018, Majestic Star ranked third lowest in total "win," which is gambling revenue after payouts, with $92.2 million. Majestic Star II ranked second lowest with $59.8 million.

NEW CASINO VENUES PLANNED: John Keeler has told lawmakers that they expect the new Gary casino to be a $300 million development with a 200-room hotel (IBJ). The new casino would hire an additional 400 employees—on top of the existing 800 employees now working at Majestic Star I and Majestic Star II. Gary officials have been supportive of the project, as they see an opportunity to develop Buffington Harbor into a logistics and transportation hub if the casinos are relocated. Terre Haute Casino rendering. The Terre Haute casino could cost between $100 million and $150 million and create 300 to 400 jobs.

DEFICITS BALLOON (AND NOBODY CARES): The federal budget deficit is ballooning on President Donald Trump's watch, and few in Washington seem to care (AP). And even if they did, the political dynamics that enabled bipartisan deficit-cutting deals decades ago has disappeared, replaced by bitter partisanship and chronic dysfunction. That's the reality that will greet Trump's latest budget, which will promptly be shelved after landing with a thud on Monday. Like previous spending blueprints, Trump's plan for the 2020 budget year will propose cuts to many domestic programs favored by lawmakers in both parties but leave alone politically popular retirement programs such as Medicare and Social Security. Washington probably will devote months to wrestling over erasing the last remnants of a failed 2011 budget deal that would otherwise cut core Pentagon operations by $71 billion and domestic agencies and foreign aid by $55 billion. Top lawmakers are pushing for a reprise of three prior deals to use spending cuts or new revenues and prop up additional spending rather than defray deficits that are again approaching $1 trillion. It's put deficit hawks in a gloomy mood. "The president doesn't care. The leadership of the Democratic Party doesn't care," said former Sen. Judd Gregg, R-N.H. "And social media is in stampede mode." Trump's budget arrives as the latest Treasury Department figures show a 77 percent spike in the deficit over the first four months of the budget year, driven by falling revenues and steady growth in spending.

TRUMP CALLS COLTER 'WACKY NUT JOB': President Donald Trump on Saturday branded former ally Ann Coulter a "Wacky Nut Job" — less than a month after insisting he did not follow the conservative commentator and blamed journalists for exaggerating her influence over White House decision-making (Politico). "Wacky Nut Job @AnnCoulter, who still hasn't figured out that, despite all odds and an entire Democrat Party of Far Left Radicals against me (not to mention certain Republicans who are sadly unwilling to fight), I am winning on the Border," Trump wrote on Twitter.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg has now surfaced in a poll, at 1% in a Des Moines Register/CNN Poll. It comes on the eve of his 9 p.m. CNN town hall tonight. The opening for Mayor Pete is that NBC/Wall Street Journal polling shows little appetite among Democrats for candidates older than 75, a trait of both shared by pack leaders Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders. Democrats tend to nominate young presidential nominees (i.e. JFK, Clinton, Obama), so we're at an early and fluid stage. Mayor Pete faces a huge hill to climb and if he begins such as ascent, it would be at an event like tonight. - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

BUTTIGIEG, BENNET WON'T EMPHASIZE TRUMP: Two Democratic White House hopefuls took very different tacts in dealing with Republican President Donald Trump as they campaigned in New Hampshire on Friday (Concord Monitor). Democratic presidential contender Pete Buttigieg argued that the 2020 election shouldn't be about Trump, emphasizing that "of course we'll confront him, we'll call him out. We'll beat him. But at the end of the day, it's not about him, it's about us." Potential White House candidate Sen. Michael Bennet of Colorado had no problem targeting Trump, calling his presidency "a sorry chapter." Buttigieg – the South Bend, Indiana mayor who launched a presidential exploratory committee in January – took questions from reporters after headlining 'Politics and Eggs' at the New Hampshire Institute of Politics. Asked by the Monitor why he never mentioned Trump's name during his address and question and answer session with the audience, Buttigieg said "the biggest message I have to the current president is 'it's not about you.'"

MAYOR PETE EMPHASIZES CLIMATE CHANGE: Peter Buttigieg, the mayor of South Bend, Indiana, made another stop in New Hampshire Friday as he contemplates a 2020 presidential campaign (New Hampshire Public Radio). He told the crowd at St. Anselm College's Politics and Eggs that issues like climate change are personal for him as a millennial. At 37, he's possibly the youngest candidate in a crowded field of Democrats. "And so, too, is the economic question of whether we are on track to be the first generation in American history to earn less than our parents if nothing is done to change the trajectory of this economy," Buttigieg said. College freshman Mallory Warner drove up from Massachusetts and says Buttigieg's message of a better future for younger Americans resonates. "There's this sense of disillusionment among us in that what we say and what we do doesn't matter," Warner said. "And I think now, when you see a 37-year-old in office, it means something."

BUTTIGIEG SEEN AS A 'MODERATE': Eliminating the Electoral College and packing the Supreme Court are two big-ticket ideas. Both would require re-writing the U.S. Constitution and would result in a radical change in how America governs itself. And yet Buttigieg presented them as casually as if he were proposing a minor amendment in the tax code. And, just as noteworthy, the crowd barely reacted (NH Journal). Even more interesting is the fact that Mayor Buttigieg is widely viewed as a moderate. And with Sens. Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren in the race, perhaps he is.

SXSW CONFERENCE A TRENDY STOP FOR CANDIDATES: The annual South by Southwest (SXSW) conference in Austin, Texas, is known for launching cutting-edge tech companies like Twitter and Foursquare, and introducing new music and critically acclaimed films. In its 33-year tenure, the festival has also become a mecca for Democratic politicians seeking to appeal to left-leaning millennials in a key primary state (CBS News). As the 2020 presidential race kicks into gear, Democratic candidates are flocking to SXSW, hoping the festival will serve as a launchpad for their campaigns. Republicans, as well as former Starbucks CEO Howard Schultz, who is considering an independent bid for president, will also be there. "The weekend appearances by a collection of Democrats, Republicans and independent Howard Schultz at what was once known as a modest music festival amounts to the largest gathering of declared or potential presidential candidates of the year," said CBS News political correspondent Ed O'Keefe. "Much of what is discussed this weekend could end up being fine-tuned for voters in the early primary states," he added. Declared Democratic candidates Amy Klobuchar, Elizabeth Warren and Pete Buttigieg will speaking at the conference Saturday. Trump primary challenger Bill Weld, a Republican, is also speaking, as is Republican John Kasich, who is publicly mulling a 2020 primary bid. Rising Democratic star Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez is also set to appear at the festival on Saturday. And on Sunday, Democratic candidates Jay Inslee, Julián Castro and John Hickenlooper are speaking. Ed O'Keefe said the SXSW events are opportunities for presidential hopefuls.

Sunday Talk

CARSON CALLS COHEN 'COOPERATIVE': Rep. Andre Carson (D-IN) appeared on this week's edition of IN Focus to discuss several issues in the news, including the second round of closed-door hearings with former Trump attorney Michael Cohen. Carson sits on the House Intelligence committee, which questioned Cohen for the second time in two weeks on Wednesday (Fox59). "I think that Michael Cohen has been very cooperative with the committee, which we appreciate," said Carson. "He's cooperative. I didn't say credible, but I think he's being cooperative... I think that he's been cooperative to the degree that the various committees have been able to issue subpoenas to bring other witnesses in. Of course, we're going to bring other witnesses in ourselves as an intel committee to really get to the bottom of this and corroborate stories, that's what this investigation is all about." Carson also said he was surprised by the sentence former Trump campaign chair Paul Manafort received, a more lenient 47 months compared to the twenty plus years prosecutors had suggested. "There seems to be inequity at play but also a lot of people are saying this is just a slap on the wrist, and it's unfortunate," said Carson. "The Trump Administration has acted like a mafia of sorts, and kind of this mob mentality is something that the American people don't want."

INSLEE SAYS 'WORLD IS ON FIRE': Washington Gov. Jay Inslee (D), a 2020 presidential candidate, on Sunday called for climate change to be the "primary" issue for the next administration, saying "the world's on fire and we've got to act." "We are the first generation to feel the sting of climate change and we are the last generation that can do something about it. And we've got one shot and that's the next administration," he said during an interview on CNN's "State of the Union." "We have to have this be the primary, first, foremost and paramount duty of the next administration because the world's on fire and we've got to act and we've got a climate denier in the White House," Inslee added.

KUDLOW BULLISH ON CHINA TRADE DEAL: Top White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow said on Sunday that he's "bullish" on the prospects of a U.S.-Chinese trade deal being finalized by April, but acknowledged that a final agreement is up to President Trump. "I think we're making great progress," Kudlow said on "Fox News Sunday." "Across the board, the deal has to be good for the United States, and for our workers, and our farmers and our manufacturing. It's got to be good. It's got to be fair and reciprocal and it's got to be enforceable." "I don't want to predict, it's up to the president and not to me, but I think the headway has been good," Kudlow said.

KUDLOW SAYS TRUMP WILL SEEK SPENDING CUTS: Top White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow said Sunday that President Trump will call for an across-the-board domestic spending cut of 5 percent in his budget proposal, even as he asks for an increase in funding for a wall along the southern border. Kudlow on "Fox News Sunday" laid out the administration's budget strategy ahead of the submission of the fiscal 2020 proposal on Monday. He said it will pair policies like the 2017 tax cut bill with the roughly 5 percent domestic spending cut in an effort to spur growth and deal with deficits. "It will be a tough budget," he said, calling it "exactly the right prescription."

BOLTON WON'T SPECULATE ON NORTH KOREA: National security adviser John Bolton on Sunday that North Korea's Kim Jong Un "has a very clear idea" where President Trump stands on missile tests. "I'd rather not get into specifics on that," Bolton on ABC's "This Week," when asked about new images that show activity at a North Korean missile site. "There's a lot of activity all the time in North Korea, but I'm not going to speculate on what that particular commercial satellite picture shows," he said.

BOLTON TALKS OF ISIS DEFEAT: White House national security adviser John Bolton told "This Week" Co-Anchor Martha Raddatz Sunday that President Donald Trump is "as clear as can be" when discussing the defeat of the Islamic State. "The president has been, I think, as clear as clear can be when he talks about the defeat of the ISIS territorial caliphate," Bolton said. "He has never said that the elimination of the territorial caliphate means the end of ISIS in total. We know that's not the case. We know right now that there are ISIS fighters scattered still around Syria and Iraq. And that ISIS itself is growing in other parts of the world. The ISIS threat will remain."

CASTRO HITS SANDERS OVER REPARATIONS: Democratic presidential candidate Julián Castro on Sunday hit Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) over his 2020 rival's position on reparations. "What he said ... the other day was he didn't think the best way to address this was for the United States to write a check." Castro said during an interview on CNN's "State of the Union." "However, it's interesting to me that when it comes to 'Medicare for all,' health care, you know, the response there has been, 'We need to write a big check.' That when it comes to tuition-free or debt-free college, the answer has been that we need to write a big check," the former Housing and Urban Development secretary added.

AOC SLAMS 'MODERATES': U.S. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez slammed political moderates at the South by Southwest Conference & Festivals in Austin, Texas, calling their views "misplaced" as she defended her progressive politics in a room full of supporters (Fox News). "Moderate is not a stance. It's just an attitude towards life of, like, 'meh,'" the New York Democrat said Saturday during an interview with Briahna Gray, senior politics editor for the Intercept. "We've become so cynical, that we view 'meh,' or 'eh' — we view cynicism as an intellectually superior attitude, and we view ambition as youthful naivete when ... the greatest things we have ever accomplished as a society have been ambitious acts of visions, and the 'meh' is just worshipped now, for what?"

HATE CRIMES BILL HITS SNAG: Republicans looking for an easy out on hate crimes got some bad news last week (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Passing a bias crime law without an explicit list of designated characteristics is not going to get Indiana off the so-called naughty list. The stated goal by Gov. Eric Holcomb and others this year is to pass a law that makes Indiana the 46th state with a bias crime law. But the Anti-Defamation League – the keepers of a state map that tracks these laws – says the path Indiana is heading down won't suffice. That's because Senate Republicans stripped the bill of a list of protected classes such as race, religion, sexual orientation and more. Instead, it simply says a judge can consider bias of any kind. Anti-Defamation League Midwest Regional Director Lonnie Nasatir said the organization modeled the first hate crimes statute and has a long history of advocating nationally on the issue. "These types of crimes are very unique and can have negative effects not just on the victim but on the community that is targeted," he said.

CEOs PUSH FOR HATE CRIME LAW: Several CEOs from Indiana technology companies are calling for Indiana lawmakers to pass a hate crimes bill that specifically lists protected groups, comparing the discussion to the Religious Freedom Restoration Act controversy of 2015 (Fox59). Members of the Indiana Technology & Innovation Association held a Wednesday news conference in the Statehouse atrium and argued that Indiana's lack of a hate crime law is hurting their efforts to recruit talent from out of state. "Technology is Indiana's fastest growing sector, but we are in a death match for talent with other places and other states," said John McDonald, CEO of Fishers-based ClearObject. "There are not enough skilled workers to fill the jobs that we're creating every day. And so we can't afford to have anything be a barrier to that talent and recruitment." "Passing a watered down unenforceable bias crimes law just simply reaffirms the reputation of Indiana as being socially regressive and essentially not inclusive," said John Gilman, CEO of Zionsville-based Clear Software. "It really makes it difficult to run a technology company when we have this reputation because talent is our number one need."

TIME RUNNING OUT FOR REDISTRICTING REFORM: Time is running out for Indiana to enact comprehensive redistricting reform before state lawmakers are due to redraw legislative districts in 2021 (Smith, Indiana Public Media). Such reform is essentially dead this session – and even modest changes are unlikely. The Senate narrowly approved a bill to create redistricting standards for lawmakers. That includes keeping communities together whenever possible and ignoring incumbent legislators' addresses. But House Elections Committee Chair Tim Wesco (R-Osceola) isn't a fan of the bill. He says much of it is already required by federal law. And he points to a provision that says lawmakers can ignore the standards, as long as they explain why. "It really leaves me asking, what's the point?" Wesco says. Redistricting reform advocates support the bill. But they also want a lot more – an independent commission that draws Indiana's legislative maps. Leading advocate Julia Vaughn acknowledges such a change might require an outside push. "We're all looking towards the Supreme Court to hopefully provide us with an assist but that's certainly not guaranteed," Vaughn says.

BOSMA PREFERS SUPT WITH EDUCATION EXPERIENCE: As lawmakers push forward a measure for the governor to appoint the state's next schools chief starting in 2021, some question the requirements for the job (Lindsay, Indiana Public Media). Lawmakers changed state law in 2017 to move the position that oversees the State Department of Education from an elected one to an appointment from the governor, starting in 2025. The 2025 deadline was, in part, to allow current Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick to run for a second term. But she announced last fall she won't run for re-election, and lawmakers want the governor to appoint her successor. House Speaker Brian Bosma (R-Indianapolis) is backing the bill that would move up the timeline for Indiana's governor to appoint a secretary of education after McCormick's current term ends. He says it's the only cabinet position with experience criteria in state law, and lawmakers discussed those requirements in 2017 when they passed the appointment legislation. "We debated and negotiated those quite extensively two years ago to give preference to someone who is an educator," he says.

REP. WRIGHT WORKING ON TRAFFICKING ISSUES: A local representative is one of the Indiana legislators working on trafficking laws (Arwood, Anderson Herald-Bulletin). Rep. Melanie Wright, D-Yorktown, authored two bills regarding sex trafficking of minors for the 2019 general session. When the issue of sex trafficking of minors was brought to her attention six years ago, it became a key issue to her, as she teaches music for kindergarten through sixth grade at Daleville Community Schools. "A lot of people think it isn't happening here," she said. "As a full-time teacher, it really haunted me." The first bill is House Bill 1598. The bill proposes appropriation from the state general fund to aid the prevention of human trafficking. "Local law enforcement definitely needs training so they have formal plans in place," Wright said. "We should offer rehabilitation for survivors and really protect children in the foster system, as they're most at risk." Wright's second bill is House Bill 1603. The bill proposes raising knowingly soliciting sex from a minor to a Level 6 felony. "My colleagues in crime say that punishment doesn't deter it from happening, but there needs to be a stiffer penalty for sure," she said. "Just in the sheer protection our children." Sitting on the House Family, Children and Human Affairs Committee, Wright said she is steadfastly motivated to make change. "Some of the testimony, the witnessing we've heard is terrible. It stays with you, it's horrendous, and we're sitting there," she said. "To imagine living through it is terrible. "This is a reality in our community. It's a really sobering thought."

YOUNG LAUDS USDA LIFTING SALMON REGS: U.S. Senator Todd Young (R-Ind.) applauded the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA)'s announcement that it will deactivate an import alert on genetically engineered (GE) salmon and salmon eggs from entering the U.S. (Howey Politics Indiana). This is welcome news in Albany, Indiana, where AquaBounty made a $14 million investment – purchasing a defunct fish facility for cultivating GE salmon. The FDA had previously approved the facility and the product for human consumption, but production could not begin due to a provision in the 2016 Omnibus Appropriations Act that resulted in FDA issuing an import ban. This important investment could create up to 100 jobs and help revive the local economy. Cultivating other sources of seafood will also provide consumers with healthier options, which helps improve the health of Indiana's population. "This announcement is good news for Albany and Delaware County, where this emerging industry has the potential to create jobs and spark economic activity," said Senator Young. "I have been vocal with the FDA and my Senate colleagues about this issue, and am pleased that the FDA has acted."

CARSON TO PUSH FOR SUMMER JOBS: U.S. Rep. André Carson is encouraging residents of Indiana's seventh congressional district to attend his sixth annual Youth Opportunities Fair, which is being held at the Central Library (40 East Saint Clair Street) in Indianapolis this upcoming Monday, March 11, from Noon to 7 p.m. (Howey Politics Indiana). The annual event presents students, parents and guardians with a variety of year-round and summer options for youth of all ages. In addition to featuring job opportunities for teens and young adults, it also helps students with interviewing skills, resume review, and post-fair tips to follow up with employers. "That first summer job, summer camp or volunteer experience can make a big difference in a young person's life, helping to ignite goals and passions that last a lifetime," Rep. Carson said. "However, many folks in our community in years past told me that they had trouble finding these opportunities. That's what inspired me to launch the Youth Opportunities Fair – to put a variety of these resources in one place. I'm pleased it has lived up to its promise, helping to change many young Hoosiers' lives."

REP. PENCE CALLS ELECTION BILL 'BAD NEWS': U.S. Rep. Greg Pence is calling the latest "election reform" bill passed by the House is "nothing but bad news" (Howey Politics Indiana). "My colleagues across the aisle want you to think this will change the whole political game, but the truth is that this is nothing but a political power grab designed to push an ultra-left political agenda. This crooked legislation doesn't reform anything, it mandates a huge federal takeover of elections. It takes away state's rights to regulate voter ID, empowers corporate interests, and sticks the American taxpayer with the bill for every politician's expensive campaign. Under H.R. 1, Congressional candidates could potentially receive $4.3 MILLION of taxpayer dollars to fund their campaigns! Now, you can you see why so many liberals lined up to support the bill!"

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB VISITS OMAHA BEACH - Gov. Eric Holcomb is in Europe and he paid tribute to fallen Hoosiers and Americans at Omaha Beach in France (Howey Politics Indiana). "Visiting Omaha Beach reminds one of the painful cost of war and freedom," Holcomb tweeted. "On behalf of all Hoosiers, I was honored to lay a wreath at the Normandy American Cemetery." Earlier he tweeted, "We're at the Normandy American Cemetery to pay respect to the 274 Hoosiers, and all allied service members, that gave the last full measure of devotion during the Battle of Normandy." Holcomb is on a trade mission to France, Germany and Belgium this week. Holcomb enjoyed a "royale with cheese" at a French McDonald's, a reference to a famous line in "Pulp Fiction" describing a McDonald's Quarter Pounder. Arriving in Belgium, Holcomb and the IEDC tweeted, "Nous nous rendons en Belgique aujourd'hui afin de rencontrer les dirigeants gouvernementaux et discuter des possibilités de renforcer les liens et les relations économiques, invitant les entreprises belges à découvrir pourquoi l'Indiana est un État qui fonctionne!" (Editor's Note: Bonus points for any subscriber willing to translate).

GOVERNOR: BUDGET DIRECTOR DUDICH DEPARTS FOR UINDY - Gov. Eric J. Holcomb today announced that State Budget Director Jason Dudich will leave his post in May to serve as the vice president, chief financial officer, and treasurer of the University of Indianapolis (Howey Politics Indiana). "Jason is an enthusiastic problem-solver who has served the state with great skill and integrity," Gov. Holcomb said. "I wish him continued success in his new role at the University of Indianapolis and thank him for helping us take Indiana to the next level." Dudich has served as the state budget director since 2017 after being appointed by Gov. Holcomb. During his tenure, Dudich developed, presented and managed one balanced budget and is diligently working on a second. He has helped manage the fiscal operations of the state ensuring integrity as well as maintaining strong reserves and the state's AAA credit rating. "I want to thank Gov. Holcomb for giving me the opportunity to serve in his administration. I am proud that the State Budget Agency is in a position that the next director will have a strong team in place," Dudich said. "I am confident that the relationship we've built between the budget agency and the state agencies will continue into the future and ensure collaboration to meet the needs of Hoosiers." Dudich will continue in his current role through the conclusion of the legislative session and depart the administration in mid-May. Gov. Holcomb will appoint a replacement in the near future.

GOVERNOR: STATE BANKING ON HARDWOODS - Hardwoods are big business in southern Indiana. In Daviess County alone, more than an estimated 100 businesses are converting hardwoods to viable products that are sold throughout the country and throughout the world. But the state believes hardwoods offer even more potential and has unveiled a plan to try and capture more money tied to the business as well as the Indiana Hardwoods Strategy (Grant, Washington Herald-Times). "Indiana is renowned for producing high quality hardwood timber, yet more than $230 million of sawmill products are coming from outside the state," said Indiana Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch. "With demand there and our robust, sustainable forest resource base, we want to provide that supply chain link and help capture some of that economic activity in Indiana." The state estimates that the hardwoods industry contributes more than $10 billion to the state's economy and supports over 70,000 high wage jobs. Officials also estimate that for every 10 jobs created directly by hardwoods there are another eight supporting the industry.

GOVERNOR: STATE REVENUE FALLS SHORT - Indiana revenue fell short of the most recent projections for the second consecutive month. The Indiana State Budget Agency says General Fund revenues totaled more than $786 million in February, 2.3 percent below the December revenue forecast and more than 3 percent lower than the same month last year (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). Sales tax collections, individual income tax collections, and riverboat wagering collections were all below the monthly estimate. However, corporate tax collections and racino wagering collections were both above projections. "Overall, for the month of February, the combination of higher corporate tax refunds and lower than expected collections from sales and use taxes and individual income taxes weighed on net General Fund revenues," the agency says. "Significant monthly fluctuations are expected and revenues are better interpreted within the context of the longer term trend for fiscal year 2019 as April and June are by far the months with the most revenue activity." Year-to-date, the state has collected more than $9.8 billion, which is only three-tenths of a percent below the revenue forecast and 3 percent higher than totals through the same period in the previous fiscal year. The revenue forecast was most recently revised in December.

GAMING: REVENUE STABLE IN FEBRUARY - Northwest Indiana's casinos recorded a small increase in gaming revenue in February, taking a significant bite out of January's cold start to the year (NWI Times). Casinos along the Lake Michigan shore had $72.1 million in gaming win, according to the Indiana Gaming Commission, up 1.5 percent from February 2018. February's gain left the casinos down about 4.7 percent on the year. The Region's smaller casinos had particularly strong months, with Blue Chip in Michigan City taking in $11.9 million, an 8.4 percent increase, and the two Majestic Star casinos in Gary growing revenue 7.4 percent, to $12.7 million. East Chicago's Ameristar casino had a win just over $17 million, down 2 percent from last year, while Horseshoe Hammond took in $30.6 million, off 1.3 percent from last February. Play at Horseshoe was up at both its table games and slot machines, but the casino's table win was down considerably from a year ago. "We did have a lot of players play lucky," Horseshoe Vice President and Assistant General Manager Noah Hirsch said. Statewide, casinos and racetracks brought in $172.2 million in February, 1.2 percent more than February 2018. Chicago-area casinos on the Illinois side of the state line saw a decline of 4.7 percent, Hirsch said.

HEALTH: 53 HOOSIERS DIE OF FLU - Although it hasn't seemed quite as severe as the past few years, the Indiana State Department of Health says they have still recorded just over four dozen deaths from flu-related illness so far during the 2018-19 season. The number of deaths is at 53 (WRTV). Flu activity remains widespread throughout the state, according to the latest flu activity report released on Friday, March 8. Flu deaths this season have varied some, but most have been adults aged 65 and over. Eight deaths recorded by the state health department were in patients younger than 50.

INDOT: WORK ON I-69 SECTION 6 BEGINS IN MARTINSVILLE - Crews will get to work on the final leg of the I-69 extension in Morgan County next week (WTHR-TV). INDOT said in a release Friday the warmer weather in the forecast will allow contractors to get to work on I-69 Section 6 work in Martinsville. Workers will be clearing brush, placing erosion control and working on right-of-way for bridge and roadway construction in the future. The department said work will be limited to the area around South Street and Home Avenue, Grand Valley Boulevard east of SR 37 and on Cramertown Loop south of Florida Avenue.

EDUCATION: IU DEAN HEADED TO TEXAS - The dean of Indiana University's College of Arts and Sciences is headed to Texas (Bloomington Herald-Times). Larry Singell, an economics professor who was named executive dean of the largest and oldest division at IU in 2011, has been appointed senior vice provost for resource management at the University of Texas at Austin starting July 1. He will succeed Dan Slesnick, who has served in this role since 2010.

EDUCATION: IU SLOWS DOWN HOUSING EXPANSION - Indiana University has hit the pause button on a plan to add beds and dining space after bids were higher than anticipated (AP). A school vice president, Tom Morrison, says the new completion date is fall 2021, not 2020. He tells The Herald-Times that a bid for the housing portion of the project came in at $64 million in February, a few months after an earlier round with low bids of $72 million. There's been no bidding yet on the dining hall portion of the project. Indiana University trustees approved the project a year ago. Provost Lauren Robel says students are turned away from campus housing each year because of tight supply.

ENERGY: NIPSCO PLANNING $660M IN UPGRADES - Construction season will be ramping up soon and for Northern Indiana Public Service Co., it promises to be a busy one (Michigan City News-Dispatch). NIPSCO will be continuing to upgrade its electric and gas infrastructure across northern Indiana, with nearly $660 million in planned investments this year, according to spokesman Nick Meyer. Several of those projects will be in La Porte County. "This reinvestment is part of NIPSCO's overall ongoing modernization plan to ensure long-term safety and reliability for customers," he said.

MEDIA: PETE THE PLANNER COMING TO IBJ - IBJ has added comedian-turned-money man Peter Dunn's Pete the Planner column to its roster, starting March 15, when it will appear in the paper's print edition and at IBJ.com. Dunn will focus on helping readers build wealth and keep it and will write for IBJ every other week. "We're thrilled to have Pete join our lineup of writers," said IBJ Editor Greg Andrews. "He's developed a strong following not just locally but nationally, with financial guidance that's indispensable for everyone from young professionals to longtime CEOs." Dunn, 41, is the author of 10 books, including a series called "Your Money Life," to guide readers through decades of financial decision making. Dunn is host of "The Pete the Planner Show" on WIBC-FM 93.1 and has appeared regularly on CNN Headline News, Fox News, Fox Business and a number of nationally syndicated radio programs. Dunn wrote his Pete the Planner column for The Indianapolis Star for six years before the paper eliminated it as part of a cost-cutting move in January. Dunn still writes a column for USA Today.

MEDIA: MAUREEN MCFADDEN WINDS UP WNDU CAREER - Forty years in one job doesn't happen often anymore. However, Maureen McFadden did that at WNDU. "I was blessed to do this job for nearly 40 years," she said. "I have to thank the viewers" (South Bend Tribune). Friday is the start of the next phase of life for her when she anchors her final evening news show at 6 p.m. and begins retirement. "Yes, it is the Ides of March. Lots of people are reminding me of that," she said. Emotional day? Maybe? Probably. There was some emotion already when she received a Sagamore of the Wabash from Gov. Eric Holcomb. Later, brother and co-anchor Terry McFadden announced that she would be inducted in the Indiana AP Hall of Fame.

SPORTS: PURDUE WINS 24TH BIG 10 TITLE - Carsen Edwards scored 21 points and No. 11 Purdue clinched a share of the Big Ten regular-season championship with a 70-57 victory over Northwestern on Saturday. It is Purdue's 24th Big Ten title (AP). The Boilermakers (23-8, 16-4) secured the No. 2 seed in the conference tournament in Chicago and a share of their second regular-season title in three years. They came in tied with Michigan State and Michigan, who played each other on Saturday night. Edwards, the Big Ten's leading scorer, made just 6 of 18 shots. Nojel Eastern scored a career-high 15 points, and the Boilermakers bounced back from a loss at Minnesota on Tuesday to win for the 14th time in 16 games.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP BUDGET BANKS ON HIGH GROWTH - The White House's budget proposal assumes the U.S. economy will keep expanding as briskly as it did last year, when a tax cut and government spending increase boosted growth, according to a preview of the materials to be released Monday (Wall Street Journal). The fiscal year 2020 budget projects much stronger growth than many independent forecasters, who see the economy slowing this year as the effects of those fiscal stimulus measures wane. But the Trump administration, which hit its forecasts for 2018, expects that deregulation and changes to the tax code will keep the expansion humming again this year. The White House forecasts the economy will grow about 3% annually over the next decade, though it expects a bigger near-term boost, with output rising 3.2% this year before declining to 3.1% in 2020, 3.0% in 2021 and 2.8% in 2026, according to projections viewed by The Wall Street Journal. The economy grew 3.1% in the fourth quarter from a year earlier, its highest rate in nearly four years and in line with the projection made in President Trump's budget proposal last year. "Basically the modeling that we did [for] last year nailed last year," said Kevin Hassett, the chairman of the White House Council of Economic Advisers. "So we think those models are still the best indicator of what should happen going forward."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TO NOMINATE BERNHARDT FOR INTERIOR - President Donald Trump intends to nominate David Bernhardt of Virginia to be Secretary of Interior, according to a statement from the White House Friday afternoon (ABC News). Bernhardt currently serves as Acting Secretary and Deputy Secretary of the Interior a position he took on after the departure of Secretary Ryan Zinke. During his tenure in office, Zinke generated headlines about ethics investigations and criticism of his actions favoring industry.

WHITE HOUSE: BILL SHINE EXITS TO CAMPAIGN - Bill Shine, the former Fox News executive who joined the White House staff last summer to manage President Trump's communications operation, has resigned and will move to the president's re-election campaign, the White House announced Friday (New York Times). Mr. Shine's abrupt departure came as a surprise to many in the White House and was revealed, as such personnel moves often are in this administration, as the president was on Air Force One leaving Washington. While described by admiring White House colleagues as a rare adult in the room, Mr. Shine has sometimes been absent during key moments, including the president's trip last week to Vietnam. Colleagues said he had developed little chemistry with Mr. Trump, and critics increasingly focused on Mr. Shine's ties to Fox, where he was forced out for his handling of sexual harassment claims.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SIGNS BIBLES IN ALABAMA - President Donald Trump was just doing what he could to raise spirits when he signed Bibles at an Alabama church for survivors of a deadly tornado outbreak, many religious leaders say, though some are offended and others say he could have handled it differently (AP). Hershael York, dean of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary School of Theology in Louisville, Kentucky, said he didn't have a problem with Trump signing Bibles, like former presidents have, because he was asked and because it was important to the people who were asking. "Though we don't have a national faith, there is faith in our nation, and so it's not at all surprising that people would have politicians sign their Bibles," he said. "Those Bibles are meaningful to them and apparently these politicians are, too."

WHITE HOUSE: U.S., CHINA NEAR CURRENCY DEAL - China's top central banker signaled that Beijing and Washington are getting close to reaching a currency deal as part of their continuing negotiations to settle a yearlong trade battle (Wall Street Journal). "Both sides have reached consensus on many crucial and important issues," People's Bank of China Gov. Yi Gang said at a news conference Sunday, held on the sidelines of the nation's annual legislative session. As part of the accord, Mr. Yi said, China won't engage in competitive devaluation to give Chinese exporters a leg up in foreign markets—a commitment Chinese officials have also made in multilateral agreements such as those among the Group of 20 industrial nations. "This is what we promised," he emphasized. "Absolutely we won't do this."

CITIES: LEBANON PD CHIEF DEMOTED FOR OFFENSIVE POST - The Lebanon chief of police has been removed from office and will serve the department in the patrol division after a comment he made on Facebook in 2017 resurfaced, the department said Friday via social media (WIBC). Tyson Warmoth became chief of Lebanon Police Department in 2016 after 20 years at the department in a variety of roles. He is a veteran of the U.S. Air Force, according to the Lebanon Police Department website. According to a statement from Warmoth on the department's Facebook page, he "made a crude and offensive comment in jest" on his adult son's personal Facebook page in February 2017, which was recently posted as an image on someone else's personal Facebook page. The statement includes an apology from Warmoth to the people of Lebanon and the mayor and explains that he accepted the decision to be removed from office and "will continue to do my best to protect and serve as I return to the Patrol Division." Deputy Chief Brad Bailey will serve as interim police chief as the city considers candidates for chief, Mayor Matt Gentry said Friday.

CITIES: BEDFORD WRAPPING UP STELLAR PROJECTS - It's been five years, but the City of Bedford is nearly finished with a major downtown revitalization project. The city worked with community members to prioritize the things they thought would improve the quality of life in Bedford (Ceylan, Indiana Public Media). Bedford was awarded a Stellar Communities grant in 2013. But Mayor Shawna Girgis says preparations actually started long before that, when the city published its first comprehensive plan in 25 years in 2010. Girgis says the initial comprehensive plan for Bedford's renovations was too broad for the Stellar Communities project. "So after getting that first year's feedback, of course we went back to the drawing board and said 'okay, what can we do different, how should we approach that?' So we really narrowed our scope just to the downtown area," Girgis says. As part of the Stellar Communities project, the city relocated the historic train depot, renovated downtown building facades and moved Stonegate Arts & Education Center into its new location at the Girgis Building on the town square. The city also worked with the county government to beautify the courthouse square.

COUNTIES: VIGO ISSUES HEP A ADVISORY - Indiana is one of several states experiencing a hepatitis A outbreak, according to a news release from the Vigo County Health Department (Terre Haute Tribune0-Star). Hepatitis A is usually spread person-to-person when someone accidentally consumes stool (feces) of someone with hepatitis A or by consuming food or water contaminated with the virus. During this outbreak, the hepatitis A virus has been spread person-to-person; no contaminated food or water has been identified. The Vigo County Health Department is urging individuals who have close contact with someone who has hepatitis A get vaccinated. Close contact includes living in the same household, sexual contact, and/or sharing needles.

COUNTIES: HOWARD HEALTH OFFICIALS WARY OF MEASLES - Cases of the measles have been reported so far this year in 11 states, including Illinois and Kentucky. The Howard County Health Department is asking residents to be on the lookout and take precautions to avoid catching the highly contagious infection (Kokomo Tribune). Six outbreaks have been reported so far this year in parts of New York, Washington, Texas and Illinois, according to the Center for Disease Control. An outbreak is defined as three or more measles cases. No cases have been reported in Indiana, and officials hope to keep it that way, said Karen Long, a registered nurse with the Howard County Health Department. "If one person has measles, it's considered a public health emergency, because it's that contagious," she said. "If that happens, it's all hands on deck."

LEWANDOWSKI, BOSSIE SPEAK TO INGOP TONIGHT: Key insiders to President Trump's campaign, Corey Lewandowski and David Bossie, will keynote the Indiana Republican Party's 2019 Spring Dinner at 6 tonight at the JW Marriott (Howey Politics Indiana). The pair wrote the book "Trump's Enemies: How the Deep State Is Undermining the Presidency" and "Let Trump Be Trump: the Inside Story of His Rise to the Presidency."

MAYOR PETE GAINS TRACTION WITH CNN TOWN HALL: South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg's first foray into cable primetime found him talking not only about his views on Medicare and the Electoral College, but about Mike Pence and the Hoosier body politic (Howey Politics Indiana). Buttigieg took his Democratic presidential exploration to a CNN town hall with host Jake Tapper Sunday night, a day after a CNN/Des Moines Register poll showed him with 1% in an Iowa poll, far behind frontrunners Joe Biden and Sen. Bernie Sanders. On the first question, he was asked about his experience. Buttigieg responded, "One thing you never hear of is a city shutting down because of a disagreement on policy. Experience is one of the best reasons for me to run. I have more experience under my belt than the president. That's a low bar, I know that. I also have more executive experience than the vice president. Experience is what qualifies me to have a seat at the table." Buttigieg was asked if he favored the impeachment of President Trump. "I would like to see this president and the style of politics he represents sent off through the electoral process, decisively defeated at the ballot box," Buttigieg responded. He added, "I come from the industrial Midwest and there were a lot of people who voted for him who voted for me and Barack Obama." The mayor was asked about his origins from Vice President Mike Pence's Indiana. Buttigieg answered, "Please don't judge my state by our former governor. I think those ties are so out of line from where anybody is." Buttigieg said that Pence "divided our state" with his Religious Freedom Restoration Act in 2015. "It was really a license to discriminate, that's what it was," Buttigieg said, adding, the "amazing" reaction was pushback from Democratic and Republican mayors and the conservative business community. "My hope is that same decency can be summoned from communities in both red and blue states." Pressed on whether Pence would be better as president than Donald Trump, Buttigieg said, "Both. Does it have to be? I don't know. At least he believes in our institutions and is not corrupt. But how can you get on board with this president? How does he become the biggest cheerleader for the porn star presidency? Is it that he stopped believing in scripture when he started believing in Donald Trump?"

BUTTIGIEG SLAMS BOLTON: South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg slammed National Security Adviser John Bolton, suggesting that someone that was involved in the run up to the Iraq War shouldn't be "allowed that near the Situation Room to begin with" (CNN). Buttigieg did not mention Bolton by name, but when asked a question about the conflict in Venezuela, the mayor and veteran of the Iraq War accused Bolton of "carelessly" throwing out the possibility of using military force in Venezuela to deal with the presidency of Nicolás Maduro. "The situation in Venezuela is highly disturbing. The regime lost its legitimacy," Buttigieg said. "That being said, that doesn't mean we carelessly threaten the use of military force, which it appeared the national security adviser was doing at one point." He added: "Hinting that troops might be sent to South America. I don't understand how somebody leading us into the Iraq War is allowed that near the Situation Room to begin with." Bolton was an early supporter of the Iraq War and pushed for the initial invasion during his time, after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, as President George W. Bush's undersecretary of state for arms control and international security.

NEXT WEEKLY HPI ON TUESDAY: Your next weekly edition of Howey Politics Indiana will be published around 9 Tuesday morning.

HOLCOMB IN BELGIUM; HEADING TO GERMANY: Gov. Eric Holcomb's nine-day trade mission came to Belgium on Sunday (Howey Politics Indiana). Gov. Holcomb tweeted, "Belgium is the crossroads of Western Europe. Indiana is the Crossroads of America. There's great opportunity for this relationship to continue growing on both sides of the Atlantic." The Indiana IEDC added, "Indiana ranks among the best in the nation for business, infrastructure, government efficiency and so on, but our greatest asset is most certainly the people who make the Hoosier state what it is." Holcomb and Commerce Sec. Schellinger are joining US Ambassador to Belgium Ronald J. Gidwitz and @AmChamBE for a breakfast with businesses that hire Hoosiers." Holcomb will meet government officials in Brussels, including U.S. Ambassador Ronald Gidwitz and U.S. Ambassador to NATO Kay Bailey Hutchinson. On Tuesday, the governor will be in to Frankfurt, Germany, where he will meet with U.S. Ambassador Richard Grenell.

TRUMP TO SEEK $8B FOR BORDER WALL: President Donald Trump will seek $8.6 billion in his new budget to build the U.S.-Mexico border wall, an administration said Sunday, setting up another showdown with Congress, which has resisted giving him more money for his signature campaign promise (AP). The request would more than double the $8.1 billion already available to the president after he declared a national emergency at the border in order to circumvent Congress after lawmakers refused his funding demands.

SPA OWNER SOLD ACCESS TO TRUMP AT MAR-A-LAGO: Cindy (Li) Yang, a Florida entrepreneur who founded a chain of spas and massage parlors that included the one where New England Patriots owner Robert Kraft was arrested recently for allegedly soliciting prostitution, also runs a consulting business that has offered to sell Chinese clients access to President Donald Trump and his family at Mar-a-Lago, according to the company's website (USA Today). Mother Jones, which broke the story on Saturday, says Yang could not be reached for comment. The White House did not immediately respond to requests for comment. Yang, a donor to the Republican Party and Trump campaign, popped up this week in photos showing her at a Super Bowl viewing party at the Trump-owned Mar-a-Lago that included a selfie with the president, the Miami Herald reported. According to Mother Jones, Yang's company — GY US Investments LLC — has a website, mostly in Chinese, that shows her and purported clients hobnobbing at the presidential retreat.

F1 DRIVERS MOVING TO INDYCAR: Marcus Ericsson had just turned 28 last fall when he suddenly needed another place to race. The Sauber Formula One team had bumped him from a regular ride after he spent four years finishing mostly at the back of the pack. Ericsson wanted a job with a contender. "Formula One has always been more of a manufacturer's championship than a driver's championship," Ericsson said in a New York coffee shop on Tuesday. "If you're not in one of the top cars, it's tough mentally." (New York Times). Essentially locked out of advancing in F1 because there are maybe only six elite rides in the series, Ericsson had not come close to winning a race. But he had options. His best option was to join the NTT IndyCar Series in North America. Ericsson said he planned to drive Indy cars for at least two years, adding with a smile, "Maybe I'll be here forever." "I can go into every week and have a chance — something I was so, so missing in Formula One," he said. "Frankly, with F1, there are so few drivers every year who have a chance to be competitive," said Mark D. Miles, the chief executive for Hulman & Company, which owns the Indianapolis Motor Speedway and the IndyCar Series. According to IndyCar, Ericsson will be one of 11 drivers in the series who have raced at some level in Europe. Three of the last four Indy 500s have been won by drivers with F1 experience: Juan Pablo Montoya, from Colombia, in 2015; Alexander Rossi, from California, in 2016; and Takuma Sato, from Japan, in 2017. Sato was one of four full-time former F1 drivers in the IndyCar Series that year; there were also three part-timers, including Montoya.

U.S. NOW TOP OIL EXPORTER: Move over, Saudi Arabia. America is about to steal the kingdom's energy exporting crown (CNN). The United States will surpass Saudi Arabia later this year in exports of oil, natural gas liquids and petroleum products, like gasoline, according to energy research firm Rystad Energy. That milestone, driven by the transformative shale boom, would make the United States the world's leading exporter of oil and liquids. That has never happened since Saudi Arabia began selling oil overseas in the 1950s, Rystad said in a report Thursday. "It's nothing short of remarkable," said Ryan Fitzmaurice, energy strategist at Rabobank. "Ten years ago, no one thought it could happen."

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Pete Buttigieg had an impressive town hall Sunday night on CNN, drawing praise from political pros like David Axelrod. On Mornin' Joe this morning, Joe Scarborough observed, "Mayor Pete is gifted and he's more than this novelty act and this young candidate. I think he's going to make some noise." As improbable as it is, we agree. Anything can happen. - Brian A. Howey

MAYOR PETE TALKS ABOUT HIS AFGHAN WAR EXPERIENCE: South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg, a veteran of the war in Afghanistan, said he thinks his military experience could bring "a lot of perspective" to the office of the presidency (CNN). "You can never lose touch with why politics matters," he said. Serving in the military also brings Americans together, Buttigieg said. He continued: "When I got into the vehicle, a big part of my job was driving and guarding vehicles in movement. And somebody got in my vehicle, they didn't care whether I was a Republican or drat cat. They didn't care if I was going home to a boyfriend or girlfriend. They wanted to know if I was doing my job well and keep them safe. We learned to trust each other with our lives. Even though our lives back home were so different. I think we need to get back to that." Buttigieg also said the US must "put an end to endless war." "The Taliban are serious about being ready to lay down their arms. That's a good sign. But I'm also concerned that the Afghan government seems to be an afterthought of this process because the peace needs to be sustainable. At the end of the day, we can't be the guarantees of peace this Afghanistan," he said.

REACTION TO PETE'S TOWN HALL: Mayor Buttigieg's performance was widely lauded (Howey Politics Indiana). David Axelrod, a key political aide to President Obama, tweeted, "I have rarely seen a candidate make better use of televised Town Hall than @PeteButtigieg is on @CNN tonight. Crisp, thoughtful and relatable. He'll be a little less of a long shot tomorrow." Washington Post reporter Robert Costa and Notre Dame graduate added, "This Buttigieg town hall is worth watching. Polished and thoughtful presentation with clear answers. Underscores military experience. Of course, it's a big field and he's a young Midwestern mayor. But he's using his time on stage effectively here. This is a focused candidate." He also caught the Twitter attention of @GOP: "66% of Hoosiers have never heard of the Mayor of South Bend & 2020 Dem Pete Buttigieg.

Instead of focusing on his town's sea of potholes & sky-high crime rate, Buttigieg has spent years ignoring his duties as Mayor of South Bend & focusing on launching a Presidential campaign."

SCHMUHL TALKS ABOUT HIS FRIENDSHIP WITH BUTTIGIEG; SEEKS FUNDS: Mike Schmuhl, who is heading the Pete for America exploratory effort, writes (Howey Politics Indiana): "I've known Pete for over twenty years. We met when he was in high school, and I was an eighth grader. He was assigned to give me, a prospective student, a tour of St. Joe High School in South Bend. Not too many years later, I helped Pete pull together his first campaign for Mayor, and when we won, I served as his chief of staff. We broke from the machine politics of the past and brought new energy and hope to our hometown that had been devastated by the closing of the Studebaker car company in 1963. The work is not done, but South Bend is becoming the vibrant city it knows it can be, filled with equal opportunity and innovation. Pete believed in South Bend and its people. Now, in these early days of the 2020 cycle, we dream big dreams again. We think America would like to see more of Pete's clarity, kindness, energy, and authority in our political discourse. We don't have the established advantages of a senator, governor, or billionaire. We're a small, committed team working in the heart of America for the heart of America. The DNC recently announced that candidates will have to secure at least 65,000 donations from unique individuals to be invited to the debate stage in June.

BUTTIGIEG HIRES GALO: Mayor Pete Buttigieg's presidential exploratory effort has hired Andrew Galo, a former spokesman for Mel Hall's 2nd District congressional campaign (Howey Politics Indiana).

GILLIGRAND AIDE QUIT IN PROTEST: Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-N.Y.), one of the most outspoken advocates of the #MeToo movement who has made fighting sexual misconduct a centerpiece of her presidential campaign, spent last summer pressing legislators to update Congress' 'broken' system of handling sexual harassment (Politico Playbook). At the same time, a mid-20s female aide to Gillibrand resigned in protest over the handling of her sexual harassment complaint by Gillibrand's office, and criticized the senator for failing to abide by her own public standards. In July, the female staffer alleged one of Gillibrand's closest aides — who was a decade her senior and married — repeatedly made unwelcome advances after the senator had told him he would be promoted to a supervisory role over her. She also said the male aide regularly made crude, misogynistic remarks in the office about his female colleagues and potential female hires.

TRUMP LAUNCHING BEHEMOTH CAMPAIGN: President Trump and his advisers are launching a behemoth 2020 campaign operation combining his raw populist message from 2016 with a massive data-gathering and get-out-the-vote push aimed at dwarfing any previous presidential reelection effort, according to campaign advisers, White House aides, Republican officials and others briefed on the emerging strategy (Washington Post). The president's strategy, however, relies on a risky and relatively narrow path for victory, hinged on demonizing Trump's eventual opponent and juicing turnout among his most avid supporters in Florida, Pennsylvania and the Upper Midwest — the same areas that won him the White House but where his popularity has waned since he was elected. Some advisers are particularly concerned about the president's persistent unpopularity among female and suburban voters, and fear it will be difficult to replicate the outcome of 2016 without former Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton as a foil.

TRUMP TELLS RNC THAT 'DEMOCRATS HATE JEWS': To prevent leaks from Trump's Friday night Mar-a-Lago speech to RNC donors, security guards made attendees put their cellphones in magnetized pouches that they carried around like purses until they left the club (Axios). So leakers had to rely on their memories. Trump entered to Lee Greenwood's "Proud to Be an American," then launched into one of his trademark stream-of-consciousness speeches, according to three people who were there. They said the crowd roared with laughter throughout. 1. Referring to the recent anti-Semitism controversies with Democratic Rep. Ilhan Omar, Trump told the donors: "The Democrats hate Jewish people." Trump said he didn't understand how any Jew could vote for a Democrat these days. Trump talked about how much he'd done for Israel, noting his historic decision to move the U.S. Embassy in Israel to Jerusalem.

BIG MONEY LEAD FOR MAYOR HAMILTON: Coming into 2019, Mayor John Hamilton had 20 times as much money to spend on his re-election campaign than his Democratic primary rival Amanda Barge did on her challenge (Bloomington Herald-Times). While this year's fundraising has yet to be reported, their political history shows that having a lot of money to spend doesn't guarantee victory.

Sunday Talk

BARRASSO SAYS TRUMP WILL VETO EMERGENCY RESOLUTION: Republican leaders expect President Trump to veto a measure attempting to overturn his declaration of a national emergency to enable construction of a wall along the U.S.-Mexico border, after the Senate votes on it this week. Sen. John Barrasso (Wyo.), the No. 3 Republican in the Senate, said on Fox News's "Sunday Morning Futures" that he had met with Trump "a couple of times" over the past week and that "he's going to veto this, and his veto will be sustained." Barrasso's comments are an effective admission that the GOP does not have the votes to prevent the full Senate from voting to annul Trump's order, which many lawmakers feel rips congressional authority away from them and threatens important military construction projects.

SCHIFF SAYS MUELLER SHOULD HAVE GOTTEN TRUMP UNDER OATH: It would be "a mistake" for special counsel Robert Mueller not to get in-person testimony from President Donald Trump, House Intelligence Chairman Adam Schiff, D-Calif., said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press." "I think it is a mistake," Schiff said when asked by anchor Chuck Todd whether Mueller would err by deciding not to interview the president before a grand jury given the public testimony of others, such as Trump's former lawyer, Michael Cohen. "And I've said all along that I don't think Bob Mueller should rely on written answers. When you get written answers from a witness, it's really the lawyers' answers as much as the client's answer. And here you need to be able to ask follow-up questions in real time."

CHENEY DEFENDS VOTE ON HATE BILL: Rep. Liz Cheney, R-Wyo., accused Democrats on Sunday of "enabling" anti-Semitism for failing to explicitly condemn recent comments by a freshman Minnesota Democrat, Rep. Ilhan Omar, in a recent congressional vote. Cheney, the third-ranking GOP leader in the House, made her comments during an interview on "Meet the Press" days after the House passed a broad condemnation of anti-Semitism, Islamophobia and other instances of hate. The resolution was criticized by Cheney and other Republicans for not directly singling out Omar. "It was really clearly an effort to actually protect Ilhan Omar, to cover up her bigotry and anti-Semitism by refusing to name her," said Cheney, who helped lead the charge within her own party to sideline Rep. Steve King, R-Iowa, from House committees after his own racially inflammatory statements. "It is absolutely shameful that Nancy Pelosi and Leader Hoyer and the Democratic leaders will not put her name in a resolution on the floor and condemn her remarks and remove her from the House Foreign Affairs Committee," Cheney said. "Those people who won't condemn it are enabling it."

POWELL DOESN'T SEE FED RATES GOING UP: Don't expect to see more interest rate hikes from the Federal Reserve anytime soon, Fed Chairman Jerome Powell suggested to "60 Minutes" in an interview that aired Sunday night on CBS. The frequent target of criticism by President Trump also said he can't be fired by the president and that he intends to serve out his full four-year term. "Have you stopped raising rates?" Scott Pelley of "60 Minutes" asked Powell. "We see the economy as in a good place," Powell responded. "Inflation is muted and our policy rate we think is in an appropriate place. So what we've said is that we would be patient." "What does patient mean?" Pelley asked. "Patient means we don't feel any hurry to change our interest rate policy," Powell answered. "What's happened in the last 90 or so days is that we've seen increasing evidence of the global economy slowing down, although our own economy has continued to perform well."

McCABE SHOCKED BY MANAFORT SENTENCE: Former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe said Sunday morning that he was surprised by the "incredibly lenient" sentence received by former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort. A federal judge last week sentenced Manafort to 47 months in prison for tax and bank fraud — a punishment clocking in well below the 19½-24½ years that he could have received under sentencing guidelines. District Judge T.S. Ellis repeatedly argued the recommended sentence was over-the-top. "I think it's an incredibly lenient sentence in light not just of the offenses he was convicted for but for the additional offenses that he has pled guilty to in D.C. and the offenses he's acknowledged essentially in the sentencing process in Virginia that he is responsible for," McCabe told CBS' Margaret Brennan on "Face the Nation." "So, like most people, I was shocked by how lenient the sentence was."

SEN. KENNEDY SAYS McCABE SHOULD BE PROSECUTED: Republican Sen. John Kennedy of Louisiana said former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe could've been prosecuted and charged with perjury for lying to FBI officials. "He's lucky he wasn't prosecuted," Kennedy said on "Face the Nation" Sunday, referring to McCabe, who was fired by then-Attorney General Jeff Sessions in March 2018 after the Department of Justice's inspector general and the FBI's disciplinary office alleged he had made unauthorized leaks to the press and lied about it to FBI officials. "For perjury. For lying to an FBI agent," Kennedy said when asked why McCabe would be prosecuted. "He did it repeatedly. Now if you and I do that, we go to jail."

HICKENLOOPER WANTS BIG TENT DEMOCRAT PARTY: After being repeatedly asked whether he identified as a capitalist, former Colorado governor and 2020 Democratic presidential candidate John Hickenlooper demurred and said Democrats are a "big tent" party. "Once you get back into these labels — am I a capitalist? Am I a socialist? How much of a capitalist am I versus how much of a socialist? — that becomes kind of silly, doesn't it?" Hickenlooper said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. Pressed again if he was uncomfortable answering the question, the former mayor of Denver pledged to be a capitalist but stressed he believed labels divide both the country and his party. "I'm happy to say I'm a capitalist, but I think at a certain point the labels do nothing but divide us," he added.

CLERE SPEAKS AT HATE CRIMES RALLY IN NEW ALBANY: Like a fiery pastor invoking his congregation to take a stand, Evan Stoner's voice boomed off buildings in downtown New Albany on Sunday as he urged Hoosiers to demand inclusive hate crimes legislation (Thomas, News & Tribune). About 30 people gathered at Bicentennial Park to call on Indiana lawmakers to support a comprehensive hate crimes bill that includes a list of characteristics supported by Gov. Eric Holcomb, as a watered-down version of the original measure makes it way through the Statehouse. "While I can't stand before you today and say that Indianapolis is going to do the right thing and pass this law, what I can promise you today is that they will hear us," Stoner, a college student, said at the rally, which was organized by Southern Indiana Pride and Indiana Forward. Last month Senate Republicans voted 39-10 to pass a stripped-down hate crimes bill, which removed a list of protected characteristics from the original legislation, including race, religion, age, ethnicity, national origin, disabilities, gender identity and sexual orientation. State Rep. Ed Clere, R-New Albany, one of several elected officials who spoke Sunday, said there is strong bi-partisan support for an inclusive hate crimes bill, and more than 74 percent percent of Hoosiers support a bias crimes law, including a majority of Republicans, according to an Indiana Chamber statewide poll in January. "Last night we moved our clocks forward," Clere said. "Now let's work together to move Indiana forward."

Congress

HOUSE WILL FRAME 'SUNSHINE WEEK': The House will frame the coming week as "Sunshine Week" — "focused on increasing government transparency and accountability," to follow their vote last week on sweeping anti-corruption legislation, according to senior House Democratic aides (Swan, Axios). The House's main action this week: On Thursday, they'll vote on a resolution calling for the Mueller report to be made public. On the hearing front: The Oversight Committee has Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross; Energy and Commerce has Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar and a hearing on drug pricing legislation; and Ways and Means has Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin.

SENATE CONFIRMATIONS COMING: The Senate will confirm Neomi Rao to be a judge on the District of Columbia Circuit. It's a significant win for Trump after a rocky confirmation process for Rao (Axios). The Senate will also vote to confirm Paul Matey to be a judge on the Third Circuit, and William Beach, of Kansas, to be Commissioner of Labor Statistics at the Department of Labor, according to a Republican leadership aide. The Senate will also vote on the resolution of disapproval on Trump's emergency declaration (see item 4 above for more detail). And lastly, Mitch McConnell's longtime top communications aide, Don Stewart, leaves the Senate. His last day is Friday. Stew's colleague David Popp emails: "Every Senate press staffer, no matter the age, title, or experience was sent to see Stew the minute they started. Many House flacks would also end up seeing him within their first year. He took every single coffee and gave each one the exact same attention and energy. ... He's an institution. There will never be another Stew. We're all going to miss him."

HOUSE DEMS FEAR IMPEACHMENT WILL BACKFIRE: For House Democrats, impeaching President Donald Trump is both inevitable and impossible (Politico). Democrats anticipate they will gather plenty of evidence of high crimes and misdemeanors on the president's part, but they're torn over what to do with it — fearful that their efforts will backfire and end up helping Trump. "You don't want to divide the country, so you have to think you have such a case that once the case is finished being presented, enough people understand you had to do it," House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler (D-N.Y.), whose committee has the power to launch impeachment proceedings, said in an interview.

HUMANITY: NEW KOR EXHIBIT AT HOLOCAUST MUSEUM - Clad in her iconic blue pant suit with matching scarf and shoes, Eva Kor will be educating people about the Holocaust for generations to come thanks to a new interactive exhibit (Taylor, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Visitors to Terre Haute's CANDLES Holocaust Museum and Education Center, which Kor founded, need only ask a question and she will answer it via high definition video. Inquire about her favorite song and the Auschwitz death camp survivor will launch into "The Impossible Dream." The "Dimensions in Testimony" theater exhibit unveiled Sunday is the result of a partnership between CANDLES and the Shoah Foundation at the University of Southern California.

ISP: TROOPER FIRED AFTER RELATIONSHIP - An Indiana State Police trooper with the Bloomington post was fired at the end of February after admitting to continuing a relationship with a 17-year-old girl, according to an official ISP document (Bloomington Herald-Times). It states Ryan Starnes was a senior trooper when he was accused by the teenager's parents of maintaining a relationship with her between July and October 2018, after learning she was 17.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP KEEPING ALLIES AT ARMS LENGTH - France's President Emmanuel Macron came to the White House last April hoping to join forces with President Trump in confronting China on its trade and business practices (Wall Street Journal). Mr. Macron's bid for a united front went nowhere, according to people briefed on the discussion. Mr. Trump instead told Mr. Macron he didn't want to see the European Union reaping the benefits of a U.S.-China trade pact, these people said. Nearly a year later, Mr. Trump continues to keep European allies at arm's length, declining to share details of the draft trade agreement—which he has called “my deal,” according to these people, who include officials from several European countries. Some U.S. business leaders say Mr. Trump's unilateral approach doesn't bode well for a long-term solution. “We should be working hand-in-hand with our allies,” said Craig Allen, president of the U.S.-China Business Council. “This should be an opportunity to collaborate collectively with other industrial nations and if we do not collaborate—it is less likely that any deal reached will be sustained.”

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP/PENCE SCHEDULE - Monday: President Trump will have lunch with VP Mike Pence at 12:15 p.m. in the private dining room. Tuesday: Trump receives the "Boy Scouts' Report to the Nation." Thursday: Trump hosts Irish Prime Minister Leo Varadkar at the White House. Trump attends the Friends of Ireland Luncheon at the U.S. Capitol, and the president and first lady will attend the Irish PM's "Shamrock Bowl Presentation." Friday: Trump has lunch with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo.

TRANSPORTATION: CHINA GROUNDS BOEING 737 MAX - China's decision to order all of the country's airlines to ground the Boeing 737 MAX 8 aircraft following Sunday's deadly crash of an Ethiopian Airlines jet of the same family represents a sharp break with traditional air-safety practice (Wall Street Journal). It is highly unusual for regulators in a major country to take such a step before a similar move by regulators in the country that certified the aircraft type. The decision, which was taken before U.S. investigators reached the crash site—or even before Boeing issued an update to operators about the crash—could put pressure on the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration to address the matter publicly. In the past, Chinese authorities have taken their lead from the FAA on safety matters and patterned many of their oversight and enforcement procedures after American programs.

SUSPECT IN KIM JONG UN'S HALF BROTHER MURDER RELEASED: One of the women suspected of killing Kim Jong Nam, the half brother of North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, was freed Monday after prosecutors unexpectedly dropped charges against her (Washington Post). Siti Aisyah, 26, will now be allowed to return home to Indonesia, Malaysian officials say, after being held for over two years in Malaysia. She and the second suspect in the murder, Doan Thi Huong, 30, from Vietnam, both appeared in court on Monday, but the acquittal only applies to her. “I feel very happy,” she told reporters at a news conference, thanking everyone who worked for her release. “I didn't expect that today will be the day of my freedom.”

CITIES: IFD TRUCK DESTROYED IN CRASH - A fire truck and a car were both destroyed early Monday in Indianapolis, when the car crossed the center line and hit the fire truck, said firefighters (WIBC). The Indianapolis Fire Dept. tweeted that four firefighters and the driver of the car were taken to the hospital to be checked out, but no one was seriously hurt. Firefighters said they were on a medical call when the vehicles hit. The wreck was at 30th and Butler, and caused the fire truck to end up a crunched hulk. Fire hose, metal, glass and oil lay all over the street.

CITIES: MUNCIE SEEKS NEW JAIL - A housing development called Bison Ridge near the old Wilson Middle School, location of the new county jail, is one step closer to moving forward with upwards of $20 million in capital investment (Muncie Star Press). The Muncie City Council introduced an ordinance during its meeting Monday night to issue an economic development tax increment revenue bond for the project. Financial approvals will come before Muncie Redevelopment Commission, the economic development board and the city council for final approval in April according to officials. The developer bond proposed by the city won't exceed $3 million, and is guaranteed by the developer. The bond will support infrastructure improvements to the 35 acres currently owned by the MRC where the development will take place.

The Return of Rokita?

Remember when we told you last week that Bose McKinney Evans attorney John Westercamp was telling anyone who would listen that he is planning to run for Attorney General next year against Curtis Hill and he has party backing. Well, you can add a new name into the mix, Todd Rokita.

Yup, the former Secretary of State and 4th District Congressman is reportedly making calls and soliciting possible support for a run. Rokita currently works for Apex Benefits as general counsel and Vice-President of External Affairs. From what we've heard from folks who got the call, the reaction has been mixed at best.

We could make some snarky comment about Rokita running for another office, but we won't. What we will say, however, is he might want to start with looking for the 12 people in Hendricks County who voted for Mike Braun in last May's primary instead of him, because that's the margin he lost Hendricks County.

And speaking of Westercamp, there apparently is a photo out there of him at the RFRA signing with then Governor Mike Pence. You can bet if he's the nominee that picture is going to resurface.

Hotel Headaches

You may have seen the letter from the various downtown hotels to Indiana lawmakers asking them not to sign off on a new hotel as part of the CIB/Pacers/Indy Eleven package. They're making the argument that the downtown hotels are only at 73 percent capacity and if the new hotel comes online, that will drop down to about 64 percent by 2025, hurting the industry and causing a job loss. They also say the CIB didn't talk or consult with them regarding the hotel rooms. Apparently, these guys are so serious that they are opposing the entire project as long as the hotel is part of the deal.

And this could be the big issue that blows things up. You know, that thing that always happens between Valentine's Day and St. Patrick's Day. With the downtown hotels opposed to this could result in the CIB/Pacers/Indy Eleven deal getting derailed. Particularly on the point, the hotels made that the CIB draws $120 million in hotel taxes and income taxes on workers incomes and that would be in jeopardy with the new rooms.

You definitely want to keep an eye on this one, especially to see if there is some major change or if all sides end up in a war with the CIB vs. the Downtown Hotel Industry.

What's on Our Radar

There had been some question as to whether the Indiana House would break up the omnibus gaming bill and separate out sports betting from the casinos. From what we're hearing right now, House Public Policy Chairman Ben Smalz is trying to keep things as clean and intact as possible.

The "Pot Hole Joe" video parody of the city of Indianapolis' pothole problems has hit more than 30,000 views. You can actually view it here on YouTube.

We're hearing that the Indiana Republican Party has been having trouble selling tables to Monday night's Spring Dinner, which is odd, because it usually does pretty well. The keynote speakers this year are Corey Lewandowski, former Trump campaign manager and David Bossie, former deputy campaign manager.

Best wishes to Ice Miller lobbyist Carl Drummer who is recovering from surgery last week,

BIRCH BAYH ACHIEVED POLICY FOR AGES VIA TINY PLURALITIES: There were two compelling aspects of U.S. Sen. Birch Bayh. He was a liberal senator representing a conservative state, and yet he took audacious policy stances at odds with a broad swath of his constituency that would have doomed most other politicians (Howey Politics Indiana). In essence, this was a public servant willing to use all of his political capital to achieve compelling and enduring policy goals. Birch Bayh was a statesman. He crafted the most amendments (two, precisely) to the U.S. Constitution since the Founding Fathers created the Bill of Rights nearly two centuries before. Inspired by his wife, Marvella, he championed women's equality through the failed Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) and access to collegiate sports funding through his Title IX provisions included in the 1972 Education Act. Bayh, 91, died at his Maryland home on Thursday, succumbing to pneumonia. It ended an unprecedented political life, where the farmer from Shirkieville with a degree from Purdue became speaker of the Indiana House at age 34, then decided to take on three-term incumbent U.S. Sen. Homer Capehart in 1962. President John F. Kennedy had adopted much of Capehart's foreign policy stances, particularly with the blockade of Cuba during the missile crisis, yet Bayh steered through to an amazing political upset with a pull a 10,943 vote plurality. Subsequently, Bayh never won more than 51.7% of the vote during his four Senate races, and his opponents never had less than 46.4%, reached when the Democrat defeated former Indianapolis Mayor Richard Lugar in 1974.

BAYH FAMILY STATEMENT: The Bayh family released this statement: "The only person since the Founding Fathers to draft more than one amendment to the Constitution, Senator Bayh devoted his life to championing the rights of all Americans - especially women, people of color, young people, and others whom history had too long pushed to the margins."

HAMILTON PAYS TRIBUTE TO BAYH: Former Congressman Lee Hamilton is remembering his longtime friend former U.S. Senator Birch Bayh, who died at 91 Thursday (Brosher, Indiana Public Media). Their friendship spans nearly seven decades. The two first met in the 1950s when they were presidents of the same fraternity at each of their universities. They remained close confidantes for decades. "Over the years he's been a steady friend," Hamilton says. Hamilton and Bayh both started representing Hoosiers in Washington, D.C. in the 1960s. Hamilton calls Bayh an iconic figure in Indiana politics, and says he changed the way people campaign in Indiana. "He would stand, for example, at the corner of the stoplight in Nashville, Indiana when the trees were turning colors and the cars would be backed up for miles," Hamilton says. "And then he'd go down the line and shake hands with people in every car. He just never stopped campaigning." That included while out for lunch or dinner. Hamilton says Bayh would often get up in the middle of a meal to shake hands with everybody in the restaurant. While Bayh only served three terms in the U.S. Senate, he accomplished more than some politicians do in their entire careers. He wrote the 25th and 26th Amendments, which create a presidential succession plan and set the voting age at 18. "I think he wrote more of the Constitution than any senator since James Madison," Hamilton says.

NATION CALLS BAYH "QUINTESSENTIAL FARM BOY": Fred Nation served as Bayh's press secretary from November 1979 through December 1980, the first half as his Washington spokesman and the last half for his senate re-election campaign (Loughlin & Taylor, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). While Nation served as editor of the Terre Haute Spectator from 1974-1979, he wrote stories about Bayh and even went to Iowa to cover the primary when Bayh sought the Democratic presidential nomination in 1976. "I got to know him pretty well," Nation said. "He was the quintessential Hoosier farm boy," Nation said. "He had that 'aw shucks' manner about him." While Bayh is well known for authoring the 25th and 26th amendments to the U.S. Constitution, he told Nation his proudest legislative accomplishment dealt with school reorganization while he served in the Indiana Legislature. The Indiana School Reorganization Act of 1959 called for each county to develop and implement a reorganization plan. It was passed soon after Sputnik, when the Soviet Union launched the first artificial Earth satellite. "There was great concern about the U.S. educational system," Nation said. "He [Bayh] knew that to compete, high school students needed more science, math and resources than a 100-pupil high school could give." Bayh was a leading supporter of the Equal Rights Amendment, which fell just short of ratification. He also led an effort in 1969-70 for an amendment that would have made the popular vote, not the Electoral College, the deciding mechanism by which the president is elected. The measure easily cleared the House, and it was thought to be only a handful of votes short in the Senate. But, as Bayh noted, it never was called to the Senate floor for a full vote. Describing Bayh, Nation said he could "connect with anyone, whether they liked him or not. He reveled in campaigning and meeting people." In his campaigns, he used to go to an industrial plant's gates at shift change to shake hands. Describing Bayh's legacy, Nation referred to a book, "The Last Great Senate," which focused on senators from the 1960s and 1970s and all that they accomplished. "Birch Bayh was one of those. He was one of the giants of his time in the Senate" with his accomplishments that included two Constitutional amendments, Title IX and his efforts to pass the Equal Rights Amendment.

SENATE REBUKES TRUMP ON EMERGENCY DECLARATION: The Senate approved a resolution Thursday blocking President Trump's emergency declaration at the southern border, setting up a likely veto by the president (Wall Street Journal). The vote was 59 to 41, with a dozen Republicans joining all 47 members of the Democratic caucus to back the measure, but still well short of a veto-proof majority. Mr. Trump declared the emergency at the border last month, using it as part of his plan to divert $6.7 billion to build more barriers on the border with Mexico, after Congress authorized only $1.38 billion. The move, designed to improve border security, immediately drew bipartisan objections, with lawmakers saying the president was overstepping his Constitutional authority. The 12 Republicans who voted today to buck Trump on using emergency powers to bypass Congress: Wicker (Miss.), Rubio (Fla.), Portman (Ohio), Collins (Maine), Murkowski (Alaska), Toomey (Pa.), Blunt (Mo.), Alexander (Tenn.), Romney & Lee (Utah), Paul (Ky.) and Moran (Kansas). Following the vote Thursday, Mr. Trump tweeted that he looked forward to vetoing the resolution, saying it "would OPEN BORDERS while increasing Crime, Drugs, and Trafficking in our Country." While not directly acknowledging GOP defections, he added: "I thank all of the Strong Republicans who voted to support Border Security and our desperately needed WALL!"

U.S. HOUSE VOTES UNANIMOUSLY TO RELEASE MUELLER REPORT: The House voted overwhelmingly and in bipartisan fashion to urge the Justice Department to publicly release the entirety of special counsel Robert S. Mueller III's report into Russian interference in the 2016 election, once completed (Washington Post). The move is an attempt to "send a clear signal both to the American people and the Department of Justice" that lawmakers expect to see the full account of Mueller's work, according to the Judiciary Committee's chairman, Rep. Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.). The final vote count was 420 in favor, with no one voting no. Four lawmakers voted "present." But the resolution by itself cannot force Attorney General William P. Barr to publish more of the report than he intends to — and that is why even some of the Republicans supporting it complained that the measure was a waste of time.

INDY HOTEL CONCERNS DELAY CIB BILL: After a lengthy 4-hour testimony session on Wednesday, the Capital Improvement Board bill authored by Sen. Ryan Mishler, SB7, is now on to the next step (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). That's not a committee vote just yet, though, as the complex bill will undergo a few weeks of revision and further discussion. The portion of the bill getting the most scrutiny deals with the construction of a new major hotel in downtown Indianapolis. Executives and representatives from major Indy hotels spoke to the Ways & Means committee about their concerns that the new plans would negatively affect the balance of the city's hotel industry, costing revenue and jobs. The hoteliers also complained that they were not sufficiently consulted prior to session. Senate President Pro Tempore Rod Bray argued the bill wouldn't necessarily lead to a new hotel, though. "The bottom line is the CIB bill that we have moved over to the House doesn't dictate construction of other hotels. The market is going to dictate that" Bray told reporters on Thursday. Speaker of the House Brian Bosma also addressed the issue, saying the bill is "going to be a difficult needle to thread" but that lawmakers will be giving it a serious look; "Representative [Todd] Huston's working on it, I'm working with him, we'll see what we can do."

ABORTION EXEMPTION LAW PASSES HOUSE: Senate Bill 201, a bill extending medical professionals' ability to seek ethical exemptions for performing abortions, passed the House Thursday afternoon on a 69-25 vote (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). The bill's House sponsor is Representative Ronald Bacon. Specifically, the bill allows nurses, physician assistants, and pharmacists to refuse a patient's request to perform an abortion or procedures intended to result in an abortion on ethical, moral, or religious grounds. The bill also exempts certain providers from having to prescribe, administer, or dispense an abortion inducing drug. Currently, this exemption applies only to physicians and employees. House Democrats cautioned that the bill could harm Hoosier women who need immediate emergency services that fall under the exemption, keeping them from receiving the care they require.

PENCE DINES WITH IRISH PM, GAY PARTNER: Irish Prime Minister Leo Varadkar arrived in Washington this week as part of an annual trip ahead of St. Patrick's Day. The Irish leader aims to use the meeting to reaffirm the historical ties between Ireland and the United States (Washington Post). "I think that the relationship between Ireland and the U.S. is long-lasting — it's strong," Varadkar told The Washington Post in an interview on Wednesday. However, some differences between the two nations' administrations were highlighted Thursday morning, when Varadkar arrived at the Naval Observatory for a breakfast meeting with Vice President Pence — and took along his partner, Matt Barrett. Varadkar is one of only a handful of openly gay world leaders. Pence, on the other hand, is a socially conservative Christian who has long been criticized by LGBTQ advocates for pursuing policies that they say hurt the gay community while he was governor of Indiana.

HOWEY, MARCUS, GUY TALK DISCUSS JOURNALISM IN PODCAST: HPI Publisher Brian A. Howey joined economist and columnist Morton Marcus and investor John Guy on his podcast (Howey Politics Indiana). In this important conversation, Brian Howey, descended from a journalist-grandfather and a journalist-father, talks about failing business models and potential new models including philanthropic support, as well as his own entrepreneurially-successful private effort known as Howeypolitics.com.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Hoosier voters have an excellent track record on who we send to the U.S. Senate, and Birch Bayh stands out as the true lion of the class. Beyond his historic legislative achievements that have been well documented over the past day, anyone who knew or worked with Sen. Bayh found a remarkably friendly person. We extend our sympathies to the Bayh family. - Brian A. Howey

Birch Bayh

INIANAPOLIS MAYOR JOE HOGSETT TRIBUTE: "Birch Bayh was a tireless advocate for equality with the rare ability to transcend the prejudices of the moment and see beyond seemingly intractable divisions. He embodied what it means to be a Hoosier: Kindness, compassion, common sense, and integrity. We, as a state and as a nation, are forever shaped by his leadership and tenacity. Today our community joins the Bayh family in mourning the passing of one of our country's true civic giants."

VICE PRESIDENT MIKE PENCE: "Senator Birch Bayh served the people of Indiana with distinction through his lifetime of service in the Armed Forces, the General Assembly, and the U.S. Senate. Karen and I send our deepest condolences and prayers to Evan, Susan, and the entire Bayh family as they mourn the passing of this good man and great Hoosier Statesman."

GOV. ERIC HOLCOMB: "Birch Bayh was a trailblazer who dedicated himself to improving the lives of all Hoosiers. His remarkable legislative and personal legacy transformed the country and will live on for years to come." Gov. Holcomb ordered flags lowered to honor Sen. Bayh.

GOV. JOE KERNAN: "Birch was a good friend to Maggie and me. He was one-of-a-kind and he worked tirelessly to get things done for everyone. We especially appreciated his determined efforts to reduce discrimination against women. A true statesman, Birch and his big smile will be missed."

SEN. RICHARD LUGAR: "I agree with historians that he deserves recognition as a constitutional scholar. I think in recent years he is being more widely recognized for that." Lugar said besides being a "good listener and communicator," Bayh "was a keen observer of what was happening in the workplace and executive offices and he responded to it."

SEN. TODD YOUNG: "Birch Bayh is a modern-day founding father. He used his tenure in the Senate to push for substantive and substantial change, including two constitutional amendments and the passage of Title IX. While we remember his legacy, my thoughts and prayers are with the entire Bayh family." Indiana Senate President Rod Bray said, "Indiana has lost one of our most talented statesmen with the passing of Birch Bayh. His service in the Indiana General Assembly and U.S. Congress earned him a national reputation for being a thoughtful and dedicated public servant. I join all Hoosiers in remembering his contributions to our state and nation, and am keeping the Bayh family in my thoughts and prayers."

PURDUE PRESIDENT MITCH DANIELS: "Birch Bayh qualifies for the mantle of greatness as a Boilermaker, Hoosier, and American in equal measure. Even for a U.S. Senator, he made an unusual imprint on our nation's history, personifying Indiana's best qualities as he did so. I am grateful to have become his friend in his post-government life, and to have enjoyed his warmth, humor and wisdom firsthand."

SPEAKER BRIAN BOSMA: "Great Hoosier statesman. I told my brief story about being a law clerk with Fred Glass and Susan Brooks, of all people, in his law firm in the early 80s, and he just treated everyone with respect. It was mentioned by Rep. Pfaff; he's one of the only persons other than our founding fathers that actually sponsored more than one amendment to our United States Constitution. He should be in the hall of fame of Hoosier statesmen, there's no doubt about it. I don't even think of him as a Democrat, although I know he was a Democrat, I just think of him as a great leader. "

REP. ANDRE CARSON: "Today, we mourn the passing of Senator Birch Bayh, a giant of Indiana politics, and celebrate the indelible legacy he leaves behind. At a time when our nation needed strong leaders to help advance progressive ideals, Birch Bayh rose to the challenge, proving himself a fearless champion of those values. His tireless work on behalf of civil rights, women's equality, expanding access to the ballot box, and more have benefitted so many and continue to inspire my work in Congress. Today, in a similarly turbulent political era when we continue fighting the forces of bigotry and discrimination, I pledge to build on his legacy, strengthening his message to the world that Indiana stands against hate and intolerance, and for good governance. I send my deepest sympathies to his loved ones, including his sons, former Senator Evan Bayh and Chris Bayh, and their families, during this difficult time. As Hoosiers and all Americans grieve this loss, we also thank Birch Bayh for a life well lived in service of others."

SOUTH BEND MAYOR PETER BUTTIGIEG: "Birch Bayh was not afraid of the idea that upholding our Constitution includes amending it from time to time to strengthen our democracy. His bold ideas, from co-authoring the Equal Rights Amendment to lowering the voting age to 18 to passing Title IX, ensure that we are on a path towards guaranteeing equal opportunity for all Americans. He was one of the greatest Hoosiers ever to serve, a champion for equality, and an example for us all. My deepest sympathies to Evan, Susan, and the rest of the Bayh family today."

SENATE PRESIDENT PRO TEM ROD BRAY: "Indiana has lost one of our most talented statesmen with the passing of Birch Bayh. His service in the Indiana General Assembly and U.S. Congress earned him a national reputation for being a thoughtful and dedicated public servant. I join all Hoosiers in remembering his contributions to our state and nation, and am keeping the Bayh family in my thoughts and prayers."

SENATE MINORITY LEADER TIM LANANE: "Sen. Bayh understood that we cannot be a completely free country if some citizens are not given the same rights as others. By playing a vital role in crafting and passing the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the 1965 Voting Rights Act, he showed the country that Indiana can lead the way in making sure all people are guaranteed equality under the law."

FORMER SPEAKER JOHN GREGG: "Sen. Birch Bayh was a true statesman whose legislative legacy is unmatched in modern history. America is stronger and more inclusive because of Birch Bayh. We send our love to the Bayh family and thank them for sharing him with us."

ISU PRESIDENT DEBORAH CURTIS: "The Indiana State family mourns the loss of this incredible leader. Senator Bayh and his late wife, Marvella, took classes at Indiana State in the 1950s and are part of a family connection to the University that spans more than a century. We are proud that our renowned College of Education carries the Bayh name and stands as a permanent tribute to this legacy and Birch Bayh's distinguished career."

NANCY PAPAS: Nancy Papas worked as a summer intern in Bayh's Washington office in 1965 before becoming a staffer in 1967. At Butler, she studied Constitutional law which meshed well with Bayh's chairmanship of the Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee (Terre Haute Tribune-Star). "One of my first days in the office, the legislative director told me not to do anything that I wouldn't want to see splashed across the front page headlines of the newspaper. He said we were there to serve Hoosiers and the nation and not ourselves. I took that to heart." That Judiciary role put Bayh in the forefront of federal court cases on school prayer, abortion, Vietnam protest rights and others. "But he was always respectful of others' opinions and had a keen sense of how to frame issues so that people could see multiple perspectives. In that respect, he was a teacher and a leader," Papas recalled. She added, "I was surprised and thrilled to see that the office manager was a woman. So was the person in charge of the Senator's schedule as well as the person who was my immediate supervisor in the legislative department," she said.

REP: JACKIE WALORSKI: "Birch Bayh was a true statesman who dedicated his life to public service. Generations of Hoosiers have felt the impact of his bold leadership, and he has left an incredible legacy for our state and nation. Dean and I will keep the Bayh family in our prayers."

DEMOCRATIC CHAIRMAN JOHN ZODY: "Birch Bayh was driven by a belief in what we could accomplish given equal opportunity. That simple truth belies towering accomplishments. A United States Senator who twice amended the Constitution, father of Title IX, contributor to critical civil rights legislation. His legacy endures every day on college campuses. It endures in the form of equal opportunity, the right to vote and that all Americans deserve justice."

SEN. MIKE BRAUN: "Though Birch Bayh left his indelible mark on our Constitution, our universities, and the history of the United States Senate, he was first and always a Hoosier."

REP. PETE VISCLOSKEY: "Birch Bayh never failed to exhibit a gracious and pragmatic approach to public service, listening to all individuals, and working hard every day for a better future for our state and nation. He lived a life dedicated to serving others. May his example continue to lead the way for all current and future public servants."

BARON HILL: "Few people can be called great. Birch Bayh was one of them."

Campaigns

O'ROURKE ENTERS DEMOCRATIC RACE: Former Texas Rep. Beto O'Rourke formally announced Thursday that he'll seek the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination, ending months of intense speculation over whether he'd try to translate his newfound political celebrity into a White House bid. Until he challenged Republican Sen. Ted Cruz last year, O'Rourke was little known outside his hometown of El Paso (AP). But the Spanish-speaking 46-year-old former punk rocker became a sensation during a campaign that used grassroots organizing and social media savvy to mobilize young voters and minorities. He got within 3 percentage points of upsetting Cruz in the nation's largest red state — and shattered national fundraising records in the process — immediately fueling chatter that he could have higher ambitions. Now O'Rourke must prove whether the energy he brought to the Texas campaign will resonate on a much larger stage.

TRUMP CALLS BETO 'CRAZY': President Donald Trump mocked newly announced presidential candidate Beto O'Rourke on Thursday, saying the Texan moves his hands too much and that he might be "crazy" (Politico). O'Rourke, a former congressman, announced his bid for president on Thursday with a video filmed in his hometown of El Paso. In it, O'Rourke sits next to his wife, Amy, and articulates his vision for the nation, making sweeping hand gestures to emphasize his various points in the 3½-minute clip. He also gave an animated performance in an Iowa coffee shop on Thursday morning that was broadcast live on both CNN and MSNBC. "I've never seen so much hand movement," Trump said to reporters, adding that he'd watched O'Rourke in what he called a news conference earlier that day. "I said: 'Is he crazy or is that just the way he acts?'"

HARRIS BLASTS PENCE FOR WOMEN MEETING POLICY: Sen. Kamala Harris on Thursday called out Vice President Mike Pence for limiting his one-on-one meetings with women, saying the practice is "outrageous" (Politico). Pence told The Hill in 2002 that he "never eats alone with a woman other than his wife," according to a profile of his wife Karen Pence in The Washington Post. The practice, which some Evangelical Christians follow, drew backlash from some observers, including Facebook COO Sheryl Sandberg. Harris, who is part of the sprawling 2020 Democratic field, broadly criticized Pence in an interview on MSNBC, and took specific aim at his approach to meetings with women, though her description of the practice appeared to differ from his. "I disagree with most of what the vice president stands for, when he makes decisions about our LGBTQ community in a way that doesn't understand that they should be entitled to full equality and all rights under the law as any other American," Harris said. "I disagree with him when he suggests it's not possible to have meetings with women alone by himself. I think that's ridiculous — the idea that you would deny a professional woman the opportunity to have a meeting with the vice president of the United States is outrageous."

PENCE TELLS TRUMP NOT TO WORRY ABOUT BIDEN: During a recent meeting involving President Trump, Vice President Mike Pence and senior officials from the White House Office of Political Affairs, a discussion ensued about whether the president should be nervous about Biden entering the 2020 fray, a White House official told POLITICO. Several people in the room told Trump he shouldn't be 'overly nervous' as long as Biden is 'pulled to the left' in the primary, according to the official."

CHENEY LETTER ON DEMOCRATS AND JEWS: House Republican conference Chair Liz Cheney sent out this fundraising appeal (Politico Playbook): "This is Liz Cheney. The Democrats are enabling anti-Semitism. We must take action. Donate NOW to restore our conservative majority!"

General Assembly

SCHOOL BUS BILL REVISED: Indiana lawmakers have revised a bill that would install cameras on school buses to catch and punish motorists who pass illegally to address concerns that anyone might profit from the legislation (AP). The Indiana House Courts and Criminal Code Committee on Wednesday amended the bill to bar schools or camera vendors from making money from the camera enforcement. Fines collected can be used to pay for camera equipment. The bill comes after six-year-old twin brothers Xzavier and Mason Ingle and their nine-year-old sister, Alivia Stahl, were struck and killed by a pickup truck as they crossed a northern Indiana road to board a school bus in October. The goal of the bill isn't to make money but to deter drivers from passing a school bus that has its stop arm extended, said Republican Sen. Randy Head, the bill's sponsor. "There can be no ongoing source of revenue for the schools, there can be no ongoing source of revenue for the vendor," Head said. The bill proposes suspending the driver's license for 90 days the first time someone passes a stopped school bus and a year for repeat offenders. It would raise the offense of not stopping for a school bus from a ticketed infraction to a misdemeanor and make it a felony offense to recklessly pass a bus and injure someone.

BILL PROTECTS PEOPLE WHO USE FORCE: Protecting people who have to use force to protect themselves is the purpose of a proposed bill making its way through the Indiana legislature (Berman, WIBC). State Rep. Jim Lucas (R-Seymour), one of the sponsors of the bill, says HB 1284 is yet another way to support Hoosiers and their safety. "Basically it's a Good Samaritan Protection Act. In Indiana, we currently have very strong protections in the case of criminal use of force as it pertains to self-defense, but we don't have those same protections on the civil side," Lucas said. If passed, the bill would protect those who may have caused damage or injury while defending themselves against someone who was trying to commit a felony or someone trying to physically hurt another person. HB 1284 also requires the courts to award reasonable attorney fees to a defendant when they're claiming justified use of force in a civil lawsuit. The bill was heard in front of a Senate Judiciary Committee March 4. It gets its next hearing March 20.

STAND FOR CHILDREN DIRECTOR TESTIFIES: Stand for Children Indiana Executive Director Justin Ohlemiller testified to the Senate School Funding Subcommittee today urging lawmakers to invest meaningful new revenue dedicated to teacher pay (Howey Politics Indiana). "My organization has heard from parents who have had three or four teachers in one school year. Data shows that the number one factor in student learning is the quality of the teacher. How can we expect children to learn and reach their full academic potential if there is a revolving door of teachers in their classroom? For the sake of Hoosier children, we have a moral imperative to solve this issue, and if that argument is not enough we have an economic imperative to focus on teachers as well. The fact is, teachers are the ones who shape our tomorrow and we can't be the state that works if we don't have the workers trained to fill the jobs we're creating."

RIGHT TO LIFE ON CONSCIENCE BILL: The Indiana House by a 69-25 vote passed Senate Bill 201 which expands Indiana law to extend conscience protections to additional medical providers (Howey Politics Indiana). Currently, physicians and hospital employees can object to participating in abortions for ethical, moral or religious reasons. SB 201, authored by Sen. Liz Brown, would extend conscience protections to other medical providers, including nurses, physician assistants and pharmacists. Chemical abortions are on the rise in Indiana, accounting for 36 percent of abortions in 2017. As this type of abortion increases in popularity, more medical providers, including pharmacists, may become involved in the procedure. "This law will send a message to health care providers that they can practice their profession in Indiana without making ethical concessions," said Mike Fichter, President and CEO of Indiana Right to Life. "No one should be forced to participate in the deliberate ending of a child's life. Sen. Brown's bill extends important protections to health care providers. We're pleased the Indiana Senate and House have passed SB 201 and we urge Gov. Eric Holcomb to sign it into law."

TEACHERS PRESS FOR MORE PAY: Senate lawmakers heard hours of testimony Thursday from teachers and education professionals urging the state to give schools, and ultimately teachers, more money (Lindsay, Indiana Public Media). The House approved a budget proposal to boost school funding by a little more than 2 percent each year through 2021, but many who testified in the senate's school funding committee – including Brownsburg teacher Christianne Beebe – say current proposals are not enough for schools to increase teacher pay and still address basic needs. "When local control is touted as the solution to the teacher pay crisis, instead of additional state funding," she says. "Teachers may gain a pay increase but will undoubtedly lose support staff, administrative help, smaller class sizes, professional development, and more." Teachers and superintendents at the meeting also raised concerns about a recent proposed change to what's called complexity funding. It provides additional dollars to schools based on their population of low-income students. Lawmakers are proposing a roughly 14 percent – or $105 million – cut to complexity dollars to put more resources into basic tuition support.

Congress

YOUNG VOTES WITH PRESIDENT TRUMP ON DECLARATION: U.S. Senator Todd Young (R-Ind.) today voted to protect the border and preserve President Trump's national emergency declaration (Howey Politics Indiana). Just last month, 76,000 illegal immigrants were apprehended or deemed inadmissible at a port of entry on our southern border; that is not counting those who crossed undetected. We are on track for 900,000 apprehensions this year – greater than the entire population of Indianapolis. "As a U.S. Marine, I was stationed on the southern border in Yuma, Arizona. I saw firsthand the need for greater border security," said Senator Young. "We must address the situation taking place along our southern border where illegal crossings and smugglers trafficking drugs and people have created a humanitarian and national security crisis."

YOUNG TO VISIT FFA: U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R-Ind.) will visit with FFA CEO Mark Poeschl and FFA officers at the National FFA Center Friday. Senator Young and Mr. Poeschl will hold a media availability beginning at 10:30 a.m. to discuss the recently passed updates to the FFA Charter (Howey Politics Indiana). Senator Young's National FFA Organization's Federal Charter Amendments Act was signed into law on February 22. The new law better reflects agriculture education in the 21st Century. It updates the FFA's charter to allow for regional diversity among student officer vice presidents and provides governing flexibility for national officers in order to reduce operational delays caused by vacant seats.

CARSON COMMENTS ON REP. OMAR: As clumsy and offensive as Rep. Ilhan Omar's remarks were when she questioned the patriotism of pro-Israel members of Congress, some Democratic lawmakers and left-leaning Mideast peace advocates say the episode could nevertheless open the door to a more robust debate about U.S. foreign policy and rekindle interest in the plight of Palestinians, particularly among younger Democrats (San Diego Union-Tribune). Rep. Andre Carson (D-Ind.), a Muslim, agreed. "I think that it could spark a series of conversations that seek to address the Israeli-Palestinian question with more depth, more objectivity, more compassion, more readiness to have a dialogue that will foster greater relationships between Muslims, Jews, Christians, secularists and other faiths," he said.

TILLIS REVERSES COURSE: Two weeks ago, Sen. Thom Tillis said President Donald Trump's national emergency declaration violated the separation of powers and created a dangerous precedent, stating in an op-ed that he would vote to reverse it (Politico Playbook). On Thursday, the North Carolina Republican flipped and sided with Trump on the border vote. While a dozen Senate Republicans joined Democrats to support a resolution undoing Trump's move to fund a border wall, Tillis and all but one other Republican up for reelection in 2020 — Sen. Susan Collins of Maine — stuck with the president. The list includes Sen. Cory Gardner of blue-trending Colorado and Sen. Martha McSally, who was appointed this year but will face Arizona voters again in 2020 after losing a tough race in 2018. The vote underscores how little Republicans on the ballot in 2020 want to break with the president, even on an issue that divided the party and in states where Trump's approval rating is low.

WEATHER: 27K WITHOUT POWER FOLLOWING CYCLONE BOMB - Storms packing high winds, hail and possible tornadoes have swept across Indiana, leaving thousands of power customers without service (AP). Indiana utilities reported more than 27,000 customers without service Thursday evening. The National Weather Service issued several tornado warnings, mostly in southern Indiana, but none were immediately confirmed. The weather service recorded a 60 mph wind gust at Indianapolis International Airport.

GOVERNOR: CROUCH SCHEDULE - Below is Lt. Governor Suzanne Crouch's public schedule for March 15, 2019. Crouch speaks at grand opening of the Indiana NeuroDiagnostic Institute and Advance Treatment Center, Indiana Family and Social Services Administration, 9:45 a.m. - 11:00 a.m., ET, with Crouch remarks at 10:15 a.m., ET, 5435 E. 16th St., Indianapolis. Crouch speaks at Hoosier Homestead Awards, Indiana State Department of Agriculture, 1:00 p.m. - 2:30 p.m., ET, with Crouch remarks at 1:05 p.m., ET, Indiana Statehouse, Second Floor South Atrium.

OCRA: TO HOST GREAT LAKES MAINSTREET CONFERENCE - The Indiana Office of Community and Rural Affairs will host the inaugural Great Lakes Main Street Conference from August 18-20 in downtown South Bend. The conference will offer networking for leaders in downtown and historic commercial district revitalization from all over the Great Lakes and asset-based strategies to community and economic development (McLaughlin, Inside Indiana Business). Multi-track sessions will focus on sustainability, economic vitality and cultivating quality places. Local tours and networking opportunities will also be featured. "The conference will explore techniques and practices for downtown revitalization and economic development in our communities," said Jodi Golden, executive director of OCRA. "Communities will hear success stories, best practices and innovations from experts from the field focusing on the National Main Street model. We are thrilled to offer an opportunity for our Midwest Main Street partners who may not have the ability to attend the national conference."

HEALTH: STATE REVIVES TOBACCO QUIT LINE - The Indiana Tobacco Quitline is open once again to give Hoosiers free nicotine replacement therapy (WTHR-TV). The hotline will be open until supplies last. Last year, nearly 7,500 Hoosiers received a two-week supply of the medication for free. To participate, Hoosier tobacco users must first enroll. Then, participants will get a coach and a personalized quit plan, which includes a two-week supply of gum or patches and online counseling. While the season of New Year's resolutions has passed, it's never too late to make a change to a healthier lifestyle. According to the Indiana State Department of Health, Hoosiers quit smoking every day, and there are more former smokers than current smokers nationwide. To enroll, call the Indiana Tobacco Quitline at 1-800-QUIT-NOW or go to QuitNowIndiana.com.

DNR: BROWN COUNTY CAT KILLED BY MOUNTAIN LION - A Nashville family said a large cat attacked and killed their beloved house cat. They chased the animal through the woods with a gun because they believed it to be a mountain lion (Fox59). "I've seen multiple bobcats. I've lived here in these woods for 37 years, I work in the woods," James Halcomb said. "I've seen multiple bobcats, very large bobcats, there was no confusion." James Halcomb came face to face with the animal. He said the big cat was nearly waist high and appeared to weigh roughly 100 pounds. He and their dog went after the animal and eventually got it to run up two trees. The Indiana Department of Natural Resources (DNR) is investigating the body of their house cat for clues, but saw no additional evidence in the woods near Yellowwood State Forest. Mountain lions are more than double the size of bobcats and have a long rope like tail. The DNR said they are not native to Indiana with the last confirmed sighting coming in 2010 in Greene County. Data suggests they have appeared outside of their normal ranges over the past decade, but the possible one in Brown County cannot be confirmed yet.

JUSTICE: APPEALS RULING RESTORES PART OF 2016 ABORTION LAW - A federal appeals court has ruled portions of a 2016 Indiana abortion law are not unconstitutionally vague and has reversed an injunction blocking them (AP). The 7th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals ruled 2-1 Thursday that U.S. District Judge Jane Magnus-Stinson should have ruled against plaintiffs Indiana University and three of its researchers challenging the law that requires aborted fetuses to be buried or cremated. Magnus-Stinson found a section of the law dealing with the acquisition, receipt and transfer of the fetal tissue to be too uncertain to have legal force. But the appeals court opinion written by Judge Frank Easterbrook says, "Some uncertainty at the margins does not condemn a statute."

EDUCATION: FORMER ST. MARYS PRESIDENT SUES OVER DISMISSAL - The former president of Saint Mary's College has filed a lawsuit against the college claiming she was pushed out by the head of the board of trustees and that an agreement to stay on as a tenured faculty member has been violated (South Bend Tribune). Janice Cervelli in her lawsuit claims she resigned in October 2018 after being pressured to do so by Mary Burke, chair of the Saint Mary's College Board of Trustees. Burke instructed Cervelli to tell people she was on sick leave and "indicate that she was resigning because her mother needed more care," according to the suit. Those reasons were "not true," the lawsuit claims. Statements that Burke made to The Tribune — saying the board did not influence Cervelli's decision, that her resignation came as a surprise and that the board asked if "there was something we could do" to keep Cervelli — were also false, the suit says.

SAFETY: INDY DUI CHECKPOINTS SATURDAY - The Marion County Traffic Safety Partnership announced that local law enforcement agencies will conduct DUI checkpoints on Saturday (WRTV). Starting at 6 p.m., Indianapolis Metropolitan Police Department, Indiana State Police, Speedway, Cumberland, Lawrence, Beech Grove, Airport and IUPUI PD plan to conduct the checkpoints throughout Marion County. The "Driving Under the Influence Indiana" project is aimed at reducing alcohol-related automobile and motorcycle crashes.

SPORTS: PAINTER NAMED BIG TEN COACH OF THE YEAR - After leading Purdue to its second Big Ten title in three seasons, head coach Matt Painter was selected as the league's Coach of the Year in voting done by league coaches and media (Purdue Exponent). In addition, junior guard Carsen Edwards was voted unanimously to the All-Big Ten first team on both coaches and media ballots. Edwards and Michigan State's Cassius Winston were the only unanimous selections on either ballot.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP BUDGET CONFLICTS WITH HIS GOALS - As President Trump stood before a joint session of Congress for his State of the Union address in February, he urged Republicans and Democrats alike to support the audacious goal of stopping the spread of HIV within a decade. "Together, we will defeat AIDS in America and beyond," he declared (Washington Post). The White House's 2020 budget request, issued this week, does propose an additional $291 million as a down payment for a new HIV initiative. Yet the $4.7 trillion budget also calls for sharp spending reductions to Medicaid, the public insurance program for the poor on which more than 2 in 5 Americans with the virus depend. Such a contradiction — giving while also taking away — runs through the budget arithmetic for many of the Trump administration's health-care priorities. In addition to combating HIV, the president has taken aim at childhood cancer and the opioid crisis, but his budget would undermine all those efforts by shrinking the health infrastructure that people struggling with those issues rely on while throttling back national cancer research spending — even as it offers discrete pots of money for those causes, policymakers say.

WHITE HOUSE: NORTH KOREA EYES SUSPENDING TALKS WITH U.S. - North Korea is considering suspending talks with the United States and may rethink a ban on missile and nuclear tests unless Washington makes concessions, news reports from the North's capital on Friday quoted a senior diplomat as saying (Reuters). Vice Foreign Minister Choe Son Hui blamed top U.S. officials for the breakdown of last month's summit in Hanoi between U.S. President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, Russia's Tass news agency and the Associated Press said. "We have no intention to yield to the U.S. demands (at the Hanoi summit) in any form, nor are we willing to engage in negotiations of this kind," TASS quoted Choe as telling reporters in the North Korean capital.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will leave the White House at 10:45 a.m. en route to the Pentagon to meet with national security officials. He is having lunch with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo at 12:30 p.m. in the private dining room.

TREASURY: MNUNCHIN SAYS HIS TAX RATE WENT UP - Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said today that his taxes went up in the wake of the Republican tax rewrite thanks to its cap on state and local tax deductions (Politico). "I can tell you I did not personally benefit" from the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, Mnuchin told the House Ways and Means Committee. "I personally pay taxes in New York and California and my tax rate did go up because I no longer have the SALT deduction," he said.

CONNECTICUT: SANDY HOOK MASSACRE VICTIMS CAN SUE GUNMAKER - The gun industry suffered a potentially significant legal setback Thursday when the Connecticut Supreme Court said that a leading maker of AR-15 rifles can be held legally responsible for marketing practices that allegedly made the semiautomatic gun the weapon of choice for mass shooters (Wall Street Journal). The Connecticut Supreme Court ruled that Remington Outdoor, the maker of the AR-15 style rifle used in the Sandy Hook Elementary shooting, can be sued over the deaths of children killed there. In a 4-3 ruling, the court overturned the dismissal of a wrongful-death lawsuit brought by families of victims killed in 2012 at Sandy Hook Elementary School against Remington Outdoor Co., the maker of the weapon Adam Lanza used in the 2012 rampage in Newtown, Conn.

49 KILLED IN NEW ZEALAND MASSACRE: New Zealand police said a man in his late 20s had been charged with murder after 49 people were killed and 48 others injured in shooting attacks at two mosques in the city of Christchurch, Axios' Dave Lawler and Rebecca Falconer write. An account believed to belong to one of the attackers featured a link to an 87-page manifesto filled with anti-immigrant, anti-Muslim ideas" (CNN). Australian Prime Minister Scott Morrison described one alleged gunman, who had Australian citizenship, as an "extremist, right-wing" terrorist (BBC).

CITIES: MARTINSVILLE MAYOR HAS CANCER - Martinsville Mayor Shannon Kohl tells RTV6 she has been diagnosed with breast cancer. "It's not something anyone ever wants to hear or expects to hear, but I am facing this head on," Kohl told RTV6 Thursday. "I have a great support group around me of family and friends." The city's first female mayor in nearly 200-years, will not seek re-election, which means the Morgan County community will have a new mayor in 2020. However, it's unclear if Kohl's decision not to run for re-election was prompted by her cancer diagnosis. "Of everything I have won, this battle is the most important and I plan on winning this one too," said Kohl. Several people have already announced their candidacy for Martinsville mayor including businessman Kenny Costin as well as Kevin Coryell.

COUNTIES: CLARK HAS OVERDOSE SPIKE - Health officials in Clark County are asking the public to be alert to more potent strains of fentanyl-laced drugs in the area after a spike in overdoses late last week (Rickert, News & Tribune). The Clark County Health Department issued a public health notice Saturday afternoon to alert the community of increased overdose activity, which had started about mid-week, health officer Dr. Eric Yazel said. The notice states that while verification is still pending, it is believed the increase may be due to a drug supply with higher fentanyl content than usual in the area. Yazel said the roughly five cases over five days last week may include multiple fatalities, pending coroner's results; this is about the same number the county has been averaging in a month's time over the past year. In February, the health department reported a total of 50 suspected overdose death cases in Clark County in 2018, which was 15 percent lower than 2017 and the lowest total since 2013. He said the number of overdoses last week were enough that he believed it warranted an alert to help stop subsequent overdoses if there is a stronger strain of drugs in the area. He said Monday he was not aware of more overdoses since the weekend.

COUNTIES: VANDERBURGH COMMISSIONERS DIVIDED OVER SOLAR ZONING - A possible code amendment some saw as anti-solar power likely won't be considered anytime soon (Wilson, Evansville Courier & Press). A draft ordinance that would have placed commercial solar developments under Vanderburgh County's zoning code provoked a flurry of concerns and confusion when it surfaced last week. Unsupported by two of the county's three commissioners, the ordinance was withdrawn from consideration. Currently, land use decisions for energy production projects of any kind are considered a special use. As such, proposed projects must petition the county's Board of Zoning Appeals for approval.

COUNTIES: OWEN ROADS IN CRISIS - February flooding along with frequent swings in temperature has put a strain on county resources (Indiana Public Media). Director of Owen County's Highway Department Greg Melton says the biggest problem is the lack of proper drainage throughout the county. "I have 697 miles of country road that need to be ditched," he says. "Times two because I have to do each side." Melton says crews have been out in force since early February trying to make roads passable for emergency personnel and local residents.

INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT

End to power struggles nears

A Secretary of Education 2021 appointment is on a fast track

About 60 education-related bills – 30 each from the House and Senate – survived to the second half of the 2019 legislative session, out of the 175 or so education measures originally introduced.

Moving on greased skids: House Bill 1005, which would allow the Governor to select and appoint the state's top education official four years early.

This was the first bill that the Senate Committee on Education and Career Development approved during the second half of session. The measure advanced to the full Senate on Wednesday by a vote of 5-3.

Two years ago, as you'll remember, the General Assembly converted the superintendent of public instruction to a gubernatorial appointment but delayed the effective date until 2025 so as not to offend Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R). The 2017 measure also changed the name of the position going forward to Secretary of Education.

After Dr. McCormick announced in October that she would not run again in 2020, "rather than bringing in someone for a four-year term with no hope of re-election, it seemed to make sense to move the date forward," says the bill's author, House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) of Indianapolis, a former Department of Education employee in the administration of Dean Evans (R).

Both political parties have had the appointment as part of their political platforms over the years, and it was even a plank in the re-election campaign of then-Gov. Joe Kernan (D), said Bosma. In the late 1980s, a bill to appoint the state superintendent passed the House but fell one vote short in the Senate.

Ironically, Indiana has elected a Republican superintendent of public instruction more often than a Republican governor, noted Sen. Jean Leising (R) of Oldenburg.

Only 13 states elect a state superintendent, and of those, only nine elect the state superintendent on a partisan basis, explained Speaker Bosma.

Former superintendent of public instruction Suellen Reed (R) appeared before the Senate education panel to advocate for an amendment that would require a governor to appoint an individual with education experience. The Senate committee declined to follow Dr. Reed's advice.

The Secretary of Education is the only cabinet position with statutorily defined criteria limiting who a governor may appoint, noted Speaker Bosma.

Lee Ann Kwiatkowski, senior education advisor to Governor Eric Holcomb (R), told the committee that moving to an appointed education leader in 2021 will make it clear to education constituents that the governor is responsible and accountable for education policy in Indiana. The appointment ensures alignment of executive branch education functions, added Dr. Kwiatkowski, and will put an end to the power struggles that have beset Indiana education in state government over the past half-decade or so.

Dr. K, who also serves as executive director of the State Board of Education, is a front runner to be appointed as Indiana's first secretary of education. The former IDOE chief of staff is very highly regarded inside and outside state government.

No FAFSA, no graduation

Only Louisiana requires FAFSA for diploma

There's been surprisingly little pushback on the provision in House Bill 1629 that would require all Indiana high school seniors to file the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) as a graduation requirement.

The bill was amended before leaving the House to provide students, parents, and principals with opt outs.

Louisiana is currently the only state which mandates FAFSA filing for high school graduation.

The mandatory nature of FAFSA seems to have paid off for the Pelican State; Louisiana led the nation in the 2018-2019 FAFSA cycle with 77.1% of high school seniors completing the form.

By contrast, Indiana ranked 27th nationally for the 2018-2019 academic year with 56.4% of high school seniors completing the FAFSA process.

HB 1629, which passed the House 67-33, was authored by House Committee on Education Chair Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis and is sponsored in the Senate by Senate Committee on Education and Career Development Chair Jeff Raatz (R) of Centerville and Sen. Dennis Kruse (R) of Auburn.

IN Elementary & Secondary Ed

IN General . . .

- Approximately 10.5% of Hoosier students attend a school with a police presence but no counselor, according to the report Cops and No Counselors from the American Civil Liberties Union. That's the third-highest rate among states, trailing only Alaska (13.0%) and Utah (10.7%).

- The annual teacher salary survey compiled by the National Education Association reports that Indiana's rank for teacher salaries dropped again to 36th in the country. When adjusted for inflation, Hoosier teacher salaries have dropped by 10% from the 2007-2008 to 2017-2018 school years.

IN Administration . . .

- The Indiana Public Access Counselor concludes that the Board of Trustees of the North Vermillion Community School Corporation violated the Open Door Law in January by conducting a secret ballot vote to fill a vacancy on the school board.

IN Budgets & Finance . . .

- The October 2018 snapshot of student enrollment in TANF, SNAP, and foster care shows a 14% statewide decline, which translates into a $100 million cut in complexity index funding over the biennium. The change results in quite a few school corporations experiencing a loss in total per pupil funding in the first year of the biennium, although it appears that only three will see their per-pupil funding decline over the two year period (one of which is the school district that already has the lowest average teacher salaries in the state!).

□ Superintendent of Public Instruction Jennifer McCormick (R) tweets Wednesday about HB 1021: "Circuit breaker waiver threshold being raised from 10% to 40%. Total projected loss of $45M impacting 71 districts. In conjunction with HB 1003 & current complexity index challenges, this is a serious fiscal concern."

- On March 21, Western Wayne Schools will go to market with $1.29 million of General Obligation Bonds of 2019. George K. Baum & Co. is the financial advisor.

IN Compensation . . .

- Teachers in the Huntington County Community School Corporation will no longer be able to accumulate additional days off in exchange for covering an absent teacher's class. Currently, teachers can earn one day of vacation for every eight classroom periods they cover. The perquisite is costing the district too much money and is being eliminated. HCCSC will buy out the remaining credits that teachers have accumulated over the past dozen years.

IN Non-Public Schools . . .

- University High School in Carmel promotes Alicia LaMagdeleine from assistant head to head of school, effective July 1, 2020. She has been at UHS for 15 years. The founding head of school, Chuck Webster, plans to retire at the conclusion of the 2019-2020 school year.

- Andean High School announces that Tony Bonta will shift from principal to president. He will oversee finance, development, enrollment, and admissions.

□ Jaycob Knazur will take over as principal and will focus on academics and curriculum.

- The 2018-2019 school year saw an increase in participating students to 36,290 and 329 participating schools, the most in the history of the Choice Scholarship Program for both categories. There are 2,074 students in kindergarten who received a Choice Scholarship.

□ Only 44 students qualified for a voucher by virtue of enrolling in the On My Way Pre-K program, the least-utilized of the eight tracks to a voucher. About 1,291 vouchers were awarded to students who qualified on the basis of special education. Less than 42% of students in the Choice Scholarship Program have a record of previously attending an Indiana public school. Approximately 12.01% of participants are African-American, 21.29% are Hispanic, 58.06% are white, and 6.05% were multiracial. Due to the amount charged for tuition and fees being less than their qualified 90% or 50% award amount, most Choice students were awarded the full tuition and fees for their Choice school. The average actual award amount for all Choice students participating in the 2018-2019 Choice Scholarship Program is $4,448.75. The average tuition amount for all Choice students is $5,948.49.

□ Thirty-five non-public schools received at least $1 million worth of school vouchers. The three largest recipients were Cardinal Ritter ($2.24 million) for 415 students, Bishop Dwenger ($2.01 million) for 461 students, and Crossing Educational Center ($2.00 million) for 368 students.

IN Charter Schools . . .

- After giving preliminary approval to revoke the charters for Indiana Virtual School and Indiana Virtual Pathways Academy, Daleville Community Schools hires Administrator Assistance to help implement required closure protocol. The two charter schools have a combined ADM of more than 7,000 students. The operator of the virtual schools will meet with the school board on April 1 to present its case for why the schools should not be closed.

□ Retired superintendent John Williams of Administrator Assistance would lead the closure on behalf of the district.

- Charters enroll 49% of public school students in the Gary Community School Corporation, according to a newly released report covering the 2017-2018 school year from the National Association of Public Charter Schools. That's the second-highest charter penetration rate in the country, behind only New Orleans at 95 percent.

□ Charters account for a 36% enrollment share of public school students in the Indianapolis Public Schools.

IN Programs & Curriculum . . .

- In the partnership between the South Bend Community School Corporation and Education Resource Strategies for a Transformation Zone to drive academic improvement at Navarre Middle School, which has earned six consecutive F grades, SBCSC and ERS have agreed to share control over Navarre's feeder elementary schools.

- The Emergency Manager of the Gary Community School Corporation proposes to make the Frankie McCullough Girls Academy a co-educational facility.

- If you've scouted the national board of ReThink Education now that the State Board of Education has approved allowing Manual and Howe to be converted from turnaround academies to charter schools, you should keep in mind that there will be a separate local board.

- The Indianapolis-based Kennedy King Memorial Initiative (KKMI) has been awarded $10,000 from The Mind Trust to provide training and curriculum support to Indianapolis educators on the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Speak Truth to Power curriculum. KKMI will use the funds to conduct a one-day training and offer curriculum support for 30 educators.

- The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation awards a $750,000 grant to Indianapolis-based Crossroads Education (CRE) to implement its Learning Commons model at Ignite Academy, Matchbook Learning, and Indianapolis Academy of Excellence beginning in January 2019 and at Paramount School Excellence starting in August 2019.

IN Policy . . .

- The South Bend Community School Corporation informs its five athletic directors that their positions are being eliminated at the end of the school year. They will be reassigned to teaching positions at a lower salary.

□ Instead of employing athletic directors, each high school will have a new position labeled as dean of students and athletics.

- The redesign of the Kings crown logo for the Lewis Cass Schools was poorly received by the community. In response the district held an open house in the high school auditorium to allow the public to vote on which of several crown designs they like best.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- The Carmel Clay Schools will go to market with $22.415 million in General Obligation Bonds on March 27 to finance construction to replace Carmel Elementary School and Orchard Park Elementary School as well as other various building improvements, safety- and security-related renovations, and technology upgrades throughout the district.

- The School Town of Munster selects Performance Services Incorporated to design-build a facility that will house the district's IT services, select maintenance staff, and an adult transitions program for individuals with special needs ages 18 to 22. The school board hopes to approve a final design in the coming months so that construction can get underway and conclude by the end of the calendar year.

- The School City of Hammond is said to be contemplating whether to close Miller Preschool and Columbia and Lafayette elementary schools after enrollment declines.

- Barr-Reeve Community Schools Inc. plans a pair of public meetings this week on the district's plans for an $11 million dollar construction project.

□ The district's website says the Barr-Reeve Middle and High School project calls for a new gym, locker rooms, concession, band room and three classrooms, an expansion of the cafeteria to include seating for 352 people, the conversion of the multi-purpose room to five classrooms and a music room, and all new mechanical equipment (including chillers) and electrical system overhauls (much of the infrastructure dates back three decades or more).

- The Alexandria Community School Corporation expects to receive bids on April 4 and award construction contracts on April 8 for a $19 million project that includes a new primary wing for the intermediate school, new classroom space at the junior/senior high school for Project Lead The Way and agriculture science, and renovations to both buildings.

- The Fort Wayne Community Schools school board approves a $948,991 contract with Motz Group to install a synthetic turf field at Spuller Stadium for Fort Wayne Northrop and Snider high schools. The project is expected to be completed in time for the 2019 football season, and should last for 10 to 12 years.

IN Transition . . .

- Dr. Lewis Ferebee was officially confirmed by the city council of Washington, D.C. as chancellor of the D.C. public school system, two months after he departed from the Indianapolis Public Schools.

- Aleesia Johnson, the interim superintendent of Indianapolis Public Schools, is selected to join the fourth cohort of the Chiefs for Change Future Chiefs program.

- As Indianapolis Public Schools drafts the application for its next superintendent, Stand for Children touts the results of its recent community survey showing that only 28% of respondents prefer an outsider for the superintendent job over someone from the within the community.

- Indianapolis Public Schools promotes Kristian Little Stricklen to chief communications and engagement officer. She most recently served as interim public information officer and will continue to oversee all marketing and communications functions.

- Southeast Fountain School Corporation will be losing Superintendent Doug Allison to the Tippecanoe School Corporation, where Allison will replace the retiring Susan DeLong as assistant superintendent of personnel effective July 1. Allison has also served as an elementary and middle school principal.

- The Mind Trust hires Sara Marshall as senior director of talent. She will oversee The Mind Trust's work with Relay Graduate School of Education, including their National Principals Academy and the development of Relay's Teaching Residency in Indianapolis. She most recently served as director of TNTF's Indianapolis Teaching Fellows program.

- Rachel Hathaway has been promoted to interim executive director for Teach Plus Indiana. Rachel joined Teach Plus four and a half years ago as policy associate and has most recently been serving as program manager.

- Expect the Southeast Dubois County School Corporation to announce a successor to retiring Superintendent Rick Allen at the school board's April meeting. Allen leaves after 36 years with the district.

- Indianapolis Public Schools announces Dennis Tackitt as the new chief of transformation. His appointment is part of a three-year partnership with the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce to balance the district's budget. He spent 20 years as CFO of the M.S.D. of Wayne Township and recently served as a senior consultant with Policy Analytics, LLC.

- Michelle Brittain-Watts will be the new principal at Bloomington High School North beginning April 1. She is the former principal at Northwest Community High School and Tindley High School.

- Leonard Moody resigns his post as chief financial officer for the Gary Community School Corporation. A former internal auditor with the Chicago Public Schools, he was hired by the former emergency manager in 2017 on a six-figure salary.

- The Madison-Grant United School Corporation Board of School Trustees hires Shaela Smith as director of business affairs. She will begin work late this month.

- Due to term limits, Teresa Meredith will not be running for re-election as president of the Indiana State Teachers Association, and two candidates are vying to succeed her. The next president will be selected by the ISTA Representative Assembly when delegates meet on April 27. Keith Gambill has spent the past six years as ISTA vice president and is a middle school music and drama teacher in the Evansville Vanderburgh School Corporation. Paul Farmer is a science teacher in the Monroe County Community School Corporation and president of the Monroe County Education Association.

□ ISTA's Meredith, currently a kindergarten teacher from Shelbyville, will wrap up her term on July 31, 2019.

IN Government . . .

- U.S. Rep. Jim Baird (R) teams with Rep. Haley Stevens (D-MI) to introduce the Building Blocks of STEM Act (HR 1665), legislation to ensure that children, but especially young girls, have access to effective programs in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) at an earlier age.

□ The Baird bill would create two additional grant programs: one to accelerate research into why young girls do or don't participate in STEM activities, and a second to develop and evaluate programs in pre-K and elementary schools that lead to increased participation by young girls in computer science.

- U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R), a member of both the House Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on Armed Services, reintroduces his education savings accounts for military families legislation providing military families with more options to customize their child's education.

□ The Banks bill would afford portability to military families that they currently do not have and would enhance peace of mind for families in the event of a reassignment. Participating families would receive $6,000 deposited into their Military Education Savings Account for each dependent child in the first year. The amount deposited in subsequent years would be increased by an inflationary factor. Withdrawals could be spent on the costs of attendance of a private elementary or secondary school, private online learning program, private tutoring, services provided by a public elementary or secondary school attended by a child on a less-than-full-time basis, instructional materials, educational technology, school uniforms, assessment or exam fees, summer education programs and specialized after-school education programs (but not after-school childcare), educational therapies, transportation for travel to and from an educational service provider, costs associated with attending higher education, apprenticeship program, fees for industry certification exams, contributions to a college savings account, or any other expenses approved by the U.S. Secretary of Education. The bill would also require the U.S. Department of Education to enter into a contract with a private entity to establish and operate an online marketplace that enables the holders of a Military Education Savings Account to make direct purchases from qualified educational service providers using funds from their account. The Military Education Savings Account of a student terminates if and/or when the student enrolls in a public elementary school or secondary school on a full-time basis, complete a postsecondary education, turns 22 or in the case of a student with a disability turns 26, or after two years of inactivity. Both contributions and distributions to the savings account would be tax-free.

- The Kokomo Tribune reports that lawmakers and teachers clashed during a Third House session that took place one day before the Red for Ed rally at the State House. When questioned about the amount of funding in the House-passed budget for alternatives to public education, Rep. Mike Karickhoff (R) of Kokomo responded, "I think there's a misconception that students that use a choice scholarship, what's commonly referred to as a voucher, cost the state money or take money away from public schools. And that's just simply not true." Choice Scholarships save the state about $70 million compared to what it would have cost to educate the same students in the traditional public schools, he added. "Again, we're talking about a very small percentage. Yes, the dollar amount is high, but in the context of the billions that we put into traditional K-12 education, it's very small." An empathetic Rep. Karickhoff later went on to say, "I feel for the teachers that haven't gotten raises. Name me what public sector employee ... our county employees haven't gotten raises, our city employees haven't gotten raises. Anybody in the public sector have not gotten substantial increases of pay in the last decade."

- As it left the Senate, Senate Bill 546 authored by Sen. Victoria Spartz (R) of Noblesville would create a task force to examine, among other topics, "recommendations regarding the feasibility of merging SBOE, ICHE, and the Governor's Workforce Cabinet."

- The teacher compensation commission convened by Governor Eric Holcomb (R) met for the first time. “I was very pleased with the conversation that occurred and the goals that were set at that first meeting,” says the Governor. “Long term, we are looking at recommendations that systemically would address, really, cultural changes that would occur with the local level’s authority, which I favor, by the way.”

- Gov. Holcomb’s characterization of the teacher pay review evoked the government efficiency commissions for K-12 and higher education established more than a decade ago by his former boss, Gov. Mitch Daniels (R). “I hope the teacher compensation commission will give more data to local communities to be able to make that judgment call themselves,” explains Gov. Holcomb. He served up hypothetical questions the commission may endeavor to help local schools answer: “Are we operating in the most efficient manner? Our school vs. next door: How are we different? What are they doing differently? How is more pay getting into teacher pay checks next door and not here?”

- During the March business meeting, State Board of Education member Tony Walker of Gary said the State Board should create a new category of academic standards on nutrition and healthy eating to help combat the epidemic of sugar consumption.

- The State Board of Education votes to support the conversion of Howe and Manual high schools from turnaround academies to charter schools, spurning a request from the Indianapolis Public Schools to delay the decision. On the day of the vote, IPS revealed that the new school board and district leadership are open to Howe and Manual becoming Innovation Network Schools. In addition, IPS warned that the use of the Howe facility for a charter school could violate the tax-exempt status of the outstanding bond debt.

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- At 8:05 a.m. on Wednesday, March 6, a school bus from the South Dearborn Community School Corporation traveling on S.R. 350 between Moores Hill and Aurora crashed into a stopped garbage truck. About 20 students were taken to the hospital with minor injuries or as a precaution, most of whom were released the same day, although one student did suffer two broken legs.

IN Higher Education

IN General . . .

- The presidents of 17 of Indiana’s independents colleges and universities write a letter to House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) of Indianapolis urging passage of a bias crimes bill with a list of enumerated characteristics.

- Passage of Senate Bill 12 without a list would “detract more talent from coming in,” they write in the letter dated March 13. In August 2018, the presidents of 24 independent colleges and universities signed on to a letter endorsing a hate crimes bill. Which schools dropped off from the first to the second letter? Ancilla College, Anderson University, Calumet College of St. Joseph, Grace College, Indiana Wesleyan University, Oakland City University, University of St. Francis, and Valparaiso University.

- Saint Mary-of-the-Woods College was not a signatory to the first letter but did join the new one.

- DePauw University announces that the SAT/ACT will no longer be required for admissions beginning this Fall. Excepted from the policy are home-schooled students, for whom test scores provide a standardized measure for the highly individualized transcripts, and international students, for whom test scores assist with verification of credentials.

- Indiana State University students approved a referendum on a new $75 per semester health and wellness fee to support the expansion of mental health services and the Student Counseling Center. The vote was 835 in favor (68.2%), 243 against (19.8%), and 146 abstain (11.9%). The fee still needs the approval of the ISU board of trustees.

- The commissioner of the Indiana Commission for Higher Education, Teresa Lubbers, is one of 13 national leaders serving on the advisory council of Level Up, a new non-profit coalition of K-12 and higher education organizations aimed at improving the transitions between high school, college, and the work place, and increasing the number of high school students, particularly from underrepresented groups, who are prepared for and successfully complete postsecondary education and training.

- The Indiana Commission for Higher Education partners with the Nudge⁴ Solutions Lab at the University of Virginia to apply advanced analytic strategies to identify residents most in need of state financial aid programs or workforce training opportunities. The multi-year initiative is funded by the Lumina Foundation and Overdeck Family Foundation.

- Indiana University Bloomington spent $106.1 million on athletics in 2017, an increase of 52% since 2012, according to the Knight Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics. The Big Ten Conference median spend for 2017 was $117.5 million, a five-year jump of 33 percent. Purdue University West Lafayette spent $87.2 million on athletics in 2017 – the lowest in the Big Ten Conference. Purdue athletic spending has increased by 28% since 2012, the lowest rate of increase of the eight Big Ten schools that spent under $100 million on athletics in 2012 (and the second-lowest rate of growth among all Big Ten schools after the 24% increase by the Hawkeyes at the University of Iowa).

- PWL spent less on athletic facilities and equipment in 2017 than any other Big Ten school, while IUB spent the third-least on athletic facilities and equipment. PWL spending on coaches compensation grew by 53% from 2012 to 2017, the fourth-largest increase in the Big Ten. Between 2012 and 2017, IUB saw athletic ticket sale revenue jump by 40%, the largest increase in the conference. PWL suffered the largest percentage decline in athletic ticket revenue over the same span and was the only Big Ten school to earn less than $10 million in athletic ticket revenue in 2017.

- Ball State University spend $27.4 million on athletics in 2017, up by 36% since 2012 – the third-largest rate of growth in the Mid-American Conference after the University of Toledo and Western Michigan University. Ball State is one of only four schools in the conference to spend less than $30 million on athletics in 2017 (the others were Bowling Green, Kent State, and Northern Illinois). In 2017, BSU collected the lowest revenue from athletic ticket sales in the Mid-American Conference.

□ Indiana State University spent $15.3 million on athletics in 2017, up by 15% since 2012. The median athletic spend for the 75 public institutions from the Football Championship Subdivision in the Knight Commission database was $15.4 million. IUPUI spent $9.7 million on athletics in 2017, ascending by 38% over 2012.

● The Purdue University Back a Boiler Income Share Agreement program is unique among traditional four-year colleges in that the repayment terms vary based on major, according to The Future of Income-Share Agreements: Policy and Politics, a new report from the Manhattan Institute.

□ Most institutions offering ISA programs set the same income-share rate regardless of a student's major (i.e., the less a student earns, the less he or she must pay). But at Purdue, students enrolled in more remunerative majors carry lighter repayment terms. For example, a chemical engineering major in the class of 2019 at Purdue pays 0.26% of his income for every $1,000 received, and the obligation lasts for nine years and four months after graduation. In contrast, an English major pays 0.45% of income for every $1,000 received, with the obligation lasting for nine years and eight months. "Despite the stricter terms, Purdue estimates that the average English major will pay only slightly more in total than the average chemical engineering major, due to the English major's lower income," according to the Manhattan Institute. Overall, Purdue students who finance their education through an Income Share Agreement are expected to pay back 1.5-1.6 times the amount received.

□ The authors assert that "Congress should lower existing barriers to ISAs by providing them with legal clarity. Basic consumer protections are important, but lawmakers should be careful to provide flexibility for experimentation, lest regulators strangle this infant market in its cradle. Academic institutions should continue to experiment with ISAs as an alternative to Parent PLUS and traditional private loans, following the lead of institutions such as Purdue University and the University of Utah."

● Ivy Tech Community College President Sue Ellspermann tells the Senate Appropriations Committee that 68% of its students are part time; the age of the average student is 27; 50% of students are Pell-eligible; and a quarter of students have a dependent. One year after graduation, 45% of graduates are earning a salary above the state median. Since she took over, Ivy Tech has eliminated just over 500,000 square feet of real estate and has shrunk by 148 full-time employees. Ivy Tech doesn't yet track industry certifications, but we should and we will, says President Ellspermann. She notes that Ivy Tech is re-inventing its online approach, which should help address the gap of more than 10% in the pass rates between online and face-to-face instruction. Ivy Tech requested two new line-items in the state budget: one to expand the highly successful nursing program and the other for security and student coaching.

□ The institution has identified a need to retrofit existing facilities with access control to lock down in the event of an emergency, said Dr. Ellspermann. Ivy Tech has had five security-related incidents over the past nine months, including a shooting across the street from the Terre Haute campus one in the woods behind the Richmond campus.

● The Purdue University partnership with the online writing lab and student services company Chegg receives blowback from faculty. "If this were a site that genuinely helped students to master the materials, it wouldn't be a problem," one professor told Inside Higher Ed. "But it's not set up like that - it dangles the solution in front of students." Inside Higher Ed explains that "while Chegg purports to help students do their homework, students on Twitter are quite blatant about using the site to do their homework for them."

● Purdue University President Mitch Daniels tells the Senate Committee on Appropriations that the tuition freeze, entering its eighth year, won't last forever, and that one possibility under consideration is to increase the tuition rate paid by out-of-state students.

● Indiana University President Michael McRobbie explained to the Senate Committee on Appropriations that because the performance funding formula tends to reward improvement, it's becoming increasingly difficult for the Bloomington campus - the highest-performing campus in the state - to see rewards.

● Senate Committee on Appropriations Chair Ryan Mishler (R) of Bremen commended Ball State University President Geoffrey Mearns for being the first public institution in the state to eliminate the SAT/ACT as a factor in admissions. BSU received a record number of applications for this Fall after announcing the test-optional policy and does not expect a decline in its academic profile, said Mearns. He requested an increase in the Entrepreneurial University line-item to, in part, expand immersive, community-based teacher education that places candidates in the community for a full semester of coursework during their junior year.

● Vincennes University President Chuck Johnson tells the Senate Committee on Appropriations that VU trained 7,000 miners over the past year, a significant increase over prior years, as all mines in Southwest Indiana are operating at full capacity. The underground mining simulation environment that the General Assembly funded a few years ago is one-of-a-kind, he said. President Johnson requested increased funding for the Career and Technical Education Early College line item. VU will soon have 18 Career and Technical Early College High School partnerships at various stages of implementation across the state.

● University of Southern Indiana President Ronald Rochon asked the Senate Committee on Appropriations for new line-item funding for a seven-week Summer bridge program to serve about 30 African-American students. The on-time graduation rate for African-American males at USI is less than five percent compared to 30% for all students, said Rochon.

● While presenting the school's budget request to the Senate Committee on Appropriations, Indiana State University President Deborah Curtis emphasized ISU's progress across the board on the metrics in the performance funding formula. Overall degree completion is up 34%; on-time graduation rates for Indiana residents are up 8.6 percentage points; and the number of degrees conferred to Pell-eligible students has risen by 41%. Since 2009, ISU's operating appropriation has declined by $11.76 million, but it's set to increase this biennium.

IN Rankings . . .

- For the third time in a row, the O'Neill School of Public and Environmental Affairs at Indiana University Bloomington is ranked first nationally for its master's program in public affairs in the U.S. News & World Report Best Graduate School rankings.

IN Administration . . .

- The Purdue Alumni Association rolls out a new, tiered membership system that offers different benefit options based on to fit each member's personal, professional and intellectual needs, based on their stage of life, goals, interests, and budget.

IN Programs & Policy . . .

- The Purdue University College of Engineering and Indiana University School of Medicine are launching a new educational and research partnership to develop novel technological solutions for pressing health care problems. The partnership establishes an MD/MS in biomedical engineering program that will provide master's-level training to IU medical students who seek to develop and apply engineering technologies in their clinical practices and related research laboratories. The agreement also creates the Clinical Innovation and Translation Fellowships in Biomedical Engineering, a new program that will immerse Purdue engineering graduate students in clinical settings and provide mentorship from faculty at both institutions so they are better prepared to translate technology directly into hospital and ambulatory health care settings.

- Vincennes University announces a new computer science degree program to be offered at both the Vincennes and Jasper campuses as well as online.

- The University of Southern Indiana Board of Trustees approved a Bachelor of Science in Civil Engineering degree program to be offered through the Pott College of Science, Engineering, and Education beginning Fall 2019. The proposed degree program moves next to the Indiana Commission for Higher Education for approval.

IN Gifts and Fundraising . . .

- Indiana University renames the School of Public and Environmental Affairs (SPEA) in honor of alumnus and former U.S. Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill, after he donated $30 million. O'Neill's gift will also establish the Paul H. O'Neill Center on Leadership in Public Service, a dean's initiatives fund, three faculty chair positions, five professorships, a fellowship program for master's, doctoral, and postdoctoral students, and a scholarship program that will continue in perpetuity.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- Indiana University delays expansion of residence halls after bids for construction came in above budget.

- University of Notre Dame receives a $20 million gift from alumnus John Baumer and his wife, Mollie Baumer, for the construction of Baumer Hall, a new men's residence hall that will open in August. The four-story, 78,000-square-foot structure will house 251 men and feature a two-story lounge, reading room, study rooms, community kitchen, chapel, laundry, vending, storage, exercise room and space for food sales on the lower level.

- Ivy Tech Community College will allow the lease for its Rochester Learning Center space to expire at the end of June after eight years.

IN Government . . .

- U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R), a member of both the House Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on Armed Services, introduces the Protect Our Universities Act of 2019 designed to protect sensitive academic research from foreign threats. Under the bill, students from nations deemed a threat – China, Russia, Iran, and North Korea – will need to apply for a waiver from the Director of National Intelligence to participate in sensitive research projects funded by the Department of Defense, Intelligence Community, and Department of Energy. Additionally, the legislation would prohibit technology developed by questionable foreign corporations (read: Huawei) from being used in certain federally-funded research projects. In June, Rep. Banks wrote to the U.S. Department of Education Secretary Betsy DeVos requesting the appointment of a working group to examine the threat that China and other adversarial nation posed to the American higher education research apparatus. "The Department of Education's lack of an adequate response to this request prompted me to craft legislation on the issue," said Rep. Banks in a statement. "We must get tough against these covert threats on college campuses and limit the effectiveness of their information-gathering missions. Clear-eyed vigilance is essential if America and our allies are to remain free from Beijing's influence and espionage." The bill would also establish an interagency task force to address the vulnerabilities present on college campuses and provide heightened oversight over federally funded research projects deemed sensitive to national intelligence, including those related to the Commerce Control List, the U.S. Munitions List, and foundational principles developed for advanced military technologies.

- The Senate Committee on Education and Career Development approves House Bill 1245, which repeals three state financial aid programs that have not been funded for several years: the Hoosier Scholar Award (last funded in 2009), Insurance Education Scholarship (not funded since 2009), and Teacher Loan Repayment program (enacted in 2014 yet never funded).

□ The bill would require FAFSA data sharing agreements between high schools and the Indiana Commission for Higher Education so ICHE can help school counselors track which students have filed for financial aid. Currently, 334 public and accredited non-public high schools have data sharing agreements on file with ICHE. Not knowing who has filled out FAFSA creates more work for counselors, says Zach Smith, legislative and program manager for ICHE.

□ HB 1245 was amended to remove language that would have designated Purdue University Northwest as a metropolitan campus after the Indiana Commission for Higher Education agrees to revisit mission differentiation outside of session. Purdue Fort Wayne will remain the only campus with the metropolitan designation, which, when compared to the other regional campuses, bestows additional flexibility to offer graduate programs and to build student housing for more than 10% of students.

- Indiana's CollegeChoice 529 program joins a national campaign led by the 529 College Savings Plans Network to raise awareness of 529 plans. Campaign spots will air before and after episodes of the popular children's television show Daniel Tiger's Neighborhood on Public Broadcasting stations.

IN Courts and Conduct . . .

- In Cervelli v. The Corp. of St. Mary's College, Notre Dame, No. 71D05-1903-PL-000074, Janice Cervelli, the former president of Saint Mary's College, files suit in St. Joseph County Superior Court against the college alleging breach of contract, violation of state wage laws, and breach of duty of good faith and fair dealing.

□ Cervelli, who resigned her post in early October, now says that she was pressured to resign by the chair of the Board of Trustees, and that the College has since failed to adhere to the terms of her settlement agreement which was said to allow her to remain as a tenured professor with compensation "in an amount equal to the highest paid professor at Saint Mary's." The agreement also promised "certain severance pay and benefits for twelve months, beginning Jan. 1, 2019," and also offered the prospect of a contract buy-out. Cervelli is requesting the compensation and benefits she says she has not been provided, as well as damages for breach of her contract.

□ A statement from the Board explains, "The Saint Mary's Board of Trustees is aware of, but not surprised by, the complaint that has been filed by former president Janice Cervelli. We obviously disagree with the allegations raised by Ms. Cervelli's lawyers, their descriptions of the agreements and their account of the facts. The Trustees have honored all of its agreements with Ms. Cervelli and has fulfilled all of its obligations to Ms. Cervelli as a tenured member of Saint Mary's College faculty."

IN Transition . . .

- University of Southern Indiana President Ronald Rochon will be formally inaugurated at a ceremony on Friday, April 5. On Thursday, April 4, Rochon will moderate a conversation on leadership with Ret. Gen. Colin Powell. Both events will be the first public events at the new 4,800-seat Screaming Eagles Arena on the USI campus.

- The new chancellor of Western Governors University Indiana will be Alison Bell, who has more than 20 years of higher education leadership experience, including four years as general manager of WGU Indiana operations from 2010-2014. She comes to WGU from IUPUI where she served as director of degree completion.

□ Bell succeeds Dr. Allison Barber, who served as founding chancellor until May 2018 when she was named president of WGU Advancement. Barber was just named president and chief operating officer of the Indiana Fever.

- Dr. Lisa Goodnight, a 25-year member of the Purdue University Northwest faculty, joins the senior leadership team as vice chancellor of Institutional Advancement, where she will be responsible for all development, marketing and communications, alumni relations, and strategic events functions of the university. Most recently, Dr. Goodnight served as Purdue Northwest's associate vice chancellor of Student Affairs and senior dean of students.

- Terry Truitt, dean of the Anderson University Falls School of Business, has been named the new chief executive officer of the Flagship Enterprise Center. He replaces Chuck Staley, who retired after leading the Center since its formation in 2003.

- Christian Theological Seminary in Indianapolis announces that David M. Mellott has been named the seventh president. He joins CTS from Lancaster Theological Seminary, where he most recently served as vice president for academic affairs.

- State Budget Director Jason Dudich will leave his post in May after the conclusion of the state legislative session to serve as the vice president, chief financial officer, and treasurer of the University of Indianapolis. He's a former CFO for the Indiana Commission for Higher Education.

- The Governor appoints Dr. David Wantz, president and CEO of Independent Colleges of Indiana, to one of Indiana's five seats on the Midwestern Higher Education Commission for a term expiring next February. The 60-person panel oversees the Midwestern Higher Education Compact.

- Tim Frey has been named interim dean of the College of Education at Doane University. Frey earned a Ph.D. from Indiana University Bloomington in 2005.

- Larry Singell leaves his post as executive dean of the Indiana University College of Arts and Sciences after eight years to become senior vice provost for resource management at the University of Texas - Austin on July 1.

- Simon Rhodes, dean of science at IUPUI, will become provost and vice president of academic affairs at the University of North Florida on June 30.

- Matthew Hisrich is the new vice president of Earlham College and dean of the Earlham School of Religion. He has held various positions in the School of Religion, including acting dean, interim dean, and director of recruitment and admissions. His wife teaches Biomedical Science at Richmond High School.

- The next dean of students at the University of Southern Indiana will be Dr. Jennifer Hammat, currently a Title IX coordinator at George Mason University.

BIAS CRIME DEBATE 'COMPLICATED' BY BMV CHANGES: Last week, hope was expressed that the bias crime bill could move in the House 'within two weeks', but no progress was made this week (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). That's official progress, at least, according to Speaker Brian Bosma who told reporters that recent developments had caused some reconsideration within the GOP caucus. The cause? Last week, the a 2018 BMV decision that would allow nonbinary-identifying Hoosiers to claim a third option on their driver's license in the form of an 'x' caught public attention. Some Republicans aren't satisfied with the process laid out by the BMV though, and Bosma said that disagreement led to Rep. Sullivan's amendment to a mobile-driver's-license bill earlier this week. The amendment requires persons to obtain a court order allowing them to change the gender on their birth certificate rather than bring a separate form to the BMV. That issue apparently took up enough time to impact the caucus' bias crime discussion, as Bosma said it injected "an entirely different discussion in it", and added that "frankly, it also changed some peoples' minds about where they stood on the bias crime issue." He didn't expand any further on that, telling reporters "just take my word for it."

BOSMA SAYS 'WAIT' ON HILL REACTION: Speaker of the House Brian Bosma is sticking to his guns and saying the House will wait before considering the impeachment of embattled Attorney General Curtis Hill (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). After the Indiana Supreme Court Disciplinary Commission filed a complaint on Tuesday against Hill over sexual assault allegations made against him last year, the stability of his position as AG has again come into question. While the filing itself has re-raised the issue, Bosma told reporters that the intention is to wait for the commission, or potentially the court itself, to come to a final conclusion. The Speaker expressed confidence in the commission as a bi-partisan body, saying "I'm glad it's there, honestly, and we'll wait to see what their conclusion is."

GOVERNORS CAN FILL VACANCIES OF CONSTITUTIONAL OFFICERS: It's clear the governor has the right to fill any vacancies in statewide elected offices (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). For instance, then-Gov. Mitch Daniels immediately appointed an interim secretary of state when Charlie White was found guilty of felony vote fraud. But the question is whether a temporary 30-day suspension, for instance, would constitute a vacancy. Or how about 90 days? Gov. Eric Holcomb said he is not an attorney and not the one to ask about the logistics of any future discipline. But both he and Bosma agreed the disciplinary commission is the right venue to handle the issue.

REGION LEADERS DIVIDED OVER MOVING CASINO: Leaders of Northwest Indiana communities and casino operators largely picked sides on SB552 based on whether they believe the Region gaming market has peaked and any changes simply rearrange pieces of the pie, or whether they still see room to grow the pie (Carden, NWI Times). Gary officials fell into the latter camp. They wholeheartedly endorsed the proposed move of one Majestic Star casino from Lake Michigan to a land-based site adjacent to the Borman Expressway, and to send the city's second gaming license to Terre Haute. The nonpartisan Legislative Services Agency estimates the inland move in Gary will generate at least $8.5 million a year in new tax revenue for the state, and a minimum of $2.6 million for the city, without even accounting for the potential of luring more Illinois gamblers to a brand new casino just across the state line. Meanwhile, East Chicago and Hammond leaders told the panel they fear the Gary casino move will hurt workers in their communities employed at the Ameristar and Horseshoe casinos, which may lose business due to their unchanging locations on Lake Michigan. "I'll simply say: Let's not do irreparable harm to the Everyday Joe," said East Chicago Mayor Anthony Copeland. "Let's let the rules of engagement stay the way it is." Phil Taillon, chief of staff to Hammond Mayor Thomas McDermott Jr., warned lawmakers that allowing the Gary casino move will destabilize the Region gaming market, and possibly discourage future investment in Indiana by national casino operators.

REP. PENCE SIGHTING IN MUNCIE CONFIRMED: U.S. Rep. Greg Pence met with Central High School government students during an unpublicized visit to Muncie on Wednesday — possibly his first stop here since taking office. Pence spoke to more than 30 AP government, dual-credit government and general government students for one period in the school auditorium, said Principal Chris Walker. Pence also answered questions (Muncie Star Press). The congressman was the guest of government teacher Julie Snider, who always invites U.S. senators and representatives to speak to her classes about their jobs and the legislative process. "It is not about issues or political agendas," she told The Star Press. "I ask them to discuss a day in the life of a legislator. Neither Pence nor his office has responded to Star Press requests for information or interviews, including whether Wednesday was his first visit to the 6th district's largest city. Pence, who won election in a landslide, spends a lot of his time in his hometown of Columbus.

BRAUN SAYS LOCALS NEED TO PAY MORE FOR ROADS: He declared Washington "really needed" the shakeup it got with the election of Donald Trump as president. He predicted voters will recoil at the outlandishly expensive price tag attached to Democrats' Green New Deal climate change proposal — and that will pave the way for Trump's re-election (Langhorne, Evansville Courier & Press). But U.S. Sen. Mike Braun didn't seem to ruffle anyone's feathers at the Southwest Indiana Chamber Thursday until he said it's a good thing that local governments are ponying up more money for roads projects while the federal government pays less. Noting that some localities are paying 50 percent or even more in aid packages with the state's Community Crossings grant program, Braun said the traditional 20 percent local match for federal aid on road projects is untenable. "We've never been in a worse shape federally to even continue the current road funding plan of 80-20," he said. "All we're doing is lying to the public and putting more debt on future generations if we try to do infrastructure now without showing real reform on bringing our deficits down."

FARMERS FACING TOUGHEST TIMES SINCE 1980s: The worst agricultural downturn since the 1980s is taking its toll on the emotional well-being of American farmers (Transport Topics). In Kentucky, Montana and Florida, operators at Farm Aid's hotline have seen a doubling of contacts for everything from financial counseling to crisis assistance. In Wisconsin, Dale Meyer has started holding monthly forums in the basement of his Loganville church following the suicide of a fellow parishioner, a farmer who'd fallen on hard times. In Minnesota, rural counselor Ted Matthews says he's getting more and more calls. "Can you imagine doing your job and having your boss say 'Well you know things are bad this year, so not only are we not going to pay you, but you owe us,'" Matthews said by telephone. "That's what's happened with farmers." Glutted grain markets have sparked a years-long price slump made worse by a trade war with top buyer China. As their revenues decline, farmers have piled on record debt — to the tune of $427 billion. The industry's debt-to-income ratio is the highest since the mid-1980s, when Willie Nelson, Neil Young and John Mellencamp organized the first Farm Aid concert.

TRUMP CONTINUES ASSAULTS ON THE LATE SEN. MCCAIN: President Donald Trump on Thursday continued his verbal attacks on the late Sen. John McCain, claiming that the Arizona Republican gave to the FBI an explosive dossier on Trump and Russia "for very evil purposes" (Politico). The president, in an interview with Fox Business, was asked by host Maria Bartiromo why he "spent a good portion of your time in Ohio the other day trashing" McCain when the senator is dead. "It's not a good portion of my time, it's a very small portion," Trump claimed in an excerpt of the interview released Thursday. He spent several minutes during his rally in Ohio on Wednesday railing against McCain, remarks that did not receive cheers or applause from attendees. The president claimed McCain drew his ire after reports that the late senator had access to the Steele dossier, a mostly unverified document focusing on Trump's alleged ties to Russia, and for his vote against repealing Obamacare. "They gave it to John McCain, who gave it to the FBI for very evil purposes. That's not good," Trump told Fox Business. "And the other thing, he voted against repeal and replace — now he's been campaigning for years for repeal and replace."

DEMOCRATIC VOTERS WANT EXPERIENCE: Democrats are already boasting a diverse crop of candidates for the party's presidential nomination, including a gay millennial veteran with no prior national political experience, two African-Americans and five high-profile women. But more than any of that, Democratic voters are prioritizing experience when thinking about their nominee to challenge President Donald Trump next year, according to a new Morning Consult/Politico poll. Two-thirds of Democrats surveyed March 15-17 said it's important that the party's eventual nominee has decades of political experience under his or her belt. And while Trump stormed the gates of the GOP during the 2016 presidential primary riding his outsider status to victory, Democrats are putting a premium on proximity to the establishment. Fifty-two percent of the party's voters said it's important that the Democratic presidential nominee be a political insider, compared with 29 percent who preferred an outside operator.

TOP 10 DOGS: Labrador retrievers aren't letting go of their hold on U.S. dog lovers, but German shorthaired pointers are tugging on the top ranks of doggy popularity, according to new American Kennel Club data. Labs topped the list for the 28th year in a row. Yet there's been plenty of movement over time on the purebred pup-ularity ladder. After Labs, the top five breeds nationwide are German shepherds, golden retrievers, French bulldogs and bulldogs. Rounding out the top 10 are beagles, poodles, Rottweilers, German shorthaired pointers and Yorkshire terriers. Beagles, now No. 6, can boast they're uniquely beloved. No other breed has made the top 10 in every decade since record-keeping began in the 1880s. Why? "They're a good general family dog," lively, friendly, relatively low-maintenance and comfortable with children, says breeder Kevin Shupenia of Dacula, Georgia. Beagles also work sniffing out contraband meat and plants at airports, detecting bedbugs in homes and doing their traditional job: hunting rabbits. "They have a sense of humor, and they're just characters," Shupenia says.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Per the Morning Consult Poll revealing Democratic voters want a presidential nominee with government experience, this comes after Republicans and many independents opted for the reverse, bringing President Trump to power with a blow it up mentality. We're hearing that similar sentiments are surfacing here in Indiana. - Brian A. Howey

SMITH RUNNING TO COMPLETE DOWNTOWN ANDERSON PROJECT: During his final year in office as mayor in 2015, Republican Kevin Smith announced "Operation Downtown." Now he is running again to complete the project (de la Bastide, Anderson Herald-Bulletin). Smith is seeking the GOP nomination to return as Anderson mayor a third time, facing Madison County Auditor Rick Gardner and JoAnna Collette, director of JobSource, in the May 7 primary. The winner of that race will run against either incumbent Democrat Thomas Broderick Jr. or Terry May in the general election in November. Meeting with residents of Parkview Apartments on Tuesday, Smith said he wants to see those projects continue. His slogan for the campaign is "Bring Back Smith." This is his fifth campaign for the city's highest elective office having won in 2003 and 2011 and losing campaigns in 2007 and 2015. The 17 projects in his "Operation Downtown" proposal included two-way streets, an amphitheater along the White River, roundabout at 17th and Jackson streets, and soccer fields at Athletic Park. It's a $40 million to $50 million proposal to revitalize the city's core district. "It takes more than four years to accomplish anything," Smith said. "Continuity is important for downtown."

LAKE COUNTY CONSOLIDATES PRECINCTS: Election officials in northwestern Indiana's Lake County have approved a state-mandated consolidation of the county's small voting precincts. Lake County's elections board approved a new precinct map Tuesday that shrinks the county's precincts from 523 to 364 ahead of the May 7 municipal primary elections. The NWI Times reports the precinct consolidations mean nearly 90,000 voters will have a new polling place. Lake County Democrats had resisted a 2017 state law requiring the county to develop a plan for consolidating precincts with fewer than 600 active voters, arguing that it would most heavily impact the county's heavily-populated northern Democratic strongholds.

MODELS INDICATED TRUMP LANDSLIDE VICTORY: Donald Trump has a low approval rating. He is engaging in bitter Twitter wars and facing metastasizing investigations (Politico). But if the election were held today, he'd likely ride to a second term in a huge landslide, according to multiple economic models with strong track records of picking presidential winners and losses. Credit a strong U.S. economy featuring low unemployment, rising wages and low gas prices — along with the historic advantage held by incumbent presidents. While Trump appears to be in a much stronger position than his approval rating and conventional Beltway wisdom might suggest, he also could wind up in trouble if the economy slows markedly between now and next fall, as many analysts predict it will. And other legal bombshells could explode the current scenario. Trump's party managed to lose the House in 2018 despite a strong economy. So the models could wind up wrong this time around.

PENCE RECRUITS HASLAM FOR SENATE RUN: Former Tennessee Gov. Bill Haslam met with Vice President Mike Pence on Wednesday to discuss potentially running for Senate next year, according to a source advising Haslam (Politico Playbook). Haslam, who left office earlier this year after two terms as governor, has been publicly weighing whether to run to replace Sen. Lamar Alexander, who is not seeking reelection next year. Haslam and Pence spoke for about an hour at the White House, and Pence encouraged him to run, according to the source, who requested anonymity to discuss a private conversation.

SUPERINTENDENT CHANGE ON HOLCOMB'S DESK: The Senate Education and Career Development Committee heard several hours of testimony on some high-priority schooling bills this week, but the biggest education development came from House Bill 1005's passage through the Senate (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). Now awaiting signature by Gov. Eric Holcomb, HB1005 moves up the timeline for changing Indiana's Superintendent of Public Instruction to an appointed position from January 2025 to January 2021. Most Republicans have lauded the action, while Dems expressed disappointment (their Senate amendment to keep it as an elected position also failed this week). Senate President Pro Tempore Rod Bray called it an "efficient" move, especially in light of current State Superintendent Jennifer McCormick's decision not to run for reelection. This means McCormick will be the last official elected to her position, barring any reversals that might come in future years. Of course, it also means the 2020 gubernatorial race will be the first where the appointment of the superintendent will be a campaign issue.

SENATE ADVANCING ELECTION BILLS: The Senate's Elections Committee passed two bills, which are now heading into third reading next week (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). House Bill 1311 makes a few changes to Indiana's absentee ballot process, such as moving the application deadline from 8 days before the election to 12 days. Democratic Sen. J.D. Ford filed an amendment Thursday to allow voters statewide to track their mail-in ballots through the USPS, but Republicans shot that down just as they had when it came up in the House. Republican Senators had fiscal impact concerns on implementing the program and also questioned its record in practice throughout the country, including in St. Joseph's County. Unlike HB1311, the second bill has garnered bipartisan support (and small bipartisan detraction). HB1597 makes an addition to campaign finance reporting law, extending electronic report filing requirements to legislative office candidates.

GAMING BILL GETS FIRST HEARING IN HOUSE: The House Committee on Public Policy heard about five hours of testimony on the comprehensive gaming bill, Senate Bill 552, this week (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). Chairman Ben Smaltz received merits from quite a few speakers for the committee's stamina on Wednesday, but beyond that the testimony-givers had their share of disagreements. Still, the points brought up in the hearing weren't all that different from the ones raised while the bill was in the Senate. They were, perhaps, a little more organized though. Two large groups came to the Statehouse, each equipped with their own campaign-style buttons, to show support for and against plans to bring one Gary riverboat casino on land and move the other – with both claiming livelihoods and local economies are at stake. Sports leagues and independent gambling sites also sparred again over control of statistical data for sports wagering, which SB552 places solely in the hands of official leagues. Whether any of that moved the needle is unclear, but Rep. Smaltz's committee will consider the bill once more in an upcoming committee meeting, before sending it off to Ways & Means where we're likely to see it all repeat again.

CHURCH GUN BILL REVIVED: A House panel this week revived legislative language on firearm regulations that had stalled at the 2019 session's halfway point (Smith, Indiana Public Media). The provisions would open the door to guns being allowed in churches on school property, putting that decision in the hands of the property owner – whether that's the school or the church. A similar proposal garnered significant controversy last year. But this year, that change hasn't gotten much pushback from lawmakers, as Rep. Terri Austin (D-Anderson) notes. "I mean, I had actually several ministers reach out to me and say, 'We would like to be able to make that decision for ourselves,'" Austin says.

BMV GENDER STUNT PULLED: The already thorny hate crime issue got an unexpected disruption this week from an unexpected source: A dustup over driver's licenses (WIBC). The BMV gives transgender Hoosiers the option of an "X" on their driver's license instead of M for male or F for female. An amendment to remove that option brought the House to a halt for an hour this week before it was withdrawn. Speaker Brian Bosma says it's also thrown a wrench into behind-the-scenes hate crime discussions. Bosma won't go into detail, but says injecting an issue that's an emotional one for many legislators complicated the debate, and prompted a couple to change their position. Bosma says he believes the driver's license issue has been settled. People who don't identify with a single gender and want the "X" would first need to get their birth certificate changed, which Bosma says most people transitioning to a new gender do anyway. He says only two Hoosiers have pursued the X in the last year.

SEN. McSALLY CALLS TRUMP OVER MCCAIN CRITICISM: Arizona GOP Sen. Martha McSally spoke privately to President Donald Trump about his attacks on John McCain on Wednesday evening, McSally told reporters in Arizona on Thursday (Politico). Trump has repeatedly disparaged McCain, the late longtime Arizona senator and Vietnam veteran, including new attacks on Thursday. McSally said Trump listened to her. "There is a lot of disrespect going on out there all the way around. I did talk to the president yesterday. I wanted to make sure he understood how I felt about Sen. McCain and how Arizona felt about Sen. John McCain. And he heard me," McSally said.

ADDICTION: 50K SEEK TREATMENT - According to the Indiana Chamber of Commerce, as many as 50,000 Hoosiers seek treatment each year for a substance use disorder – and most of them are employed (Horton, Indiana Public Media). About 60 employers filled a room at Lafayette's Ivy Tech campus Thursday to learn what they can do to manage their employees' substance issues. The Employer Opioid Strategy Meeting is designed to teach managers a how to handle the tens of thousands of Hoosiers who hold down jobs while seeking treatment for substance abuse. "We want to make sure that employers know what's on their side of the fence and what they need to do to be an active participant in these conversations," says Indiana Workforce Recovery director Mike Thibideau. He says the sessions help break down some of the existing barriers.

ECONOMY: INDIANA LAGS IN VENTURE CAPITAL - A new report from Indianapolis-based Elevate Ventures says Indiana remains behind other states in the Midwest for venture capital investment. The 2018 Indiana Venture Report shows the state accounted for only 0.22 percent of all venture capital dollars last year (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). Ting Gootee, chief investment officer at Elevate, says while there is room to grow, Indiana is on the right path. In an interview with Inside INdiana Business, Gootee said a venture community requires different types of ingredients to grow. "Our general business climate is still very much ahead of many other states around the country and also on our neighboring borders," said Gootee. "The next set of ingredients we're looking at are ideas, talent and capital and all of those are necessary to create the type of businesses that will grow from one entrepreneur to a great team and experience hyper growth." Indiana venture capital deals totaled $253 million in 2018, which is up nearly 70 percent from the previous year. The report says Indiana remains below the national average for VC investment as well.

ECONOMY: INDIANA IN MIDDLE OF PACK ON INNOVATION - Indiana ranked 28th with a WalletHub State Innovation Index of 38.93, nearly half of first-place Massachusetts's 72.31 score (NWI Times). The Hoosier state ranked 32nd in human capital and 26th in innovation environment, according to the study.

MILITARY: ARMY SECRETARY TOURS AM GENERAL - Humvees for the U.S. Army are made in only one place in the United States, the AM General Plant in Mishawaka (WIBC). For the first time, the Secretary of the Army, Dr. Mark Esper, toured the facility Thursday. He said it's imperative that he understand where the Army's tools come from and how he can help to make them better moving forward. "The humvee is a very capable light truck. It's one of many tools in the tool kit," Esper said. "We're going to have 100,000 light trucks in the Army for some time to come. Humvees will be a big part of that fleet so I need to make sure we keep that robust industrial base." Esper, who toured the facility with Indiana Rep. Pete Visclosky (D), went on to say the Army is in a "Renaissance" or sorts when it comes to the technology it uses and the Army is looking to outfit many of the humvees it needs with this new tech.

CLIMATE: GREAT LAKES REGION VULNERABLE - A scientific report says the Great Lakes region is warming faster than the rest of the U.S., which likely will bring more flooding and other extreme weather such as heat waves and drought (AP). The warming climate also could mean less overall snowfall even as lake-effect snowstorms get bigger, according to the report released Thursday by a team of researchers from universities primarily from the Midwest. The report also predicts more severe algae blooms in the Great Lakes, which make it unsafe for swimming and increase the costs of treating the water. Farming could be hit especially hard, with heavy rains delaying spring planting and dry spells requiring more irrigation during summer. Beaches, dunes and shorelines will be more vulnerable to erosion.

MEDIA: ZALTSBERG JOINS WFIU - Starting April 1, veteran journalist Bob Zaltsberg will join with WFIU-WTIU News team on a part-time basis (Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Zaltsberg recently retired from the Herald-Times, where he worked for more than 40 years, including 33 years as the editor of the paper. In his new role at the WFIU-WTIU newsroom, Zaltsberg will lead a community-driven journalism project called "City Limits: Bloomington." This series provides an opportunity for audiences to ask questions about Bloomington and its future, and then the WFIU-WTIU News team searches for answers. "With his impressive Rolodex and deep knowledge of Bloomington I can't think of a better person to lead this project than Bob," says WFIU-WTIU News Bureau Chief Sara Wittmeyer.

SPORTS: A DEEP RUN COULD BRING BUCKS TO PAINTER - A deep run in this year's NCAA men's basketball tournament could position Purdue University among the nation's elite college programs, and it also could provide a big payout for head coach Matt Painter. The coach would receive about $780,000 in bonuses for Purdue's on-court accomplishments this year if the Boilermakers win the title—and possibly more (Shuey, IBJ). Purdue defeated Old Dominion 61-48 in the first round Thursday night. The terms of Painter's contract, which runs through the 2021-2022 season, includes an abundance of performance-based bonuses worth tens of thousands of dollars, including several related to how well this season's 23-9 team could do in this year's tournament.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SIGNS CAMPUS FREE SPEECH ORDER - President Trump on Thursday signed an executive order to promote free speech on college campuses by threatening colleges with the loss of federal research funding if they do not protect those rights (Fox News). "We're here to take historic action to defend American students and American values," Trump said, surrounded by conservative student activists at the signing ceremony. "They've been under siege." "Under the guise of speech codes, safe spaces and trigger warnings, these universities have tried to restrict free thought, impose total conformity and shut down the voices of great young Americans like those here today," he said.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP BACKS ISRAEL SOVEREIGNTY FOR GOLAN - President Trump on Thursday endorsed Israeli sovereignty over the Golan Heights, marking what would be a sharp U.S. policy shift over the disputed territory decades after Israel seized the land from Syria in the Six Day War (Wall Street Journal). "After 52 years it is time for the United States to fully recognize Israel's Sovereignty over the Golan Heights, which is of critical strategic and security importance to the State of Israel and Regional Stability!" Mr. Trump said on Twitter.

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE UPBRAIDS ATLANTA MAYOR OVER ICE - Vice President Mike Pence had strong words for Atlanta Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms during a stop in Atlanta Thursday (GPD News). Speaking to a crowd of Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents at an Atlanta-area office, Pence said he had just heard about Bottoms' 2018 decision to move detainees from the city jail and not accept any new ones. "It is amazing to think the mayor actually said — in her words — not be complicit in an immigration policy that intentionally inflicts misery," Pence said. He continued by saying instead that "criminal illegal immigrants and gang members," the flow of drugs like cocaine and fentanyl and human trafficking inflict misery on the country, and ICE agents bring safety and security to Atlanta and beyond.

WHITE HOUSE: CARTER BECOMES OLDEST PRESIDENT EVER - Jimmy Carter was the first U.S. president born in a hospital. Today, he marks a new milestone as the oldest living former president ever. At 94 years and 172 days old, Carter has passed the previous record held by the late President George H.W. Bush. "He and Mrs. Carter take walks, and they have followed a healthy diet for a lifetime," Deanna Congileo, a spokeswoman for the Carter Center, told CNN.

WHITE HOUSE: BUSH SINKS AN ACE - Former President George W. Bush has made a hole-in-one at a Dallas course that will soon host his institute's Warrior Open honoring wounded U.S. military personnel (AP). A photo posted Wednesday on Bush's Instagram account shows the beaming 43rd U.S. president holding a golf ball on the par-3 12th green of Trinity Forest Golf Club. Bush was with Kenneth Hersh, who's president and CEO of the George W. Bush Presidential Center, plus board members Mike Meece and Bill Hickey. Bush's post says he made the ace "with coaching" from the trio. The 72-year-old Bush, who lives in Dallas, says his next goal: "Live to 100 so I can shoot my age."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will leave the White House at 9:30 a.m. en route to Joint Base Andrews on his way to Mar-a-Lago. He will arrive at Mar-a-Lago at 12:25 p.m. Trump and first lady Melania Trump will meet with leaders from the Bahamas, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Haiti and Saint Lucia at 2 p.m.

PENTAGON: 2 AMERICANS KILLED IN AFGHANISTAN - Two U.S. service members were killed in Afghanistan on Friday while conducting an operation, the NATO-led Resolute Support mission said in a statement (Reuters). It gave no further details and withheld the names of the service members until next of kin were informed. The U.S. military's mission is focused on guiding and aiding Afghan forces battling the Taliban, who were ousted from power in 2001.

CLIMATE: FLOODING THREAT IN VAST PART OF NATION - Vast areas of the United States are at risk of flooding this spring, even as Nebraska and other Midwestern states are already reeling from record-breaking late-winter floods, federal scientists said on Thursday (New York Times). A map shows that Indiana faces a moderate to minor risk, particularly in the southwestern tip of the state. Nearly two-thirds of the lower 48 states will have an elevated risk of some flooding from now until May, and 25 states could experience "major or moderate flooding," according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. "The flooding this year could be worse than anything we've seen in recent years, even worse than the historic floods of 1993 and 2011," said Mary C. Erickson, deputy director of the National Weather Service, in a conference call with reporters. The major flooding this month in Nebraska, Minnesota, Iowa and elsewhere is "a preview of what we expect throughout the rest of the spring," she said.

MEDIA: SUNDAY TALK - CBS "Face the Nation": Rep. Hakeem Jeffries (D-N.Y.), John Allen. CNN "State of the Union": Panel: Rep. Pramila Jayapal (D-Wash.), Scott Jennings, Karen Finney and Bill Kristol (host: Dana Bash). CNN "Inside Politics": Jackie Kucinich, Karoun Demirjian, Abby Phillip and Matt Viser. "FOX News Sunday": Debut of new Fox News polls on 2020 and the Mueller report ... Panel: Jason Chaffetz, Donna Edwards, Barbara Comstock and Juan Williams. Power Player: Susan Rickman, CEO of World Pediatric Project. NBC "Meet the Press": Panel: David Brooks, Janet Napolitano, Carlos Curbelo and Kristen Welker.

TERROR: MAIL BOMBER PLEADS GUILTY - A Florida man pleaded guilty Thursday to sending a wave of pipe bombs to CNN and prominent critics of President Donald Trump, attacks that harmed no one but created fear as the devices turned up, day after day, at locations across the country (AP). Cesar Sayoc sobbed as he entered the plea before a federal judge in New York. "I'm truly sorry," he said. He faces the possibility of a life sentence on 65 criminal counts, including using weapons of mass destruction and illegal mailing of explosives with intent to kill.

HISTORY: RFK'S INDY SPEECH ADDED TO REGISTRY - A recording of a speech Robert F. Kennedy delivered in Indianapolis following Martin Luther King Jr.'s assassination is being inducted into the National Recording Registry (Indiana Public Media). The Library of Congress announced Wednesday that Kennedy's April 4, 1968, speech is among 25 recordings being tapped for preservation this year because of their cultural and historic importance. Kennedy learned of King's death shortly before he arrived at an Indianapolis park for a presidential campaign stop. He shared the news of King's assassination with a mostly African-American crowd and called for a nonviolent reaction before mentioning the 1963 assassination of his brother, President John F. Kennedy. The library says Kennedy's extemporaneous speech recalls "a frightening time of political violence as well as a dream for a better future."

MEDIA: LETTERMAN STAYED AT CBS TOO LONG - David Letterman says he stuck around on network television about 10 years too long. He made that admission during an appearance Thursday on Ellen DeGeneres' talk show. Letterman quit in 2015 after 33 years as a late-night host on CBS and NBC, and is beginning his second season on his more leisurely paced Netflix show. "That's not true," DeGeneres told him. "Yes, it is true," Letterman replied. "It turns out nobody had the guts to fire me."

KENTUCKY: GOV. BEVIN EXPOSED HIS CHILDREN TO CHICKEN POX - Kentucky Gov. Matt Bevin says he deliberately exposed his children to chickenpox so they would catch the highly contagious disease and become immune (NBC News). During a Tuesday interview on Bowling Green radio station WKCT, Bevin said his children were "miserable for a few days" after contracting chickenpox but said "they all turned out fine." Bevin and his wife, Glenna, have nine children, four adopted. The Republican governor said parents worried about chickenpox should have their children vaccinated. But he said government shouldn't mandate the vaccination.

MICHIGAN: NILES MARIJUANA GROWERS GET GREEN LIGHT - The city of Niles marked another milestone Thursday on the road to commercial marijuana when two medical marijuana growers got the green light from the state (South Bend Tribune). HDS Investments and MichiCann both received preliminary approvals from the Michigan Medical Marijuana Licensing Board — the first medical marijuana businesses in the city to do so. "This is the first real step toward having somebody up and running so that we can begin to serve the needs of the community," Community Development Director Sanya Vitale said. The first-stage approvals put the businesses on track to join the state's newly regulated marijuana market, which has seen $46 million in provisioning center sales since Nov. 1, according to the state's Bureau of Marijuana Regulation.

CITIES: HAMMOND COP ABRUPTLY QUILTS AFTER SLUR - A 26-year Police Department veteran abruptly retired Thursday, just hours before he was to be interviewed by his peers about allegations he made homophobic and racist slurs and death threats against a man while off duty at a local bar (Reese, NWI Times). "It's impossible to be a police officer with words like that coming out your mouth," Mayor Thomas McDermott Jr. said in the wake of the retirement of Sgt. Anthony Hill. McDermott said Hill faced termination over the comments that were captured on audio recordings shared by sources with The Times. McDermott said he would fire a city sanitation employee over those types of comments, much less a police officer. "Once those words came out of his mouth, there was no doubt in any of our minds what we needed to do," said McDermott, who had called on Hill to resign.

CITIES: INDY HAS 2-TIER ECONOMY - Indianapolis' economy is performing well when it comes to increasing prosperity compared with other top U.S. metropolitan areas, but it's near the bottom of the pack for how it serves people near the bottom of the economic ladder, according to a new Brookings Institution report (Colombo, IBJ). The Indianapolis metropolitan area, which includes Marion County and 10 surrounding counties in central Indiana, ranks 17th of 100 top metropolitan areas on Brookings' "prosperity index," which compares key metrics for cities from 2016 to 2017, including changes in productivity, the average standard of living and average annual wages paid to workers. But the Indianapolis area ranked poorly compared to other U.S. metro areas—76th out of 100—on Brookings' "inclusion index," which measures how cities performed between 2016 to 2017 on median wage growth, the employment rate, and the relative poverty rate, meaning the share of people earning less than half of local median wages. Indianapolis' performance "seems to indicate the presence of a two-tier economy in the region," said Alan Berube, senior fellow at Brookings and the author of the report.

CITIES: INDY SELLING BONDS IN NEW YORK - Representatives from the city of Indianapolis were in New York City on Thursday selling more than $600 million worth of bonds to investors to fund the new criminal justice center—a milestone in the giant public project (Colombo, IBJ). About $610 million in income-tax backed bonds and $12 million in property-tax backed bonds were put on the market Thursday to fund the construction of the $571 million project, along with funding a nearly $40 million debt service reserve fund and the cost of bond issuance. The city expects to close on the bond sales in a few weeks. Sarah Riordan, director of the Indianapolis Bond Bank, told IBJ the city has seen "overwhelming recognition" by investors on the bonds. "We have worked very hard to build investor interest based on the nature of the project and the goals of the project, but also based on the fact that the city is a good investment because we have a good credit rating," Riordan said.

CITIES: MISHAWAKA MARIAN STUDENT ARRESTED FOR THREAT - A Marian High School student was taken into custody Thursday after reported threats to the school (South Bend Tribune). An email sent to parents said several students came forward to staff after they reportedly overheard an conversation that included threats against the school community. The Mishawaka Police Department was notified and the student was taken into custody. "Please know that safety is a top priority for our school community. I want to thank the students who reported this information and encourage others to do the same if similar instances should arise," the letter to parents read.

CITIES: 2 FRANKLIN SCHOOLS CLOSE FOR TESTING - Students at two elementary schools will have an e-learning day Thursday after recent environmental testing led to a call for more testing, Franklin Community Schools announced Wednesday (WIBC). Students at Needham and Webb elementaries will have e-learning days on Thursday. All other Franklin students will attend classes as scheduled Thursday. Spring break for students in the district begins Friday. Franklin Schools officials said in July they would test air, water and soil in the area after data showed alarming levels of toxic chemicals in homes near the schools. An Indianapolis-based environmental firm, EnviroForensics, first did testing in July on the grounds at Webb and Needham elementary schools. Both are on the city's east side near Hillview Country Club.

CITIES: MICHIGAN CITY COUNCIL PASSES WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION - A new whistleblower ordinance will be added to the city's municipal code after it passed 5-2 at the Michigan City Common Council's regular meeting Tuesday (Smith, Michigan City News-Dispatch). Sean Fitzpatrick introduced the ordinance last month as a means of making city employees who want to file complaints against their coworkers or superiors feel better protected against retaliation. The two dissenting votes came from council representatives Tim Bietry and Sharon Carnes, each of whom took issue with some of the language in the ordinance.

CITIES: BLOOMINGTON RAISES TOWING FEES - Bloomington's towing fee for illegally parked vehicles is almost doubling to a maximum of $125 (Indiana Public Media). City Council members voted 8-0 in favor of the amended legislation during Wednesday night's meeting. The raise in the maximum towing service fee is a steep shift from the original $55 maximum day fee and $65 maximum night fee. Several Towing Companies and City Attorney Mike Rouker brought the request to city council. "It's important for this city to keep the maximum permissible rates that our partners may charge fair," says Rouker. "We value the relationships that we have with our towing partners and we also want to make sure they can pay their employees a fair wage."

CITIES: ELKHART VIBRANT CITIES PROJECT MAKING PROGRESS - A new report from Elkhart County says the Vibrant Communities initiative is making progress. The report outlines the efforts identified in the Action Agenda released by the initiative in 2016 and says 52 of the 77 items listed in the agenda aimed at improving quality of life in the county are either complete or in progress (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). Some of the projects highlighted in the report include the Elkhart Aquatic Center, the Goshen Theater renovation and the Wa-Nee Vision 2020 plan. In an interview with Inside Indiana Business, Arvis Dawson, co-chair of Vibrant Communities, said the entire effort is about the community. "We want to make sure that they know that they are what makes us vibrant and the fact that they can set a plan, follow it, stick to it and complete it is what vibrant communities do," said Dawson.

CITIES: PARTIAL FUNDING FOR TERRE HAUTE CONVENTION CENTER - The Terre Haute Redevelopment Commission has approved a financing agreement for the new downtown convention center. The Tribune Star reports the agreement calls for the city's Redevelopment Department to provide $3 million up front for the facility and $500,000 for 19 years in backup financing if the city is unable to meet its obligations (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). The project is now estimated to cost $32.5 million, up from the original $25 million estimate. Both the city and Vigo County had previously agreed to pay $10 million each for the project when it was at the previous cost estimate, according to the publication.

CITIES: SPIN SCOOTERS COMING TO INDY - There could soon be more scooters on the streets of Indianapolis (WTHR-TV). City leaders just approved the business license for a third company called Spin. Spin will join competitors Bird and Lime, who came to Indy last year. It's still unclear how soon the new scooters will be available in Indy, but Spin can add up to 200 scooters, according to city rules. That could bring the total up to 600 in the city.

CITIES: LOOGOOTEE BREAKS GROUND ON LIBRARY - The small city of Loogootee broke ground Thursday on a new library that will be three times the current facility's size (Indiana Public Media). The project's been years in the making, and a more than $1 million loan from the U.S. Department of Agriculture is making it possible. It's part of a program that invests in rural communities. The new library will be on Park Street, next to the St. Vincent de Paul store and food pantry. The organization donated the land, and another business donated a gravel lot adjacent to the space. Library Director Darla Wagler says plans for the new library include much more space for community activities.

COUNTIES: FORMER FLOYD PROSECUTOR FAITH DIES - Stan Faith, who served as Floyd County prosecutor for 16 years before losing to Keith Henderson in 2002, has died. He was 74 (News & Tribune). Faith was still in private practice operating Stan Faith Law at 412 E. Main St. in New Albany. He lived in Crawford County with his wife Judy and was vice president of the Crawford County Historical and Genealogical Society. Faith prosecuted the first David Camm triple-murder case in 2002.

COUNTIES: SUIT V. BROWN COUNTY INN SETTLED - The State and the former owner of a Brown County hotel have reached a settlement in a 2017 lawsuit stemming from a $350 fee charged to a customer who left a negative online review (Indiana Public Media). The settlement, reached in February, grants the customer $350, and the state $5,000 in legal fees and $5,000 in civil penalties. Katrina Arthur says after her stay in 2016, she posted an online review that said there was hair and dirt on the sheets in her room and other cleanliness issues. Indiana's attorney general's office contends that Andrew Szakaly, the owner of Abbey Management Inc. and the former operator of the hotel, violated the state's deceptive consumer sales act by charging guests $350 if they posted negative reviews but didn't inform management about problems during their stay.

COUNTIES: ST. JOE SUED OVER JAIL DEATH - The St. Joseph County Sheriff's department is being sued for negligence in the death of an inmate who killed himself while in a medical unit at the jail last year. Multiple jail staff members are also named in the suit, which alleges the inmate killed himself while suffering withdrawal (Wright, South Bend Tribune). Raymond McCarty was arrested and detained in the jail Feb. 21, 2018. He was booked by jail officer Taylor Hammock Leda and went through an intake interview with officer Kurt Vanlandingham, according to the federal lawsuit. During the screening, Vanlandingham reportedly noted McCarty suffered from depression and requested McCarty be further evaluated by a counselor. McCarty also reportedly told the officer he was prescribed five medications, two for depression, one for blood pressure and two for severe back pain, one of which was an opioid.

COUNTIES: NEW PORTER ELECTION BOARD OFFICIAL - Less than two weeks after a confrontation prior to a meeting resulted in the resignation of the Porter County Election Board president, the newly configured board had a quiet, quick meeting Thursday (NWI Times). David Welter, of Chesterton, a local attorney and Valparaiso University law professor, was welcomed by fellow board members Republican Dave Bengs and County Clerk Jessica Bailey. Welter, a Democrat, replaced longtime member J.J. Stankiewicz, who resigned Monday. Stankiewicz resigned after a pre-meeting confrontation with Bailey on March 8. Several Porter County Democratic officials called for Stankiewicz's resignation in a letter to Democratic Party Chairman Jeff Chidester on Sunday. They cited what they called unacceptable behavior by Stankiewicz as he pointed his finger and raised his voice at Bailey during the discussion, which was caught on video.

INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT

Gaming the gaming jobs numbers

Federal benchmarking of 2018 monthly data changes perceptions

We don't typically discuss the monthly gaming employment numbers in this front page space, but we also can't recall such a significant readjustment of direct gaming employment numbers by the U.S. Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics as we saw this month for 2018 . . . and the revised federal benchmark numbers for Indiana's gaming employment call into question some of the assumptions you may have made about the state of gaming employment in the Hoosier State during any given month last year, and for 2018 as a whole.

While we do see changes in the gaming employment numbers on an occasional basis when the feds pound on the side of their job-crunching computer and rejigger things, the changes that we have seen on both a micro (monthly) and macro (annual) level during 2018 are far more extensive than recent years, and suggest that direct gaming employment in Indiana last year wasn't quite as rosy as we may have led you to believe from the preliminary numbers.

Adjustments tend to be in the 100-job range when we've seen them, with the occasional 300-job change outlier month, but a 500-job change is, as best as we can recall, a relatively unusual event. But if you look at the 2018 revised numbers, if you exclude January and February (which we believe were benchmarked earlier), you'll find that they vary from 100 to 900 . . . and all of the revisions were downward, in contrast to many months in 2017 which had enjoyed increases in direct gaming employment following the federal revisions.

2018 Indiana Direct Gaming Employment Numbers - Preliminary and Revised

Month	Preliminary	Revised	Difference
December	11,800	11,300	(- 500)
November	12,000	11,500	(- 500)
October	12,600	12,100	(- 500)
September	12,500	11,900	(- 600)
August	12,500	11,600	(- 900)
July	12,600	11,700	(- 900)
June	12,500	11,800	(- 700)
May	12,300	11,800	(- 500)
April	12,200	11,900	(- 300)
March	12,000	12,100	(- 100)
February	11,900	11,900	- 0 -
January	11,900	11,900	- 0 -
Average	12,233	11,800	(- 433)

These new figures show that average monthly direct gaming employment in 2018 was just 11,800, down by 433 jobs from the 12,233 preliminary assessment. While nine of the 12 months of 2018 (75%) had appeared to boast at least 12,000 gaming jobs, that number plummets to just two such months after the revisions. Revisions hit the Summer months particularly hard, with May through September seeing the number of jobs written down from 500 to 900 jobs in any given month.

With the revisions, you can see the gradual annual ramp-down in direct gaming employment since the 2008-09 fiscal crisis . . . and that if the 2018 preliminary numbers had held up, 2018 would have boasted the largest number of direct gaming jobs since 2013.

Where we reveal the Guv's top NCAA pick

A new Morning Consult survey conducted for the American Gaming Association finds that 47 million American adults will wager $8.5 billion on the NCAA Division I men's college basketball tournament. And while we hate to NIT-pick, there was no word on whether wagering would have topped $10 billion if Butler University, the University of Notre Dame, and Indiana University had made it to The Big Dance®, as had once been customary.

The NCAA tourney could draw $400 million in legal wagers at online and retail sportsbooks across the country (led by $300 million in Nevada and $75 million in New Jersey), according to analysts for TheLines.com.

Delaware, Mississippi, New Mexico, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and West Virginia are expected to generate some $25 million in NCAA tournament bets.

According to the new Morning Consult findings, 23% of Hoosiers intend to fill out a bracket or place a bet on the tournament, a higher percentage than any of our neighboring states save Kentucky's 30 percent (there are multiple teams from the Bluegrass in the tournament).

Spoiler alert: Governor Eric Holcomb (R) picks Purdue University as national champs!

Note that 2008, the first year of the recession, coincided with the mid-year opening of the racinos.

2018	2017	2016	2015	2014	2013	2012
11,800 + 500	11,300 - 100	11,400 - 400	11,800 - 400	12,200 - 600	12,800 - 400	13,200 - 700
2011	2010	2009	2008	2007
13,900 - 0 -	13,900 - 200	14,100 - 100	14,200 + 100	14,100 - 300

The only over-the-year increase in direct gaming employment came with the opening of the state's first Native American casino (in January 2018), an establishment that is included in the employment figures. While there was a 500-job increment, the preliminary numbers had indicated a gain of 933 jobs over the prior-year average (numbers that probably would have been higher if we used adjusted January and February figures). Since the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians indicated that the property opened in January with 1,200 employees, that suggests - in a simplistic sense - that even with partial new land-based options at some other casinos, the 13 other commercial properties ended up down by a net 700 jobs during 2018.

The 2017 and 2018 numbers also showed improvement due to staffing up of land-based components at assorted properties. But for these new gaming options, chances are employment numbers would still be tumbling as they also did after the Rivers Casino debuted in Des Plaines, Illinois in mid-2011; Illinois started adding video gaming terminals in September 2012; and the Ohio land-based casinos began opening in the first half of 2012, followed by the first quarter 2013 market-changing entry of a downtown Cincinnati land-based casino.

IN General

● As SB 552 was readying for its House debut with a hearing in the House Committee on Public Policy Wednesday afternoon, the panel chair, Rep. Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn, approached the event saying, "We'll hear the bill as written, get input from all the stakeholders and the public on what they think about the gaming bill in its entirety, and use what we learned to make adjustments to the bill if necessary," as he told Matthew Kredell of the Legal Sports Report the week before the hearing. "The first step will be to hear the bill as is, and the following step to work on changes."

□ Rep. Heath VanNatter (R) of Kokomo, who was one of those behind a House sports wagering bill that did not receive a hearing in deference to the Senate action, told Legal Sports Report that SB 552 cannot pass the House without losing some of the omnibus measure's current baggage. "We didn't realize how big that bill was going to get and what they were going to shove into it. I'm not saying that bill won't pass, but it's not going to pass in the current form that it came out of the Senate." However, Rep. VanNatter "also warns that removing elements from the bill will shake up stakeholder support, which could doom Indiana sports betting's prospects this year. 'Everybody is in favor of the bill because there's something for everybody,' VanNatter said. 'But there's no way it's all going to stay in so, as soon as some of it drops out, you're going to have people dropping support of the bill. It's going to be a lot more difficult to pass in the House than in the Senate,' " which has always been the understanding.

□ Rep. Smaltz told Kredell that he supports legalizing and regulating sports betting. "I think it's an easy reach for allowing sports wagering in the casinos. That seems similar to adding any other table or video game." Rep. Smaltz indicated his discomfort with the mobile wagering component that emerged from the Senate. He "contends there are places in Indiana - including his district and Indianapolis - that choose not to have casinos. He expressed interest in hearing what the public thinks about mobile wagering. 'I think that the public has to make the decision on if they want wagering available throughout the four borders of the state of Indiana. I think the answer to that in a lot of places is probably not.' Rep. VanNatter, however, "whose district including Kokomo is 50 miles from a casino, sees accessibility to casinos as the reason why mobile wagering is necessary. 'I think we've got to have mobile betting too,' VanNatter said. 'There's no way it's successful without mobile. Very few people drive to the casinos to do it.' "

● The House Committee on Public Policy heard testimony Wednesday afternoon (and through chunk of the evening) on SB 552, the omnibus gaming bill, before a packed House chamber (a few hundred were citizens of Terre Haute and employees of Ameristar Casino East Chicago). When the hearing began, 42 people had signed up to offer testimony on the matter, and with about three hours that were initially allocated for the hearing, speakers were asked to voluntarily limit their respective comments to no more than four minutes each. Work on the bill began close to 3:45 p.m. and stretched, however, some five hours, until almost 8:45 p.m. Amendments and discussion are on tap for a future committee meeting - likely on March 27, because the measure must still head to the House Committee on Ways and Means, and the House committee report deadline is April 9, leaving only two regularly scheduled dates for Public Policy panel members to meet.

□ Back on his old stomping grounds in the House chamber, the bill's author, Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) of Jasper, opened the discussion by proclaiming this to be a "once in a generation opportunity to reset the gaming industry in Indiana," and bring in more money without expanding the number of statutorily limited gaming positions. He explained that this was a collaborative effort that began in July between the industry, regulators, and local government officials. Sen. Messmer ran through the specific provisions of the bill and concentrated on the specifics of the "competitive process" for a Vigo County license to ensure that Vigo County gets the best option possible, which includes the removal of the ownership cap (which he said makes no sense in light of the Caesars Entertainment Corporation ownership of two casinos and both racinos). Federal antitrust law and provisions allowing the Indiana Gaming Commission to consider competition in granting a license would ensure equity. Hammond, East Chicago, Michigan City, and LaPorte County would be afforded a hold harmless clause with local money from Gary, and Evansville and horsemen would also be protected. The historic hotel preservation fund would also be replenished with some tithing. At the request of the Department of Child Services, winnings from sports betting will be subject to collection for overdue child support, just like casino win, and operators will receive an increase in their free play deduction while retaining the ability to sell unused credit to other operators.

□ Sen. Jon Ford (R) of Terre Haute, who prepared the sports wagering provisions, explained that aspect of the bill, including the $100,000 initial fee from applicants and $50,000 annual fee for renewals. Official league data would be used to determine outcomes of in-play bets, and the Gaming Commission could consider prohibitions of wagering on certain events. IGC staff could also act on information they receive from a league about unusual betting patterns. Mobile sports wagering would help eliminate illegal sports betting, estimated as a $300 million industry locally. Amateur, high school, and esports betting would be barred.

□ Rep. Peggy Mayfield (R) of Martinsville asked why there was a $25 million cap on the historic hotel preservation fund. She was told by Sen. Messmer that it could build higher than that, but diversions of AGR to the fund would be halted at that point. Rep. Justin Moed (D) of Indianapolis asked about the 75-mile exclusion zone and its impact on Indianapolis. Messmer told him that the exclusion zone would impact Indianapolis and sites near casinos for “stability of the casino industry.” Rep. Moed asked if local agreements existed with other properties to share revenue with Indianapolis; Sen. Messmer said he did not believe there were any such local revenue-sharing agreements. This was just the first of several times that Rep. Moed raised a rhetorical question about this to point out that Marion County residents would likely frequent an Indianapolis casino if that were an option instead of visiting other out-of-the county properties – but Indianapolis recoups no revenue from nearby properties. Rep. Dan Forestal (D) of Indianapolis asked Sen. Ford to describe the mechanics behind mobile sports wagering apps. He wanted to know if the app had to be downloaded at a physical location, and Sen. Ford told him a patron would not have to do so at a physical site because they wanted to make it more convenient so as to be easier to capture some of the illegal market. Rep. Sean Eberhart (R) of Shelbyville asked Sen. Messmer why Vigo County was considered, and Messmer explained that it was the largest population center furthest away from other casinos, “and the Spectacle Entertainment, LLC owners saw the potential for pulling quite a bit of their revenue from Illinois” without impacting much of the Indiana market. Asked about 2015 Senate support for the live dealers at racino table games, Messmer acknowledged that there was “substantial support; it was not a close vote,” while in the House 77 ayes constituted “overwhelming support.” Rep. Mayfield asked about why Allen County wasn’t considered as a casino site, and Sen. Messmer told her Fort Wayne was closer to other properties, and the Summit City had not been as interested in relocating a license as Terre Haute. Some at the hearing, however, were old enough to recall that three-term Fort Wayne Mayor Tom Henry (D) had asked lawmakers several years back (as Steuben County was poking around for a potential license) to allow a referendum on a casino in Allen County, but could not gain legislative acquiescence.

□ House Majority Floor Leader Matt Lehman (R) of Berne asked about the provision in Section 39 on removing the prohibition on lobbying with horse racing money and the rationale behind it. He noted that “we have prided ourselves on trying to keep lobbying and money coming from the casinos apart.” Sen. Messmer told him that nothing in the law prohibits casinos from lobbying (with riverboat dollars), but horsemen were barred, and the horsemen asked for the change. Asked about moving the live dealers date up and changing it “from a may to a shall,” Sen. Messmer recalled that this was something that had evolved from a last-minute 2015 demand by then-Gov. Mike Pence (R) – in the “11th hour of conference committee time” – and was inserted simply to avert a veto. Moving the effective date up to 2019 in SB 552 “was a logical request for the racinos to get that, because it was only done at the last hour to get that through ... there was no reason other than trying to satisfy the governor on that.” He did not directly address the mandatory vs. discretionary question, but an inquiry about CIB-related language was met with an answer indicating that an amendment would excise that language.

□ Rep. Smaltz asked about the breed development advisory commission language and was told by Sen. Messmer that it came “at the request of the people in the horse program.” Members would need to have a valid breeder’s license for eligibility. Rep. Smaltz asked Sen. Ford why sports wagering dollars were removed from AGR, and asked how sports wagering would be taxed. Sen. Ford replied that the senate deferred all tax issues to the House Committee on Ways and Means. Sen. Messmer noted the distinction between higher rates on AGR and the six percent to eight percent rate imposed on sports wagering in other states and the 25%+ tax on AGR in Indiana.

Smaltz also followed up on the appraisal provisions. Messmer said the process would value the second Gary license, not inclusive of the land, which was part of SB 66, but other owners needed to know the value of the one license and to be able to compensate Spectacle if needed. The 10-day requirement seemed short to Smaltz, but Messmer assured him “that’s pretty typical.”

□ Formal testimony kicked off with Paul Martin, president of the Quarter Horse Racing Association of Indiana, Inc. Supporting SB 552, he said that it would be an “understatement” to say we’re excited about the opportunities it offered. Rep. Smaltz asked him about the need for change in composition of the breed development panels . . . Bruce Murphy of Crawfordsville, representing the Indiana Thoroughbred Owner’s and Breeder’s Association, said that the changes proposed would lift all three breeds and the “industry will continue to grow.” Rep. Terri Austin (D) of Anderson asked if ITOBA supported moving up the date for live dealers at the racinos, and Murphy told her that “it would help us drastically.” She also asked him about the most recent agri-business impact for each dollar wagered at the racinos. Rep. Smaltz followed up to ask why it would help the industry, and was told by Murphy that it would mean more gamblers and more money as part of the 12% share for horsemen . . . Nat U. Hill IV of Bloomington, representing the Indiana Standardbred Association, expressed ISA's support, noting that not every provision was perfect or even understandable, but this would be a plus for the state, especially as Kentucky and Ohio tracks venture into similar operations. Moving up the date for live dealers at the racinos would mean a 20% increase to breed development, as well as a $2 million horse race industry tithe from a Terre Haute casino. He and Rep. Smaltz engaged in a brief colloquy about the permanence of the tithe . . . Brian Elmore, the former Centaur Racing official who now leads the Indiana Horsemen's Benevolent and Protective Association (INHBPA), the entity representing 2,000 owners and trainers in Indiana, reviewed the growth of the agri-business racing-related industry thanks to legislative leadership over the past 30 years. He asked for table game revenues from the racinos to be distributed in the same manner as slot wagering dollars from the two properties . . . Michael Phelps, a Thoroughbred breeder from Fountain County whose wife is a veterinarian, added his support for the bill, complimenting the growth of the horse racing program and praising "the stable but flexible and fair" system for distribution of slot wagering dollars from the racinos, and asked that table game dollars follow the same path.

□ Lake County Councilmember Charlie Brown (D) of Gary, a former 36-year House member who was the House member most responsible for the 1993 riverboat authorization, provided a tutorial for members about the history of the law, after being told by Rep. Smaltz that he could have all the time he wanted - "but I can tell you, people are going to get hungry." Brown began by saying "I am here with one single mission: That is to see that Gary has the opportunity to move one of its licenses off the water, and develop the land where boats currently exist." He called the casino move "an economic development project for the City of Gary." Brown added that SB 66 deserved a hearing as well. He dismissed talk that Gary had been given too many opportunities without being successful, suggesting that "outside forces" typically intervened to keep Gary down. "If Gary does not succeed, the state does not succeed," he added. "We need to look at this as a statewide project that will be physically located in Gary, Indiana, but will also be helpful to the state and the region as well," was how he concluded. Rep. Moed asked about sources of funding for the Regional Development Authority, and Brown deferred to Gary's mayor. Rep. Austin referred to the "fragility" of gaming legislation, and how it was "like herding cats," and asked for his thoughts on potential negative implications for other properties from a Terre Haute casino. Brown told her there would be increased state and local revenues, and others are "taken care of in the legislation," and would be "held harmless" from a new land-based Gary casino. She pressed him on whether the former Majestic Holdco owners had invested appropriately in the Gary property, and Brown politely acknowledged that "visions of development in and around the boats has not been to the level we wanted, hoped for," but the new site should help bring in more revenue. Rep. Lehman served up his concern about changing from moving off the footprint and from the community where a casino was licensed - questioning what would happen if the Hammond boat wanted to relocate to Lafayette. "Nothing is permanent in this body," acknowledged Brown, but the fact remains that

"Gary was first" in this process, "is struggling financially, and we need this economic development" which will inevitably follow from the move to the better inland site. Rep. Lehman observed that Southeast Indiana was also complaining that they were struggling mightily because of Ohio competition. "How do we keep the 12 licenses in their respective spaces if we let them (Gary) out?" "Why should we?" shot back Brown. "Why should we not allow it" if they can show the need, he asked in return. "if they can show you it is better for them, let them." They should however, be required to go through the same kind of process as this, suggested Brown . . . Mayor Anthony Copeland (D) of East Chicago came to the podium wearing his bright red oversized "SAVE OUR JOBS" Ameristar button, arguing that lawmakers should "protect the people" through expansion of gaming, just as they had been asked to save the horses. "This is surely about the expansion of gaming," Copeland asserted, asking "When we expand gaming, whose dollars [are] supporting this risk?" The working person, he responded to his own question. The City of East Chicago played by the "within our footprint" rules, but "Gary had two pairs of shoes." East Chicago wants the casinos to stay within their respective footprints. "Let's not do irreparable harm to the Everyday Joe. Let's let the rules of engagement stay" they are, he stressed. Rep. Moed asked Mayor Copeland about how much local money was sent to the RDA, and Mayor Copeland told him $3.5 million had to be directed that way, and was spread out to projects around Lake County - "and we've been enriched by it" . . . John Vickerman of Vickerman and Associates, a port consultant retained by the legislature last year to review the economic development potential of the site in question, cited a "transformational capability" for the city at the Gary waterfront site, shaping it into "a world-class intermodal logistics hub," and "North America's intermodal gateway." He detailed how an intermodal site would interact with and complement sites in Chicago. Rep. Austin asked him if there had been any initial discussions with the Indiana Port Commission. "We are very early in the process," he responded. "We have not fully discussed this with all of the Port Commission issues (sic)," but Vickerman added that some major rail operators are interested . . . Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) thanked everyone for the opportunity to testify in support of SB 552, saying it would help address jobs, crime, and infrastructure issues in the city by providing more financial resources and amenities taken for granted in other communities. "Our focus is on the gateway" facilitated by the casino relocation - which itself offers "a separate economic growth opportunity with a halo effect" - and "this is not a pipe dream." She added that in the mid-1990s, "The Gary boat was misplaced. This is not the highest and best use of the land in Buffington Harbor." We are "not attempting to improve Gary's fortunes on the backs of our neighbors," the mayor asserted, suggesting compensation for them via a hold harmless provision - albeit with "a clear methodology" that would allow a true assessment. "There is a way to frame this bill in the end that will help us all," Mayor Freeman-Wilson concluded . . . Phil Taillon, chief of staff to Hammond's mayor (who had to leave early), testified that this proposal to move the Gary casino off its footprint would "destabilize the gaming industry in the Chicagoland market." We do not believe that relocating one of the Gary licenses to the 80-94 expressway increases the pie," he continued. "It just changes the size of the pieces between each casino property and each local community." The proposal "substantially, inequitably, and unfairly changes the rules." He urged that the port proposal and commitment and capital requirements undergo much closer scrutiny, and the former city economic development official questioned the signal that the changes would send to those seeking to conduct business in the area. The hold harmless provisions under discussion do not go far enough, Taillon added. "The state cannot afford to make a misstep with this bill," he said. "Let's just not create the problems in the first place," Taillon urged legislators . . . Ameristar Casino East Chicago General Manager Matt Schuffert, a lifelong Hoosier, came to testify on behalf of parent Penn National Gaming, Inc., which also operates Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg and employs some 2,000+ people in Indiana. He outlined the importance of stability in the market in his company's decisions to invest almost $100 million in the East Chicago property in recent years, as well as strong and stable state and local taxes ($1.8 billion in state gaming taxes) and LDA payments - on top of more than $1 billion paid out in wages. He said this stability "and hundreds of jobs at Ameristar" would be at risk from the newly created "uneven playing field that will solely benefit one company" by allowing one casino to relocate to a "premium location" and cutting off traffic to another. The $35 million to $60 million cut expected in Ameristar revenues would also cost 175 to 300 jobs, according to Schuffert. Moving up the date of live dealers at the racinos would also cost $7 million in annual revenue and a significant number of jobs at the Penn National Dearborn County property. Rep. Vanessa Summers (D) of Indianapolis asked about how live dealers at racino table games would cause Hollywood to lose patrons. John R. Hammond III of Ice Miller, LLP told her that about 15% of Hollywood's table game market is derived from Central Indiana, and some of those patrons would be diverted to the racinos. Rep. Eberhart asked if the bill would result in a larger positive impact to the state, and Schuffert told him it would "simply shift around money from other operators around I-94" to the new casino. Hammond suggested that promises made in the law should be kept. Eberhart asked about the investment Penn National made in 2009 - which Hammond told him was almost one-half-billion dollars worth - and changes in the marketplace. Eberhart asked whether Penn National had involvement in the Ohio referendum and expansion, and Hammond told him several companies were involved. Eberhart suggested Penn National had invested $50 million in the Ohio referendum, and questioned the validity of the market stability argument after that referendum was approved, while noting that Penn National had adapted. "This bill is not just about table games" for Penn National, Hammond explained, but Eberhart questioned that. "I heard the words market stability several times. I'm wondering why market stability applies at one point in time but not another point in time." Rep. Eberhart threw out some numbers about the impact of Ohio casinos and racinos on Lawrenceburg, and suggested it was a much bigger problem for HCL than the two Indiana racinos. "This is a very tough signal to give" entities nationally who might be looking to enter Indiana, added Hammond, warning about the slippery slope" . . . the self-declared "Earline the Casino Queen," former Sen. Earline Rogers (D) of Gary, representing the City of Gary, reminded those in the chamber that Gary had led the way on casinos. The Mother of Casino Gaming walked committee members through the history, beginning with a suggestion from Gary native Bob Spolyar, a veteran lobbyist, for a Gary land-based casino in 1989. She noted that there were 46 votes the first time through in the House for a land-based Gary casino. After seeing Gary's efforts on gaming over the years, "they rewarded us" with the ability to skip a binding referendum, awarded two boats to the Steel City, and offered the opportunity to be first in the water. "We need to move the casino" today because the footprint now is where the intermodal port needs to be developed. As for I-80/I-94, "The traffic goes through there, and you know it's location, locations, location," as we have seen from the Hammond casino being next to Chicago. She recalled that Gary lawmakers voted for dockside gaming in 2002 because it was good for the state overall, even though the Gary casinos - which had an advantage under the original must-cruise requirement - were the only ones hurt by the change. Rep. Moed asked her about the RDA and the decision to shift local casino revenue into the RDA. She said it was a deal forged between then-Gov. Mitch Daniels (R), herself, then-Sen. Luke Kenley (R) of Noblesville, and then-Rep. Chet Dobis (D) of Merrillville . . . Sen. Eddie Melton (D) of Gary rose to briefly explain how the SB 66/SB 552 package came about as part of the need to turn around deplorable local economic conditions. "It's no secret that we had some fiscal issues," he acknowledged, but that was exacerbated by a declining population and loss of important industry. This is an opportunity to transform the community based off of existing assets. "We are not asking for the state to 'bail us out.' We're asking for a partnership and an opportunity," said Sen. Melton. "I challenge that notion" that this is "pie in the sky," as some have claimed, he continued. "I don't see this as a gaming opportunity solely, for Gary." He says that this is a bigger opportunity that can boost the tax base and increase local employment. He tells his "family and friends" in Hammond and East Chicago that he wants to work through a fair process to compensate them, but this is a big opportunity for Gary and the state "to move forward in partnership," address "everything that we hear whispered in the background about Gary," and "to move Gary to the next level." Rep. Moed expressed his faith in Sen. Melton and Mayor Freeman-Wilson, and noted that they were putting "skin in the game" by offering up a casino license. "If in fact it is not successful in its second effort," asked Moed, would he favor moving it to another place where it would be more viable? "I would say no," answered Sen. Melton . . . Denise Dillard of Methodist Hospitals in Gary, a former regional workforce development administrator and a current Gary/Chicago International Airport commissioner, spoke at length to how she and her colleagues assessed the need for change, and addressed it within the context of the hospital certificate of need process. There were no questions for her . . . Terry Peck, president of FOP Lodge 61 in Gary, testified about the unique public safety needs of Gary and the lack of resources for "adequate public safety." Everything save "demand for service" in Gary "is in decline," and "the situation is, well, dire." He lauded the potential for the economic development to "help develop the tax base for the city." Peck believes "There is potential on every corner of the city" for a local "renaissance." He faced no questions . . . Mayor Duke Bennett (R) of Terre Haute thanked lawmakers for the opportunity to discuss the bill. "This is a complicated matter; there's no question." He outlined the new three-legged stool: (1) economic development from the proposed Gary port, (2) the boost from a Gary casino move inland, and (3) growth from the new casino for Terre Haute, and referenced the 100+ Vigo County residents who had joined him in the chamber. "I can give you a few stats that would show some of our hardships," the mayor began, "however, I'm focused on our ways to diversify our economy and bring in dollars to address those concerns. I do think Terre Haute and West Central Indiana is on the path to be one of the most competitive regions in the state, and we can certainly use the new revenue to build out aspects of our community." He highlighted recent and planned tourism development in Terre Haute and the positive fiscal projections from the bill – as well as the potential for more than 1 million annual visitors. “Our community has rallied together” on the casino proposal, Mayor Bennett added, as he outlined local initiatives that it would complement. “I just want to remind you all that Terre Haute is ready for this opportunity,” he continued. “We will make great use of this revenue to enhance our city, our region, and our state. We believe that we’re best positioned to be ‘All-in.’” Rep. Eberhart asked about his confidence level in passage of a local referendum, and hizzoner suggested it would pass easily, with informal media polls showing 80% support. The mayor added that he “can’t go to the grocery store without being asked about the casino.” No one asked him why Terre Haute doesn’t even have a Target store . . . Vigo County Commissioner Brad Anderson (R) added the support of the county commissioners for the project, and pointed out negative local poverty rate data. “We can’t afford to resist any new opportunity in Vigo County,” he told panel members. Anderson also was excited about how an increase in tourism offers a chance to retain dollars locally through the innkeepers’ tax and food and beverage taxes, as well as money flowing into businesses by tourists. There were no questions for him . . . Melvin Burks of Terre Haute, the Hamilton Center CEO who grew up in Hammond, East Chicago, and Gary in poverty, talked about what he learned from his doctorate in “Streetology” in Terre Haute, and the “underdevelopment of things” locally. He said a local casino “would do more than what we could imagine” to “uplift” the community. “People need a way out of a horrible life.” There were no questions for the official . . . Sara Smith, representing local TH business leaders, spoke to the recent economic changes and challenges in the Terre Haute area, and how a casino would boost the local service industry. “We need a lifeline . . . we need your help to take the next step because our community is definitely ‘All-in’ in making this work.” There were no questions . . . Saint Mary-of-the-Woods College President Dottie King asked “for a little boost from our friends in Indianapolis,” adding that “for us, it will be far more than just the casino,” and “constitute a vote of confidence.” She promised lawmakers that they would see a positive impact far outside just Terre Haute proper. There were no questions . . . Mayor Thomas Broderick (D) of Anderson reviewed the local job losses of the 1980s and 1990s from General Motors departures, and what the city did to respond and rebound. He highlighted the difference that Hoosier Park made when it opened in 1994, and how things progressed even more when Anderson became home to Indiana’s initial racino. “A lot of the ‘negativities’ and concerns” voiced initially about a gaming facility have not come to fruition, and the racino has been “a stable business.” Mayor Broderick continued, “We feel like we need to be part of the community of Indiana and to offer that we have no objection to the bill.” He explained that moving up the date for live dealers would have no impact on the number of positions at the property. “I think we need to be flexible and move with the times and stay competitive with the other states that are obviously putting pressure on gaming in Indiana,” the mayor concluded. There were no questions for the mayor . . . Sally DeVoe, executive director of the Madison County Community Foundation, spoke to the importance of the racino in the philanthropic work in Anderson and Madison County – “they have become ingrained in the community” – a relationship which has continued through Caesars assuming ownership. The bill would mean 650+ new jobs in Madison County, important to philanthropy, DeVoe noted. There were no questions . . . Dirk Webb, CEO of the Madison County Chamber of Commerce, spoke in favor of

SB 552 and the “300 substantial jobs” that it would bring. He noted that Hoosier Park employees had provided more than 14,000 hours of volunteer support in the community. There were no questions . . . Chris Hoke, president of the Shelby County Chamber of Commerce and superintendent of the Northwestern Consolidated School District of Shelby County, spoke on behalf of SB 552, offering his perspective on live dealers at table games and the jobs that it would bring. He said “it would be a boon” to the community and offer jobs to graduates of his school corporation. Hoke said adding live table games would move Indiana Grand Racing & Casino from a regional attraction to a “first-class” national – “and potentially international” entertainment destination that would draw other investment and jobs. He raised the prospect of the Indiana Derby serving as a Triple Crown qualifying race. There were no questions for him . . . Shelbyville Mayor Tom DeBaun (R) introduced local officials in attendance and discussed how racino dollars were used locally for improving quality of life issues, including college scholarships. He noted the international nature of his local business community. Mayor DeBaun talked about local revenues also being directed to the community foundation, and called SB 552 “a jobs bill” that “will diversify our employment base” that is now currently oriented toward manufacturing. There were no questions . . . Lisa Hutcheson of the Indiana Collegiate Athletic Network and vice president of policy and programs for Mental Health America of Indiana, said her organizations were “neutral” on SB 552, but outlined the numbers related to problem gambling in Indiana, and the limited amount of funding available to address the concerns. Indiana ranks 27th out of the 50 states in residents most addicted to gambling; approximately 70,000 people are problem gamblers. She also asserted that some six percent of college students are problem gamblers. Indiana only allocates $1.8 million to the Division of Mental Health and Addiction from gaming taxes, while problem gambling costs are estimated at about $10,000 per person. She encouraged funding of annual data collection and analysis of problem gambling and its costs, and comprehensive “evidence-based” training for casino employees. A portion of any new revenue should also be earmarked for problem gambling treatment. Hutcheson further requested strong regulatory policies and structures for sports wagering. There were no questions . . . Christina Gray of the Indiana Council on Problem Gambling, Inc., sought a study of the number of problem gamblers, urged that the percentage of funding pegged at 25% in the bill be boosted to 75%, and that more dollars be devoted to actual treatment. Only 51% of the Gambler’s Assistance Fund currently is used for awareness, prevention, and treatment of problem gambling. Full 40% of the Fund is directed toward substance abuse even though Indiana receives federal funding for this function. She noted that in 2013, the money was supposed to be phased back to problem gambling treatment, but that has not happened. There were no questions . . . NIPSCO Director of Economic Development Don Babcock spoke enthusiastically about the economic development package, touting both the land and the competitive advantage that it offered. He promised full cooperation by NIPSCO “to make something happen up there.” “We want to be a supporter” and grow Northern Indiana, and told lawmakers that $2.2 million of a new $3.275 million DINO grant was available for the Gary project. Rep. Eberhart asked Babcock about the power lines on the property and was told that the pipelines and wires there primarily are NIPSCO’s, and that the utility promised to work with developers to expedite the project.

□ Spectacle Entertainment LLC's John Keeler introduced Spectacle and its team, noting its all-Hoosier roots and leadership under Terre Haute's Greg Gibson and Centaur Gaming's Rod Ratcliff. He described Majestic Star Casino's assets and their history dating back to Don Barden and Donald Trump at the 1996 launch. According to Keeler, "the conditions of the 130 acres of Majestic assets" led to a dearth of interest in their purchase, even though the property has been up for sale for some time. The issues included declining revenues, a one-star hotel in a sad state, 25-year-old boats in need of upgrades, three railroads operating on the footprint, environmental issues at Buffington Harbor, and the inability for patrons to easily find and access the property. "This property involves tremendous risks," including Illinois legislation that could allow gaming to come to Chicago, and significant local competition from Caesars and Penn National. While in the short-run Spectacle is working to stabilize or even grow revenues, and looks to make a profit, the long-term objective is, of course, to move one license to an inland site and invest $300 million in a new casino and 200-room hotel (complemented by with restaurants, retail, and meeting rooms) with 400 more jobs than at the combined two boats today. The boats at the Buff would not be shut down until the land-based facilities are complete, so no jobs will be lost and the Sate will not lose revenue. They also want to move the second license to Terre Haute and impose "a natural business barrier" to a Danville, Illinois casino by getting into that market first, and serving an underserved area with a new facility costing at least $100 million and adding at least 400 jobs. Keeler estimates that this casino would generate approximately $24 million in new gaming and admissions taxes. Based on an uncapped number of positions (unlike the bill proposes today), Spectrum Gaming projects a net new revenue gain of $75 million in new state taxes. Rep. Lehman questioned him about "allowing all casinos to move wherever they want to move." Keeler told him his experience suggested that all gaming changes in Indiana were incremental, but Keeler added that he saw no reason why decisions should not be made to "artificially limit" a casino to its footprint. Rep. Eberhart followed up on some of the Spectrum numbers. He asked if there would ever be a time when there would be a negative impact to the state in taxes under all the SB 552 provisions, and Keeler confirmed that there would not. Asked if he would be okay if not picked to be the Terre Haute operator, Keeler said "I wouldn't like it," but would expect to be compensated for the loss of that second license. "When we bought Majestic, we bought two licenses," he said. "That's a pretty valuable asset that sits on your balance sheet," noted Eberhart, and needed to be recognized as valuable. "We paid a lot of money for this asset" which included two licenses said Keeler, and "we are taking a big risk." Rep. Mayfield asked about the valuation of the license and appraisal process. "Is there not a value already assigned to your license? This would require an appraisal of it." Keeler explained that the deal was a "merger" process, but eventually the licenses will be valued for tax purposes. He told her that the appraisal was only needed because of the public policy decision to allow others to compete for the Terre Haute license. Other operators would have to file a declaration of interest within 30 days of a Spectacle petition for license move, and that they would have to know how much they would have to compensate Spectacle as part of their proposals if Spectacle was not chosen. Rep. Mayfield asked about how the extent to which Spectacle was sure that it could to secure the desired Gary inland property, and was assured that Spectacle was confident about it. Rep. Matt Hostettler (R) of Fort Branch asked if both licenses would be valued the same. Keeler said only the license to be moved to Terre Haute would be valued, and it would be valued as if it were sitting in Gary - "its location where it is today," interjected Sen. Messmer. Rep. Hostettler asked for a guesstimate on the value, and Keeler told him that while he was contractually bound to confidentiality, he reluctantly ventured $30 million to $50 or $60 million as an appropriate range. Keeler acknowledged that in the case of competition for the Terre Haute license "We start out with an advantage because we've already paid for the license," and that cost would have to be built into the bid of a competitor Matt Bell of the Casino Association of Indiana indicated that his members were current neutral about the broader bill, but strongly supported the increase in the free play deduction from $7 million to $10 million . . . Alex Stolyar, senior vice president of Full House Resorts, Inc., parent company of Rising Star Casino • Resort, made it clear that his company "unequivocally support[s] SB 552." He said, however, that they would like to see it "improved for the benefit of the other seven casino operators." Stolyar note that "Two of the seven operators are winning in a very large way," and "we'd like to see more parity," particularly with respect to Terre Haute, which Full House began pursuing more than two years ago. He asked solons to devise "a fair and open competitive process" to provide Terre Haute and Vigo County the best deal. As currently structured, he told lawmakers, SB 552 "would not allow us or other operators to compete in a fair way" for the Terre Haute license. Stolyar detailed the $150 million package Full House had proposed for a casino that included 750 to 800 jobs, with both sides of the equation topping the numbers bandied about by Spectacle. "Terre Haute and Vigo County would just be leaving money on the table without a change" in 552. There were no questions . . . Gretchen Gutman with Cook Group and Chris Leininger of the French Lick property appeared before the panel, and Gutman shared some history about the "unique and innovative public policy decision" that resulted in a public partnership for an Orange County casino, and told the committee that the French Lick property - which employs 1,700 people - would be adversely affected by the move of the Gary license to Terre Haute and by moving up the effective date for live dealers at the racinos. She reminded solons that the Cook family commitment was to make a civic contribution with no return expected, and asked that lawmakers remain respectful of the "uniqueness" of the community and property, the longstanding commitment to local historic preservation, and preserving the economic vitality of the Springs Valley. There were no questions . . . Ryan Soultz of Boyd Gaming, owner of Blue Chip Casino and Belterra Casino Resort, spoke to the $350 million+ in investments his company had made in Michigan City and current $11 million in event center expansion. He noted the loss of revenue his LaPorte County property would suffer if a Gary casino moved inland. Traffic that it has focused upon generating from Chicago to fight off Native American competition in South Bend would have to pass by the new Gary casino if SB 552 is approved . . . Trent McIntosh of Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino said table games and sports wagering would mean 650+ jobs and $30 million in new payroll for Hoosier Park and Indiana Grand Racing & Casino, as well as require substantial new investment in physical property development, and would allow them to offer complete gaming experiences and attract new players from out of state. We currently enjoy the benefits of a $1 billion horse racing industry in the state of Indiana, the Caesars official added. Rep. Moed asked about revenue-sharing with Marion County. Rep. Eberhart asked a leading question about a strong

Indiana Grand property being good for the region, and related it to the Indianapolis and Marion County economic development bill that he would support because it too was good for the region . . . Nicholas Bonarrigo, deputy general counsel at Carmeuse North America, which operates an industrial facility adjacent to the Majestic property at Buffington Harbor, discussed how his company would like to add 70 acres from the Majestic Star footprint to its limestone operations, and “open up space for additional development” . . . Travis Spotts of the World Trade Center Indianapolis spoke to the Buffington Harbor site being made available for investment and transformation into an Intermodal Gateway. he was the final speaker of the night. He assured lawmakers that “the interest in this project is very real.” There were no questions.

□ As for the sports wagering provisions in the bill, Dan Emerson, chief legal officer of the Indianapolis Colts appreciated “the thoughtful approach of the Senate” to respecting the integrity of the sports – “quality legislation that could help to shape Indiana as a model for the balance of the nation in legalized sports betting.” Rep. Moed asked him if he would prefer no betting at all or if the proposed framework was better. Emerson slammed the “pernicious” effect of illegal betting on NFL players, fans, and the sports itself. “We are in favor of legalized sports wagering,” he then flatly told Rep. Eberhart. Asked about official league data, Emerson said the team felt “very strongly” about use of official league data for in-game or in-race wagering, because ambiguity is a concern. Yardage or speed could be viewed differently by different observers, and “Without a single resolution by way of the governing body of the particular sport, you run the risk of conflicting results.” Eberhart pressed him on other states that require official data – “Do you know of any issues that they’ve had where the dispute has involved the lack of official league data?” – and was told that most legalized betting to date had been largely for readily determinable items like final results and point spreads. Would the value of the franchise rise if sports betting was legalized? “I left my crystal ball in my other suit,” Emerson replied. He eventually allowed that it would likely result in a marginal increase, but he was concerned that the league was putting its integrity at risk. Rep. Eberhart pursued the Colts’ position on daily fantasy sports, and was told that the team monitored the debate but did not weigh in. He told his questioner that the fantasy sports operators did not use official league data. Asked about the expectation about what the league or team might charge for that data, Emerson responded that there was “not a plan in place, but it wouldn’t be in anyone’s best interest to impose any kind of onerous charge.” He concluded, “We have to remember, the whole idea of this legislation is to wean the illegal bettors away from what they are doing in the illegal environment” and to the regulated structure . . . FanDuel’s director of governmental affairs, Andrew Winchell, explained that certain steps needed to be taken to move people from the illegal to regulated markets. Mobile gaming is definitely needed to complement in-person gaming, and attract patrons. Few will go through the hassle of driving to a casino to place a sport bet when they can easily access an off-shore website from their phone at home. New Jersey sports betting has far outpaced that of Mississippi due to online betting options, he told lawmakers. With the industry being technology-driven, multiple operators are also necessary to compete for a customer’s business, and taxes must be reasonable and set low enough to drive out illegal operators. Rep. Eberhart elicited an response from Winchell about a 10% tax rate being at the high end, with an 8.5% in-person to 13% mobile tax rate. Winchell said FanDuel was not taking a position on mandating official league data, saying his company was “agnostic” on the question of just who should provide the data to operators, and that it should be a legislative policy decision . . . Mark Miles, president and CEO of the Hulman Company, founded in Terre Haute and owner of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway and IndyCar, spoke in favor of the Terre Haute casino, and said “generally we are in support” of the spots wagering provisions to continue to advance fan interest in his sport. The online mobile gaming option “is very important,” and “we believe that official data is essential” for in-race betting. “I don’t know how it’s possible to offer in race betting without it,” Miles said, at least without a “chaotic effect.” He explained that timeouts cannot be called in racing, and IMS collects 80 million data points, “real-time, during the Indianapolis 500.” There were no questions . . . the Casino Association’s Bell said his members were strongly in favor of mobile options for sports wagering. However, “One area where we struggle and cannot support, is on the issue of official data.” He told lawmakers, “You’re being asked as a body to be the first jurisdiction to create a monopoly-data situation for a league. Leagues have said that they have to do this because the market is exploding. Globally, it is estimated that sports betting is about a $104.3 billion enterprise. Sixty to 70% of that is mobile. At that level of wagering today, if there were integrity problems that had ensued, we would read about them all over the place.” Bell continued: “As operators, we have a profound interest in making sure that any data that we use is accurate and reliable. We don’t simply sit people in garages and call them to ask them what the score was.” He then added, “Remember, you have a world-renowned Indiana Gaming Commission to regulate this activity. In Nevada, the statute is ‘thin,’ and they left a lot of the work of defining and regulating this to the regulator. I encourage you to consider that model,” as well as its excluded person provisions. Rep. Lehman asked him about in-play wagering, and noted that the Commission would first have to approve any type of bet before it could even be offered. Bell called for private contracts to be negotiated between leagues and operators, given that leagues will already benefit to the tune of billions of dollars from increased interests in their respective products. Rather than be about simple win-lose bets, Rep. Lehman suggested that the market is headed to more specific wagers. “It’s about the next pitch, it’s about next this, the next this,” said Lehman. Bell spoke about the prospect of corruption being increased with the limited number of data sources. Rep. Eberhart asked Bell if what he was saying was that the legislation should simply “Let the regulators do their jobs and don’t get too deep into the weeds,” and just deal with the big picture and taxes. Bell largely confirmed his perception. Rep. Austin asked him about whether statutes covered who was barred from wagering at a casino, and Bell explained the exclusions and noted that while someone might not be barred from betting, but the property could be prohibited from accepting the wager. He offered a bifurcated approach on detailing who could be barred from wagering . . . Soultz of Boyd Gaming, owner of Blue Chip and Belterra, asked that official league data not be mandated. He cited court rulings holding that such information is in the public domain. Rep. Eberhart asked about how the sports wagering provisions might ultimately impact a compact between the State of Indiana and the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians, and was told in a detailed response by Soultz that much hinged on exclusivity issues . . . Mark Webb, representing Circle City Beverage, explained that his client wanted to develop a sports wagering app, and asked that SB 552 offer some hope for Indiana-based companies to do so. He faced no questions . . . David Miller representing the PGA Tour, Major League Baseball, and the National Basketball Association, supported mobile wagering, noting the significant economic benefits, but raised cautions about consumer protections to reduce problem gambling. Official data should be required for live betting, Miller testified, and the U.S. will trend toward international numbers with as much as 60% of all wagering being in-game products. He wants to eliminate the black market for data, and suggested that Indiana be a national leader today, and “focus on the policy” behind official data. He promised that monopoly power would not be used to “extort” operators. “We have no intent to use some monopoly power,” Miller said, adding the leagues would be willing see a requirement for reasonable pricing. There were no questions.

□ In closing, Sen. Messmer praised the “robust discussion” and appreciated the “good suggestions on amendments” that would guide future discussions. He said that the “1992 business model” that was “common across the country no longer allows our casino industry to function as well as it should be able to.” He continued, “Watching our state’s gaming market decline for a period of years – and remain flat recently – was my impetus to look at a comprehensive bill that can help revitalize our gaming industry and have a positive impact on our budgets.” Sen. Messmer reminded House members that “The budget impact from SB 552 will be in excess of $100 million.”

□ Sen. Messmer also took a special shot at what he contended were inaccurate statements by Penn National about a compromise involving casino operators on the 2021 date for live dealers at the racinos . . . and over the Ohio casino referendum, which he said the company helped fund to the tune of $50 million, “ravaging the three casinos in Southeast Indiana.” Messmer referred to the “slow and measured changes” in gaming laws over the past 25 years, and that this “very delicately” balanced bipartisan-authored measure had passed unanimously in two committees and with bipartisan 38-11 support on the Senate floor.

● Asked about SB 552 on the morning after the marathon hearing, House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) of Indianapolis told reporters “It’s before the committee, and Chairman Smaltz is giving it a hard look just as he should, and the members of his committee will be involved in a resolution. Then it will be, as similar bills have been in the past, reassigned to Ways and Means, and Co-Chair Huston and his team will also have a bite at the apple. So, it’s a big bill . . . I’ve never been a supporter – I’ve been a rare supporter, let’s say that – of significant expansion of gaming in our state. I am of the opinion that we’re pretty saturated at this point. And as I’ve said to some as an engineer that used to read dials for a living, you adjust a knob over here, you literally do change the dials at all of the other gaming facilities. So it’s a delicate balance. That’s why there are so many cross-payments and guarantees in the bill as it exists today that make some people, including myself, uncomfortable. But again – big bill; they’re working through it, and I really don’t have a prediction as to what Chairman Smaltz will – what the work product will be – or exactly what Ways and Means will do to it.

□ Then Speaker Bosma dropped a bombshell of sorts, confirming what we’ve been telling you about the apparent lack of any substantive blueprint for the elusive intermodal port. He revealed that “There’s not even a remote development plan at this point, according to the Administration, and there’s some reluctance to accept the harbor as a place for development because of the condition of the harbor. So I know that’s being looked at and I don’t know that any final – it isn’t as big a carrot for me, and I believe for the Administration, as one might think, just because of the condition of the Harbor, the environmental condition, for one thing.”

● Indiana is not among a cadre of 14 states filing amicus briefs in the U.S. District Court for the District of New Hampshire in New Hampshire v. Barr, No. 1:19-cv-00163-PB. The coalition of states, state lotteries, and state attorneys general, urge the New Hampshire district court to grant a declaratory judgment concluding that the federal Wire Act’s prohibitions against interstate wire transmission of wagering information is limited to sports wagering, and that it does not apply to state-conducted lotteries. The states also seek an injunction against enforcement of the controversial January U.S. Department of Justice opinion.

● Reuters reported Monday that those on-again, off-again combination talks are on again, and Eldorado Resorts Inc. and Caesars Entertainment Corporation “are in the early stages of exploring a merger.” Such merger would require divestment in Indiana unless SB 552 or a reasonable facsimile thereof passes this session, because in Indiana, Caesars owns two casinos, both racinos, and Eldorado owns one casino. SB 552 would lift the two-casino ownership limits (which are complicated by the racinos potentially winning approval for live dealers for table games and becoming full-fledged casinos by early 2021 under current law or this Summer, under SB 552).

□ Even if ownership limits were to be uncapped, the Indiana Gaming Commission could conceivably block a license transfer based upon undue concentration (it presumably wouldn’t want one company to own 90% of all licenses) or market competition issues (all four/three Lake County licenses or all three Cincinnati market licenses presumably should not be owned by the same entity).

□ If the merger were to go through as contemplated, the new Caesars-Eldorado combination would have accounted for 57.75% of Indiana’s January revenue at the five properties, and this would surely surpass 60% with live dealers at racino table games (before accounting for any potential dip in Tropicana Evansville revenues a few years down the road as a result of a new Vigo County casino), likely edging close to raising regulatory eyebrows. The market issues do not seem to be as problematic, because the five Caesars-Eldorado properties would largely be in discrete markets: three of the state’s four corners (Hammond, Harrison County, and Evansville), and in Central Indiana (Anderson and Shelbyville).

● Of some 1.1 million outstanding Indiana Department of Revenue 2018 tax warrants owed by approximately 285,000 distinct taxpayers, we’ve pored through the details and discovered that only 10 total DOR tax warrant issuances deal with any form of gaming-related taxes . . . and all relate to charity gaming or gambling activity in bars, taverns, and fraternal organizations:

● Indiana amassed $40.8 million in General Fund revenue collections during February from the riverboat wagering and racino wagering taxes, outperforming the December estimates by $700,000 (1.7%), yet tumbling compared to February 2018 levels by $9.0 million (- 18.1%). Through the first eight months of Fiscal Year 2019, tax revenue from gaming sources totals $238.1 million, topping the $230.6 million that had been forecasted, and exceeding the $206.7 million in actual revenue that had been registered by the same July - February point one year earlier.

□ Riverboat wagering tax collections totaled $30.1 million for February, which is $200,000 (- 0.6%) below the monthly estimate and $2.0 million (- 6.2%) below revenue in February 2018. That marks the largest year-over-year erosion (on both a percentage and real-dollar basis) so far this fiscal year. Fiscal year-to-date riverboat wagering taxes of $159.4 million are running ahead of the most recent round of expectations by $4.2 million (2.7%) and have improved compared to collections during the same eight months in the prior year by $26.0 million (19.5%).

□ Racino wagering tax collections for February amounted to $10.7 million, which is $900,000 (8.7%) above the recent monthly estimates (the fourth consecutive month exceeding expectations) but $7.0 million (- 39.7%) below actual revenue in February 2018. This constitutes the steepest year-over-year contraction (on both a percentage and real-dollar basis) thus far in Fiscal Year 2019. Fiscal year-to-date racino wagering taxes have outperformed estimates by $3.6 million (5.3%), and have also improved compared to the same eight-month point in the prior fiscal year by $5.8 million (8.9%).

● Indiana's direct gaming employment rebounds in January from December, but only after the bench marking dropped the preliminary December numbers by 500 jobs, as we explained on our front page this week. As a result, the January gain over December is an impressive 400 jobs, a 3.54% over-the-month increase. Compared to January 2018, the first (partial) month in which the Four Winds Casino South Bend was open for business, direct gaming employment fell by 200 jobs (- 1.68%). Still, this is a big improvement from January 2017, when January gaming employment had plummeted to its lowest level in 20 years, dating back to 1997, when only six casinos were floating. The number of direct gaming jobs sinks to its lowest level since August. After benchmarking, only two months during 2018 hit 12,000, and 2019 did not open with even that kind of promise.

□ If we had not factored in the ≈ 1,200 Four Winds jobs, January gaming employment would actually be at its lowest level since 1997, in spite of the number of new jobs created by property additions, renovations, and partial land-side moves. January becomes the 65th consecutive month - more than five straight years - in which the state has seen the gaming employment level linger below 13,000 direct gaming industry jobs.

Direct Gaming Employment - Past 16 Months

01/19	12/18	11/18	10/18	09/18	08/18	07/18	06/18
11,700	11,300	11,500	12,100	11,900	11,600	11,700	11,800
05/18	04/18	03/18	02/18	01/18	12/17	11/17	10/17
11,800	11,900	12,100	11,900	11,900	10,700	11,000	11,300

□ After 2018 became the first time in which Indiana's January direct gaming employment demonstrated over-the-year growth since 2011, it dropped again in January 2019. Compared to January just five years back, Hoosier gaming industry direct employment is down by 500 jobs (- 4.10%) from 2014. Dating back 10 years, the number of jobs are off by 2,400 (- 17.02%) from 14,100 in January 2009, as the national fiscal crisis was making its mark during the presidential transition. Indiana is also down by 4,400 gaming jobs - off by 27.33% - from the peak of January direct gaming employment, a robust 16,100 in 2001 (when all boats were still forced by law to cruise; there was one fewer commercial casino; we were bereft of a Native American casino; and both racinos were not yet open).

● "Beat Governor Holcomb (with Your Bracket)!" The Indiana Republican Party tells supporters, "It's March in Indiana, so you know what that means. Get your brackets ready, because it's time to Beat the Governor with a spirited bracket challenge as part of the 2019 NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament!" Prizes for the top-placing brackets in this year's Beat the Governor bracket challenge will include:

- First & Second Place
A basketball signed by Governor Eric Holcomb
- Third Place
Any item of your choice from the Indiana GOP store

□ And didn't the Guv let the cat out of the bag with what seemed like a deliberate interjection when he was revealing his NCAA tournament bracket? He joined Hammer and Nigel at Emmis Communications to make his picks for the NCAA tournament, and the duo reminded people that "this was just for recreational purposes only, because sports gambling is not in the State of Indiana," when the Governor, with a sly grin, interjected, "yet" . . .

● Sports gaming law attorney Ryan Rodenberg writes for ESPN.com that “After decades of public resistance to legalized sports betting – including six years as the lead plaintiff in the lawsuit against New Jersey that eventually made its way to the Supreme Court – the NCAA is moving to address sports betting integrity in new ways.” He also notes that individual conferences are doing the same. “Industry stakeholders point to individual conferences and schools – not necessarily the NCAA – to be uniquely capable of addressing sports betting integrity issues” as result of the fragmented nature of modern college sports as well as more practical reasons. “In order for anything to be addressed in real time, the conferences must be involved,” said Matthew Holt, president of U.S. Integrity in Las Vegas. “The individual universities also need to be involved as they are the ones hiring the trainers, interns and associate coaches that get caught for insider information leaks. As it stands now, the conferences only share data when the issues are to the point of the investigation, but the individual universities want the ability to track – in real time – issues that may be arising with any of their employees and not be blindsided after trends have escalated so far that they need to be investigated.”

□ The Indianapolis-based college sports governing authority will convene an internal group to study “how best to protect game integrity, monitor betting activity, manage sports data and expand educational efforts.” Rodenberg relates these efforts “in part, to a confluence of recent events that have highlighted the need for a change in how sports betting is monitored,” including the big shift in team championship futures odds when Duke University’s freshman phenom Zion Williamson (broke his shoe and) injured his knee, and “Moneyline bets cashing – or not – because of a controversial technical foul call in mid-February after a fan threw a stuffed animal onto the court with less than a second remaining during a tie game between Georgia and Mississippi State.” He also cites “Two recent late-game officiating disputes that have left the NCAA considering whether to review all buzzer-beaters, even if the outcome of the game would not be impacted.”

● In advance of Wednesday’s House committee hearing on sports wagering, the Associated Press nationally took a look at the mobile element of sports wagering as one of the more unsettled and controversial elements facing states that are addressing sports wagering. Indiana was one of the states that AP noted in the article, finding that while Sen. Jon Ford (R) of Terre Haute “wants bets to be taken online as well as at Indiana riverboat casinos and racetracks,” House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn “said he views mobile betting as a significant expansion of gambling and major policy shift. He fears it could lead to more problem gambling and traditional casino games moving online.”

□ “Everybody’s using mobile to do all kinds of things we weren’t 10 years ago,” Sen. Ford tells AP. “It’s the future. It’s inevitable.” Sen. Ford “co-authored a bill passed by the Senate that now must pass a House committee, but the committee chairman is cool to the idea of allowing sports bets to be placed on mobile devices ‘If you’re allowing sports gaming on a mobile device, what kind of expansion does that lead us to? [Rep. Smaltz] said. ‘I’m comfortable with it in on the properties now, and I’m going to hear the bill. But it would be difficult to imagine a scenario where I, or certainly a large number of people in Indiana, would think it’s a good idea to put mobile out there right now.’”

IN Casinos

Northern Market News . . .

● The Indiana Gaming Commission approves Larry Kinser as trustee in waiting for Ameristar Casino East Chicago. He had been Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg trustee-in-waiting, which he served as GM in Argosy Casino Lawrenceburg days.

● The April issue of Chicago magazine explores “Why a Chicago Casino May Never Happen.” Toward the end of the article, which details all the logistical problems (which seem to mirror concerns some have with SB 552 on our side of the border), the author also notes “The exact location of a Chicago casino remains another big-money question that won’t quickly be resolved, if one becomes legal. Convention, tourism, and dining interests crave a downtown presence. However, Mayor Rahm Emanuel recently suggested a casino for the Southeast Side’s Illinois International Port District. The location would directly compete with the Horseshoe Casino in Hammond, Indiana, which draws about $40 million (sic) in monthly revenues just from players crossing the state border. Not everyone is sold on that strategy. ‘Getting back the money from Indiana is so myopic,’ says Kim Goluska, an urban planner who has assisted the Chicagoland Chamber on casino issues. ‘The idea is to create a destination anchor in downtown Chicago.’”

□ Fact check: the last time Horseshoe topped $40 million was in March 2018, and it has failed to even reach $30 million in revenues in two of the past four months. Of course, you would also be hard-pressed to suggest that the amounts estimated in Chicago magazine article come exclusively from Illinois gamblers.

● The Indiana Gaming Commission unanimously approves the merger of Spectacle Entertainment, LLC with Majestic Holdco, LLC, and extracts a $2 million transfer fee for the privilege, adding to the litany of such transfer fees reaped by the State of Indiana over the past few years from ownership changes in Evansville, Anderson/Shelbyville, Switzerland County, and East Chicago. That’s a cool $5 million with not a lot of heavy lifting.

□ Peter Rusthoven of Barnes & Thornburg LLP presented the case for the deal on behalf of Spectacle, effectively continuing his representation of its principal, Rod Ratcliff, which began with the Argosy Casino Lawrenceburg license application in 1994-95, in which former Centaur Gaming domo Ratcliff was a key part of the original proposal with his then-Pegasus team. Fresh off his representation of the State of Indiana against IBM in another matter involving many tens of millions of dollars, Rusthoven discussed Ratcliff’s extensive experience and involvement in Indiana gaming history, and referred to others who are intimately involved, including Greg Gibson and John Keeler.

□ Rusthoven acknowledged that Spectacle hoped to move a Gary casino “to a much superior location” on I-80/I-94 in Gary, and explained that the current Buffington Harbor home of the two Majestic Star Casino vessels and pavilion will have substantially more value for The Region as an intermodal facility. He also noted that there is clear support in Vigo County for moving a license there and opening a casino. Such a facility would attract Illinois patrons, and reduce the incentive for Illinois to open a casino just over the border.

□ When Ratcliff himself spoke, he opened by saying “I’m back,” to laughter. Ratcliff reminisced how he used to haul coal for the father of Greg Gibson, his new business partner. Dana Bennett, chief of staff for the City of Gary, conveyed the support of Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) for the ownership change and said the city is excited about the opportunity to generate new revenue and substantial economic development from the subsequent change of location. Ron Brewer (D), president of the Gary Common Council and a former employee of Majestic Star, confirmed his support.

□ IGC Commissioner Susan Williams asked if anyone could outline the vision for Terre Haute (Gibson was not in attendance). Ratcliff took the cue and explained, “This would be a game changer for Terre Haute in a lot of ways. The void in the market (in that area) is big for us. And Greg’s big thing is jobs.” He said Gibson would have liked to be at the Commission meeting that day, but conceded, “It’s a tricky situation,” since the General Assembly has not yet decided if or how such a transaction might take place. Otherwise, he suggested, hundreds of people from Terre Haute wearing gray shirts would have made the journey to show that they were All-in with their support. “We are all kind of in a tricky situation,” he reiterated. If a Terre Haute casino opportunity doesn’t come to fruition courtesy of the General Assembly and the Gary licenses don’t move, Rusthoven confirmed, “The commitment is to these boats regardless of what happens in the legislature.”

□ After the ownership transfer was approved, Ratcliff issued a statement saying “Our plans for the Majestic Star I and II have always been dependent on a collaborative effort with city and state government, and this decision allows us to continue to work cooperatively to strengthen Indiana’s economy. This repurposing of existing state gaming licenses will provide job growth and increased tax revenues.” He reiterates that the new inland, off-footprint Gary facility is projected to be a $300 million investment that would add 400 new jobs to the current 800 jobs at the two existing Majestic Star properties. He adds that the proposed Terre Haute casino – projected to be an investment of more than $100 million (talk earlier in the day had said it could be as much as $150 million) – would provide the same economic benefits as the land-based Gary casino, along with more than 400 additional jobs.

● Spectacle Entertainment, LLC Executive Vice President of Operations Jahnae Erpenbach will serve as general manager of the Majestic Star Casino properties in Gary. Erpenbach has more than 26 years of gaming industry experience, having most recently served under Spectacle chief Rod Ratcliff as vice president and general manager at Indiana Grand Racing & Casino and vice president and general manager of gaming at Hoosier Park Racing & Casino.

□ Before joining Ratcliff’s Centaur Gaming team, Erpenbach was executive director of marketing at Penn National Gaming, Inc.’s former Empress Casino Joliet in Illinois, and assisted in the opening and operations of Players International, one of the first riverboat casinos to enter the Midwest market.

● The Majestic Star Casino I and Majestic Star Casino II in Gary went dark about 10:00 p.m. on Tuesday, March 12 to allow the transition from Majestic Holdco ownership to the new Spectacle Entertainment, LLC regime. The boats at Buffington Harbor reopened around 2:00 p.m. Wednesday, March 13 after Indiana Gaming Commission approval.

□ Spectacle’s Rod Ratcliff tells Karen Caffarini of the Gary Post-Tribune “I don’t think we’ll remodel the boats, but we want to fix everything that’s broken. There are a lot of broken lights.” According to Caffarini, Ratcliff expects that “the casinos would still be operating in their current vessels for two years, even if the legislature approves the moves this year.”

□ The Gary property’s new GM, Jahnae Erpenbach, tells Caffarini that Spectacle “is taking an immediate three-prong approach that includes replacing several hundred old slot machines with the newest and most popular ones, launching a new guest benefit app for smart phones and quickly introducing a new customer service program. ‘There is some room to grow,’ said Erpenbach As for the name, Erpenbach said it will remain Majestic Star, for now but not for too long. ‘The name change needs to be done at the right time,’ she said.”

● In Ameristar Casino E. Chicago, LLC, et al., v. Ferrantelli, Sr., No. 18A-CT-1174, the Indiana Court of Appeals, on interlocutory appeal, affirms the entry of default judgment by Lake County Superior Court, Civil Division Judge Bruce Parent against Ameristar Casino East Chicago in an 86-year-old man’s negligence lawsuit as a sanction for discovery noncompliance. “This case illustrates the dangers of noncompliance with our liberal and self-effectuating discovery process,” was how the appellate panel opened its 13-page ruling, before remanding the matter to Lake County for proceedings to determine damages on behalf of Joseph Ferrantelli, Sr., the injured man. Ameristar had contended that the trial court abused its discretion both in issuing the default judgment and in declining to set it aside. The appellate panel here was comprised of three highly experienced former trial court judges from Northern Indiana.

□ In a footnote (citations omitted), the appellate panel explains how the case came to be filed: “Ferrantelli explained that he and a ‘lady friend’ of his went to the casino because they had heard about a ‘crab leg deal’ and they wanted ‘to gamble a little bit.’ When they arrived, Ferrantelli’s friend requested a wheelchair, and Ferrantelli was instructed by ‘one of the attendants at a booth’ to take the escalator down to the first level to retrieve the wheelchair. Ferrantelli took the escalator down, and a casino employee gave him the wheelchair. That employee then ‘pointed toward the escalator’ and said, ‘Take the escalator.’ As Ferrantelli was putting the wheelchair on the escalator to go back up, ‘it caught the front wheels and flipped [him] backwards, and [he] landed flat on [his] back.’ ” He sued claiming that Ameristar “failed to properly advise him” and “failed to clearly mark the elevators, among other things.” Ameristar denied his allegations in the complaint, and asserted affirmative defenses, including comparative fault and assumption of risk.

□ The Ferrantelli complaint produced several discovery disputes that dragged on as Ameristar failed to produce witnesses for depositions or relevant documents Judge Parent issued orders directing specific actions by Ameristar, “noting that it appeared that the case ‘has been sandbagged with an older Plaintiff,’ ” as the appellate panel found, even warning “Ameristar’s counsel that the court expected Ameristar to be ‘extremely cooperative here,’ and also twice declared, ‘This Judge hates discovery fights.’ ” He ultimately entered a default judgment against Ameristar as a sanction, and then denied a motion to set aside the default judgment, leading to this interlocutory appeal.

□ The appellate panel was unimpressed with the “specifics of the procedural deficiencies alleged by Ameristar, as we are confident upon review that, even assuming any technical noncompliance with certain procedural rules, Ameristar’s substantive rights have ultimately not been prejudiced.”

□ On the substantive concerns, the intermediate appellate court found that “Ameristar failed to respond and/or was entirely uncooperative with regard to numerous discovery requests, over a protracted period of time, which caused the trial court to intervene and issue its first order to compel discovery. In entering that order, the trial court held the issue of monetary sanctions under advisement and warned Ameristar that it expected full compliance and cooperation moving forward. Although Ameristar complied, for the most part, with that order, it was later revealed that Ameristar had withheld certain witness information, and further that many of Ameristar’s prior discovery responses had been, in the trial court’s opinion, intentionally incomplete and misleading The trial court here made a detailed oral record explaining its frustration with Ameristar’s behavior, as well as its prior warnings to counsel to stop what the court viewed as the intentional sandbagging of the case considering the plaintiff’s advanced age. We conclude that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the sanction of default judgment was warranted.”

Southern Market News . . .

● Good news for Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana: With Kentucky’s legislature set to adjourn at the end of the month, a sports wagering bill – which showed early promise – appears to be dead this year, largely due to special off-year rules requiring larger majorities for revenue bills.

□ That will mean no early start (as feared) to sports wagering at the venerable Churchill Downs race track or the Churchill Downs Inc. Derby City gaming facility which has been siphoning slot players from HCSI to Louisville’s historical horse racing machines.

● Harrah’s Metropolis Casino in Metropolis, Illinois, a market competitor for Tropicana Evansville, reopened Wednesday morning, March 19, after being closed since February 18 due to Ohio River flooding.

● When Adam “Pacman” Jones, the former Cincinnati Bengals star cornerback, changed local lawyers after his arrest for alleged cheating at Rising Star Casino • Resort and conduct-related charges arising from being questioned and taken into custody, the prosecuting attorney for Dearborn County and Ohio County dropped her request for a gag order (and she seemed to indicate her displeasure for the judge and magistrate judge dragging their feet on the initial request – a delay we pointed out to you in our last issue that appeared a bit anomalous), and the court granted her request.

□ There was a small bit of excitement over a request from law enforcement for arrest-related video from a Cincinnati television station – the defense opposed the release as prejudicial – but the judge declined to get involved and supply pre-release guidance as requested by the prosecutor, explaining that the video was held by law enforcement and not the court, release by law enforcement is discretionary, and the issue was not ripe for judicial intervention.

□ On Thursday morning, Jones moved to withdraw his pending motion that sought to strike what his initial attorney had labeled as “inflammatory and offensive language in the probable cause affidavit, “due to the fact that it was filed in this case by the Defendant’s prior attorney, who has recently withdrawn from this case.” The scheduled Thursday afternoon hearing on that motion “is no longer necessary” as well, Jones’ attorney David Zerbe told the Ohio County Circuit Court, and it was vacated.

□ Later on Thursday, a joint motion was filed by Jones’ attorney and the prosecutor tendering a conditional negotiated plea. Under its terms, Jones would agree to withdraw his former plea of not guilty and enter a plea of guilty to a Level 6 Felony count of Cheating at Gambling, I.C. § 4-33-10-2(4), and a Class A Misdemeanor count of Resisting Law Enforcement, I.C. § 35-44.1-3-1(a)(3), and the State would agree to dismiss the remaining counts of the charging information in this cause of action.

□ The NFL free agent would receive a sentence of 545 days, of which 531 days would be suspended for the Cheating at Gambling count, and a sentence of 365 days of which 351 days would be suspended for the Resisting Law Enforcement count, concurrently. Jones would receive credit for two actual days served; four days of good time credit. He would be reporting probation for 531 days, and have to periodically check in and keep officials informed of his whereabouts, be banned from possessing a firearm, and may not use alcohol or non-prescribed controlled substances. Jones would also waive extradition to Indiana and voluntarily return when required; surrender to serve 10 days in jail, and submit to DNA collection. He would also be subject to assorted court costs. Under the terms of the agreement, if Jones successfully completes probation without any probation violations, he has the right to petition the court to have the felony conviction reduced to a Class A misdemeanor, at the discretion of the judge.

● Writing at Seeking Alpha, Vince Martin isn’t sold on Indiana variables that might positively impact the value of Full House Resorts, Inc., parent company of Rising Star Casino • Resort. He suggests that as structured now, Rising Star is largely cut out of the competition for a potential new Terre Haute casino. “For that to change, Full House will have to beat out the politically connected [Rod] Ratcliff - which seems unlikely to happen. Making matters worse, the Senate bill also allows for live dealers to come to two Indianapolis-area racinos ..., before 2021 – and it adds another competitor to Full House’s existing Rising Star property. That property already is hanging on by a thread. EBITDA in 2018 did rise almost 5%, thanks mostly to a strong Q4. But Full House also put some $6 million into the property, including a new RV park, a ferry across the Ohio River, improvements to the entrance, and a new restaurant. EBITDA rose just $128,000 year-over-year. Margins are under 6%. The ferry, launched in September, doesn’t appear to be moving the needle. Revenue declined in Q4. Indiana state figures show a 10% drop in casino win in January, followed by a flat February. It’s possible returns will improve as spring shows up and more potential users become aware of the ferry (which has uses beyond casino visitation). But those returns could be swamped if Indianapolis racinos take any market share; and margins at this point are so thin that Full House really can’t afford any further revenue declines.”

□ Martin adds that “Sports betting could be a help – but Ohio is moving toward legalization as well,” and “Rising Star simply seems boxed in. With Terre Haute unlikely, and more competitive pressure on the way, Full House might be out of options in that market. And it’s exceedingly difficult to assign any value to the property at this point.”

● Looking back over the last three annual reports filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission by Full House Resorts, Inc., parent company of Rising Star Casino • Resort, we learn a bit about the declining employment levels at Rising Star, which is short by more than 80 jobs (almost 15% in just the last two years):

	FTE	P-T	TOTAL
2019 (as of 03/01)	387	123	510
2018 (as of 03/01)	419	132	551
2017 (as of 03/17)	431	161	592

● The new Form 10-K filed by Full House Resorts, Inc., parent company of Rising Star Casino • Resort, adds some details to what we told you earlier this month about the annual numbers for Rising Star. Full House explains that 2018 net revenues decreased “due to adverse weather conditions, most notably during the first quarter from approximately 21 days of heavy snowfall, as well as two days when the casino was closed due to the flooding of nearby access roads. This affected guest volumes, as reflected in a 3.6% decrease of slot coin-in during the year.” Absent an accounting change, “slot revenues decreased by 2.7% and table games revenues decreased by 10.3% due to lower volumes, while promotional allowances decreased by 7.9%. Non-gaming net revenues decreased by 2.0% during 2018, in part reflecting a temporary reduction in the number of available room-nights due to hotel improvements during the year. Average daily room rate remained flat.” While net revenues decreased compared to 2017, Adjusted Property EBITDA increased by $100,000 (from $2.7 million to $2.8 million) “due to improved efficiencies driven by new management, a focus on cost controls, and savings from streamlining labor.”

□ The total investment in certain maintenance and “growth-related capital expenditure projects” at Rising Star during the 2018 calendar year was approximately $4.9 million. This included improvements to the entry pavilion and the adjoining hotel’s lobby and hallways; new access roads to the ferry landing sites; and implementation of the 10-vehicle ferry boat service to Rabbit Hash, Kentucky.

February State Summary

Statewide win at the 13 Hoosier gaming properties added up to $172.16 million in February, eclipsing the same month last year by 1.20% ($2.04 million). Even so, this is the second weakest February win that state has seen over the past 15 years, and also constitutes the second-weakest win overall across the past 12 months. Despite a neutral calendar (both with four Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays), this was the first time that we have seen consecutive months of February with win south of $180 million since 2003-04 (when there was one fewer casino and no racinos, and a major weekend snowstorm in February 2003). No February has seen revenues of $200 million or more since 2013, when the land-based casino opened in downtown Cincinnati.

On the positive side, win grew over the prior February for the first time since 2016. Eight properties enjoyed a more lucrative February this year than in 2018, with the largest percentage growth occurring at Majestic Star Casino II. Hoosier casino win rebounded by 8.37% ($13.29 million) from the dismal January results (which came in at the second-lowest monthly level over the past 15 years), as 11 out of the 13 properties profited from an over-the-month improvement.

Year-to-date win has eroded vs. the first two months of 2018 by 2.27% (- $7.69 million). Five casinos are up, while eight are down. Of the six properties with the most January-February revenue, Indiana Grand Racing & Casino is the only one running ahead of 2018’s pace. The state’s perennial leader, Horseshoe Casino Hammond, absorbed the largest year-to-date shortfall on both a percentage and real-dollar basis.

The Lake Michigan region posted revenues of $72.14 million, up from last year by 1.49% ($1.06 million), which looks pretty good given that the Illinois Chicagoland boats were down by 4.7% for the month. Three of the five northern tier boats showed improvement over the year, but the two that didn’t were the two largest casinos. The casino closest to the border, Horseshoe Casino Hammond, has not experienced over-the-year improvement in any February since 2012-2013 (when Illinois Video Gaming Terminals were legalized). Weather in Northern Indiana also balanced out over the year, with one week of snow in February 2018 and one week of cold and snow this year. The Southern Indiana region captured revenues of $58.84 million, sinking marginally vs. one year ago by 0.55% (- $326,207), a third consecutive February-to-February dip. The southern casinos accounted for only 34% of statewide win, the lowest share since March 2015. The five Lake boats outearned the six southern properties by $13 million, the largest differential since April. Tropicana Casino endured its largest year-over-year decline since April 2008, surprising given that market foe Harrah’s Metropolis Casino in Illinois closed from February 18 until Tuesday morning, March 19, due to flooding, and remained closed The Central Indiana racino duo accounted for $41.17 million in February win, hurdling the same month in 2018 by 3.30% ($1.31 million) – the most fruitful February for the racinos since 2012. The pair accounted for 23.92% of statewide win, a new all-time high.

Illinois earned just $97.56 million from its 10 casinos, sinking from February 2018 by some seven percent (- $7 million). On the heels of its miserly $94 million take in January, the Land of Lincoln has now endured back-to-back months under $100 million for the first time this century. The 6,842 Video Gaming Terminals in 31,110 establishments generated $129.07 million (on coin-in of $1.58 billion, about $50 million more than we saw in Indiana) during February, resulting in a total Illinois largesse of $226.63 million. Ohio reeled in $70 million from its four casinos, outperforming February 2018 by $2 million (3.5%). JACK Cincinnati Casino, the Cincinnati market leader, saw revenue grow at both its slots and tables over the year, up by $800,000 (4.7%) overall to $17.8 million. The Ohio racinos produced an additional $85 million, surpassing last year’s take by $5.5 million (6.9%). Every one of Ohio’s four casinos and 11 racinos posted higher numbers in February 2019 than 2018 – even as Belterra Park near Cincinnati was closed for almost half of the month due to flooding. Overall, the Buckeye State accumulated $155 million in gaming revenue (up by 5.4%), marking the sixth month out of the past seven that our eastern border competitor has narrowed the gap to Indiana’s statewide casino win.

Indiana casinos tallied total February slot win of $147.54 million, a year-over-year boost of 2.62% ($3.76 million). This becomes the first February-to-February growth in the slot category the state has enjoyed since 2016, but this is tempered by the realization that it is also the second-weakest February slot take over the past 15 years, dating back to the days before the two racinos and the Orange Country casino. Slot win soared from January by 11.09% ($14.73 million); every property save Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana (which was closed for four days due to flooding) saw its slot win increase over January. Players risked $1.53 billion at the slots, or about 1.5% less than they did in February 2018. February slot play has not been this paltry since 1999, when there were two fewer casinos and no racinos. At Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana, coin-in slumped to its lowest level in any month this century, due both to the closure and the new competition from historical horse racing machines at Derby City Gaming in Louisville. The statewide slot payback percentage averaged out to an all-time February zenith of 90.37 percent. Rising Star Casino • Resort is home to the state's loosest slot machines for the third consecutive month. Slots comprised 85.70% of overall statewide win – an 18-month acme that seems counterintuitive given the market situation in Indiana: (1) the lack of table games at Four Winds Casino South Bend; (2) growing slot competition from Illinois VGTs; (3) slot competition for HCSI from Derby City Gaming. One would think that these circumstances would cause an increase in the table game percentage of overall win, but that could be mitigated in February because of lower table holds that appear to be just a result of the law of averages working out in favor of players in general, and not any VIP or VVIP player wins.

Statewide win per slot per day averaged $291 – the strongest showing since April 2018. Every casino improved in this category vs. January except Horseshoe Casino Southern Indiana, which had its weather closure issues. Could the barrage of “Vegas appeal; Indy feel” television spots be paying off for Caesars Entertainment Corporation? Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino shined with a new property record best of $392 in daily win per slot machine. Indiana Grand Racing & Casino paced the state with daily win of $417 per slot machine, the best performance by any property since March 2018. There were 18,093 electronic gaming devices in play across all properties on the last day of the month, a reduction of 695 machines compared to February 2018. This marks the fourth consecutive month in which the slot inventory has shrunk on a prior-year basis by more than 600 units . . . and may help explain the improvement in win per slot per day. The two racinos have ranked first and second statewide in win per slot per day for four consecutive months. Hoosier casinos averaged daily win of $1,297 per table – a new state record low for the month of February – on a statewide inventory of 678 table games, an eight-month apex.

Indiana casinos were only able to cobble together February table revenues of $24.62 million, deteriorating from the prior year by 6.52% (- $1.72 million). This serves as the fourth consecutive year-over-year monthly decline, the longest such negative stretch the state has experienced since the second half of 2016. Table win has not been this low in any month since September 2016. Moreover, this is now the weakest statewide table win for any February since 1997 when there were just six casinos in operation. Six out of the 11 properties with live dealers collected more in table win in February than they did in February 2018. Players ponied up $120.93 million at the tables, with table drop up from last year by 2.33% ($2.76 million). Eight properties saw more table activity in terms of monthly drop than they did in February 2018. The table hold percentage of 20.36% marks a five-month low and the second-lowest over the past 18 months. This appears to be just a factor of normal players largely playing lucky, with no particular casino or any particular game at any property showing particularly aberrational numbers. In particular, the table hold rate at Horseshoe Casino Hammond came in south of 20% for the first time since July 2017 and first February since 2011.

Caesars Entertainment Corporation counted up $86 million from its four Hoosier properties, good for 49.80% of all statewide casino win. This figure is down from its majority share in January and the amount posted in four of the last five months). The Horseshoe-branded boats have not both reported year-over-year growth in the same month since December 2017. Penn National Gaming, Inc. earned $31 million from its Hoosier duo, worth 18.23% of the state market. Two of the three Hoosier boats that have seen over-the-year win decline in each of the first two months of 2019 are Penn National boats. Boyd Gaming Corporation collected $19 million from its Hoosier property pair, equivalent to an 11% state market share. Combined, win for the two Boyd boats ascended over February 2018 levels by just under $1 million. Majestic Star Casino added up just under $13 million from the sister vessels at Buffington Harbor, which translated into a 7.35% state market share, the best showing for the corporate parent since June 2016 (this was the first time that both MSC boats had improved in February revenue since 2015-16 – and only the second time over the past 39 months that both MSC boats enjoyed an over-the-year gain).

Hoosier Lottery

- The $625 million Powerball jackpot that was available for the Saturday, March 23 draw ranked as the seventh-largest jackpot ever up for grabs domestically (and fourth-largest ever for Powerball). The lump-sum cash payout value of $380.6 million was the eighth-highest in U.S. history (sixth for Powerball). The big bucks were the result of a string of 24 successive draws without a winner that started with a $40 million prize on December 29, 2018.

- The high Powerball jackpot was also expected to juice up sales for the Hoosier Lotto game, which has also been advancing to Indiana-impressive levels without as much notoriety.

- The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for Saturday, March 23, grew to $32.3 million, a $400,000 jump over the previous jackpot, growth that followed the smallest increment of any of the first six March drawings for March 20. That $300,000 boost followed two successive $400,000 jumps and a $500,000 infusion for the March 9 draw, the second $500,000 addition during March (after the state had not seen that high a jackpot improvement since the November 7 drawing). The March 6-16 run of jackpot infusions constituted the four largest consecutive additions to the jackpot pool since the quartet of draws that spanned October 31 through November 10. The draw on Wednesday, March 6 had marked the first time in more than seven years (since February 18, 2012) that the Hoosier Lotto jackpot topped $30 million, a key psychological number for casual players.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for March 23 ranked as the third highest offered in any jurisdiction in the world behind only Powerball and Mega Millions. The jackpot was last hit on October 14, 2017, at $25.5 million, which at the time was the largest jackpot up for grabs since the matrix was revised in May 2014. The March 13 drawing represents the 21st consecutive draw above that previous record level. This is also the largest jackpot available in more than seven years, since the $34.50 million jackpot hit on February 18, 2012 (a similar-sized jackpot was also won October 30, 2010).

□ The current jackpot also still significantly lags the top two jackpots on record, $54.5 million (won more than 10 years ago, on November 7, 2007) and $42 million (won on June 5, 1999). The current jackpot has been growing since February 10, 2018, so it has now gone unclaimed for more than a full year, and has become the third-largest on record dating back at least 17 years.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot reigned as the nation's fourth-largest domestic jackpot from the $24.2 million December 19 draw until January 2, trailing the two multistate draw games and California's SuperLotto Plus . . . but after the California jackpot was hit, the Hoosier Lotto jackpot was third domestically, and the top non-multistate game (by a $14.1 million margin) since January 24.

● Silver Express in Indianapolis maintains the lottery sales lead for a sixth consecutive month, and continues its remarkable run of not having been lower than first or second statewide since a third-place finish back in November 2015.

□ Troy Foods Inc. in Indianapolis, which had placed first or second in each month since it transitioned from Buck's Market ownership in the mid-July 2018 buyout (and it had largely been on the podium with Silver Express for years before the change), drops to third place in February. Silver Express had held the top spot statewide during a strong run from December 2015 through October 2017 and again from January through April. Troy had jumped from 10th to first in August following the July ownership flip. The Troy Foods predecessor, Buck's, had finished second in February 2018.

□ Grand Food Junction in Fort Wayne, ends February in second place statewide, its highest showing since we began tracking retailers in 2013, and the first time a Fort Wayne retailer has ranked so high (the Grand Food Junction third-place January rank had tied the highest for that outlet and the Summit City before February's advance). Grand Food Junction had seemed unable to find much traction for many months, mired among the bottom three for several months, but it jumped all the way up from 10th in October (after five consecutive months in eighth place) to fifth place in November, its best performance since April 2018, and improved on that in December with a fourth, stepping up a rung to third place in January - what had been the strongest performance for this outlet since a third place showing back in April 2017 – before climbing into the second spot in February. Indianapolis retailers had placed first and second on the list since Plainfield Dairyland spoiled the Circle City party in July 2018. Before that, the last time Indianapolis failed to post a win-place showing was back in December 2017.

□ The Hen in Crown Point climbs back on the list after disappearing for three months, The Hen ended October in fourth place, its highest spot on the Hoosier hierarchy since a fifth-place finish in August 2017 (and apparently its best-ever showing) but it dropped off the leader ladder entirely in November, the first time that this outlet had been absent from the top 10 in the second half of 2018, and stayed off the top 10 list in December and again in January. Plainfield Dairyland in Hendricks County, which started the fiscal year with a second-place July finish, dipped to a disappointing ninth statewide starting 2019, and only moved up one notch in February.

□ Maui Stop & Shop in Terre Haute made its first appearance on the list in December since it popped up there in February-March 2018, and remained on the leader ladder for a second straight month, moving up one notch to eighth statewide in January, but it slipped out of the top 10 in February. Also leaving the list was the Bluff Road Shell in Greenwood, which had been on and off the list in the second half of 2018. Southside Marathon LLC of Fort Wayne slipped to 10th place in December after being on the eighth rung in November, and exited the top 10 entirely in January after having registered its first-ever consecutive-month appearances, but it was back on in the last spot during February.

□ Only six different counties are represented among the top 10 retailers, down from seven in January, with four continuing to be found in Marion County. Allen County returns to the multiple outlet list after dropping off in January. After the top three December retailers hailed from Marion County – a phenomenon we had not seen since August – that slipped to the top two spots in January, and first and third in February.

IN Horse Racing & Racinos

● The Indiana Gaming Commission approves Thomas Thanas as trustee in waiting for both Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino and Indiana Grand Racing & Casino. Thanas, an Illinois attorney who served as regional counsel for Harrah's Entertainment where he handled regulatory matters for the company's Midwest casinos, a Notre Dame alum with a law degree from Valparaiso University.

● Indiana Grand Racing & Casino releases details of its 2019 120-day racing season that runs from Tuesday, April 16 through Wednesday, November 6, with total stakes purses topping the $4.3 million mark. The 25th running of the Grade III $500,000-guaranteed Indiana Derby highlights the 35 stakes to be offered during the 2019 season. A total of $4.3 million in stakes will be available during the 2019 meet, the 17th year of racing at Indiana Grand.

□ The 25th running of the Indiana Derby, Indiana's richest horse race, is slated for Saturday, July 13 and will be accompanied by five other stakes races, including the Grade III $200,000-guaranteed Indiana Oaks, which is in its 24th running. In all, purses for Derby evening will top $1.1 million. The state's richest turf race, the 14th running of the $200,000 Caesars Stakes, a Listed event, is set for Wednesday, September 4. That event will be joined by the $200,000 Indiana Grand Stakes on the turf, also a Listed event, boosting purses over the $500,000 mark for the day. In all, more than $1.1 million in turf stakes will be offered in 2019 with nine of the races set for the seven-eighths mile Rod Ratcliff Turf Course at Indiana Grand.

□ Racing will be conducted Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday at 2:15 p.m., with Saturday's first post set for 6:15 p.m. Indiana Grand had represented to the Indiana Horse Racing Commission earlier this year that it had intended to run at 2:05 p.m. on weekdays and 6:05 p.m. on Saturdays, but made the change with Commission consent after considering their space "in the very competitive simulcast landscape," with the Thoroughbred and Quarter Horse associations signing off on the change.

□ A majority of the stakes races will be held on Wednesday afternoons. Two Thursday racing programs have also been added to the schedule, with Thursday, July 18 playing host to the $100,000 Ta Wee Stakes, an open three-year-old filly stakes race on the turf. Racing is also on for Thursday, September 5.

● The track maintenance crew at Indiana Grand Racing & Casino has been working all Winter long on a $700,000-plus track renovation project for the one-mile dirt course, but Jon Schuster, the veteran director of racing at Indiana Grand, sent a missive to key horsemen's groups in mid-February updating the track renovation, and served up some disappointing news: Since the track surface was packed tight in December and left to settle and the materials to knit, the abundant rain and intermittent freezing temperatures rendered the vendor that mills the race track cushion material unable to undertake any of the activity to get the cushion material manufactured. This knocked the March 11 date to have the track ready for training as "wholly unrealistic."

□ While this did not stop horsemen from beginning to move in on March 9, they were left without a track on which to train, and urged to "make alternate plans."

● The Senate Committee on Public Policy took about 10 minutes on March 13 to learn about the provisions of HB 1196, legislation authored by Rep. Bob Cherry (R) of Greenfield, before sending it to the Senate floor on a 9-0 vote after a technical amendment was added by consent. Rep. Cherry was carrying the bill on behalf of the Indiana Horse Racing Commission. The Commission's new in-house legal counsel, Noah Jackson, ran through the bill for lawmakers, explaining that it was "more technical in nature" than being truly substantive. The proposal would require IHRC to adopt confidentiality rules related to personal information; allow discretion when an individual tests positive for a prohibited substance; permit the Commission to lift a suspension after only partial purse repayments by a violator; change security bond requirements; and includes new language to reflect the Commission's organizational structure and job titles. The bill would also change the section on testing "blood, hair, and urine" to testing of a "biological sample" because current language poses a limitation to state-of-the-art technology. Finally, HB 1196 would establish an integrity fund to help fund costs of testing biological samples, because under certain circumstances IHRC is required to reimburse licensees for these tests.

□ The amendment taken by consent strikes the definition of a claiming race so that claiming races will continue to be exempt from sales taxes; changes conflict of interest rules for veterinarians to allow them to treat other breeds; and eliminates language on the panels themselves appointing chairs for each breed development committee, because that conflicted with current law affording that power to the governor.

□ Sen. Phil Boots (R) of Crawfordsville asked questions about biological samples - "What about fecal matter? Is that one of the testing things?" - and was told by Jackson that excrement could be tested along with hair and urine, and the language will be able to change with changing technology employed by laboratories. The testing litany includes "anything that comes off a horse," as phrased by Sen. Boots. Sen. Lonnie Randolph (D) of East Chicago had questions about the bond requirements that centered on his confusion over what constitutes a "meeting" for horse racing purposes. Rep. Cherry managed to bring the discussion around to the need for the change from a bond "to other types of financial capabilities" because the bond is expensive when based upon the overall receipts of a racino, and was largely overkill. IHRC Executive Director Mike Smith also spoke to this, noting that in practice, it has been "several years since a bond was posted, and suggested that it was "easier to give us the flexibility" of looking at assorted alternatives. That led to a quick discussion of insolvency contingencies.

□ HB 1197 made it through Second Reading unamended in the Senate on Monday. With only a quick explanation by Sen. Alting, who emphasized that this was an agency bill that came through the Governor's Office, the measure passed 46-2 without debate. The two nay votes were from Sens. Rick Niemeyer (R) of Lowell and Jack Sandlin (R) of Indianapolis. Sen. Sandlin's district is home to the Winner's Circle Pub, Grille & OTB.

● At its March 12 regular meeting, the Indiana Horse Racing Commission voted unanimously to prohibit the use of albuterol in American Quarter Horses. The ban will be place in time for the 2019 race meet at Indiana Grand Racing & Casino.

□ Albuterol will be a "level of detection" drug, meaning any detected amount of albuterol in the horse will be considered a violation. If a violation (pre- or post-race) is found, the owners or lessees of the horse in question will have to forfeit any purse money and any trophy or award. If winnings are associated with a qualifying race, a positive test renders the horse ineligible for any subsequent related race.

□ Earlier in the year the Commission asked horsemen to voice their opinions on the possible rule change. The Quarter Horse Racing Association of Indiana board expressed its support of the rule change, as did some owners.

IN Bingo and Charitable Gaming

● HB 1517, the rewrite of the state's charity gaming statute, passed the Senate Committee on Public Policy March 13 on a unanimous vote after about 35 minutes of discussion.

□ Rep. Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn, the chair of the House Committee on Public Policy, presented the measure, explaining that he had worked in "partnership" with the Indiana Gaming Commission and stakeholders with the goal of simplifying the statute, promoting a simpler licensing scheme, and clarifying some continuing concerns of operators. As drafted, he believes that HB 1517 would allow for some operators to conduct charity gaming activity who haven't been allowed to do so in the past, and eliminate some burdensome regulations. For the "30,000-foot view," he turned the microphone to IGC Executive Director Sara Gonso Tait and General Counsel Greg Small. Tait explained that the current law was replete with redundancies, "is confusing," and "one of the most difficult things for a regulator is to have a confusing statute." Charity gaming issues generated the most calls to Commission staff of any form of gaming. After "significant outreach" to the charitable gaming community, drafters were able to slash 27% of the original statute. "It is an agency bill," she confirmed, and it was "pretty darn close" to being fiscally neutral. The measure would help charities be more successful, but also ensure that there remained significant regulatory tools to help address bad actors and those who might be "diverting charitable funds from these organizations."

□ Sen. Greg Taylor (D) of Indianapolis expressed concern with pull tabs, punch boards, and tip boards (PPTs) and a "lack of regulation." "The annual licenses you do a great job with," he told Tait, but he understood that "more than half" of charity gaming revenues are not going to charity, "and it's been confirmed by what I've been reviewing. these are some disturbing numbers for me." He cited the $561,000 amount to charity vs. a $20 million gross, adding, that "really disturbs me." Tait explained the one or two percent sent to charitable organizations represented proceeds sent to charities outside the organization conducting the gaming, and conceded that "We should do a better job of presenting" the data, because it could be "deceiving." A large amount may be retained by the organization conducting the gaming activity for charitable purposes, and in many cases "they rely on this money to keep their doors open." Expenditure examples might also include buying a van to take veterans to their doctors' appointments. She said numbers in the Commission's annual report could be misleading, because "it doesn't show how much [they] are keeping for their own good." "As long as the money's going to charity, I don't have a problem," said a satisfied Sen. Taylor.

□ Sen. Lonnie Randolph (D) of East Chicago, the senator with the longest and deepest interest in charity gaming, asked questions about how 15-20 license types had been “streamlined down” to four. Tait told him that it was done by cutting license types. The bill “eliminated a number of licenses, but we didn’t eliminate any activities.” He also had Tait explain how the new annual affiliate license would work. She told him that the measure didn’t change anything except for the name. The annual comprehensive license would allow affiliates to use the parent license. The affiliate can “piggyback” on to the national license or vice versa. He also pressed her on bona fide veterans organizations. The limitation of $2,500 for an exempt events, Tait explained to him, referred to situations in which the prize payout is below $2,500 in net worth., Tait told him that those are matters “that don’t really have a high regulatory concern,” and they are content simply to have notice, with no license required.

□ IGC’s Tait also reviewed the requirements for “good standing” in the eyes of the Indiana Election Commission for political organizations with Sen. Randolph, and also worked through with him the concept that felony convictions could circumvent the felony prohibition at the Commission’s discretion – and “obviously on a case-by-case basis” – with appropriate written documentation, letters of support from organization, an explanation of relevant circumstances, and the like.

□ Sen. Phil Boots (R) of Crawfordsville asked “what constitutes a significant inducement to participate?” – and who defines what this is. Tait responded that the Commission seeks to educate operators on the front end, and “organizations come to us,” although “not a lot of questions” have been asked in the past. This has “Not been an issue that’s been addressed previously,” Tait added.

□ Charitable gaming czar Diane Freeman, who has been overseeing regulation of the activity since it was first authorized under the aegis of the Department of Revenue, explained the breakdown of expenses (payouts and cost of supplies, pull tabs, cards, advertisements, rental costs, and license fees), “profits,” and retention of revenues. At the request of Chair Ron Alting (R) of Lafayette – who wanted to keep things moving – Sen. Taylor agreed to a side bar later with Freeman to get briefed in detail about how things worked.

□ “Organizations use part of net proceeds to support their own lawful purposes,” Freeman explained, while the percentage distributed to charity is the amount given away to other outside charities. “I guess I didn’t think about payouts,” acknowledged Sen. Taylor. “Somebody’s got to win, huh?”

□ Sen. Randolph inquired about how suppliers are selected. He seemed concerned that approval was handled by just one person. Tait assured Sen. Randolph that “we handle” the application and licensure process “through our office.” When Randolph pressed about “who does the selection – who’s ‘we’?”, Tait told him it was “multiple people” – the Charity Gaming Division staff.

□ Sen. Alting was the last senator to speak. He noted that he and Sen. Randolph had concerns about veterans organizations “shrinking.” He said that this measure addressed the matter of “How can we increase that?”

□ The chair of the panel that had reviewed the bill also wanted to look at structuring things to be able to pay employees without opening it to “professional companies that will take more of the money that would have gone to charities,” and confirmed that “It’s not easy.” “We just haven’t mastered yet how to do it,” Sen. Alting said, “but we’ll get there some day.” He believed that the bill met the stated goal: “Make charitable gaming easier and simpler,” and allow these organizations to do good in their respective communities. He added that the bill decreased requirements for full-time employee participation from 90 days to just to 30 days, and operator membership requirements from one year to 60 days . . . even though they were not addressing remuneration.

□ In brief public testimony, representatives of the Disabled American Veterans and Veterans of Foreign Wars supported the changes. DAV noted that there wouldn’t be veterans homes and homes for children without charitable gaming activity, and VFW thanked Tait for having “done a lot for charity gaming just in the last few months,” and that it has “done a lot of good for us already.”

□ The day before the hearing, Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem was added as second sponsor. On Monday, the bill cleared Second Reading in the Senate unamended, and two more senators, Sen. Randolph and Sen. Jon Ford (R) of Terre Haute, were added as cosponsors. On Tuesday, Sen. Jean Leising (R) of Oldenburg, the Mother of Charity Gaming, also signed on as a cosponsor. Sen. Alting presented the bill on Third Reading on Tuesday afternoon, explaining that it was a “user-friendly” agency bill that had remained unamended throughout the process, and saw only two votes against it in the House. Sen. Randolph rose to express his support for it because of what it did for “the American Legions.”

INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT

Big shift means locals need cash

SPEA study lays out sustainability concerns in next economic downturn

The disruptions caused by a structural shift in Indiana local government finances that began in 2004, exacerbated by the fiscal crisis and recession of 2008-09, means that local governments across the state are taking in less revenue than they did before 2007.

A Fiscal History of Indiana Local Government, a new research report for the Indiana Fiscal Policy Institute authored by professors Craig Johnson and Justin Ross, public finance experts at the Indiana University O'Neill School of Public & Environmental Affairs in Bloomington, details the shift, which ended an era of some three decades of "remarkable consistency" in local governmental unit fiscal structure in the early 2000s.

Since then, we have experienced "a fundamental transformation" of Indiana's intergovernmental fiscal system.

The SPEA researchers find that the structural shift in "real own-source local government revenue" began in 2004, and local income tax revenues took off and did not stop increasing until 2010, when they were adversely impacted by the recession. Property tax revenues had exhibited "unprecedented growth from 2004-05, but have since showed a dramatic total decline," consistent with the constitutional property tax caps.

"Every other state has largely rebounded from the Great Recession in terms of their local government," Prof. Ross tells Brock Turner of Indiana Public Media. "Indiana has not because of the property tax caps."

These changes in the fiscal input mix – the growth of the local income tax, subject to its "inherent volatility, coupled with the decline and increasing instability of the property tax from both economic and policy factors, have resulted in a less stable revenue structure for local governments."

They believe that "On the revenue side much of the recent changes are fully consistent with the foundation laid by the Bowen tax package in 1973 – property tax relief; an expansion of local government authority to generate revenue from local income taxes; and an increase in the state sales tax to fund local services, programs and provide additional property tax relief."

Unfortunately, they find that "Indiana local income tax and property tax revenues have yet to recover from steep declines following the Great Recession. Both taxes have declined sharply since 2010. In 2015 real property taxes in Indiana are back to where they were in 1996-97, while real 2015 income tax revenues have returned to their 2007 level."

The real-life impact? "Given the real decrease in local income and property tax revenue, local public expenditures in Indiana are now being funded from a substantially smaller pie of local own-source revenues."

Johnson and Ross see a total dichotomy in evaluating the past four decades, suggesting that "The last 40 years of local government expenditures should be viewed as 'before and after 2009.' Since 2009, Indiana has undertaken an exceptional decline in local public expenditures."

Supremes to face Hill

Disciplinary Commission seeks sanctions

The Indiana Supreme Court Disciplinary Commission files a formal 10-page complaint against Attorney General Curtis Hill (R), No. 19S-DI-00156, with the Indiana Supreme Court.

The nine member Disciplinary Commission – which includes among its members some well-respected establishment Republicans – reviews sine die party events, and reports for the General Assembly and by the Office of the Inspector General, and special prosecutor, and concludes Hill "committed criminal acts, each of which reflects adversely on his honesty, trustworthiness or fitness as a lawyer" in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct for Attorneys, and engaged in "conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice" as well as "offensive personality" in violation of the Rules.

Aggravating factors include his position of trust and "heightened duty of ethical conduct"; "substantial experience" in practice; denial of responsibility; lack of remorse; implying the victims falsified their accounts; "actual or potential injury to his victims and their future careers by forcing them to choose between reporting his conduct or remaining silent"; and having "acted with the selfish motive to arouse his sexual desires."

Cont. under "IN State Circles," p. 4 . . .

The SPEA research team notes that for four consecutive years Indiana's local governments cut back their collective expenditures – in real terms – by an average of more than 3.5% each year. The SPEA team attributes a significant chunk of the decrease in Indiana county expenditures to the change in welfare administration functions in HEA 1001-2008.

Johnson and Ross also point out that the increase in the state sales tax rate rose from 2.0% in 1973 to the current 7.0% rate to allow the state to assume certain local general government and school corporation funding responsibilities – and to provide property tax relief.

They also believe that “A portion of the reduction in local public expenditures from 2007-2012 likely comes from local government consolidation ... where on net 520 independent local governmental units have been shed. Other reductions in spending are related to the trend in Indiana local government employment, the duo writes. “The number of local government employees in Indiana reached its peak in 2008, slightly declined in 2009 and substantively declined through 2012. Nationwide local government employment has begun to rebound while remaining basically flat within Indiana. About 70 percent of the net employment losses in Indiana local government employment have come from education services.”

The researchers conclude that “Indiana's local fiscal structure has demonstrated sustainability partially because the loss of own source revenues has been made up by increases in state revenues, but mostly because of the substantial reduction in local public expenditures.”

While the income declines have been well-documented, there has been far less attention paid since the revolution on the changes on the spending side.

Your key takeaway: “[T]he threat to fiscal sustainability under the property tax cap system is clear even if the mechanisms are convoluted. The purpose of a budget process should be to ensure that appropriated monies have an accompanying financial source. Typically, if revenues are to decrease by a dollar, then the budget process should assist in identifying a one-dollar reduction on the expenditure side. Alternatively, for a newly planned dollar of expenditure, the budget process should identify the funding source of that dollar. So long as a substantive portion of taxpayers have properties that are in excess of the 1-2-3 property tax caps, the budget will always have a shortfall that will require reworking after it is adopted and ‘finalized.’”

Johnson and Ross serve up their antidote . . . and we don't think lawmakers and state officials will be too happy with the big ask.

“We find that the sustainability of local government finances in Indiana should be strengthened in preparation for the next economic downturn. The revenue system is now more vulnerable to the economic cycle, both in terms of lower levels of local, own-source revenues, and is significantly exposed to an elastic state government tax base heavily dependent on sales and income tax revenue. Cutting and transferring local public expenditures has enabled Indiana local governments to keep pace with declining own-source revenues. But it leaves local governments vulnerable to the inevitable revenue losses during the next economic downturn.”

They conclude, “While the authority to levy an excise surtax for transportation funding is helpful, it does not provide the local own-source revenues needed to fulfill the general funding gaps inherent in the structural deficits of Indiana's local governments.”

IN Politics

State Office Races . . .

- With Tuesday's Senate passage of HB 1005, when it is signed by the Governor, the Superintendent of Public Instruction will no longer be an elective position as has been the case since 1852. The last of the elected superintendents, Dr. Jennifer McCormick (R), said after the Senate approved the bill on a 29-19 vote, “The 2020 gubernatorial race will deserve greater attention as our students' futures are dependent upon it. Education impacts all of us. Our children, educators, and school communities deserve a strong, representative voice.”

IN the Presidential Race . . .

- New Morning Consult polling numbers show that since the new administration assumed office in January 2017, the President's net approval in Indiana has decreased by 18 percentage points. The February 1, 2019 net presidential approval stands at +4 percentage points, at 50% to 46%, the same as on January 1, and effectively unchanged from 49% to 46% one year earlier.

- Don't underestimate the extent and importance of a Rhodes Scholar network that has quickly popped up domestically and internationally to support South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) in his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination. These current and former Rhodes Scholars are coming together to raise money and work on policy issues for, and spread the word in important circles about, Mayor Pete.

- Populist Pete? Back in the day (2010) when a 28-year-old guy named Pete Buttigieg (D) was running for state treasurer, no one knew how to pronounce his name (some south of U.S. 50 even pronounced “Pete” as if it had two syllables), and few media outlets even bothered to cover his quixotic challenge to the re-election of then-state treasurer Richard Mourdock (R). Those that did focused largely on Buttigieg's strong objections to Mourdock's actions in the Chrysler bankruptcy – using teacher and state police pension funds to purchase e(old) Chrysler bonds in 2008 after they were downgraded to junk status and his objections to the Chrysler bankruptcy, which put Mourdock at odds with the Bush and Obama administrations and the Indiana Republican establishment.

□ But almost a decade ago, your favorite newsletter was one of the few outlets to cover the state treasurer race in some detail, and looking back at our 2010 race coverage, we noticed a populist streak of sorts from Team Pete. He said that his campaign – which ended up raising about $305,000; the 2014 and 2018 Democratic nominees for the office (both former state lawmakers) barely topped a combined total of $100,000 in contributions – would accept no contributions from banks and bank PACs, and would cap the amount individuals employed in the banking industry can donate at $2,400, using federal limits as a model. If elected, Buttigieg pledged, “he would also pursue legislation to bar political contributions by banks to anyone running for the office, and to implement contribution limits for individuals who work at banks.”

□ But the pre-mayoral Pete also was thinking in positive policy terms, “advocating that financial institutions doing business with the Treasurer’s Office become more active community lenders.”

● The Washington Post writes that South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) plans to double his campaign staff from 20 to 40 “in a matter of days,” and his team is narrowing down options for a bigger South Bend headquarters – perhaps an entire floor of a downtown high rise.”

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) revealed in a March 16 email to supporters that the campaign not only hit the 65,000-donor threshold set by the Democratic National Committee for June debate participation, but it had topped the 75,000-mark. He reveals that “98% of all the donations we received were under $200, and 66% of the total amount raised came in through contributions under $200.”

IN Political News . . .

● The Libertarian Party of Indiana annual convention was slated for Fort Wayne March 22-23.

● The Vectren Corporation Employees Federal PAC makes a mid-February contribution of $5,000 to the Indiana Republican State Committee, Inc.

● The Eli Lilly and Company Political Action Committee makes three February contributions of $15,000 each to the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee; the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee; and the National Republican Senatorial Committee.

● The Indiana Democratic Party sends an email blast to supporters Tuesday just before tipoff of the Indiana University NIT basketball game with an interesting theme largely overlooked since it was part of the party’s 2018 platform: “It is time we join a majority of the country, and legalize medicinal cannabis. Around the nation, 33 states have passed a measure to allow medicinal cannabis – including our neighbors in Michigan, Illinois, and Ohio. It’s Indiana’s turn.” The email notes the “overwhelming number of Hoosiers support legalizing medical marijuana,” and adds that “The benefits are clear for Hoosiers suffering from epileptic (sic) seizures to relieving stress and pain.” The state party asks Hoosiers to “Sign our petition (sic) if you believe Indiana should legalize medical marijuana.”

● Cass County Democratic Party Chair Paul Ulerick resigns after almost eight years in the role.

● Almost 10½ years ago – late in the 2008 presidential campaign – your favorite newsletter served up an exclusive little nugget involving two giants of Democratic politics who were back in the news this month.

□ “Former U.S. Sen. Birch Bayh (D) tells us that he believes he was the only then-incumbent member of the U.S. Senate to campaign for Joe Biden (D-DE) in Delaware in Biden’s surprise successful challenge campaign in 1972. Little did he suspect that Sen. Biden would edge out another Bayh for the vice presidential nod (and what it would mean) 36 years later.” And after he told us that, he really did head for the Noblesville Dairy Queen, two blocks away from where we met.

□ Birch Bayh’s passing also marked the end of another era. As we told you a few years ago, he was the last surviving senator to have served in that body during the Kennedy Administration.

IN Federal Circles . . .

● The Lugar Center, led by former U.S. Sen. Richard Lugar (R), and the McCourt School of Public Policy at Georgetown University released their new Bipartisan Index rankings of members of Congress for the 115th Congress (2017-2018). The non-partisan tool measures the degree to which senators and representatives work across party lines. “Despite serious failures of governance during the 115th Congress, including two government shutdowns, Congress experienced an undercurrent of bipartisan cooperation surrounding bill introduction,” reports Sen. Lugar. The Bipartisan Index measures the frequency with which a member co-sponsors a bill introduced by the opposite party and the frequency with which a member’s own bills attract co-sponsors from the opposite party. Representatives sponsoring fewer than two qualifying bills are excluded, which meant that U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D) and two other House members

Bipartisan Rank by Session

115th	114th
41	24	Susan Brooks (R)
89	148	Jackie Walorski (R)
150	309	Luke Messer (R)
180	190	Larry Bucshon (R)
284	N/A	Trey Hollingsworth (R)
343	N/A	Jim Banks (R)
352	278	Todd Rokita (R)
364	307	André Carson (D)
N/A	121	Pete Visclosky (D)
N/A	424	Marlin Stutzman (R)
4	2	Joe Donnelly (D)
7	N/A	Todd Young (R)

□ Indiana was home to the most bipartisan Senate delegation during the 115th Congress, with then-U.S. Sen. Joe Donnelly (D) being the fourth-most bipartisan senator and the most bipartisan Democrat for the second consecutive session. U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) was seventh in bipartisanship, and sixth among Republicans, giving Indians two senators among the most bipartisan 10. Only one other Senate delegation (the two Republicans from Iowa) landed a pair in the top 20.

□ The top two spots in Indiana's delegation didn't change from the 114th Congress to the 115th session, with U.S. Reps. Susan Brooks (R) and Jackie Walorski (R) leading the way. With the retirement of Marlin Stutzman (R), U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) becomes the most partisan lawmaker among the Hoosier delegation. U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) remains most consistent in rank between sessions.

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) teamed up with U.S. Sens. Ed Markey (D-MA), Jeff Merkley (D-OR), and Dick Durbin (D-IL) last week on a bipartisan letter to U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and U.S. Secretary of the Treasury Steve Mnuchin seeking clarification of the Trump Administration's policy on sanctioning the perpetrators of atrocities committed against the Rohingya people during the 2017 security operations by Burmese military forces. Acknowledging the decision by the Administration to already sanction five officials, the senators point out that additional targeted sanctions against the senior-most ranks of the Burmese military – including Commander-in-Chief Min Aung Hlaing – is needed to send a strong message to Burmese officials most responsible for the violence. “We believe that it is important for the United States to signal its intolerance for behavior that contravenes fundamental human rights,” write the senators. “In particular, the designation of Min Aung Hlaing under the Global Magnitsky program would carry special significance given his role as the head of the Burmese armed forces. The body of evidence establishing Min Aung Hlaing's complicity in the human rights abuses against the Rohingya plainly warrants designations under both the Global Magnitsky Act and President Trump's sanctions order.”

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) raised eyebrows on Thursday when he told the Southwest Indiana Chamber in Evansville that the traditional 20% local match for federal aid on road projects is untenable, according to the Evansville Courier & Press. “We've never been in a worse shape federally to even continue the current road funding plan of 80-20,” Sen. Braun said, contending “All we're doing is lying to the public and putting more debt on future generations if we try to do infrastructure now without showing real reform on bringing our deficits down.”

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) joined Jake Tapper on CNN's State of the Union on St. Patrick's Day and he told the host that “The President condemned white nationalism and the actions that happened in New Zealand. There's no question about it. None of us can be emphatic ... enough in our condemnation of hate in all of its forms. That's why we have to take a step back and take a minute to talk about what we can do about it. And I'll give you an example: When white nationalism reared its ugly head in the House of Representatives, the Republican leader, Kevin McCarthy, stripped Steve King of his committee assignments. Today, as we sit here, Rep. Omar still sits on the Foreign Affairs committee after her anti-Semitic comments because Democrats and Nancy Pelosi refuse to do anything about it.”

□ Rep. Banks' office is recognized for a second consecutive year by the Congressional Management Foundation as a finalist for the Democracy Awards, an honors program recognizing non-legislative achievement in operations and constituent service by congressional offices. Banks' office is recognized for “excellence in Transparency, Accountability, and Innovation,” a category honoring offices employing unique or innovative methods to continuously enhance constituent interactions, and provide clear and relevant information on their work and performance, as well as publicly acknowledge related metrics. Twelve House and Senate offices were honored as finalists in three categories: (1) Constituent Service; (2) Transparency, Accountability, and Innovation; and (3) “Life in Congress” – Workplace Environment. The Banks office was a finalist for the Democracy Award for Constituent Service last year. According to CMF, “The office's training program sets them apart by including interns into their constituent services program over the course of the year, both in the Washington and district offices. They've developed a comprehensive manual for new hires and interns to use as a reference point, to provide training opportunities for them throughout their service with the office. The management team has established a process to supervise how actions are handled and processed, enabling them to review opportunities for improvement with new and old staff alike and address sub-optimal practices. By standardizing their input through customizing their CRM (customer relations management), they have developed a process which is more intuitive for interns and staff and, as a result, has reduced the likelihood they will forget to incorporate key information regardless of the type of constituent services operation they need to utilize.”

● U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D) was pleased with the Federal Transit Administration's positive rating for the South Shore Rail Line West Lake project. “This action taken by the Federal Transit Administration is outstanding news for the Northwest Indiana economy and would not have happened without the steadfast support of Governor Holcomb, Sen. Young and our federal representatives, our state representatives,” says Rep. Visclosky, who pledges to support full funding for the Capital Investment Grant Program and the Double Track project.

Don Lundberg of Lundberg Legal, counsel to Hill in this personal matter, issued a statement in response to the Disciplinary Commission complaint. “This matter has been investigated three times,” say Lundberg, chief legal counsel and executive director of the Disciplinary Commission for 18 years. “There was an investigation undertaken by the General Assembly, another by the inspector general and, finally, one by the special prosecutor. And after having reviewed all the information, all three reached the same conclusion: no further action was warranted. The Attorney General remains focused on serving the people of Indiana. This matter will be addressed through the proper process outlined for disciplinary complaints in the State of Indiana and we are confident it will conclude in a manner consistent with the results of the prior investigations.”

Note how Lundberg careful phrases his words. Parse his statement, however, and while each of the investigations may have found that “no further action was warranted,” the Taft Law investigation commissioned by legislative leaders suggested that because “AG Hill was a third party” with no supervisory authority, his conduct had no impact on the legislative workplace, and leaders had no legal obligation to report his conduct to disciplinary officials. The leaders also determined that they had no formal authority beyond impeachment. The OIG investigation involved a special prosecutor who simply decided that he did not think a conviction would result, regardless of whether there was evidence to support a charge. A separate OIG report laid out details that were not in the special prosecutor's explanation of why he declined to prosecute, and concluded, "The public and others will judge whether the evidence in this case disqualifies Hill from holding elected office in the future. This investigation is now closed." Each entity declined further pursuit, but all took other action, such as solons enacting protocols addressing harassment; the special prosecutor saying his decision was based upon likelihood of conviction; and OIG deferring to the public "and others." Presumably that referred to the legislature - which drew up rules - and the Disciplinary Commission, which did act.

We told you exclusively in February the AG's Office retained Lundberg under a contract that began December 26, and runs through June 25, 2020 (a contract amendment serves up a pair of different end dates). Under that arrangement, Lundberg will be paid $35,000 to "provide services on issues involving conflicts of interest and compliance with ethical professional obligations," a role in which he will "assist the OAG ethics officer." Niki Kelly reports in the Fort Wayne Journal Gazette Tuesday that Lundberg explained, "My representation on specific matters is confidential and privileged. I have not been paid with state funds to represent the attorney general in connection with the Disciplinary Commission matter."

While Lundberg had a 30-day period for a response, he effectively fired back immediately at the Commission, using a motion to decline appointment of a hearing officer or hearing panel as the functional equivalent of a motion for dismissal on Wednesday . . . and if the Commission didn't think Hill had expressed remorse before, then they - and the Supreme Court - will certainly not believe he has any such intent to do so now.

In a filing bound to infuriate non-lawyers, Lundberg informs that Court that "The material facts will be contested should this proceeding go forward." He reviews what he says should be the standard by which his client should be judged under the Rules of Professional Conduct: criminal conduct that reflects adversely on a lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness or fitness as a lawyer in other respects. He claims that the complaint fails to "aver how the alleged criminal conduct reflects adversely on honesty or trustworthiness. Neither battery nor sexual battery is a crime of dishonesty or breach of trust." Nor, Lundberg claims, does the complaint "aver how the alleged criminal conduct reflects adversely on fitness to practice law."

"In fact," the filing asserts, "the alleged criminal conduct does not reflect adversely on fitness to practice law." Lundberg notes that the "disputed facts" were said to take place at "a social event in the late evening and early morning hours "during a social occasion that was not a government or legal profession function at AJ's Lounge," far from the seat of government.

The Lundberg filing also reviews the findings of the special prosecutor and tells the court to his knowledge, "it is unprecedented for the Disciplinary Commission to charge a lawyer [with a Rules violation] a prosecutor with jurisdiction over making a criminal charging decision concluded that the elements of a crime were not present to warrant filing a criminal charge."

He alleges further that "It violates Indiana's public policy and respect for the office of prosecutor for the Disciplinary Commission, an agency not charged with primary enforcement of the criminal laws, to charge a lawyer with engaging in criminal conduct not directly related to the practice of law, after a duly authorized prosecutor concludes there was no basis for such a charge." He also notes that an Inspector General investigation "determined that Hill did not engage in conduct that fell within any statutes or rules falling within the Inspector General's purview."

The Hill response also draws the attention of the Supremes to the fact that the individuals who alleged they were the subjects of his unwelcome attention are represented by private counsel, and are in the process of seeking money damages against the State, the Office of the Indiana Attorney General, and Hill himself. Lundberg tells the justices that "It is imprudent for the Disciplinary Commission to use the power of a lawyer discipline proceeding to seek an adjudication of factual and legal issues that may benefit the private interests of putative litigants against the State of Indiana." He notes that none of these individuals "sought the Disciplinary Commission's intervention in this matter. In fact, the Commission determined to investigate this matter at the request of Andrew Straw, a suspended Indiana lawyer who was professionally disciplined by this Court"

Lundberg also writes that while the complaint alleges that Hill violated the Rules by engaging in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice, it fails to allege "how the administration of justice was prejudiced by Hill's alleged actions." Lundberg asserts that "The administration of justice is not implicated by personal conduct of a lawyer who happens to be a public office holder, especially when a duly authorized special prosecutor has determined there was no basis to charge criminal conduct."

According to the response, the professional conduct standard in question, as applied in this case, violates Hill's due process rights because it is void for vagueness for failing to adequately put him on notice of conduct that would violate that rule and open him up to professional discipline.

He also knocks down the contention "that Hill violated the Indiana Oath of Attorneys, by engaging in offensive personality."

"The Indiana Oath of Attorneys is a promise made at the time of bar admission and not, in contrast to the Rules of Professional Conduct, an on-going professional duty," Lundberg contends. "The Indiana Rules of Professional Conduct do not contain a requirement that lawyers abstain from the undefined notion of offensive personality. Use of the lawyer discipline process to punish a lawyer for allegedly engaging in offensive personality violates due process inasmuch as it applies a standard in a manner that is void for vagueness. In addition to failing to put lawyers on fair notice of conduct that falls within that standard, the offensive personality standard leaves too much power in the hands of a judicial branch regulator to punish lawyers, in this case a lawyer in a separate and co-equal branch of government, for illegitimate reasons, including personal dislike or subjective disapproval."

Lundberg's missive explains that "This is an extraordinary case in that it represents an agency of Indiana's judicial branch seeking to professionally discipline a statewide elected official of a separate and coequal branch of government. This is not unprecedented in Indiana, but it is rare. It is especially rare for an agency of the judicial branch of government to bolster the case for judicial branch intervention because of a claim that the contested conduct at issue 'does incalculable harm to the public perception of the Attorney General's office and all the state agencies it represents.'" Indeed, Lundberg contends, "There are layers of accountability mechanisms in the circumstances, including, in this instance, referral to a special prosecutor, referral to the Office of Inspector General, and investigation at the behest of the leadership of the legislative branch, all of which concluded that there was no basis for action against Hill. There are other layers of accountability that will likely or potentially be available, including civil damages litigation brought by the four individuals mentioned in the Complaint, and political accountability should Hill determine to run for re-election or for election to other public office. The lawyer discipline system is the least suited accountability mechanism to address alleged personal conduct that occurred in a non-governmental setting at a non-governmental function, unrelated to the practice of law."

Finally, according to the response, "Whether the alleged conduct, found by a special prosecutor to not warrant a criminal charge, does 'incalculable harm to the public perception of the Attorney General's office' is a political question on which Indiana voters should be heard and not one that should be decided by another branch of government."

So what can the Supremes do with the complaint against Hill? Basically anything they darn well please . . . and on their own timetable.

Even before the introduction of the fascinating general constitutional questions about vagueness and the actual application of the Rules and Oath to this type of conduct (though lawyers are regularly disciplined for such offenses as OWI, and are subject to the regular operation of the law for that conduct as would be with any non-lawyer), this was effectively a matter of first impression for the Supreme Court (at least with respect to statewide elective officials, and certainly the one official whose qualifications under I.C. § 4-1-6-3 require the occupant to be duly licensed to practice law in Indiana).

This case and set of circumstances will provide the justices a platform by which to set harassment standards . . . and/or make a bold statement.

The Court can decide that the conduct merits no punishment, or it can impose discipline ranging from an admonishment in the form of a private or public reprimand up to law license suspension or disbarment.

A suspension – however brief – if imposed during his term of office, would almost certainly result in Hill having to leave, given that a condition of holding the office is the ability to practice law in Indiana. House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) said Thursday "My reading of the statute ... is that a qualification – not an election qualification, but a service qualification – is a valid license to practice law in Indiana, which the Attorney General would not have if it was suspended, so we'll seek some guidance if that should be the case, to be sure that we're following appropriately the law."

Should the AG hold out in the face of such an order, removal proceedings via a writ of mandamus would probably have to be instituted. There are also questions about whether a suspension would require his literal withdrawal from every case being "prosecuted" by the State, because he is technically the person representing the State; others in the office only sign on effectively as representing him on behalf of the State.

The Court is well aware of such contingencies, as well as his ability to prolong proceedings by pursuing all of his appeals, including, we are told, a rehearing and then the option of asking the Supreme Court of the United States to overturn an Indiana Supreme Court action.

As a result, and recognizing the timetable (another month for his response, and perhaps another month or so for deliberation and a ruling and even more time for an appeal) that could mean the AG would only have 18 months or a year left on his term, the Court, if inclined to issue a suspension, could move it to a future point, such as the day after his term is set to expire in January 2021. The Court often allows suspended attorneys a period in hitch to tie up their affairs and outstanding cases without unduly prejudicing the sanctioned attorney's clients, and this could be an equivalent for a public official, while, at least in theory, ensuring that he would be ineligible to run for a second term, and also punishing him, but not the State, for his personal conduct.

Costs of the proceedings will almost inevitably be assessed, even if the punishment ultimately amounts to just a slap on the wrist.

While it's not important that the justices now have all been appointed by Republican governors, as former Chief Justice Randall Shepard once noted, they do not live their lives in isolation, and hear what people are talking about in the grocery store – and in the halls of the State House. They understand the perceptions involved in the #MeToo era, and the reality of responsibility that should be exercised by those in power. They also understand the law, and how each of the investigative entities was limited by its respective mandate, and that such behavior might fall into the category of capable of repetition, yet evading review.

The standards under which the justices evaluate and rule upon disciplinary complaints are not quite as cut-and-dried as statutory or case law (and there are many situations – flagrant and otherwise – where one justice will dissent, holding out for stiffer punishment), and justices are particularly aware of the need to promote public confidence in the law and those who administer it and assist in or contribute to its administration.

Anyone who says they can tell you how this one will turn out doesn't know what they're talking about. There are several justices who have not been on the court long enough for anyone to have developed a feel for how they might approach sanctions, and there really hasn't been a justice or two who has seemed to stand out from his or her colleagues on legal discipline cases as there had been on previous iterations of the Court over the past generation+ (and we'll name-check former Chief Justice Brent Dickson here as one of those we're thinking about).

And, as we noted, this is effectively a matter of first impression on assorted grounds, and there may also be a desire by Chief Justice Loretta Rush for the Court to remain unanimous on such an important case, and simply for that reason, there could be compromise on a lesser punishment to generate a per curiam ruling.

The only certainty: However the justices ultimately rule on the disciplinary complaint, it will be picked apart by those unsatisfied with it, just as the leaders of the General Assembly, the Inspector General, and the special prosecutor learned.

- Both Senate Committee on Appropriations Chair Ryan Mishler (R) and Senate Committee on Tax and Fiscal Policy Chair Travis Holdman (R) have expressed skepticism over the need to add the $286 million annually requested by the Governor and approved by the House for the Department of Child Services.

□ Sen. Mishler cites an encouraging decline in caseloads and improved retention rates for case managers . . . while Sen. Holdman refers to solvable DCS-internal cultural issues and potential changes to removing a child from a home and involving the courts as a first reaction.

- Fifth Third Bancorp beats out four competitors for the banking services and remote cash and remote deposit management services contract for the Bureau of Motor Vehicles, a four-year deal worth an estimated $1,110,213. Other bidders were Huntington Bancshares Incorporated; JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A.; KeyBank, N.A.; and PNC Bank, N.A.

- The justices of the Supreme Court of the United States slate their the next conference for Friday, March 22, and the two big Indiana cases we have been telling you about for a what seems like an eternity now will be on the conference agenda yet again as the justices determine whether to add the matters to their docket.

□ For the seventh time the Court has put off a decision on whether to review the State of Indiana's October petition for a writ of certiorari in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-483. This is the challenge to provisions of HEA 1337-2016 that would (1) require health-care facilities to dispose of fetal remains in the same manner as other human remains, i.e., by burial or cremation; and (2) prohibit abortions motivated solely by the race, sex, or disability of the fetus and require physicians to inform patients of the prohibition.

□ Could the Supremes be waiting for the complete filings in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-1019, the ultrasound informed consent case to combine the matters? Or perhaps even holding out for a PPINK appeal of the just-decided Seventh Circuit ruling in the fetal tissue research case arising from the same law?

□ A different theory is advanced by Marilyn Opendahl in the Indiana Lawyer. She writes that "Linda Greenhouse, New York Times columnist and lecturer at Yale Law School, believes the multiple relistings indicate the Supreme Court is not going to take the case, but she suspects someone is writing a dissent. Her guess is that '(Justice Samuel) Alito and his friends are writing a screed' about why the court needs to accept this case to overturn the Roe v. Wade, which legalized abortion in 1973. 'We're going to see some kind of writing,' Greenhouse said."

□ Another Indiana case will also be relisted – for an 11th time now – on March 15 after having been rescheduled twice as well. Newton v. Indiana, No. 17-1511, involves the 1995 decision of a juvenile offender who, in exchange for the State's agreement to no longer seek the death penalty, pleaded guilty to a sentence of life without the possibility of parole for a murder he committed at age 17 with two older co-defendants. This case appears to have now lingered on the SCOTUS conference agenda more times than any other case up for consideration.

- This month, a panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in New Orleans heard oral arguments on whether the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) is unconstitutional. The 41-year old law governs jurisdiction over the removal of Native American children from their families, and was enacted to help remedy longstanding policies that had separated Native American children from their communities. The law affords initial preference to Native American families in placement of Native American children in foster care or for adoption, and the Native American community considers it to be essential to preserving the culture of their respective tribes.

□ Why should you care about it? Because Indiana has joined Louisiana and Texas in challenging its constitutionality, alleging that the law is an unconstitutional race-based statute, and that it fails to account for any emotional bonds that may have been forged between Native American children and their caregivers. Indiana and the other two states also claim that ICWA infringes upon the rights of states to oversee child welfare in their own jurisdictions. In October, a U.S. District Court judge in Texas struck down the law as unconstitutional, holding that it was based upon race and violates the Equal Protection Clause. Indiana and the other two states are defending that ruling against an appeal to the Fifth Circuit. After the oral argument, the Texas Attorney General's Office issued a statement reiterating that ICWA was unconstitutional because it "requires that a child's 'best interest' – normally the governing inquiry in child welfare proceedings – be subordinated to racial considerations."

□ The Indiana, Texas, and Louisiana position is being opposed by more than 20 other states; 325 tribes; almost 60 tribal organizations; 30 child welfare advocacy groups; a bipartisan group of U.S. House and Senate members; and the U.S. Department of Interior's Bureau of Indian Affairs.

- A motion filed by an individual in federal bankruptcy court in Colorado seeks to discharge a debt he owes to the Department of Natural Resources and Natural Resources Commission under a 2010 settlement agreement he entered into with the Commission that obligated him to "plug and abandon" some oil and gas wells in Indiana. The plaintiff seems to believe that a Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition granted in 2011 relieves him from responsibility for paying a 2014 order issued by the Spencer County Circuit Court in which DNR seeks to enforce the 2010 deal.

- The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission denies a complaint lodged by the Coalition of Midwest Power Producers, Inc. against the Carmel-based Midcontinent Independent System Operator, Inc. (MISO) alleging that MISO violated its tariff by not requiring all capacity resources to be deliverable up to their installed capacity levels. FERC determined that MISO reasonably implemented its tariff provisions related to capacity resources finding that MISO had consistently tapped unforced capacity values for resource adequacy and that the practice did not jeopardize system reliability. FERC noted MISO ensures that planning resources are feasible, and that it makes needed adjustments through an iterative process, which reasonably mitigates risk.

- As we told you to expect, the Indiana American Water Company (IAWC), the Office of Utility Consumer Counselor, and all additional parties (the Citizens Action Coalition of Indiana and the Indiana Community Action Association; industrial customers Arcelor Mittal USA, Fiat Chrysler Automobiles, and Praxair, Inc.; the municipal governments of Crown Point, Schererville, and Whiteland; and Sullivan-Vigo Water Corporation) in the utility's pending rate case have reached a comprehensive settlement agreement.

□ The agreement was filed Monday with the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission, which may accept, deny, or modify the proposed deal - which bridged a huge gap between IAWC's initial substantial rate hike request and OUCC's push for an actual rate cut. An IURC hearing is set for April 11. "Between new evidence presented during the case and the OUCC's strong support for utility investments in aging, necessary infrastructure, we have come to a mutual resolution," says Utility Consumer Counselor Bill Fine. He explains that the pact "provides a reasonable balance between investments needed for safe, dependable water and fair rates to cover the costs." The agreement's terms include:

□ An overall revenue increase of $17.5 million annually, to be implemented in two phases. IAWC had requested $38.8 million.

□ Resolution of all issues pertaining to the federal Tax Cuts and Jobs Act of 2017, and sharing of federal tax relief with customers.

□ Approval of a low-income pilot program to be funded with an even balance of ratepayer and shareholder dollars. The pilot program will focus on customers in Gary, Muncie, and Terre Haute.

- In the midst of the major legislative blitz over the Indiana Convention Center expansion and new Indianapolis downtown hotels attached to the project, the downtown convention flagship J.W. Marriott Hotel is back in the Indiana Tax Court with yet another property tax appeal. Convention Headquarters Hotels LLC v. Marion Co. Assessor, No. 19T-TA- 00006, sees the J.W. (as CCH) challenge its 2010 assessment, claiming it violates the Constitution's: (1) Equal Protection Clause; (2) Equal Privileges and Immunities Clause; and, (3) Due Process Clause. The hotelier also alleges that it violates 42 U.S.C. § 1983, the provision of the Civil Rights Act of 1871 that that allows people to sue the government for civil rights violations; the Property Taxation Clause of the Indiana Constitution; and the requirement that land be assessed at its market value-in-use.

- Just after we told you about the national attention directed to the Bureau of Motor Vehicles non-binary option for gender identity on driver's licenses and identification cards - and marveled at the lack of legislative pushback, a Third House meeting in Warsaw on March 15 saw two House members address the issue, followed by a move in the House via amendment to put the kibosh on the practice.

□ Rep. Dave Wolkins (R) "brought up the issue during his introduction" at the event, reports the Warsaw Times-Union. "He said it appears the policy was intended to accommodate about 20 Indiana residents who were born with both male and female anatomy. Other than that circumstance, the BMV would require approval from a physician. 'The initial reaction is pretty strong. We have a BMV (bill) coming up and there are about ten people who want to add an amendment on to stop this,' Wolkins said. Wolkins said he opposes the policy because it's part of the agenda pushed by the lesbian, gay, bisexual and trans community Wolkins said the new policy would cause difficulties for police when it comes to searching suspects and where to house inmates in the jail. 'There's a lot of other things that could develop. We just don't really need those problems. That's just a personal opinion,' Wolkins said."

□ Rep. Curt Nisly (R) "said he didn't understand the need for it, especially if somebody has gender re-assignment surgery. 'It's really kind of strange,' Nisly said. Nisly added, 'It's not the problem with the letter, it's the direction where it's going.'"

□ On the next day of floor action, Rep. Matt Hostettler (R) had prepared an amendment to SB 324 that would have required BMV to assign a male or female identifier to an individual's listed gender when they applied for a veterans' placard that would allow a holder of a disabled Hoosier veteran license plate to receive a placard that would offer an exemption from metered parking fees, but was dissuaded from doing so after colleagues questioned its germaneness. "X is no type of identification, so they're effectively leaving that portion unanswered," Rep. Hostettler told Erica Irish of TheStatehouseFile.com. "Indiana code asks for those things to be answered. [The amendment] would make it so there is an answer one way or another 'I'm just trying to find a way that this can be clarified. I believe I understand why people might do that, but how does someone who's looking at an ID card use that to help identify you?'"

□ This was a matter that consumed a lot of oxygen behind the closed doors of the House Republican Caucus through the first half of the week, and it clearly Exasperated House Speaker Brian Bosma (R), who acknowledged its impact on the bias crimes bill - and vice versa.

□ On Wednesday, however, an amendment was attached to SB 182, a BMV mobile credential bill (allowing driver's licenses to be accessed on a mobile phone) authored by Sen. Eddie Melton (D), in the House Committee on Roads and Transportation requiring that "An applicant requesting to change the gender appearing on the applicant's driver's license or permit shall provide to the bureau a certified amended birth certificate showing the applicant's change in gender." Republican legislative leaders seem satisfied with this alternative, but the change would render it more difficult for transgender and non-binary Hoosiers to update gender preferences on their principal form of government-issued IDs.

□ A distressed Sen. Melton said “This was never my intent for this bill, and it was already properly vetted in the Senate for its original purpose. I wanted to create a pathway to help Hoosiers with the convenience of a mobile license, but this amendment will only hurt individuals. This amendment was offered at the last second with little notice for the General Assembly and the public to weigh in. I will fight to prevent this bill from becoming a piece of legislation that devalues someone.”

□ ACLU of Indiana Director of Advocacy and Public Policy Katie Blair immediately responded with a statement suggesting lawmakers “will attempt to amend any bill related to the Bureau of Motor Vehicles in order to add hurdles for trans Hoosiers seeking to update the gender marker on their drivers’ licenses. By eliminating a physician’s statement as a valid document in order to change the gender marker on a driver’s licenses, SB 182 will require transgender individuals to go through the burdensome and costly legal process of changing their birth certificate in order to update their ID. In addition, this language will leave some Indiana residents who were born in a state that does not allow birth certificate updates, completely unable to get accurate identification.

□ Blair labeled this as “a spiteful reaction to the BMV’s new policy that offers a non-binary gender option for drivers’ licenses and identification cards. Accurate identification is necessary in many areas of everyday life, and yet, elected officials want to force gender non-binary people to carry identification that does not accurately identify them. This is not only humiliating, but can also invite discrimination and, in some cases, violence.”

□ There is also concern that adding this issue into the mix may have complicated continuing negotiations on the bias crimes bill, which reportedly had been proceeding toward the proverbial sweet spot as religious leaders keep weighing in for what had been called The List.

● Keep an eye on this: In Kanter v. Barr, No. 18-1478, a case involving a man convicted of mail fraud, Judge Amy Coney Barrett of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit authored a 37-page dissent from the 26-page majority opinion (the majority was comprised of two judges appointed by President Ronald Reagan (R)), in which the former University of Notre Dame law professor wrote that she would hold that felon dispossession laws, which bar convicted felons from being legally able to bear arms, are unconstitutional under the Second Amendment as applied to the mail fraud defendant because he wasn’t shown to “belong[] to a dangerous category or bear [] individual markers of risk.”

□ The Seventh Circuit majority opinion held that “the government has established that the felon dispossession statutes are substantially related to the important governmental objective of keeping firearms away those convicted of serious crimes.” Judge Barrett believes, however, “that power extends only to people who are dangerous. Founding-era legislatures did not strip felons of the right to bear arms simply because of their status as felons.”

□ The Seventh Circuit majority upheld a ruling by the chief judge of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Wisconsin, a Bush 43 appointee.

● In Attorney General Official Opinion 2019-2, an inquiry on behalf of the Johnson County Convention, Visitor, and Tourism Board, the Office of the Attorney General is asked whether the Tourism Board may expend funds from its Convention, Visitor, and Tourism Promotion Fund for the direct benefit of for-profit corporations under any circumstances. More directly, the Tourism Board asks whether it could enter into a contract or otherwise make an award from its Tourism Fund to a for-profit corporation where the Tourism Board determines the for-profit business’ convention, trade show, special event, or recreational activity would bring more visitors or tourists to the county.

□ The brief answer: “Under these statutory provisions, the Tourism Board may not enter into an agreement or contract, award a grant, or otherwise make a direct payment from its Tourism Fund to a for-profit corporation for the purpose of promoting and encouraging conventions, visitors, or tourism in Johnson County. While such awards are reserved to not-for-profit corporations to discharge these functions, the statutory provisions do not restrict such not-for-profit corporations from engaging in separate contractual agreements with for-profit entities in order to satisfy the requirements of the award from the Tourism Fund.”

● Former House majority floor leader Jud McMillin (R) is the attorney for a former Milan clerk-treasurer charged with six felony counts related to violations of the depository rule and official misconduct. Mike Perleberg, news director for Eagle Country 99.3-FM in Lawrenceburg, reports that “The charges were filed nearly five years after [the official] resigned from office in March 2014 as an Indiana State Board of Accounts audit of the town’s finances were conducted. The audit determined many checks to the town were not deposited in a timely manner and little to no records were kept during [his] 13 months in the clerk’s office. The SBOA’s report on the audit was not formally completed until November 21, 2016.”

□ The public (relations) defense that McMillin is mounting is interesting. “All this stuff is really retroactive stuff. It’s not things that at the time anybody was pointing at this guy saying ‘You’re doing a terrible job’ and forcing him out,” McMillin tells Perleberg, adding that what he expects to be found as the case develops is that his client fell short of “ridiculous statutes. I don’t think he stole anything. When he took over that place, it was a complete mess. It may have been an insurmountable task to try and fix then,” McMillin adds. An April 12 hearing on McMillin’s motion to dismiss has been slated before a special judge in Dearborn County Superior Court 1.

● In Berry v. Indiana Superintendent of Public Instruction, No. 1:19-cv-01066-RLY-MJD, the American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana files suit in U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, alleging that Alan Berry, a film maker who was previously employed by the Indiana Department of Education to create documentary film concerning the Indiana Migrant Education Program, had his First Amendment rights abridged by DOE. The lawsuit claims that Berry’s film, was not released during his tenure with DOE and so, following his resignation from that agency, he finalized the project and released it online, as he had with some other videos he had created during his DOE tenure, which had been completed and previously released by DOE itself.

□ “Berry’s actions were met with a cease-and-desist letter from the DOE’s attorney, which demanded that he remove all of these videos from their online platforms under threat of a suit for copyright infringement.” His ACLU attorneys assert that “no such registered copyright exists; but even if it did it could not be enforced against Mr. Berry insofar as Indiana law prohibits the enforcement of a copyright concerning a public record. Rather, Mr. Berry has a First Amendment right to publish and disseminate the aforementioned videos, and he is entitled to a declaratory judgment affirming this right.”

IN the Economy

● The trouble-plagued $2.79 billion Midwest Fertilizer plant proposed for Posey County seems to be on again after Midwest Fertilizer Company settles a dispute with the Internal Revenue Service over the tax-exempt status of $1.259 billion in 2013 refunding bonds. According to Midwest Fertilizer, the IRS Office of Appeals determined that the bond holders are “not required to include in gross income any interest thereon and no income shall be recognized by such holders as a result thereof. The Bonds remain outstanding.” This dispute arose from an audit which questioned whether the refunding bonds were entitled to retain the tax exemption for which the original bonds qualified for in 2012 under the Midwestern Disaster Area Bonds program. The Heartland Disaster Tax Relief Act of 2008 which authorized the program only allowed the subject bonds to be issued through the end of 2012.

□ Long-time readers will recall the checkered history of this mega-project. The Daniels Administration offered an incentive package of more than $3.5 million for the project in 2012 that also included access to tax-exempt financing through the allocation of a portion of the state’s volume cap under the Midwest Disaster Area Bonds program. But as 2012 was winding down, the U.S. Department of Defense slammed a principal partner in the project, the Fatima Group, over its failure to cooperate with DoD in ensuring its products weren’t being used in IEDs against allied forces in Afghanistan and Pakistan, and the day after he was sworn in as governor, then-Gov. Mike Pence (R) abruptly ended any state support for the Midwest Fertilizer project, later dropping all state involvement in the effort. Posey County then assumed the role of issuer after the Pence Administration Indiana Finance Authority opted out. Posey County ended up refunding or remarketing the bonds six times between July 2013 and November 2015 before Midwest Fertilizer purchased the bonds in the Fall 2016.

□ After Fatima ultimately relented on the military request, the state eased back into the project in a small way, but another delay was forced when the plant location was changed from the Port of Indiana-Mt. Vernon, to a site just north of Sabic Innovative Plastics on Mackey Ferry Road. The dispute with the IRS over the tax-exempt status of the paper halted things again last year.

□ Midwest Fertilizer – which touts an economic impact for its project in the multi-billion dollar range – will now seek to re-engage with its project partners, and likely return to the market to sell the now-confirmed tax-exempt bonds, as well as seek new equity financing and you should also not be surprised if the partners pursue additional debt.

□ The project team had earlier looked at a four- to eight-month gap between a positive IRS ruling and ground-breaking, but we think you should be looking toward the second quarter of 2020 for this project to get off – or into – the ground . . . if, in fact, the financing package continues to prove viable in this economic environment, which has changed considerably since it was first investigated eight years ago.

● The Grain Belt Express project has finally been approved by a unanimous Missouri Public Service Commission on its third try, and after several long court battles in the Show Me State (and a former governor even represented the project in the state’s top court). The key here is that the approval affords developers the right to use eminent domain to construct the line and will not require county-by-county approvals.

□ Green Belt Express will transmit wind power from where it is generated in Kansas across a 780-mile transmission line through Missouri and Illinois before it connects to a Sullivan County terminus from which the power hooks into a grid serving eastern states. One change: Chicago-based Invenergy is purchasing the project from Houston-based Clean Line Energy Partners, and that also should pave the way for Illinois, to reverse last year’s rescission of approval based on Clean Line lacking a physical presence in the state – which meant that it could not qualify as a utility.

● Some $45.4 million worth of Indiana military projects have been identified by the U.S. Department of Defense as potentially being in jeopardy because their funding may be diverted to help fund the southern border wall under the President’s declaration of a national emergency.

□ The projects include:

- Crane Army Ammunition Plant (Railcar Holding Area)
– $16.00 million
- Hulman Regional Airport (Small Arms Range)
– $8.00 million
- Grissom ARB (Add/Alter Aircraft Maintenance Hangar)
– $12.00 million
- Grissom ARB (Aerial Port Facility)
– $9.40 million

□ U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R), a member of the House Committee on Armed Services, assured listeners of WOWO 1190-AM in Fort Wayne Wednesday, “These projects in Indiana are important, and I am confident those projects will get funded,” while U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) tells the Fort Wayne Journal Gazette that the list of projects is “far from final” and “speculative.”

● Vectren Energy Delivery of Indiana – South, a CenterPoint Energy company, earns approval from the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission to build a 50-megawatt universal solar array on approximately 300 acres in eastern Spencer County near Troy, consisting of about 150,000 solar panels.

● AM General of South Bend receives an $89 million order to provide 739 new M1152A1 High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicles (HMMWV) to the U.S. Army National Guard as a part of their modernization initiatives. This is in addition to the 740 new HMMWVs ordered in October 2018.

- Howe Military Academy in LaGrange County will close at the end of the current school year. The private, co-educational, and college preparatory boarding school has been around for 135 years. No word on how many people will lose their jobs, but the school employed more than 40 faculty and as many as 50 staff members.

- Franke Plating Works, a family-owned metal plating firm established in 1930 and serving a worldwide client base in the automotive, aerospace (including NASA), agriculture, defense, and medical industries, plans to invest $1.1 million to upgrade and expand its production facility just east of downtown Fort Wayne, and add more than 15 new jobs by the end of 2022. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offers Franke Plating Works up to $165,000 in performance-based tax credits, and Northeast Indiana Works offered additional incentives . . . Noblesville-based Metal Powder Products (MPP), a global provider of custom-engineered powder metallurgy product solutions for automotive, hydraulic, medical, and mechanical applications, plans to expand its operations in Hamilton County, moving a manufacturing division from Solon, Ohio, to Indiana and expecting to create up to 80 new jobs by 2020. The portfolio company of Mill Point Capital proposes to invest $1.5 million to equip and repurpose its current 60,000 square-foot facility to dedicate more space – 40,000 square feet – to manufacturing, while the remaining 20,000 square feet will be equipped to serve as office space and to support R&D capabilities. In 2018, IEDC offered MPP up to $500,000 in performance tax credits and up to $100,000 in training grants. The City of Noblesville is offering permit assistance in support of the project, and Duke Energy approved additional incentives to offset a portion of the future energy costs . . . Alabama-based Sims Bark Company, a family-owned manufacturing business that wholesales landscape bark products to retailers, plans to invest $10 million in a new facility on a 56.684-acre site in Jackson County adjacent to I-65, expecting to hire at least 20 and as many as 40 local workers. Sims would convert wood byproducts from local sawmill operations into bark mulch and distribute it to big box home-improvement and consumer retail stores in both south central Indiana and western Ohio.

IN Transition

- Indiana's new state climatologist is Beth Hall, who spent the last seven years as director of the Midwestern Regional Climate Center at the University of Illinois, one of six federally funded centers, which served stakeholder climate needs across a nine-state region. She previously served as the New Hampshire state climatologist. Hall earned her bachelor's degree in physical geography with an emphasis in meteorology in 1994 from Indiana University, and her master's degree in atmospheric physics and doctorate in atmospheric sciences from the University of Nevada, Reno.

□ IN-SCO was established in 1956 to study and document the state's climate and act as the official archive of weather observations recorded throughout the state. IN-SCO staff interprets and applies data to help address climate-related issues and make data broadly available.

□ As the new director of the Indiana State Climate Office (IN-SCO) at Purdue University, Hall says her most pressing goal is to determine what climate information the state and its residents need to be more successful and profitable, and then to provide that data in a practical and usable way – whether through tools, educational materials and presentations, or targeted communications – that can be used to drive decision making. For example, climate data could be used to examine historic rainfall and flooding patterns to make predictive assessments that could aid in the design of roads and stormwater and drainage systems. And if farmers face a plant disease risk that is tied to climate, a tool could be developed to provide alerts when those conditions are likely to exist.

The Carmel Conundrum

Things are getting interesting in the Carmel Mayor's race. As first reported a couple weeks ago in the Carmel Current, there are accusations that Mayor Jim Brainard's campaign tried to bribe his opponent Fred Glynn to get out of the race by offering him a job. And apparently, county chairwoman Laura Campbell is being pulled into this as she was reportedly at a meeting where all this went down.

According to published reports, the Brainard camp made an offer to the Glynn camp that they would pay him $140,000 to drop out of the race. However, there's a conflicting story that the Glynn camp said he would drop out of the race for $140,000.

We have been able to figure out that the person in the middle of this is Dan Hennessy who was Glynn's campaign manager but later switched sides to team Brainard. We do know that a few days before the meeting between the two camps allegedly occurred on February 5, Hennessy reached out to a Brainard supporter about a job and three days later got one, which if true, would explain why the switch took place. Word on the street is Hennessy is being paid $40,000.

We are also told that Hennessy did not offer Glynn $140,000 to drop out of the race, per se, but to run for another office. And he allegedly reached out to friends of Glynn to try and convince them to call Glynn and have him drop out of the race.

We're still reaching out to the various players and trying to figure out what's going on. But to be frank, it doesn't make sense for Brainard to try and convince an opponent to drop out of the race when you would think he would want more candidates to run because that would divide the opposition, especially since he reportedly is polling at about 55%.

We will keep you posted, but you have to admit, the fun north of 96th street never stops.

NAGR, Please

The National Association for Gun Rights (NAGR) just doesn't know when to quit. The group supported an effort by State Rep. Curt Nisly to amend SB 119 to allow for "Constitutional Carry" which would basically eliminate any fees for any permits to carry a firearm.

The opposition, which included State Rep. Jim Lucas opposed the measure since eliminating the fees would have a fiscal impact on the state, and it would have to go through Ways & Means if amended and SB 119 would die since there wasn't enough time left in the session for it to get a hearing.

When Nisly offered the amendment, it did not get a second, so SB 119 goes to third reading for a final vote, thus denying NAGR a chance to raise money based on the votes of Indiana lawmakers. However, we don't think this will stop them from fundraising.

You might recall we wrote about this back in 2017 when NAGR went after House Speaker Brian Bosma. They accused him of being in the pocket of gun control proponent Michael

A Few Other Items of Note

We're hearing that if bias crimes comes up for a concurrence vote in the Senate today, its chances of passing are pretty good. TCS spent a lot of time yesterday talking to both supporters and critics, and both sides have come back with either likely or very likely.

By the way, Indiana had a hate crimes law on the books for years, but it was an ACLU lawsuit that got rid of it because they said it violated the first amendment. Also, a House Committee passed a bill back in 2007 (9-1) that gave a civil cause of action if they suffered personal injury or property damage due to their race or other enumerated characteristic.

That $100 million fee to move that casino license from Gary to Terre Haute may get maybe dropped down to $50 million.

Things are apparently going south when it comes to trying to reach a deal on subsidies for a new hotel in downtown Indianapolis, which a number of existing hotels oppose saying it will hurt occupancy rates.

The Cheat Sheet, Vol. 8, Issue 9 – April 2019

Keep an eye on Lincoln Township Trustee Joe Walsh in Hendricks County. His past is coming back to haunt him in a big way.

And speaking of keeping an eye on things, we're hearing one of the candidates for the Indianapolis City-County Council has some not some flattering "photos" running around that would probably have been better had they kept their clothes on.

Former ISU Government Affairs Director Greg Goode is returning to his old job.

Indiana NORML is reporting that U.S. Senator Mike Braun is supporting medical marijuana.

Hoosier mayors on Buttigieg boom

His colleagues watched him become a policy force, see a vivid contrast with President Trump

By BRIAN A. HOWEY

INDIANAPOLIS – Earlier this decade, the “Young Guns” emerged in the Indiana mayoral class. There were LaPorte’s Blair Milo, Chris McBarnes in Frankfort, Ryan Daniel over at Columbia City, Joe McGuiness down in Franklin and joining these Republicans from up north was

Democrat Pete Buttigieg of South Bend. They tical age, some in their 20s, and did amazing work in what were often described as “Rust Belt cities.”

When you look at this class, Milo now heads Gov. Eric Holcomb’s Career Connections and Talent agency, McGuiness is commissioner of the Indiana Department of South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg with Kokomo Mayor Greg Goodnight at an AIM event. Buttigieg’s colleagues see him as a considerable policy force. (HPI Photo by Brian A. Howey)

Transportation, McBarnes and Daniel are seeking reelection and are seen as rising stars with the latter taking an activist role in Indiana’s meth epidemic. And Buttigieg? As you know, he’s running for president of the United States.

Super majorities & hate

INDIANAPOLIS – Super majorities have consequences.

If there is any lesson to be drawn from the headline news item of the 2019 General Assembly session – the hate crimes legislation without ly icted, which reached Senate concurrence Tuesday and is headed to Gov. Eric Holcomb’s desk – it’s that.

The pipsqueak Democratic minorities protest with the voices of mice and the super majority Republicans just grin and do what they want, often in caucus, away from public view.

Democratic gubernatorial standard-bearer in the wings who should be the focal and vocal point of resistance. And the true rising star of the Rooster Party, the openly gay South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg, is too busy running for president.

In February, when Mayor Pete conducted a book reading at IUPUI, there seemed to be a strange bedfellows alignment between Buttigieg and Gov. Holcomb on SB12, which had just cleared the Senate without a list. Holcomb declared it "unacceptable" and said there was plenty of time to forge a list. "I will or the right ultimate outcome for our state and citizens this year so we're not right back here in the same place next year," Holcomb said.

HPI commented at the time: It is unclear how Holcomb will use his considerable popularity to bring his recalcitrant GOP into line.

Now we know. Buttigieg cal enate version a "crushing disappointment" and urged the ov crowd to "summon courage" and make their voices heard, saying, "We have to have the protections. We have to have the civil rights protections. We have them in South Bend and we have to have them statewide." But the Democrat seemingly with the most political momentum in America has not weighed in again on SB12, nor did many of his followers. It was rhetoric sans action. Like Vice President Pence, Mayor Pete has gone nationwide. Indiana is in his rearview mirror.

Washington Examiner reporter Philip Wegmann recently called HPI about Buttigieg's resistance to Gov. Mike Pence's signing and subsequent rescinding of the RFRA law in 2015 and I did a scan of our April 2015 editions which covered the controversy extensively. Mayor Buttigieg was conspicuous in his relative silence. To be fair, perhaps that's because it was the Indiana Chamber, Bill Oesterle, the NCAA and other economic Republicans who had raised the alarms, and Mayor Pete decided to let the GOP-aligned groups handle the self . (It might also be a factor that the South Bend mayor was not yet "out" about his own sexual orientation at the time.)

Super majorities obscure other important things, like the intolerance Wing of the Republican Party which, in the concealment provided by internal

Gov. Eric Holcomb greets State Sen. Ron Alting, who was co-author of the original SB12 hate crime bill that included a list, prior to his State of the State address in January when the governor declared he would help shape a new law. (HPI Photo by Brian A. Howey) caucus debate, resisted what dozens of other states have done with hate crime laws, which is to explicitly list icted classes. They carried the day; the "family advocacy" groups still wield outsiz thin the GOP. Speaker Brian Bosma and Senate President Pro Tem Rod Bray acquiesced in the name of internal order and fear of primary politics. Courage could be saved for another day.

And Gov. Holcomb?

He promised to be a vocal proponent of a hate crime law with a list. But after his return from Europe, he passed on using several Indiana Lincoln Day dinners to pressure recalcitrant members of his party. Nor did he barnstorm the state drumming up what we've come to know from another governor as the "white-hot heat of public opinion." At the Bartholomew County Lincoln Dinner Saturday, Holcomb didn't speak about the issue as Sen. Greg Walker and Sen. Ryan Lauer looked on. But he told the Columbus Republic, "I believe that covers it all. No one is left out."

With the Senate concurring on a 34-14 vote Tuesday, Holcomb insisted the compromise will protect every Hoosier. "Those targeted for crimes because of color, creed, disability, national origin, race, religion or sexual orientation are protected," Holcomb said.

But State Sen. Ron Alting, who sponsored the original SB12 and ended up voting against SB198, said on the S, "I say to everybody, it's got to be everyone in it or I cannot support. verdict will come from the courts, judges and prosecutors. "Time will tell," Alting said. "We won't know for awhile."

This is not Holcomb's. His messaging on hate crimes has been, and remains, mixed and conflicted. On the eve of Senate concurrence, the governor explained, "The No. 1 priority for me is to make sure that when we adjourn from this legislative session, that all 6.6 million-plus Hoosiers are protected, and from what I've seen (this version) would do it." But, he added that he will continue push for gender and gender identity in an explicit list. "I don't want to go back, I want to go forward," Holcomb said Monday. "And this will be a tremendous step in the right direction."

So which is it, governor?

If everyone is covered under the House-passed version of SB 198, why continue to push for a list? In Hoosier parlance, that's having it both ways. Holcomb is demonstrating an inability to lead his party on a high-profile issue.

But a super majority can do that to a governor. Out there in what I'll call "89% country" (where 89% of county commissioners are Republican), there might be general acceptance of a hate crime law that could help after churches in Jasper County and a synagogue in Hamilton County have been targeted. But we haven't seen leadership from legislative Republicans for an explicit list.

Why? Because super majorities don't feel the political heat. They can do what they do because, as we often say about contortionist hounds, they can. Fearless of meaningful challenges from defanged Democrats, yet fearful of 2020 primary challenges organized by the state's active religious right, the GOP super-majorities caterwaul in caucus, but are guarded in public, paralyzed from taking meaningful action to erase a stigma from our state.

The South Bend Tribune editorialized on Sunday, "Last summer, in the wake of anti-Semitic gr at a Carmel synagogue, Gov. Eric Holcomb committed to "get something done" in the next legislative session "so that Indiana can be one of 46 states with hate crimes legislation — and not e states without it." But the Tribune deduced: "Indiana's governor has said all the right things about ending Indiana's failure to pass a bias crimes law. But last week, he showed he was strong on talk, weak on action."

While that is a Democrat-leaning newspaper in the heart of Buttigieg country, there weren't many other such observations beyond Mary Beth Schneider and the State-house File.

From a practical and legal standpoint, should Johnny Chitwood Himmeler spray paint "Heil Hitler" on a le a home with a r porch and a car with an equality sticker in the driveway, judges have the ability today to sentence while considering the aggravating circumstances at hand.

Speaker Bosma believed that to be the case before this session ever began, before Holcomb decided to prioritize a hate crime law at the behest of his IEDC wing in the wake of the Carmel synagogue assault. Many in his caucus and among Senate Republicans are th the status quo.

In the eyes of Gov. Holcomb and his commerce I as supportive business groups, this was (and is) about fostering a promising business environment. In the eyes of many in the super majority, SB12 and now SB198 were (and are) about semantics ... about political correctness. And still to others, about "special protections" for classes of people they'd rather not think about and really aren't interested in protecting.

Until Indiana Democrats can muster a credible standard-bearer and spokesperson, and actually elect candidates across Mike Pence's amber waves of grain, this dynamic will not change. ❖

In many states, mayors are more ceremonial, cutting ribbons and presiding over council meetings, while managers run the city. "In Indiana, you have a strong mayor state," said Matt Greller, president of Accelerating Indiana Municipalities (AIM). "They have vastly more power, they make more board appointments, they have more decision-making authority. They can wake up in the morning seeing a section of road that needs repair and by the time you go home, it's fixed."

"The mayor is hands-on every day, whether it's making infrastructure or public safety decisions. And that translates perfectly to the president," Greller said. "A lot of our mayors on both sides bring that unique skill set."

And they are not trapped by politics. "We just had a gathering of mayors last week and it never comes down to politics," Greller said. "I won't even say it rarely comes up – it never comes up. The mayors are only focused on politics every four years when they are up for reelection. The rest of the time it's about policy. They'll steal ideas from each other. If there's a Democratic mayor talking about a unique project, it's not going to stop a Republican mayor from taking it."

Not a far-fetched notion

So within AIM, the notion of Mayor Pete running for president isn't a far-fetched notion in a policy sense. Buttigieg is seen as a man with keen intellect and the ability to translate policy to the common man. What may have surprised some contemporaries is Buttigieg's adroit steering through the poli

"What Pete is trying to do is completely unprecedented," said Hammond Mayor Thomas McDermott Jr., noting only Presidents Andrew Johnson, Grover Cleveland and Calvin Coolidge served as mayors, and none of them made the jump directly from city hall to the White House. "I've known him for 10 years and he's very impressive. The thing about Pete is he's young, ambitious and incredibly intelligent."

"To be president, you have to make decisions," said McDermott, a Democrat whose father was a Republican mayor of Hammond. "Mayors are great at it. They analyze both sides and make a decision. The president has a cabinet, and the mayor has one, appointing the department heads. Mayors have to interact with the city council. That would be Pete's challenge. Congress isn't in it for the good of the country. There, if you're a Democrat (then) you can't work with Republicans. People who work as mayor are in it for the good of the city."

Former Fort Wayne mayor Paul Helmke told HPI, "After 2016, the rules have changed on all sorts of things. That may really change. Mayors are hands-on, deal with problems, and deal with problems across the aisle."

They live with the people they are serving. There are no walls or staffs separating them from the people. They are out in the community and at the grocery store. If you're concerned about the trappings of the semi-imperial presidency, mayors are the antithesis of that. If we're concerned about people being all talk and no action, mayors have to get things done, and if they don't, people know it."

Kokomo Mayor Gregg Goodnight chaired Buttigieg's 2010 run for Indiana treasurer, and the two often travel together to Indianapolis and compare notes. He also believes the mayoral skill set positions Buttigieg well for the presidency. "I believe it's an asset, and with Buttigieg, it's a perfect fit," said Goodnight, a three-term Democrat who is not seeking reelection. "It helps him because you have to solve the problem, whether it's an economic crisis. There is no buck-passing. You are the local government. Governors can pass it down to local schools or counties, like we're seeing with local jail populations."

Buttigieg extraordinarily pragmatic, saying that Buttigieg "uses his political skills for some of his decision-making, though most of those decisions are not political."

Howey Politics Indiana has often noted that the two toughest jobs in American politics are the presidency and being mayor. "I do think it's a tough job," Goodnight said. "It's not a fun job, but it is a very rewarding job. Sometimes you've got to use resources, and everything comes down to prioritizing those resources, whether it's monetary, prioritize any of the so many different factions from neighborhood associations, to chambers, to labor groups. It's trying to balance dozens of different things at once. Then you have to prioritize your individual time, so I'm not neglecting certain parts of the city or job."

Goodnight added, "To be a mayor, you have to have empathy. You have to talk to people. I've never been homeless, or unsure where my next meal would be from. I've never been the victim of a serious crime, never been discriminated against because of race or my sex. But I have to be able to put myself in some of those people's shoes. That's what a mayor does."

McDermott adds, "As mayor, I get to hear about people's struggles. I get the direct pulse of the community." In doing so, mayors will do what they can to avoid divided government because things are so personal and if people have an issue, they'll show up at a mayor's doorstep. "My whole goal is I want both Republicans and Democrats to vote for me," McDermott said. "I don't want just over 50% and a divided city. I tell them that I want Republicans to vote for me. Republicans are Hoosiers, Americans and quite frankly, half of my family is Republican. You have to market yourself differently. Pete will want everyone to vote for him."

Buttigieg navigates policy

Greller remembers a General Assembly proposal three or four years ago to eliminate the business personal property tax. "South Bend is a heavy manufacturing city and it would have had a very dire impact," Greller explained. "He sat down with Gov. Pence and the two of them had a very serious conversation. Politics was not an issue. It was two highly intellectual people having that conversation. Pete helped the legislature and governor come to the conclusion that if we're going to move in that direction, (then) there would have to be changes."

Greller continued, "It was put to the side and a small business property tax bill passed. It was a status quo resolution. He and Pence were very different on political issues and ideology, so it was interesting to watch the two of them going back and forth when you knew their political ideologies were so different. It never got in the way and it never clouded any policy decision."

Greller said that Buttigieg was instrumental in AIM's rebranding transformation from its days as the Indiana Association of Cities and Towns. "It was an organizational transformation," Greller said. "He, along with Fishers Mayor Scott Fadness were very involved in the process. Pete's ability to understand how to carry our message through the General Assembly in a non-partisan fashion was remarkable. He understands the nuances of policy and the nuances of politics, and not everyone can navigate through that process."

Does Pete have a chance?

The sources for this story were all initially skeptical that Pete Buttigieg had a realistic chance of winning the Democratic nomination, let alone the presidency. They all agree that as this cycle has evolved, the mayor has an opening.

"When you're in a cr separate yourself from the pack," Goodnight observed. "Let's look at Pete. He's got the goofy name. He's got a weird story, mayor of a small city. He's had military service, he's a Rhodes Scholar, openly gay and he's young. We're starting to see that being a little odd helps. Bernie (Sanders) was able to use that. Ron Paul was able to use that, being quirky, being something different."

Helmke, who teaches Indiana University's Civics Leaders Program, knows from experience that Hoosier mayors haven't translated well and Sen. Vance Hartke who was mayor of Evansville and Sen. Richard Lugar from Indianapolis. Helmke lost a 1998 U.S. Senate race to Evan Bayh, and Indianapolis mayors Bill Hudnut and Stephen Goldsmith lost secretary of state and gubernatorial races. So, there is some logic in Buttigieg's decision to leapfrog statewide politics and go nationwide.

"Being mayor you are judged by your results, but you're going to be held responsible," Helmke said. "Any mayor is going to have some positives and negatives. There's always going to be crime, infrastructure, personnel issues and with responsibility comes criticism. You can duck it in the legislative branch, but not as an executive. What's occurred to me is that Pete Buttigieg coming from a smaller city probably helps him. If Rudy Giuliani runs, everyone has a view of New York, or LA or Chicago, but people don't have a view of South Bend. There's no preconceived negatives and more positives with Notre Dame."

Helmke believes Buttigieg may be the youngest presidential candidate since William Jennings Bryan. "A lot of politics is the contrast and this is a time to make that contrast. All of the contrasts seem to be working in his favor with President Trump and with the rest of the Democratic look at what's the opposite of what we have now."

McDermott said Buttigieg could present a nightmare matchup for President Trump. "He's the anti-Trump," McDermott said. "Pete would tear Trump up."

That's a common thread among the Hoosier municipal class. Or as Greller puts it, "I know a number of Republicans in the state who are super-glad he's not running for governor or something else here. Seeing Pete on a debate stage with Donald Trump, I'd pay to see that."

Exhibit A on this front would be Elkhart Republican Kyle Hannon, who observed on Facebook Messenger Tuesday after reading the story about Buttigieg performing nuptials for a South Bend couple just before she was going in for a C-Section: "This guy has a good chance. There is something about this campaign that resonates. As you may know, I'm a Republican."

As for winning the Democratic nomination, McDermott believes that key contrasts are already emerging between Buttigieg and the septuagenarian frontrunners Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders. "I think Pete has way more courage than Joe Biden. He's been thinking about running for four years. Pete thought about it for four weeks and got in. If Joe Biden hasn't made up his mind, he's not going to be a good president."

McDermott also believes Buttigieg is rising to the moment. "When he talked about Trump and the 'porn star presidency,' that's what I'm talking about, coming up with a line like that."

Greller sees Buttigieg's early traction in the Democratic race as good for the state, particularly if he ends up on a collision course with Vice President Pence. "It says a lot about Indiana that we can produce leaders on an array of things. I think it's a really interesting dynamic that Indiana is becoming a focal point to the nation of where we're headed politically." ❖

Buttigieg's boomlet fueled by $7M report, social media surge

By BRIAN A. HOWEY

INDIANAPOLIS — It was another eye-popping week for Pete Buttigieg's presidential exploration effort. He posted $7 million federal Election Commission report, coming from 158,000 donors. There has been a surge in his social media. And he's opening up his South Bend

"This is just a preliminary analysis, but our team's initial report shows we raised over $7 million in Q1 of this year," Buttigieg announced Monday. "We (you) are outperforming expectations at every turn. I'll have a more complete analysis later, but until then, a big thank you to all our supporters," Buttigieg tweeted. Last month Buttigieg announced that his committee had crested the 65,000 individual-donor threshold to make the DNC debates that begin in June.

Buttigieg took to Facebook to walk his growing league of supporters through how he raised his funds. "This is a big deal. This was way ahead of our initial goals and is totally ahead of what people thought we could do. We cannot thank you enough for all you've done so far. We have a lot of work to do, and we're glad to be doing it with you." In the video, he explained, "As promised, we took a closer look at our Q1 fundraising metrics, including number of donors (158,550), average donation ($36.35), and the percent of our total amount raised that came in through contributions under $200 (64%)."

"He's disrupting the entire 2020 race," Jon Soltz, president of VoteVets said to Politico. "The more and more people hear from him, the more they think he's the fresh face that they've been waiting for."

Buttigieg's haul appears modest when compared to Sen. Kamala Harris who is posting $12 million and Sen. Bernie Sanders who reported $18 million. The big difference is both of those candidates have declared and have staffed up, while Buttigieg is still in exploratory mode and is just now hiring.

But there are signs that Buttigieg is resonating in other ways. The Hollywood Reporter said that Buttigieg spoke to 40 employees at Brillstein Entertainment Partners. Manager George Heller is credited with bringing Buttigieg into the building, and he told THR: "We are all craving politicians who can bring us together. A lot of Dems seem to speak to only their own party and I think Pete is more transformative and r country that most other Dems cannot access."

After Brillstein, Buttigieg headed to the home of former CAA agent Michael Kives (who now runs K5 Global) and attorney wife Lydia Kives (of the Bail Project) for a meet-and-greet with about 25 industry players (including CAA's Richard Lovett, Untitled Entertainment's Jason Weinberg, MGM's Jon Glickman and wife Christy Callahan, and attorney Marcy Morris) before taping a segment on Bill Maher's HBO show. "Everyone was blown away," a source says of that event, which the mayor attended with husband Chasten Glezman.

The Pete for America exploratory committee says the mayor has found South Bend. "A couple of us are focused on something entirely different, more like the campaign said in a fundraising email on Saturday. "We've mentioned this a few times, but we need more space here at headquarters in South Bend. We're preparing for several new hires, and we need different types of space to be able to effectively collaborate across teams. Our staff will be reporting to work tomorrow in our new space."

Buttigieg's social media exposure is also skyrocketing. According to Axios, Buttigieg generated more engagement with his tweets (2.1 million likes, retweets, comments) in that span than any other candidate's main account except O'Rourke (2.17 million) — and Mayor Pete has half as many followers (600,000 vs. 1.4 million). Since his breakout performance at a CNN Town Hall on March 10, he has added 447,000 followers on Twitter. His next closest 2020 competitor, Beto O'Rourke, picked up 137,000 in that period, per CrowdTangle. Buttigieg added more followers on Instagram (90,000) and Facebook (75,000) during the period than any Democratic candidate except O'Rourke (92,000/82,000), per CrowdTangle. CNN's Harry Enten points out that has "correlated with jumps in the polls this primary season." Buttigieg is also drawing attention from other Democrats.

A Hillary Clinton spokesman slammed Buttigieg on Friday for comments he made in January about Clinton's 2016 presidential campaign (CNN). Buttigieg said in an interview with The Washington Post Magazine published in January, "Donald Trump got elected because, in his twisted way, he pointed out the huge troubles in our economy and our democracy." He added, "At least he didn't go around saying that America was already great, like Hillary did." Nick Merrill, a Clinton adviser and spokesman, called Buttigieg's months-old comments "indefensible." "This is indefensible. @HillaryClinton ran on a belief in this country & the most progressive platform in modern political history. Trump ran on pessimism, racism, false promises, & vitriol. Interpret that how you want, but there are 66,000,000 people who disagree. Good luck," Merrill posted on Twitter.

Buttigieg will speak at Northeastern University in Boston today on the importance of millennial participation and representation in national politics. On Thursday, Buttigieg will deliver remarks at the National Action Network in New York. He'll campaign in New Hampshire on Friday and Saturday. Next Monday he makes an appearance in New York City.

All this comes as former vice president Joe Biden faced allegations of two unwanted advances toward women, one a Nevada legislator, and a second woman in Connecticut and other incidents are now surfacing. Both happened years ago. Biden is undeclared, but has led in national and Iowa polling. Axios reports that while Biden was New York City mayor, Michael Bloomberg is reassessing whether he should enter the race.

"Honestly this is the most interesting, unfathomable and forgettable," said David Axelrod, the longtime Democratic strategist. "Really, really substantial candidates. Different principles and approaches. And no clear indication yet which will prevail. It makes for a great campaign."

Publisher's note on Buttigieg campaign

We've heard some grouching about HPI's "obsession" with the Buttigieg campaign. Since HPI began publishing in 1994, we've covered presidential campaigns by Hoosier politicians ranging from Sen. Richard Lugar in 1995-96, Dan Quayle in 1999, Sen. Evan Bayh in 2006, and prospective campaigns of Govs. Mitch Daniels and Mike Pence in 2011 and the Trump/Pence campaign in 2016. It's what our subscribers expect. When Pete Buttigieg stops making news, we'll stop covering him. Until then, we'll be on the campaign trail. ❖

Holcomb endorses Jensen in Noblesville

Howey Politics Indiana

INDIANAPOLIS — Gov. Eric Holcomb endorsed Councilman Chris Jensen for the Republican Noblesville mayoral nomination. "Having known and worked with Chris for years, I'm proud to endorse his campaign for Noblesville mayor," Holcomb said. "Chris' vision and agenda will keep Noblesville on the right track for a better future, while we work to take all of Indiana to the Next Level."

"Having a leader and partner like Eric Holcomb in the governor's office or Noblesville," Jensen said. "Taxes are low, budgets are balanced, and we're investing in the future. That's the leadership Noblesville needs to be able to succeed here at home, and I'm honored to have his support as we work to build Noblesville's next chapter."

Jensen is facing Vince Baker, Mike Corbett and former Noblesville School Board member Julia Kozicki in a race to replace Mayor John Ditslear.

Terre Haute Dems talk issues at forum

Democrats seeking their party's nomination for Terre Haute mayor addressed voters Tuesday night at the Vigo County Public Library (Taylor, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Retired businessman David E. "Dots" Conder said he is running to bring more diversity to public government. E. "Superman" Hamilton said he's running to make sure "Terre Haute is the best place you can be." Calling himself a "handicapped specialist," Hamilton said he is running to ensure good jobs and proper facilities for everyone. City Councilman Karrum Nasser touted a "team effort" that, during his one term on the council, has enabled the city to reduce short-term borrowing by half and reduce interest. "We need to focus on our families, we need to focus on jobs, we need to make it so that everyone is able to succeed regardless of their background," Nasser said.

South Bend: Critchlow endorsed by FOP

Democrat Jason Critchlow's campaign announced it has been endorsed by the South Bend Fraternal Order of Police. The endorsement adds to a growing list of individuals and organizations that have declared their support for Critchlow's candidacy for mayor of South Bend, a list that includes current and former police officers, labor unions, and other community groups. "It's rare that the FOP endorses a mayoral candidate, but Jason offers a refreshing view on how the police department and the city can work together to help reduce crime and create a better relationship with the community. We also like his vision for the future of South Bend," said Harvey Mills, President of the FOP #36. "I am honored to have the support of the South Bend Fraternal Order of Police," Critchlow said. "I believe it is essential that we build and maintain a close and supportive relationship between the citizens of South Bend and our police department."

Indianapolis: Merritt cites claim rejections

State Sen. Jim Merritt criticized Mayor Joe Hogsett and his administration for forgetting the needs of citizens while funding non-essential mandates. "Last year, 1,305 Indianapolis pothole claims were denied payment. Those citizens were forgotten by the incompetency of the Hogsett administration and were forced to pay for tire and wheel repairs out of their own pockets," said Merritt. "In fact, only 16 claims were paid last year by Mayor Hogsett and his administration. That amounted to a measly $3,000 worth of repairs for pothole-related damage." In recent days, according to Merritt, Mayor Hogsett has bragged about evading responsibility. "And while we're all grateful for the hard-working men and women who are trying to resolve this crisis, the work being done today is a temporary problem. Because prep work was not done ahead of time to prepare for the winter, many potholes filled in recent weeks are opening up again," Merritt said.

The Hogsett campaign responded with spokeswoman Heather K. Sager saying, "Road infrastructure and city budgets are serious issues. That's why over the last three years, Mayor Joe Hogsett has worked with bipartisan Council majorities to tackle chronically underfunded city services and provide a balanced budget that our city has seen in more than a decade. At the same time, Mayor Joe dramatically increased road and infrastructure funding, including more than $400 million that will be spent over the next four years, all without a local tax increase. It is disappointing that rather than use his candidacy to add productive ideas to this bipartisan dialogue, Sen. Jim Merritt wants to inject DC-style partisan politics back into Indianapolis. Rather than use his time inside the Statehouse this session helping our city, Sen. Merritt is more focused on spending time outside of the press conferences."

Merritt defends hate bill

Today's passage of the bias-crimes bill by the State S... forward for Indiana to demonstrate our commitment to protecting all citizens from hate and bigotry," said Sen. Merritt following the passage of SB198. Merritt added that next year, in his role as the newly elected Mayor of Indianapolis, he will work with Governor Holcomb to reinstate the listing of protected categories that was removed during this year's legislative process, a listing that Merritt supported as the bill moved through the General Assembly. In voting for the bill, Merritt acknowledged that it was imperfect in scope. "As leaders and representatives of Hoosier citizens, our foremost goal must be to improve our communities. Sometimes, those improvements need to take place as a series of steps in order to build consensus," he said. "While I may be criticized for voting for this less-than- perfect legislation, I believe in choosing progress over total inaction. This is an important and meaningful step toward crafting long-term laws that tively protect all Hoosiers from crimes committed on the wholly unacceptable basis of hate and intolerance."

Carmel: Dems call for investigation

The Hamilton County Democratic Party is requesting an investigation into claims of bribery involving Carmel Mayor Jim Brainard's reelection campaign (WTHR-TV). Democratic Party Chairman Joe Weingarten says he submitted a letter to the county's election board requesting that they investigate the allegations that Brainard's campaign tried to pay to keep a challenger out of the Republican primary. "Those kinds of shady things show our elections should be held to a much higher standard and we shouldn't allow any party or any candidate to offer a bribe if that actually happened," said Weingarten. Brainard's opponent, Fred Glynn, says he rejected the offer that was brought to him by a political consultant that he believes was working on behalf of the Brainard campaign. "Afterward he came to me and said their campaign was offering $140,000 in campaign cash for me not to run. I said no," said Glynn. Mayor Jim Brainard's campaign released a statement denying the allegation: "Despite the accusations coming from the mayor's political opponents, neither him or myself, were in the meeting. Unfortunately this is politics at its worst but fortunately Carmel's voters are smart enough to see right through it."

Abdul noted in Tuesday's Cheat Sheet: "To be frank, it doesn't make sense for Brainard to try and convince an opponent to drop out of the race when you would think he would want more candidates to run because that would divide the opposition, especially since he reportedly is polling at about 55%."

Bloomington: Arena to run as independent

Bloomington native Nile Arena plans to run as an independent candidate for mayor (Indiana Public Media). The announcement comes after Monroe County Commissioner Amanda Barge suspended her campaign after an independent contractor accused her of sexual harassment. She was the only challenger facing off against incumbent John Hamilton in the Democratic primary. Arena says he decided to run when he learned the mayoral race could be uncontested, despite being inexperienced in politics. "I am a political novice. But I am not a novice at being a citizen and especially an engaged citizen of Bloomington, Indiana," he says. "I love Bloomington. I love what it is. I also love what I think it could be," Arena says.

Monroe County y Amanda Barge could still win the Democratic primary election, despite suspending her campaign to unseat Mayor John Hamilton (Costello, Indiana Publ previously said Hamilton was effectively guaranteed to win the election even though her name would remain on the ballot on election day. Monroe County Election Supervisor Karen Wheeler says Barge's announcement took them by surprise. "We were scr e out all the legalities and everything," Wheeler says. "And we're very glad that the Indiana Election Division is there to help us out, too." The deadline for Bar ly withdraw from the race was Feb. 11. After the deadline, a candidate can only be removed from a primary ballot if the candidate dies, moves out of the district, or is convicted of a felony. If Barge does win the primary election in May, she would hav ly withdrawing from the general election. At that point the Democratic Party would caucus to choose a new candidate for the general election ballot. ❖

Mayor Pete's Iowa surprise

By JACK COLWELL

SOUTH BEND — We've got an Iowa surprise. And it's nothing to do with a forecast on when corn will be knee-high. Too early to measure the corn crop. A lot to do, though, with measuring the crop of presidential candidates.

The Iowa survey released last week by Emerson College, showing South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg in third place among likely Democratic caucus goers, was a big surprise.

It's another indication that Buttigieg has become a candidate to be taken seriously on the national political stage, even before he was a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Q: What's next?

A: Buttigieg plans on campaigning in New Hampshire next weekend.

Q: So, he's already looking beyond the nation test in the Iowa caucuses next year?

A: Sure. A good Iowa caucus is a good start. He's already in the primary and other early tests. Buttigieg also is lining up coordinators and staff in Nevada and South Carolina.

Q: But he's not really a candidate?

A: Of course he is. He really is. He just hasn't officially announced yet. Neither have some others, including Joe Biden. It's all about planning for maximum value in announcement timing. Buttigieg formed what is called an exploratory committee for organizing and fundraising purposes. If he had failed to reach funding and polling levels to qualify for the caucus, Buttigieg could have decided not to run. But he has far surpassed those requirements.

Q: What's so great about third place in a poll?

A: If Biden or Bernie Sanders came in third it would be a bad showing. But Biden, with 25%, was followed by Sanders at 24%. The presumed frontrunners came in where expected. Buttigieg, with 0% in Emerson's January survey, shot past other better-known candidates, with 11%. That far exceeds expectations for him.

Q: Does his New Hampshire travel mean he thinks he's all set in Iowa?

A: Not at all. It's still very early. He will campaign extensively in Iowa. But New Hampshire is important too, even if Sanders is regarded as a likely winner there. New Hampshire could test the support of millennials. Will they mostly stick with Sanders, 77 millennial candidate in Buttigieg, 37?

Q: How did Buttigieg go from so little known to showing up in a bunch of polls and topping his fundraising goals?

A: Buttigieg has planned his nationwide media tour well. Two events that brought him attention from Democrats nationwide were a CNN Town Hall and a lengthy appearance on "Morning Joe" on MSNBC. Mike Schmuhl, Buttigieg's campaign manager (well, committee manager, since there's no campaign yet), says that donations and interest in the candidate shot up noticeably after those appearances.

Q: Was Buttigieg impressive in ripping President Trump?

A: No. He avoided taking repeated shots at the president or calling for impeachment. Instead he concentrated on issues such as health care, jobs and individual freedoms. He actually answered the questions directly, rather than constantly repeating talking points as so many candidates do. He was just like the Mayor Pete I've seen answering questions from students in my Notre Dame journalism class. His style impressed viewers. At least for now.

Q: Any other reason for his surprisingly fast start?

A: Yes, it involves comparison with a slow or even stumbling start for some of those better-known contenders. For example, a story in the New York Times last week featured a four-column photo of Buttigieg with an enthusiastic crowd in Manhattan. The headline: "City Gushes Over Mayor Mulling a 2020 Bid: Not Its Own de Blasio, But Mayor Buttigieg Of South Bend, Ind." Mayor Bill de Blasio does have a few more constituents in his city of 8.6 million population. ❖

Buttigieg ready to invest in renewables

By ANNE LAKER

AUSTIN, Tex. — While half of presidential candidates are busy arousing socialist passions, the other half seems ready to take an ideological chill pill in favor of practicalities. Pete Buttigieg is mostly in the latter camp.

Notwithstanding his “porn star presidency” sound bite — a Molotov cocktail of a meme that sent our Twitter feeds spinning — Buttigieg most often comes off as the affable, studious problem-solver we’re starving for, as he did at last month’s CNN Town Hall at South by Southwest.

Columnist David Brooks, writing about Mayor Pete in this week’s New York Times, notes that we like Buttigieg because he “deftly detaches progressive policy positions from the culture war” and “eschews grand ideological conflict.”

Case in point: Mayor Pete’s statement at the CNN Town Hall about one particular policy will, I predict, emerge as a credible tool for bipartisan movement on the 800-pound gorilla called climate change. That policy is the Energy Innovation and Carbon Dividend Act (EICDA), and it’s already a bill in the U.S. Congress.

In Buttigieg’s words: “More investments in renewables are going to be needed... We’re going to have to contemplate a carbon tax, and by the way, there are ways to do that so that most Americans would be better off, because we could return funds right back to the American people. But in so doing, we would help to capture the true cost of things that are happening right now, because it’s in your and my lifetime that (that) cost is going to be paid, one way or the other.”

EICDA, a.k.a. H.R. 763, should be seen as the most effective way to turn the climate change crisis into an opportunity. This legislation creates 2.1 million jobs across the American economy, reduces carbon emissions by 40% over years, and prevents air pollution-related deaths (a serious problem in Indiana).

Here’s how EICDA works. A steadily rising fee is placed on carbon pollution and the resulting revenue is returned to households as a dividend. The dividend comes from pricing carbon at its source, whether from the ground, below the sea, or imported from abroad. It’s $15 per ton and increases every year by another $10. This equates to about nine cents per gallon of gas. The fees are returned monthly to households in total, sort of like a tax refund, minus minor administrative costs, to pay for the added cost at the pump or on your light bill.

Most households would get back at least as much as they pay in, with medium- and lower-income levels seeing more fossil fuel consumption is lower than higher-income households.

The transition to clean energy is already an economic mandate, if not a political one (to wit, NIPSCO’s announcement last fall that they’re ditching coal for solar and wind within 10 years). Like your mother told you when you didn’t want to eat your spinach: “We can make this hard, or we can make this easy.”

While the Green New Deal overall has predictably become a partisan punching bag, EICDA could be the best estimate that proves palatable to candidates on the opposite end of the rainbow from Buttigieg, in part because it’s revenue-neutral.

Even Indiana mayors who aren’t running for president have probably seen Purdue’s Climate Change Research Center’s plethora of reports detailing the effects of climate change on Indiana’s agriculture, infrastructure, public health, forests, and water quality. Every Indiana mayor, senator or representative ought to want the green jobs that would spread like kudzu if EICDA were adopted.

Bottom line: 70% of Americans, and 64% of Hoosiers, want action on climate. Voters - and any politician half as brainy as Buttigieg - should be supporting the Energy Innovation and Carbon Dividend Act to make a straightforward, achievable and economy-boosting leap to the post-carbon era. ❖

Skills needed to win translate to policy

By LEE HAMILTON

BLOOMINGTON — Here's a surprise: The skills that can be used to win in politics are increasingly the skills needed to produce good policy.

I know. You look at the policy stalemates in Washington and wonder how this could be. The people who arrived there by winning elections haven't shown much in the way of policy-making prowess. But let me explain.

Politicians running for office have a choice. They can appeal to their base and count on it pushing them over the top, or they can try to build a coalition of voters.

The former approach gives us more of what we already see, politicians who don't show much interest in crafting broadly acceptable policy. But if they choose instead to run their campaigns by reaching out to a broader swath of the electorate, and if we as voters reward them for this at the polls, then they come to Washington with exactly the skills needed to make our representative democracy work.

We live in a time of great polarization and declining trust in politicians, in institutions, in one another. Sometimes I think our politics have become warfare. Our representative democracy is under stress, if not in peril.

We need to return to our traditional approach, coalition-building across diverse groups of people. We succeed in politics and in governing the country by building a broad base of support that appeals to a wide sector of American society. Building coalitions of the similar-minded is what democracy is all about.

among different groups. The country may be chockablock with different constituencies — labor, business, racial groups, economic groups, religious and secular groups. Fortunately, there are some basics most of us agree on — the need for economic dynamism and growth, respect for the rule of law, a desire for a robust national defense.

We are, after all, part of a shared enterprise that depends on common values — civility, freedom, opportunity for all. And we all want to address the bread-and-butter issues that are on most Americans' minds— economic opportunity, health care, retirement.

Successfully addressing these challenges and the values that underlie our democracy means a number of things. It means rejecting partisan hostility, and being willing to work across the aisle. It means rejecting obstructionism and overcoming the attitude that the most important thing is for my tribe to win.

It means including all people in the public dialogue and treating with them with respect. It means rejecting authoritarianism and assaults on our fundamental institutions — the courts, Congress, law enforcement, the media — that our democracy depends upon. Our aim is to strengthen them, not tear them down. After all, what is the alternative?

If you take as your starting point a desire to address the concerns of the broadest possible group of people, not a given these days, the American people prove to be demanding, but also understanding. They do not expect miracles, but they do expect progress.

So when politicians try to build broad coalitions, whether to win a campaign or to govern the country, they have to pay attention to public opinion, especially on quality-of-life issues. And they have to be able to convince people that some goals are tough to make progress on, and that step-by-step approaches are usually the surest route to moving forward.

But by working within the framework where majorities — in support of fair taxation, free markets, and free trade, providing opportunity for all, preventing the rise of inequality, in support of limited immigration, in support of mainstream views on freedom of choice, in support of policies to address climate change, in support of the social safety net, protecting the poor, and addressing gross inequalities of wealth and income — there's plenty of ground for agreement.

The good news is that you can put together both a winning political campaign and a successful policy drive by speaking straightforwardly to the issues Americans care about, and by understanding where people's points of commonality lie.

This requires the most basic of political skills, building consensus behind a solution to a problem. Only by doing this can we solve the problems the country faces. ❖

Senate concurs, hate bill heads to Gov. Holcomb

By JACOB CURRY

INDIANAPOLIS — After a Carmel synagogue was defaced with anti-Semitic imagery in late July last year, passing meaningful hate crime legislation was quickly keyed in as one of the hot button issues for 2019's General Assembly session. With the Senate concurring on the House's changes to Senate Bill 198, that months-long resurgence of a debate that's reappeared in the legislature for multiple decades now appears to have drawn to its conclusion. All that awaits is the bill's all-but-guaranteed signature into law.

The Indiana Senate pushed the issue over the hill with a 34-14 vote after an hour and a half Tuesday. Most of that time was taken up by the nine Democratic Senators present, all of whom, of course, spoke against the bill.

Sens. Jean Breaux and Lonnie Randolph both labelled the bill as a "pretend" hate crime bill and an insult for its exclusion of age, gender, and gender identity from protections list.

Senate Minority Leader Tim Lanane lamented the process that House GOP leadership chose for dealing with the issue, which was to disregard the amended SB12 entirely and add the hate crime language to SB198 during second hearing rather than in committee. "This bill has been shaped and formulated by super majorities somewhere — I don't know where, but I know where it didn't happen, not in the public" he said. Lanane was joined by Sen. Karen Tallian, who called that process "obnoxious, cowardly, a disrespectful misuse of the entire system" and a "shirking of [House leadership's] duty." Multiple Democrats also criticized Gov. Eric Holcomb for his support of 198, which they saw as 'leadership fr ip- I last week, strong support for a comprehensive list.

Sen. Mike Bohacek, author of SB198 and co-author to the original bias crime law in SB12, was the lone Republican who spoke in favor of concurring Tuesday. B ended the bill in his closing remarks. "This is not a racist bill, this is not a homophobic bill, this is a bill to get bias crimes protection for every person in the State of Indiana," he said. "It's phrased in a way that, quite frankly, we should never have to touch this again because it's dynamic enough language to ensure that whatever future issue there is, there's a remedy for it."

But is this really the end? Republicans, particularly Republican leadership, have given repeated commitments to "getting Indiana off the list" throughout this session, and have said one of their goals is to avoid having to come back next year and grapple with the issue all over again. So, do the new sentencing guidelines from SB198 do that?

Not necessarily.

The Anti-Defamation League, one of the groups who keeps a list of American states without a hate crime law, has said SB198 won't get Indiana off its list because "the bill's over-breadth/vagueness and failure to explicitly list gender identity, sex or gender are f ws." Moreover, the ACLU of Indiana also released a statement opposing the bill for the same reasons, saying this will "undoubtedly lead to legal battles." If, by next year's session, Indiana is still on the list (or at least, a list), or the state is caught up in the courts over this law, will the legislature have to confront this issue again? It doesn't sound impossible, even if it is improbable.

Sen. Ron Alting, who authored SB12 and voted against its amended version in February, spoke again in opposition to SB198. Alting also acknowledged that the passage of the bill wasn't necessarily a solution. "The true judge on the success of this bill will be time," he said, "the courts will tell us, our judiciary system will tell us, our prosecutors will tell us, our judges will tell us."

Republican leaders are fully behind the bill and are t will settle the issue. Holcomb said Senate Bill 198 will accomplish his goal of passing meaningful bias crime legislation because it enhances current protections. "It also will cover bias crimes committed because of other traits and characteristics, such as gender, or gender identity, or sex, or age, and other commonly targeted groups," he said.

House Speaker Brian Bosma offered glowing remarks, saying "we believe this is the most comprehensive and inclusive bias crimes statute in the nation. The reference to our current exceeds that of 21 other states' bias crime statutes, and all of those states are off the list of states without a bias crimes law."

Finally, Senate President Pro Tempore Rod Bray said the bill hits the right mark between inclusion and exclusion. "By referring list of characteristics, Senate Bill 198 provides guidance for judges, while still lity to increase the sentence for any bias-motiv this bill advance to the governor's desk. It's truly inclusive and will provide protections for all Hoosiers."

It's fair to say there are mixed signals coming from all sides on this debate — but once Indiana's hate crimes law ly signed, we'll have more than arguments to go on. Maybe the Democrats who spoke on Tuesday will be vindicated and the new law will be hollow and ineffective. Maybe Republicans will be right, and this will lead to the end of a long debate in Indiana politics. Either way Senator Alting is right — time will tell. For now, the General Assembly will move on to the remaining issues of this session.

Senate passes abortion procedure bill

The Indiana Senate has approved legislation that would largely ban a commonly used second-trimester abortion procedure (AP). The Republican-dominated chamber voted 38-10 Tuesday in favor of the bill, which heads to Gov. Eric Holcomb. The measure would ban dilation and evacuation abortions that the legislation calls "dismemberment abortion." It would make it illegal for doctors to use instruments such as clamps, forceps and scissors to remove a fetus from the womb unless there's "serious risk of substantial and irreversible physical impairment of a major bodily function" to the woman. Doing so would become a felony punishable by one to six years in prison.

Senate passes medical religious bill

The Indiana Senate overwhelmingly agreed Monday

that the religious freedom of nurses, pharmacists and physician assistants should trump the right of Hoosier women to receive abortion-related health care (Carden, NWI Times). The Republican-controlled chamber voted 38-8 to advance Senate Enrolled Act 201 to Republican Gov. Eric Holcomb, who is expected to sign it into law. The legislation expands the state's conscience-protection statute for medical professionals who do not want to perform an abortion or participate in any procedure that results in an abortion, including prescribing, administering or dispensing an abortion-inducing drug. Indiana law already authorizes physicians, hospital employees and health clinic staffers to opt out of providing abortion care. State Sen. Liz Brown, R-Fort Wayne, the sponsor, said nurses, pharmacists and physician assistants who aren't directly employed by a hospital or health clinic deserve the same freedom to abide by an ethical, moral or religious objection. ❖

Our mid-sized metros

By MORTON MARCUS

INDIANAPOLIS – You probably are familiar with Metropolitan Statistical Areas (MSAs), groups of counties around cities of 50,000 or more persons. Sometimes an MSA is only one county, but often an MSA includes nearby counties because there is considerable commuting between the core county and the outlying counties.

Bartholomew is the only county in the Columbus MSA. However, the Evansville MSA includes four counties, one of which is in Kentucky. In all, 43 of Indiana's 92 counties are part of 14 metro areas, some extending into each of our four neighboring states.

But do you know Indiana also has 26 Micropolitan Statistical Areas involving 27 counties? The federal Management and Budget (OMB) says "Micropolitan Statistical Areas have at least one urban cluster of at least 10,000, but less than 50,000 population, plus adjacent territory that has a high degree of social and economic integration with the core as measured by commuting ties."

In our case, only one core or principal city (Jasper in Dubois Co.) has another county (Pike) associated with it.

You'll know more about our metro areas than our micro areas because the former account for 77% of Indiana's population, while the micro areas have but 19%. Yet the future of the Hoosier State may depend on what happens in Warsaw, Marion, Wabash, and Seymour.

From 2010 to 2017, Indiana's population grew by 2.7%, but the cities of Warsaw and Seymour advanced by 8.6 and 7.4% respectively with growing business activity. By contrast, Marion and Wabash each lost 5.1% of their citizens. While 11 of the 26 principal cities of these micro areas gained population, the other 15 declined.

These principal cities are established communities with institutions and facilities for urban living. Richmond is the largest of these, but its numbers are now down to 34,500.

In the past, both the cities and the balance of their counties increased in population. Cities grew until state legislatures denied them any ease of annexation.

Between 2010 and 2017 that pattern applied to only eight of the 26 Indiana micropolitan cities. Washington and the balance of Daviess Co. growing together gave the total county a 4.4% increase. By contrast, with the population in Marion and the balance of Grant County both declining, the county's total population fell by 4.9%.

How large does a community need to be in today's world to offer residents and businesses reasonable expectations of long-term success?

The answer will depend on the costs of technology and the desire for community. Clearly, internet access and low-cost surface transportation services enable many households and businesses to flourish near small cities.

Economies of scale favored big and densely populated communities in the 19th and 20th centuries, and had an unfavorable impact on micro cities. They might thrive if we enter an era of more dispersed population and economic activity. ❖

Gauging the wake of the Mueller report

By LARRY J. SABATO and KYLE KONDIK

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. – Following the conclusion of the Mueller probe, President Trump being forced from the ballot because of legal troubles is even less likely than before. Trump remains an overwhelming favorite for renomination by Republicans as their presidential nominee. The fate of the Trump administration is in the hands of the voters in November 2020.

There is still so much we do not know about Robert Mueller's investigation into Russian interference into the 2016 election. For one thing, none of us, including commentators, has actually seen the report; all we have is a summary from Attorney General William Barr, an appointee of President Trump who quite likely has an interest in presenting the Mueller report in the best possible light. Given that there has been a bipartisan consensus about releasing the report – the president himself called for it less than a week ago – we hope the full report, or as much of it as legally possible, comes out quickly.

With this caveat in mind, that we're trying to make judgments about the substance of a document that we haven't seen, we still think there are a few thoughts worth offering:

1. Trump is not banned from the ballot because of legal troubles is even less likely than before. As the Mueller investigation went on, and as those close to the president found themselves in legal jeopardy (such as Paul Manafort, Michael Cohen, and Michael Flynn), it seemed reasonable to at least hold open the possibility that the Mueller probe could eventually lead to Trump having to resign because of it. But with the president now apparently out of legal jeopardy, at least with respect to the Mueller inquiry, the president appears nearly certain to be reelected.

That's not to say Trump is guaranteed to be free and clear on any and all legal questions. Let's not forget all those other investigations of Trump that are ongoing. He's lived on the legal edge for decades. Something big could happen on this front between now and the election, and Democrats will of course continue to exercise their oversight powers in the House of Representatives to investigate Trump and his family. But our best guess is that any report from the actual Mueller report, would provide political fodder against the president, as opposed to legal fodder.

Even then, previous bombshells from the Mueller probe have not caused sizable changes in the president's approval rating, which has been very steady over time (his approval is generally in the low-to-mid 40s and disapproval is generally in the low 50s). While there might be a temporary bump, we doubt that the Barr summary will cause some sort of major, enduring change in the president's approval. We just don't think there are enough Trump disapprovers who disapproved of him mainly based on the Mueller probe and will now consistently approve of him.

Additionally, it will be very surprising if a majority of House Democrats pursue impeachment in the wake of the Mueller report. Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi threw cold water on the idea even before the Mueller inquiry concluded, and any impeachment proceeding is deadlier than dead in the GOP-controlled Senate, barring some massive new bombshell Republican opinion of the president.

2. Trump remains an overwhelming favorite for renomination by Republicans as their presidential nominee. We've long noted that Trump's strong approval ratings among Republicans would make it very difficult for any Republican to challenge Trump successfully. One thing that could have potentially hurt Trump's odds, and emboldened a GOP opponent, could have been a clear conclusion of illegal behavior by Trump about Russian interference in the 2016 election. Whatever the full Mueller report says, that apparently is not a conclusion Mueller reached.

While Trump may have at least one primary challenger – former Massachusetts Gov. William Weld, who also was Gary Johnson's running mate on the Libertarian ticket in 2016 – no one would consider Weld a top-tier challenger. This is good for the president as he seeks a sign of weakness even if a president is otherwise re-nominated, as Presidents Ford (1976), Carter (1980), and Bush-41 (1992) discovered.

3. The fate of the Trump administration is in the hands of the voters in November 2020. As usual, the presidential outcome will depend heavily on factors beyond the full control of anyone, such as the state of the economy. Democrats only control who they nominate and what they emphasize in the campaign. The long campaign can give them the opportunity to size up the contenders and (they hope) choose the one with the best chance against Trump. Or they could pick another George McGovern, Walter Mondale, or Michael Dukakis, weak nominees, all. The message and the messenger will be critical. The Democrats did not really run on the Mueller probe in the 2018 campaign, and for the most part, the 2020 candidates haven't really been doing that either. Now the Democratic contenders will certainly not do so, though other investigations of Trump may bear fruit and become campaign fodder.

The election year 2020 should be a close, competitive, high-turnout election with both sides energized, given what we know today. But lots of factors can tilt the result one way or another. What's not going to change is Donald Trump. ❖

Michael Gerson, Washington Post: There are times when President Trump manages to be so wrong — so empirically groundless, so logically fallacious, so stridently uninformed — that it seems like a form of parody. But more often than not, this is alarming ignorance. The mask of a barroom political crank turns out to be the face of the president of the United States. Such appears to be the case in Trump's recent threat to cut off hundreds of millions of dollars in foreign assistance to El Salvador, Guatemala and Honduras — countries known as the Northern Triangle of Central America — as punishment for their failure to stem migration from the United States. To make this action a rational one, Trump must imagine that foreign aid is nothing more than cash loaded onto cargo planes and dropped on the presidential compounds of corrupt rulers as reward for subservience to U.S. interests. So he wants to cancel the deliveries until they do what we wish. The reality of foreign assistance is very different. It is seldom given directly to foreign governments. The work is often contracted to nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) that work in partnership with locals. And it is generally designed to improve conditions within foreign countries that can give rise to global threats. This role is obvious, say, in the case of infectious diseases. It is better to deal with an Ebola outbreak as close as possible to the source, rather than waiting for the threat to arrive in Georgia or Kansas. But this is equally true when it comes to refugees. ❖

David Brooks, New York Times: Why are people so in love with the mayor of South Bend, Ind., who almost nobody had heard of until he did a CNN Town Hall on March 10? It's important to remember that when Democrats vote next year, they'll not only be choosing a policy alternative to Donald Trump, they'll also be making a statement about what kind of country they want America to be. The Trump era has been all about dissolving moral norms and waging vicious attacks. This has been an era of culture war, class warfare and identity politics. It's been an era in which call-out culture, reality TV melodrama and tribal grandstanding have overshadowed policymaking and the challenges of actually governing. The Buttigieg surge suggests that there are a lot of Democrats who want to say goodbye to all that. They don't want the divisiveness with moral clarity and divisiveness. They don't want the divisiveness with another kind of identity politics. They are sick of the moral melodrama altogether. They just want a person who is more about governing than virtue-signaling, more about friendliness and basic decency than media circus and rhetorical war. Buttigieg's secret is that he transcends many of the tensions that run through our society in a way that makes people on all sides feel comfortable. First, he is young and represents the rising generation, but he is also an older person's idea of what a young person should be. He'd be millennial president, but Buttigieg doesn't buy into the stereotypes that have been peddled to America's young people. Second, he is grateful for the progress made by the LGBTQ movement, but he doesn't do so in a way that feels threatening or transgressive to social conservatives. He has conservative family values; it's just that his spouse is a husband, not a wife. He speaks comfortably about his faith and says that when he goes to church he prefers a conservative liturgy to anything experimental. Third, he is a localist and a Washington outsider, but he carries no populist resentment and can easily speak the language of the coastal elite. Buttigieg has spent his political career in Indiana. He wasn't alive when the Studebaker plant shut down in South Bend, but he has the trauma of Midwestern deindustrialization in his bones. On the other hand, he was friends with Mark Zuckerberg at Harvard and thrived as a corporate consultant. Finally, he's a progressive on policy issues, but he doesn't sound like an angry revolutionary. Buttigieg's policy positions are not all that different from the moral compromises of his predecessors. But he eschews grandiosity. ❖

William McGurn, Wall Street Journal: Thanks to two lucky breaks, Hillary Clinton got away with political murder in 2016. The biggest break came when opposition research produced by one of her hired hands ended up being used by the FBI to spy on her Republican rival's campaign and feed accusations of Russia collusion. But she'd also lucked out in early July when the FBI director himself, even though he lacked the authority to do so, publicly and personally cleared her of any charges for having taken her emails as secretary of state off-grid. This weekend Sen. Lindsey Graham told Fox News that the two cases point to a glaring double standard between how the Clinton and Trump investigations went down. Mr. Graham added that he's not alone. Attorney General William Barr, he said, is "pretty upset" by the way the Justice Department dealt with the Clinton investigation. "I want a prosecutor to look at this, not a politician," said Sen. Graham, hinting there may yet be criminal consequences. But not for Mrs. Clinton. And as disappointing as this may be for the lock-her-up crowd, that's a good thing. In practical terms, the challenges to prosecuting Mrs. Clinton and her associates are formidable. The statute of limitations on lying and the immunity agreements her associates received are only some of the obstacles. Even more dispositive, criminally prosecuting an election loser isn't going to help a nation that needs to move beyond 2016. But Mr. Graham isn't calling for Mrs. Clinton in prison stripes. He's after something more fundamental. What he wants is for the American people to appreciate that men and women at the top of the nation's intelligence and law-enforcement agencies abused the power of their respective offices. ❖

Sec. Perdue against closing Mex border

WEST LAFAYETTE — U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Sonny Perdue eral trade questions while visiting Purdue University Tuesday morning including numerous inquiries about the potential economic impacts of the southern border crisis (Indiana Public Media). Mexico is one of the U.S.'s closest trading partners, with more than $1 billion worth of goods passing across the border each day. Perdue says while immigration reform is needed, shutting down the border, as President Donald Trump has threatened, would hurt American farmers. "I certainly hope we can get this Mexican border issues solved without closing the borders," says Perdue. "That would be devastating to both of our dairy, pork and corn industries in that way." He also addressed the nation's trade dispute with China and its effect on Hoosier farmers during the visit. Perdue says farmers are anxious as they try to k

Lightfoot wins Chicago mayor

CHICAGO — Lori Lightfoot won a resounding victory Tuesday rican-

American woman and openly gay person elected mayor of Chicago, dealing a stinging defeat to a political establishment that has reigned over City Hall for decades (Ruthart, Chicago Tribune). After waging a campaign focused on upending the vaunted Chicago political machine, Lightfoot dismantled one of its major cogs by dispatching Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle, whose candidacy had been hobbled in part by an anti-incumbent mood among voters and an ongoing federal corruption investigation at City Hall. "Today, you did more than make history," Lightfoot told hundreds of supporters at the Hilton Chicago on Tuesday night. "You created a movement for change." With roughly 97 percent of the city's precincts reporting, Lightfoot had swept all 50 of Chicago's wards, winning 74 per ote to 26 percent for Preckwinkle.

Winnecke says his city is changing

EVANSVILLE — Mayor Lloyd Winnecke said Tuesday during his State of the City address that Evansville is stronger than ever and growing in terms of infrastructure, partnerships and quality of life initiatives (Evansville Courier & Press). The nearly hour-long address was spent touting project completions, new job opportunities, tourism and housing opportunities and referencing a few city-wide challenges. "Our city is changing," Winnecke said.

House panel passes extraterritorial bill

INDIANAPOLIS — A bill limiting the regulatory powers of small towns and cities passed out of an Indiana House committee Tuesday. The legislation would prevent boards from halting developments within four miles of their city limits due to health and safety concerns (Indiana Public Media). Debate has centered on wind farms, particularly proposals in Montgomery and Henry counties. Wind companies argue the four-mile radius limits the amount of land they can develop, while opponents say the so-called extraterritorial powers help mitigate concerns about perceived health risks caused by turbines. Sen. Phil Boots (R-Crawfordsville) is one of the bill's authors. He says the primary goal is to allow for a more representative and simpler government. "That's all I'm trying to accomplish," Boots says. "To make sure we understand who has the authority and who doesn't."

Ignatius recalls Khashoggi courage

TERRE HAUTE — David Ignatius knew Jamal Khashoggi, not just as a colleague at the Washington Post, but as a f in 2003, and Ignatius loved talking Mideast politics with Khashoggi (Loughlin, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). On Tuesday, exactly six months after Khashoggi was killed, apparently at the hands of a Saudi strike team inside the Saudi consulate in Turkey on Oct. 2, Ignatius delivered the inaugural Jamal Khashoggi annual address on Journalism and the Media at Indiana State University. "Jamal was a courageous man who just couldn't stop telling the truth as he saw it. He knew that he was in danger," Ignatius said. Khashoggi knew the Saudi government regarded him as a threat and even conducted a campaign on social media attacking him. Sometimes, like any human being, Khashoggi wondered "if he should pull back and whether the risk he was taking was just too great," Ignatius said. No matter the risk, "He was not a man who could suppress what he believed was true." Ignatius said he was "thrilled" to deliver the inaugural address. "It meant a lot for me to be here," he said. "I can't think of a better way to honor him," especially since Khashoggi graduated from Indiana State in 1983. For President Trump to describe the press as "the enemy of the people, I

" Ignatius said.

HOUSE REPUBLICANS PUSH FOR MORATORIUM ON NEW POWER PLANTS: In a sudden legislative move that is raising alarms for utilities and environmentalists alike, Indiana Republicans want to put a moratorium on new, large power plants just as several large electrical providers are gearing up to retire aging coal-fired generating units and replace them with renewable energy and natural gas (Russell, IBJ). The House Utilities Committee passed an amendment along party lines Wednesday that would prohibit state regulators from approving any new power plants, new power contracts or changes in fuel sources until Jan. 1, 2021. The moratorium would apply to generating capacity larger than 250 megawatts, meaning huge generating plants. The measure also would require the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission to conduct a comprehensive study of the transition away from coal to other fuel sources, including their impact on the electrical grid. Rep. Ed Soliday, the committee's chairman, introduced the amendment, saying the state needs to take a close look at whether a big shift from coal to natural gas and renewables would throw the grid out of balance, make it less reliable or less resilient. He said the moratorium has the support of Gov. Eric Holcomb. The committee passed the amendment without taking any testimony. It must still go before the full House and the Senate for a vote. The move comes just a few months after two major utilities announced plans to retire much of their coal-fired generating capacity and shift to cheaper fuel sources, and other utilities are still drawing up plans for how they will generate power. Utilities can sometimes qualify for millions of dollars in tax credits if they switch to cleaner energy. "We're very concerned about this," said Mark Maassel, president of the Indiana Energy Association, which represents large, investor-owned utilities. "The interruption of the normal flow of things at the utility regulatory commission is problematic for us." He added that his association has expressed its concerns to Soliday.

HATE CRIME BATTLES CONTINUE: The legislative battle over Indiana's hate crimes law is over, but the battle over what it means may be just beginning. The hate-crime watchdog Anti-Defamation League issued a statement calling the law inadequate and unacceptable, because it doesn't include age, gender or gender identity. Governor Holcomb suggests the ADL has moved the goalposts (Berman, WIBC). He says the ADL called for a bill with a specific list of protected groups, and that's what legislators passed, allowing judges to impose longer sentences for crimes targeting those groups. House Speaker Brian Bosma (R-Indianapolis) says the ADL has political motivations for not supporting the law, and says if the ADL doesn't take Indiana off its list of states without a law, the list means nothing. He says 21 states whose laws the organization does recognize covers the same groups as Indiana's law, or fewer. Holcomb and Bosma note there are other groups which track state-by-state hate crime laws. Bosma says he expects the National Council of State Legislatures to take Indiana off its list of states without one. All states with hate crime laws include racial, religious and ethnic prejudice. Indiana joins 30 states whose laws address crimes targeting sexual orientation. Holcomb says he hopes and expects businesses will point to the law to show prospective workers Indiana is a welcoming state. He says even the groups which aren't listed specifically are covered by wording which extends the law to any other identifiable characteristic. Critics charge that language is too vague -- the American Civil Liberties Union contends it makes the law unconstitutional. Other groups argue even if it's legally sound, it undermines the rest of the law by putting decades of racially-tinged violence on a par with distinctions like wearing a rival sports team's jersey.

PENCE PUSHES TRADE DEAL IN INDIANA AS FARMERS EXPRESS URGENCY: Vice President Mike Pence returned to central Indiana Thursday to talk with Hoosier farmers and other members of the agricultural community. He landed in Indianapolis around 3 p.m. then headed for Lamb Farms, Inc. in Boone County to discuss the potential impact of the U.S. - Mexico - Canada Agreement, specifically for the business and agricultural communities (WTHR-TV). President Donald Trump has touted the agreement as the replacement for NAFTA. "We don't have time. We need to move," one man told Pence. Another asked the vice president not to "forget rural America." Pence said, "There's real urgency here. Farmers ... have been feeling the weight of low commodity prices. They've been burning through capital, burning through equity." Congress has not yet ratified it. One of the farmers who gathered for the event asked Pence to do what he could to ensure a deal gets done soon for both Mexico and Canada because they don't expect to export as much to China as they once did, even if every embargo gets lifted. "We need all of them together," he said, to ensure the next generation of farmers has a broad enough consumer base to keep operating. Numerous people who got to speak mentioned wanting to see tariffs reduced or removed on a wide range of agricultural products. After hearing from all of the Indiana farmers and pork producers who came to speak, Pence addressed them all saying, "The president and I are absolutely determined to see the USMCA completed and ratified by the United States Congress this spring." Miami County farmer Steve Maple said his livelihood depends on opening up export markets in Canada, Mexico, China and Japan (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). "It's time that we get things done," he said. "At least (Pence) is listening. That's important." Lt. Gov. Suzanne Crouch accompanied Pence because Gov. Eric Holcomb was out of town.

TRUMP BACKS OFF THREAT TO CLOSE BORDER: President Donald Trump eased off his threat to shut down the U.S.-Mexico border, instead giving Mexico a "one-year warning" and threatening to first impose auto tariffs before closing the border (Politico). "The only thing frankly better, but less drastic than closing the border, is to tariff the cars coming in," he told reporters at the White House on Thursday. "We're going to give them a one-year warning and if the drugs don't stop or largely stop, we'll put tariffs on Mexico and products, in particular cars." Trump's shift comes days after he said he would close the border as soon as this week if Mexican leaders were unable to stem the flow of migrants crossing into the U.S.

TRUMP JABS AT BIDEN, IGNORING HIS OWN HISTORY WITH WOMEN: President Trump, ignoring his own troubled history with women and bragging about sexual misconduct, went after Joseph R. Biden Jr. via Twitter on Thursday, posting a video that mocked the former vice president for his handsy approach to politicking (New York Times). "The 15-second clip tweeted Thursday by Mr. Trump — accompanied by the text, 'WELCOME BACK JOE!' — doctored a homemade video that Mr. Biden had released the day before, in which the former vice president addressed his history of physical contact with women, some of whom have come forward in recent weeks to say his intimate behavior made them uncomfortable. As Mr. Biden speaks to the camera, a pair of hands appears on his shoulders, and then a cartoonish image of Mr. Biden's head pops up from behind a couch and intimately nuzzles the back of the former vice president's head. For a week, Mr. Trump's advisers have been watching the spectacle surrounding the accusations that Mr. Biden has touched women inappropriately with something like glee." @JoeBiden replies to Trump's tweet: "I see that you are on the job and presidential, as always."

INITIATIVE AIMS AT INDIANA'S HIGH INFANT MORTALITY RATE: Working the day shift at a children's hospital, Dr. Jennifer Walthall received the call she dreads — an infant in cardiac arrest. Despite staff efforts, the 4-week-old infant died, becoming one of Indiana's first 2019 infant mortality statistics. Walthall met with the mother and learned she had to go back to work when her child was 3 weeks old. The mother was working two jobs (Euvino, NWI Times). From that experience Walthall, secretary for the Indiana Family and Social Services Administration, learned, "I have a lot of work to do." Offering concluding remarks at the First Ladies Luncheon on infant mortality in Indiana on Thursday at ArtHouse in Gary, Walthall told an audience of 150 physicians, health care providers, social service agencies, business leaders, and government officials, "It's going to take all of us. The village is you, it's me. I know the collaboration is here, because you're here." Hosted by Indiana first lady Janet Holcomb, the luncheon meeting is the first gathering this year in four counties around the state following last year's initial First Ladies Luncheon at the Indiana Black Expo in Indianapolis. "We're all here because of a shared goal, to be part of something bigger than ourselves," Holcomb said, noting her husband, Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb, has set a goal of reducing Indiana's infant mortality rate to 6 deaths per 1,000 live births by 2024. While the current U.S. infant mortality rate is 5.79, the rate for Indiana is 7.3. Among African-American Hoosiers, the rate is 15.3; for Hispanics, 7.6; and for whites, 5.9.

SCHOOL SAFETY BILL CHANGED AFTER PELLET ISSUE: A state Senate panel has amended a school safety bill after teachers were shot with plastic pellets during active-shooter training at an elementary school in northern Indiana (AP). The amendment would bar the firing of projectiles at teachers, school employees or students during any drill or training. The Senate education committee amended the bill Wednesday and it now proceeds to the Senate appropriations committee, the Indianapolis Star reported. The Indiana State Teachers Association requested the amendment following a training exercise in January at Meadowlawn Elementary School in Monticello. Instructors fired on the teachers, saying it demonstrated what would happen if they weren't proactive in responding to an active shooter. Educators were left with welts, bruises and abrasions. The exercise went too far, lawmakers said. The school's educators were supposed to be receiving ALICE training, an "options-based" practice that aims to influence students and teachers to be more proactive in their response to an active shooter. The training also included strategies such as rushing a prospective shooter. ALICE is an acronym for Alert, Lockdown, Inform, Counter and Evacuate.

INDY'S PLETHORA OF POT HOLES CONTINUE TO STEAM MERRITT: Everybody gets mad about potholes in Indianapolis... everybody. But nobody seems madder about them than Jim Merritt. "I mean look at that, cones that are in the potholes themselves, so you avoid them...in the potholes!" said Merritt (Donaldson, CBS4). Merritt doesn't blame the Indianapolis weather. Instead, he blames the city's mayor. "It does make me mad, because it could have been avoided," said Merritt. Jim Merritt's political career is now closely tied to the condition of Indy's pockmarked streets. The long-time Republican state legislator is running for mayor against incumbent Joe Hogsett and potholes are issue number one. "We're really have a difficult time because there was no preventative maintenance, we just didn't prepare for this," said Merritt. Merritt doesn't give specifics on how he would maintain the streets better than Hogsett, at least not yet. But he is convinced that he could do a better job. "You know what? Right now it's just not good enough, we deserve better," said Merritt.

COACH MCGRAW MAKES CASE FOR WOMEN: Notre Dame Coach Muffet McGraw has been on the Final Four stage nine times in her career. She has answered hundreds of questions about her team, about her rivalry with Connecticut's Geno Auriemma, about the state of women's basketball. But her news conference on Thursday was different. It was passionate, and it was personal. Muffet McGraw has had enough (New York Times). Enough of the declining percentage of women coaching women's basketball teams. Enough of the limited female representation in Congress. Enough of confining gender roles. Enough of the gender pay gap. "Men run the world. Men have the power. Men make the decisions. It's always the man that is the stronger one," McGraw said, her voice rising in response to a question about saying in a recent ThinkProgress article that she would not hire another man for her coaching staff. "When these girls are coming out, who are they looking up to to tell them that's not the way it has to be?" McGraw continued. "Where better to do that than in sports? All these millions of girls that play sports across the country, we're teaching them great things about life skills, but wouldn't it be great if we could teach them to watch how women lead?"

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: There's always one really nutty, zany move in the General Assembly and Rep. Soliday may have come up with this year's doozy, amending an unrelated bill to push a moratorium on new power plants. What a stupid, stupid move that should be immediately rejected. Market forces, not ideology, are pushing Hoosier utilities into renewable energy and away from coal. - Brian A. Howey

BUTTIGIEG MAKES THE CASE FOR MAYOR IN WHITE HOUSE: South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg appeared on ABC's "Good Morning America" and said it makes sense for a mayor to be in the White House (Howey Politics Indiana). "I would argue that the experience of a mayor of a city of any size is about as relevant as it gets," Buttigieg said. "I get that it's more traditional if I were to spend years or maybe decades marinating in Washington but... I actually think we'd be better off if Washington started looking more like our best run cities and towns and not the other way around. You know as a mayor I've found myself dealing with issues ranging from economic development puzzles to phone calls in the middle of the night about a disaster; everything from comic parks and recreation controversies to searingly urgent issues like racially sensitive officer involved shootings. All of that comes a mayor's way."

GAY POLITICIANS RISING: The quick rise of Chicago mayor-elect Lori Lightfoot, and Pete Buttigieg in the 2020 race, shows remarkable progress by gay and lesbian politicians, with their sexual orientation getting less play than other historic qualities (Allen, Axios). Both Lightfoot and Buttigieg have talked comfortably about LGBT issues and their own same-sex marriages, AP's David Crary writes. "The real news is not that openly gay candidates are successful, but that being openly gay has become irrelevant," said Richard Socarides, a former Clinton White House adviser on gay issues. This continues progress from last year's midterms, when LGBTQ candidates scored a raft of wins, including two governorships and first-ever legislative seats in Indiana, Kansas and Nebraska. It was only in 1998 that Tammy Baldwin of Wisconsin became the first openly gay person to gain a seat in the House of Representatives, AP reports: There are now eight LGBT members of the House, and two in the Senate — Baldwin and Arizona's Kyrsten Sinema, whose bisexuality never became an issue in her closely contested election campaign last year. Lightfoot's victory on Tuesday, along with Satya Rhodes-Conway's win in Madison, Wisc., brings the number of LGBT mayors to 37, according to the LGBTQ Victory Fund. In Colorado, Jared Polis was inaugurated in January as the nation's first openly gay governor. Buttigieg's husband, Chasten, has amassed 182,000 Twitter followers with cheerful, wry commentary about their relationship and their dogs.

TERRE HAUTE COUNCIL CANDIDATE GETS FELONY REMOVED: A candidate for Terre Haute City Council has succeeded in getting a more than 20-year-old felony conviction expunged. "Game on!" Ryan Leroy Carter, 43, said Thursday in response to action by a Marion County judge to remove from his record two counts of theft to which he plead guilty in 1996, at age 20 (Taylor, CNHI). The charges involved possession of stolen property and Carter was sentenced to probation and 80 hours of community service. Carter said he thought terms of his plea agreement called for the convictions to be removed from his record in a couple of years. However, his past caught up with him after he was hired in December as a correctional officer at the Vigo County Jail. While initially undetected, the county's human resources department found the conviction through a public records database on Jan. 16. He had filed his candidacy for City Council in the Democratic Party on Jan. 9, but no one challenged him until after the deadline to remove him from the ballot had passed.

VANDEBURGH COMMISSIONERS INCREASE POLL WORKER PAY: To combat low participation for election day poll workers, Vanderburgh County Commissioners approved a resolution to increase poll worker pay (Stubbs, Evansville Courier & Press). Commissioners unanimously approved the resolution at Tuesday's meeting. Vanderburgh County Republican Party Chairman Wayne Parke told commissioners Civic Center employees willingly worked the polls in election day's past. "Civic Center employees have a paid holiday for elections," he said. "The intent was that those employees would be able to work at the polls ... It wasn't such a difficult thing to get people to work." In recent elections, however, only 15 or 20 Republican Civic Center employees volunteered to work the polls at current wages, Parke said. "It's important to get good people," he said. "The problem is the low wage rates."

9 SCHOOL DISTRICTS SEEKING FUNDS VIA REFERENDUM: Nine Indiana school districts are asking voters to increase funding for education this May, the latest sign that many school systems are relying on referendums to supplement the money they receive from the state (AP). Five of the districts seeking additional operating funds, including two in Marion County, are returning to voters after winning previous tax measures this decade. Two districts are making their first requests. If voters approve property tax increases, the money can be used for a host of expenses, including to boost teacher salaries, fund special programs, or keep existing budgets afloat despite declining revenue. Two districts outside Marion County are seeking capital referendums to help pay for building improvements. The election is May 7. At least two other Marion County districts, Beech Grove and Lawrence, plan to seek referendums in November.

DISTRICTS SEEKING OPERATING FUNDS: Here are the nine districts seeking tax increases: Operating referendums — Duneland School Corporation, Porter County; — Elkhart Community Schools, Elkhart County; Franklin Community School Corporation, Johnson County; Frontier School Corporation, White County; MSD Decatur Township, Marion County; MSD Wayne Township, Marion County; River Forest Community School Corporation, Lake County; DISTRICTS SEEKING CAPITAL FUNDS: DeKalb County Central United School District, Steuben County; Hanover Community School Corporation, Lake County.

REP. RYAN ANNOUNCES FOR PRESIDENCY: Rep. Tim Ryan of Ohio announced Thursday that he is running for president — the newest name in a still-growing 2020 field of Democratic candidates that boasts more than a baker's dozen (NBC News). Ryan keynoted the 2018 Indiana Democratic convention. Ryan, who made the announcement on the web just before appearing on ABC's daytime talk show "The View" to discuss his candidacy, will hold an official campaign kickoff rally with local union leaders in Youngstown, Ohio, on Saturday afternoon, his campaign said — a celebration of his longstanding ties with the working-class community and an indication of the kind of labor-friendly campaign he plans to wage. When asked by reporters outside the show what sets him apart from other Democrats running for president, Ryan pointed to his ideas to rehabilitate the economy, adding that thinks he can win the Rust Belt states that President Donald Trump flipped in 2016. "I believe in the free enterprise system," Ryan added. "I think we're not going to solve these national problems without them, but I also believe that we need to reform government and get the government working because I think government can be instrumental."

General Assembly

CASINO BILL TO GET HEARING NEXT WEEK: A gambling bill that could put a casino in Terre Haute is set for a hearing in the Indiana House next week. Senate Bill 552 is now scheduled to go before the House Ways and Means Committee at 9 a.m. Tuesday, April 9, in Statehouse Room 404 (Taylor, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). The bill has undergone plenty of changes since it was introduced and is likely to see more revisions, gaming experts and legislative observers say. Senate Bill 552, by Sens. Mark Messmer of Jasper and Jon Ford of Terre Haute, both Republicans, has cleared the Senate. However, life got more complicated for the bill and for the Terre Haute area's effort to land a casino after action in late March by the House Public Policy Committee. In amendments, that committee added provisions for a $100 million fee to relocate one of two Gary casinos inland and a provision to surrender a second license and compete with other operators for a Terre Haute license — a move that might require another fee of $50 million or more. The lead partners in Spectacle are Terre Haute businessman Greg Gibson and former Centaur Gaming CEO Rod Ratcliff. Gibson and Spectacle's lobbyist have indicated the company opposes the amendments made in House Public Policy, including the $100 million fee. Ford said the measure is going before Ways and Means to address tax and fiscal issues. "I think it will come out of there in good shape for our community," he said.

SENATE PANEL AMENDS SCHOOL SAFETY BILL: A state Senate panel has amended a school safety bill after teachers were shot with plastic pellets during active-shooter training at an elementary school in northern Indiana. The amendment would bar the firing of projectiles at teachers, school employees or students during any drill or training (AP). The Indiana State Teachers Association requested the amendment following the training exercise in January at Meadowlawn Elementary School in Monticello. Instructors fired on the teachers, saying it demonstrated what would happen if they weren't proactive in responding to an active shooter. Educators were left with welts, bruises and abrasions. Lawmakers say the exercise went too far.

3RD OPTION FOR SCHOOL SAFETY BILL: A proposal moving forward at the statehouse would allow school districts to ask voters for a property tax increase specifically to pay for school safety projects (Lindsay, Indiana Public Media). School corporations can ask voters to approve two types of referenda, to fund construction projects or, general operations. Many districts have included school safety improvements as part of the reason for their referendum proposals, along with other expenses like teacher pay, but the House Ways and Means Committee approved a bill this week to let schools ask for tax hikes for safety costs alone. Sen. Travis Holdman (R-Markle) authored the bill and announced he would make the move last summer. He said in a hearing last month it should be an option even if not all schools want to use it. "This isn't intended to be an answer for all school corporations," he says, "but I think there are a fair number who could utilize it." House Ways and Means co-chair Tim Brown (R-Crawfordsville) voted in favor of the bill in committee, but says creating a third referendum option may be unnecessary. "At this time I feel this bill is a little bit redundant because we do have an operating and construction levy referendums out there," he says.

COACH DISCIPLINE BILL PASSES SENATE: Senate lawmakers approved legislation Thursday that ensures Indiana law deals with how volunteer coaches at high schools are disciplined. State law already governs how coaches who are employees of a high school are treated when fired for criminal acts or misconduct. But the law didn't contemplate volunteers (Smith, Indiana Public Media). Legislation sponsored by Sen. Randy Head (R-Logansport) puts volunteer coaches on par with high school employees – and ensures the state Department of Education knows when those coaches are fired for bad or criminal behavior. "The bill requires schools to notify the department and the department to keep a list of those people so if they try to get hired at another school, we know what's going on," Head says.

HOUSE ETHICS PANEL HIRES ATTORNEY IN BOSMA CASE: The Indiana House Ethics Committee has hired an outside attorney to investigate allegations that House Speaker Brian Bosma used campaign funds to collect unflattering information about a former intern who claims she had a sexual encounter with him decades ago (Indiana Public Media). House Ethics Chairwoman Sharon Negele tells The Indianapolis Star that Indianapolis attorney Bonnie Martin was hired to conduct an "independent review" of the allegations. The Star reports Martin has interviewed the former intern and relatives. Those interviews are the first sign the panel is taking steps to investigate a complaint filed last year after the newspaper reported that Bosma paid a law firm more than $40,000 in campaign funds to gather information about the woman. Bosma, a married Republican lawmaker, denies having the 1992 encounter with the woman.

BILL WOULD LIMIT PET OWNERSHIP BY ABUSERS: A bill that would bar Indiana residents convicted of crimes involving animal abuse from owning a cat or dog while on probation or parole is headed to Gov. Eric Holcomb's desk. House members voted 90-0 Tuesday to send the bill to Holcomb, who's expected to sign it into law. The measure passed the Senate, 49-0, in February. The NWI Times reports the legislation would bar anyone convicted of one of 13 animal abuse offenses, including animal fighting, from owning, harboring or training a dog or cat for the duration of their probation or parole. Republican state Sen. Ron Alting of Lafayette says he filed the measure after several county prosecutors told him it's needed to prevent repeated instances of animal abuse by people with a history of harming animals.

CIG TAX PROPONENTS KEEP WORKING: This week, Jeffrey Slinker was among a group of Hoosiers seeking a $2-a-pack increase in cigarette taxes, up from 99.5 cents. Such an increase could raise $358 million in new revenue for the state during its first year. Tobacco use kills 30 Hoosiers a day, amounting to 11,000 deaths a year, officials said (Miley, CNHI). Legislators have discussed increasing the cigarette tax but have taken no action this session. The General Assembly's last day, known as sine die, is at the end of April. "We need to raise the level of urgency that this year is the year to do it, this is the year to raise the cigarette tax. In a budget year, things aren't dead until sine die," said Nick Torres of the American Lung Association, whose mother died from a smoking-related illness. Indiana ranks 44th for its percentage of smokers and 41st for overall health, a drop of three spots since last year. "Our entire health rankings as a state went down last year primarily because of the fact that our tobacco use went up," said Dr. Paul Halverson, founding dean of the Indiana University Richard M. Fairbanks School of Public Health.

Congress

YOUNG SEEKS TO RESTORE VENEZUELA DEMOCRACY: U.S. Senator Todd Young (R-Ind.) joined Senators Bob Menendez (D-N.J.), Marco Rubio (R-Fla.), and 12 other Senators to introduce new bipartisan legislation to help restore democracy and address the humanitarian crisis in Venezuela (Howey Politics Indiana). The most comprehensive effort to date to confront the crisis in Venezuela, the Venezuela Emergency Relief, Democracy Assistance and Development (VERDAD) Act drastically increases humanitarian assistance, expands current tools to address kleptocracy, formally recognizes and supports the Interim President of Venezuela's efforts to restore democracy and prosperity in the country, and accelerates planning with international financial institutions to advance the country's post-Maduro reconstruction. "The Maduro regime has created a humanitarian crisis and turned the proud nation of Venezuela into a land of deep suffering. I am proud to join with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to introduce this comprehensive bill that will ease human suffering, sanction human rights abusers and narco-traffickers, and help restore the Rule of Law and democracy in Venezuela," said Senator Young. "With a Hoosier in custody in Venezuela, the pain of this regime reaches all the way to Indiana. It's time to stand with the people of Venezuela and hold those in power accountable." Todd Leininger from Bloomington has been imprisoned in Venezuela since April 2014 when he was convicted by a Venezuelan court in the midst of anti-government protests. Many questions remain over the due process afforded to Leininger during that trial. Additionally, in November 2018, a San Cristobal court ordered Leininger's release, yet the Venezuelan authorities have refused to comply with the order.

YOUNG ANNOUNCES BIPARTISAN NURSING BILL: U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R-Ind.) and Doug Jones (D-Ala.) introduced the Nursing Where It's Needed (Nursing WIN) Act, bipartisan legislation that would address the high demand for qualified nurses in underserved areas. Specifically, the bill would allow nurses at health care facilities with critical nursing shortages to benefit from the NURSE Corps Loan Repayment Program, regardless of the facility's tax status (Howey Politics Indiana). "In the coming years, our nation will face a critical nursing shortage as baby boomers age into retirement and require more healthcare services. Shortages are already being felt in our underserved rural and urban areas who are in dire need of caregivers," said Senator Young. "We must address this lack of qualified professionals now by incentivizing nurses to practice in the communities where they are needed most."

YOUNG TO ADDRESS JAYCEES: U.S. Senator Todd Young (R-Ind.) will deliver a keynote speech at the United States Junior Chamber (commonly known as JCI USA or Jaycees) Convention in Indianapolis Friday.

BANKS SLAMS DEMOCRATIC PLAN TO RAISE SPENDING CAPS: Republican Study Committee (RSC) Chairman Mike Johnson (R-La.) and RSC Budget and Spending Task Force Chairman Jim Banks (R-Ind.) released the following statement after House Democrats' decision to forgo producing a budget proposal and instead raise the discretionary spending caps to the tune of $2 trillion over 10 years (Howey Politics Indiana): "Rather than focusing on our ballooning federal debt, currently $22 trillion and counting, and releasing a budget resolution, Democrats have decided to ignore their responsibilities and drive us further into the hole. Their proposal to raise the discretionary spending caps not only fails to address America's increasingly dangerous fiscal situation but highlights just how out-of-touch the Left has become. Moreover, their contention that providing for national security in some way obligates unnecessary spending on non-defense programs is patently absurd. "President Trump is right – Congress cannot maintain the status quo by continuing to push irresponsible caps deals. We stand with the president and look forward to releasing our own balanced budget that will promote many of our shared priorities and restore fiscal sanity to the legislative process."

DRUG POLICY GROUP COMMENTS ON PRICING LEGISLATION: The Campaign for Sustainable Rx Pricing (CSRxP) today released a statement after the U.S. House Energy & Commerce Committee advanced a series of bipartisan drug pricing measures, including the CREATES Act, Purple Book Continuity Act of 2019, Orange Book Transparency Act of 2019 and Protecting Consumer Access to Generic Drugs Act of 2019 (Howey Politics Indiana): "The bipartisan advancement of these important measures signals a major victory for Americans patients is on the horizon," said CSRxP executive director Lauren Aronson. "We applaud members of the Energy & Commerce Committee for their leadership in advancing the CREATES Act, Purple Book Continuity Act of 2019, Orange Book Transparency Act of 2019 and Protecting Consumer Access to Generic Drugs Act of 2019 and encourage House leaders to swiftly bring the measures to the floor for a vote. We also commend the administration for supporting the CREATES Act and the Protecting Consumer Access to Generic Drugs Act of 2019, also known as pay-for-delay."

STATEHOUSE: LAWSON WARNS OF DECEPTIVE LETTER - Secretary of State Connie Lawson announced that some Indiana businesses have received a deceptive letter that may appear to come from the office's Business Services Division. The letter is attempting to solicit Indiana business owners. It is not from the Secretary of State's office (Howey Politics Indiana). The letter informs the business that Indiana law requires a business entity report to be filed every two years and if it is not filed there may be penalties. In the middle of the page, it says the letter is from a private business that will assist in filing your business entity report for you. It is legal for businesses to make this offering, but many business owners think complying with the letter is mandatory. Secretary Lawson is concerned businesses may be confused by the letter and may believe responding to it substitutes the need for filing a business entity report, which is required by state law. Businesses operating in Indiana can securely file their business entity report online at INBiz.in.gov. There is a $10 charge for non-profits to file on INBiz and a $20 charge for for-profits. The deceptive letter charges $107 to file the report for you. Businesses wishing to check the validity of any mailing from the Indiana Secretary of State should contact the INBiz help desk at atinbiz@mail.inbiz.in.gov or (317) 234-9768.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP NOMINATES CAIN FOR FED - President Trump said Thursday he intends to nominate former GOP presidential candidate Herman Cain to the Federal Reserve's board of governors, signaling his desire to remake the nation's central bank after complaining about it for months (Wall Street Journal). The selection of Mr. Cain, following the president's decision to nominate his former campaign adviser Stephen Moore, marks an effort to install two Fed critics and loyal Trump supporters on the central bank's powerful seven-seat board. While the nominations would be subject to Senate confirmation, they would underscore Mr. Trump's growing unhappiness with Fed policy under Jerome Powell, whom the president tapped to lead the central bank.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TO MOVE AGAINST RELEASING TAX RETURNS - The White House could attempt to block the release of President Trump's tax returns to Democrats, senior officials signaled on Thursday, an unprecedented step that might lead to a constitutional challenge and catapult the issue into federal court (Washington Post). In an indication of how the standoff might escalate, Trump himself suggested that the Justice Department could become involved — even though Democrats directed their request to the commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service. "They'll speak to my lawyers and they'll speak to the attorney general," Trump said during an unrelated event in the Oval Office when asked about the Democrats' request for six years of his personal and business tax returns. White House press secretary Sarah Sanders said Trump would not release his tax returns because they were under audit, a disputed claim that the White House has not allowed to be independently verified.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SAYS CHINA TRADE DEAL NEARS - President Trump stopped short of announcing a final trade deal with China on Thursday, saying in an Oval Office meeting with the Chinese delegation that it may take another four weeks or more to secure an "epic" trade agreement (New York Times). Negotiators had originally aimed to secure a deal this week during a visit from Liu He, the Chinese vice premier and special trade envoy, and announce a presidential summit meeting between Mr. Trump and Xi Jinping of China. But after more than a year of tit-for-tat tariffs, on-and-off negotiations and threats of additional punishment, the United States and China continue to haggle over some remaining issues, including how many of the American tariffs on Chinese goods will be removed, and when. "We're talking intellectual property protection and theft. We're talking about certain tariffs," Mr. Trump said, referring to issues that remain unresolved.

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE CRITICAL OF GERMANY - U.S. Vice President Mike Pence blamed Germany for the insufficient level of the expenses for the defense and Nord Stream 2 construction with Russia before the negotiations of 29 representatives of NATO states-members in Washington as AFP reported (ABC News). "Germany must do more. And we cannot ensure the defense of the West if our allies grow dependent on Russia," Pence said. He emphasized that it is unacceptable for Germany, as the state with the largest economy in Europe, to ignore the threat of the Russian aggression and neglect its own self-defense and common defense of the allies in NATO. Last month, Germany announced that it would reduce the expenses for defense by 1,25% in 2023. Besides, Germany challenged the U.S. and few Eastern European states by the implementation of the Nord Stream 2 project along with Russia. Pence emphasized that if Germany continues the construction of the Nord Stream 2 gas pipeline, it can make Germany's economy to be Russia's hostage.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will leave the White House at 9:30 a.m. en route to El Centro, Calif. He will arrive at the Naval Air Facility in El Centro at 11:40 a.m. Pacific time and travel to the U.S. Border Patrol Calexico Station. At 12:15 p.m., he will participate in an immigration and border security roundtable. He will then leave to visit the new border wall in Calexico, Calif. At 1:15 P.M., Trump will travel to a private home in Santa Monica, Calif. At 4:45 p.m., he will participate in a roundtable of supporters in Beverly Hills, followed by a joint fundraising dinner. Trump will then travel to Las Vegas.

MEDIA: SUNDAY TALK - NBC "Meet the Press": Panel: Hugh Hewitt, Heather McGhee, Anna Palmer and Jake Sherman. ABC "This Week": Matt Dowd, Mary Bruce, Lanhee Chen and Yvette Simpson. CNN "State of the Union": Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.), Sen. Michael Bennet (D-Colo.). Panel: Rep. Katie Porter (D-Calif.), Rick Santorum, Symone Sanders and Amanda Carpenter. CNN "Inside Politics": Dan Balz, Julie Pace, Shawna Thomas and Manu Raju. "Fox News Sunday": Rep. Ben Ray Lujan (D-N.M.). Panel: Charles Hurt, Katie Pavlich, Marie Harf and Juan Williams.

ILLINOIS: WRIGLEY FIELD ADS WHEELCHAIR SEATING - Wrigley Field's renovation has added wheelchair-accessible seats following a federal lawsuit filed last year. The Chicago Sun-Times reports that upgrades include more elevators and accessible bathrooms, too. The lawsuit was filed by the father of a fan with a form of muscular dystrophy. It claimed that previous renovations had reduced seating in the bleachers and behind home plate. It said seating was moved farther from the field and left disabled fans without a clear view when others stood.

CITIES: SLAIN FIREFIGHTER'S WIDOW ORDERED OFF PROPERTY - A Vanderburgh County court has ordered the wife of a slain Evansville firefighter to vacate their home in the next month (Evansville Courier & Press). The estate of EFD's Robbie Doerr, 51, is in probate court with Doerr's daughter Lindsey Doerr acting as personal representative. Lindsey Doerr filed a motion last month asking the court to temporarily freeze any assets her late father's widow, Elizabeth Fox-Doerr, might claim from the estate. The request was granted with no objections Thursday morning during a hearing in Vanderburgh Superior Court. The motion references Fox-Doerr's alleged actions the night her husband was fatally shot in front of their North Side home. Fox-Doerr faces obstruction of justice and false informing charges for allegedly tampering with her phone's call records.

CITIES: BLOOMINGTON COUNCIL VOTES TO RAZE GARAGE - After months of debate, the Bloomington city council has voted to support a proposal to tear down and replace the downtown fourth street garage (Eady, Indiana Pubic Media). In a 5-3 vote, the council approved an $18.5 million revenue bond to fund the acquisition, demolition and reconstruction of a new garage with up to 550 spaces. Councilmember Isabel Piedmont-Smith chose to vote against the bond and says the city should be prioritizing other modes of transportation that reduce greenhouse gas emissions. "And those are the modes we should be investing in," Piedmont-Smith says. "Because global climate change is real, and we need to start doing something about it, yesterday." But the majority of the council, including President Dave Rollo, sided with the concerns of downtown business owners, who say not prioritizing parking could drive out local business. "By keeping things local, compact urban form, building up rather than out," Rollo says. "That's why this garage is necessary. It's the right way to go for climate."

CITIES: MUNCIE TO MAKE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ANNOUNCEMENT - Officials in Muncie will Friday make an economic development announcement. The Muncie-Delaware County Economic Development Alliance says the announcement will involve a new company locating in the city's downtown (Inside Indiana Business). City officials will provide details of the company planning to renovate a building in the Delaware County city. The move will result in a new capital investment and workforce expansion. No other details were made available. The announcement is scheduled for 11:00 a.m. Friday.

CITIES: STORY PRICE TAG $3.8M - The town of Story, Indiana is up for sale for $3.8 million. Our partners at WTHR report local businesses, such as The Story Inn and its affiliates, will remain open under current ownership and seek to lease the buildings from the town's future owner (Inside Indiana Business). "The business will have the same relationship with the town as Macy's does with the mall. It will be a tenant and we offer lease payments, so whoever buys this will take it with restrictions but there will be cash flow," Rick Hofstetter told WTHR.

COUNTIES: LAKE DELAYS SHERIFF CAR PURCHASE - Officials in northwestern Indiana's Lake County are holding off buying 22 new police cruisers amid questions about where the money will come from to outfit them for duty. The county's commissioners delayed purchasing the new cruisers Wednesday until Sheriff Oscar Martinez Jr. can explain how the county can cover the full cost of getting the vehicles ready for the road. The Post-Tribune reports that the expected total cost for the 22 cars is $545,326, and that doesn't include the cost of outfitting them for road duty. The anticipated cost of outfitting the cruisers is $200,000 to $225,000. Radios for the cars would be another addition to the costs.

INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT

Steal City move: right or privilege?

All those moving parts in gaming bill keep on shifting gears

Well, for those of you playing along at home on SB 552, it's now time for the House Committee on Ways and Means on Tuesday to fill in the blanks on the omnibus gaming bill – or perhaps more accurately, move around some zeroes on financial changes made by the House Committee on Public Policy.

In his first real chance to address gaming issues in the form of actual legislation, the public policy chair, Rep. Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn, showed that he: (1) shared the Daniels Administration concern for the State leaving money on the table from a valuable franchise; (2) was not enamored with artificially subsidizing companies, counties, communities, or cities – at least if they were bickering about their purported entitlements; (3) is just as occupied with trying to help veterans and fraternal organizations keep their doors open through small-stakes charitable gaming as pleasing casinos and their host communities; (4) is concerned about expansion of gaming, a quaint concept that may now be supplanted with concern over “pervasiveness” of gaming; and (5) just doesn't seem to have a whole lot of enthusiasm in general for the overall sports wagering/license move package embodied in SB 552.

At the March 27 meeting of his committee, Rep. Smaltz dropped a game-changing amendment on the table that imposed a $100 million fee for moving a Gary license off the footprint to the preferred new Gary site; effectively opened up the Terre Haute license for bid by forcing surrender of the second Gary license if it were to seek a move to Vigo County; scheduled a Vigo County referendum for the 2019 general election (which would mean voting by non-municipal residents who would have nothing else on the ballot but the public question); an end to all hold-harmless payments; still banned live dealers for racino table games until early 2021 (though the 2021 change would not be at the discretion of the Indiana Gaming Commission); dropped mobile gaming for sports wagering; and eliminated a requirement that official sanctioning body data be used to determine in-play wager outcome. There was also talk of a separate $50 million fee related to a Terre Haute license, but that failed to materialize – at least yet.

He would leave it to the discretion of Ways and Means to set sports wagering tax rates . . . and will not afford a hearing to the complementary measure, SB 66, the bill that set the stage for a Gary transmodal port facility at Buffington Harbor and beyond – which would mean that the seeming raison d'être for the Gary riverboat move would have to be amended into other legislation if anyone continues to feel that this is imperative – or a condition precedent for the casino shuffle – after leadership acknowledgment that the port proposal is pretty sketchy aspirational at this point.

Don't forget about the port issue yet.

This potential opportunity to give Gary a hand up and not a hand out – outlined in an interim study that saw assorted senators travel to Gary for a tour of the proposed site, the current casino venue, and the City of Gary's high and low points – was frequently cited by senators in explaining their support for the complementary (and theoretically interdependent) bills, SB 66 and 552, authored respectively by Sen. Eddie Melton (D) of Gary and Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) of Jasper.

Challenge to monopoly money

What were once vices are now habits?

South Bend-based Vice Lotteries is trying to break into the lottery business nationally with an “equitable gambling” model under which every dollar wagered will be returned as prize money . . . and starts by seeking to overturn the Hoosier Lottery's Hoosier monopoly status.

Backed financially by Y Combinator, an American seed accelerator and incubator, Vice Lotteries, led by an attorney with a law degree from the University of Notre Dame, has filed suit in U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, Curtis v. Hill, No. 3:19-cv-00073-JD-MGG, in part seeking a declaratory judgment allowing upstart Vice Lotteries to prepare for and conduct its “equitable gambling” for the benefit of the public.

Vice Lotteries contends that “The State violates its sovereignty by offering and engaging in quid pro quo bargains for exemptions from its laws in exchange for payment to the Hoosier Lottery”; violates Vice's due process and equal protection rights by barring competition to protect “monopoly profits”; and violates Vice's free speech rights by criminalizing certain of its preparations for competing with the Hoosier Lottery.

Sen. Melton was understandably not thrilled with the Smaltz amendment, but tried to be equanimous as he looked to the long term and bigger picture.

“Although I don’t agree with the amendment that affects the Gary casino move adopted by the House Public Policy Committee,” said Sen. Melton in a statement issued through his caucus, “I remain hopeful that the House and the Senate will come to an agreement that addresses the concerns of both chambers when the bill undergoes the conference committee process. In my short time here in the legislature, I’ve quickly learned that a bill as impactful as this would invariably meet a multitude of opinions, perspectives and understandings as it matured through the process.”

Melton continued, “I’ve also learned that the best I can do for my district and our great state is to first and foremost ensure there is clarity in our goals and sincerity in the ways in which we approach them. I equally want to ensure our efforts are researched, data-driven and backed by seasoned, knowledgeable experts. Lastly, we want to do our level best to ensure our efforts don’t disadvantage other Hoosiers. This has been the guiding strategy and spirit of our efforts for Senate Bill 552, and indeed all the legislation we sponsor.”

His conclusion: “I believe the current amendments to the bill run counter to this spirit. I believe we can do better. I remain hopeful and look forward to working with House Republicans to identify amendments that are additive to all the diverse interests served by this truly transformative legislation.”

Opponents of a casino move or expanded gambling will no doubt raise the lack of an overarching rationale for clearing the land at Buffington Harbor (beyond just more casino bucks) in opposition to the slimmed-down package.

In addition to taking the Smaltz amendment by consent, the panel also adopted by consent – despite periodic interjections by the chair that he was prepared to hold it because of assorted questions – an amendment proposed by Rep. Ed Clere (R) of New Albany. Rep. Clere, a champion of expanding gaming options for bars and taverns, and veterans and fraternal organizations, offered an amendment that would create a new small-stakes sports-bracket charitable gaming license for veteran and fraternal organizations. Also incorporated by consent was as a less prescriptive amendment authored by Rep. Justin Moed (D) of Indianapolis that would direct tax revenue attributable to sports wagering occurring in Marion County into the housing trust fund.

The panel actually spent more time trying to understand and dissect the Clere amendment than it did on the casino and casino-related sports wagering aspects of SB 552 . . . a fact that did not go unnoticed nor without chiding by some panel members.

After the honk and wave afforded the bill in the Senate Committee on Public Policy and on the Senate floor, Chairman Smaltz’s amendment represented the first significant attempt to shape policy . . . and, like the Gary casino move wasn’t really a condition subsequent to clearing the way for a port, the sports wagering portion of SB 552 isn’t driving this train.

So let’s break down what’s happening and why for you, as well as what you need to watch for going forward . . . as you note that virtually every key component if the Smaltz amendment came as a surprise to those involved (save, perhaps, the elimination of mobile sports gaming).

Rep. Smaltz’s first humdinger was a conditional $100 million fee that would be imposed upon Spectacle Gaming, LLC, should the company seek to move one of its Gary licenses from the constantly derided Buffington Harbor site to a new location (which they hint has been optioned, leased, or purchased) at I-80/I-94.

Call it what you want: a transfer fee, repurchase price, tax, or simply a cost of doing business, but Rep. Smaltz believes that Spectacle would gain value from the move, the license is a revocable privilege granted by and property of the State, and he doesn’t want to leave money on the table.

“The licenses, in my opinion – and I believe it would be accurate to say – are the property of the state, that we are able to, if the location moves, change the conditions of those licenses,” Rep. Smaltz explained. “It’s not as though we’re going in and taking the licenses away where they sit.”

Indeed, he continued, if Spectacle’s Majestic Star two casino vessels simply remain on the Buffington Harbor footprint, then the company would not have to pay any new fee or relinquish, as envisioned, its second license.

Rep. Smaltz also defended the $100 million fee last week in an interview with Legal Sports Report. “That’s the value of it,” he said of the move. “The current location isn’t nice. The owners will tell you that. The permits they have now paid for that specific location. Where they want to move, we can see a value increase of casino operations anywhere between $300 and $700 million.”

The requirement for a payment of any kind was offensive to some, while the amount he chose – effectively out of the blue – was a real shocker . . . though it shouldn’t have been for those with an understanding of Hoosier gaming history.

Rep. Vanessa Summers (D) of Indianapolis, who served on the public policy committee back in 1993 when riverboats were authorized (and whose father chaired the committee when casinos were first discussed in 1989) asked whether a license had ever moved before (she was reminded that the dormant Patoka Lake license, which old-timers remember was initially dreamed up to help a Dubois County Democratic lawmaker with a perennial primary challenger – and which everyone knew could never come to fruition because of Army Corps of engineers objections – was eventually shifted to Orange County to support the facade of not expanding gambling with a new license, while allowing a casino in the Springs Valley).

“It sounds to me like an address change” just to move inland within Gary off the footprint, said Rep. Summers. “It doesn’t necessarily sound like something that they should have to pay $100 million to do.” She then noted somewhat incredulously, “Even for a rich person, $100 million is kind of in the stratosphere.”

Rep. Sean Eberhart (R) of Shelbyville also told colleagues, “I just have a hard time understanding charging, in this case, Spectacle a $100 million fee to take that license to the highway” – and yet still forfeit the second license. “That’s a tough one to swallow,” he lamented.

“That’s an extreme amount of money,” particularly given that the Shelby County solon noted that the “top notch” owner plans to make “a substantial investment” in a new facility.

Rep. Eberhart, who was in office for the 2007 vote on “slots at the tracks” for the pari-mutuel horse racing track in his district that was rescued out of bankruptcy by Rod Ratcliff’s Centaur Gaming, told colleagues, “I think that it should mean something, that we have Indiana folks that are willing to step up and take this risk To me, I think it should be a ‘zero’ fee to move. I think it’s fair compensation. They’re taking a risk to invest that money.”

Eberhart noted that in the one instance of a license being moved, the Patoka Lake license that ended up in French Lick, “that license was moved, and there was no fee attached to it.”

Rep. Peggy Mayfield (R) of Martinsville reminded him that the “license” that was moved to French Lick was (and still is) actually held by the State of Indiana, which has contracted out for an “operating agent.” She also noted that the operator, The Cook Group, has $500 million of its own money invested in the complex.

The veteran lawmaker continued, “If we had a private company, whether that’s a manufacturer or some other private company, come to us and say, ‘Hey, we want to invest $300 million on the Borman in Gary and we want to invest $150 million in Terre Haute,’ we’d get out our checkbooks as the State of Indiana. We would be writing them a check. We would be giving them incentives. We would be begging them to make that investment,” particularly given that about the only things working in Gary are these casino licenses. “So it’s kind of ironic that, instead, we turn around and we’re asking for $100 million to make that investment,” Rep. Eberhart mused. “And this is a fee based on licenses that already exist. Both these licenses are in play.”

He reminded those on the panel (and Rep. Smaltz, who was not elected until more than two years after Centaur emerged from bankruptcy reorganization) that in 2007 lawmakers opted to charge each horse-racing facility $250 million for the privilege of a slot license, and both operators promptly became insolvent (they were unable to service the significant debt incurred in large part to make that payment and fund $100 million+ facilities that opened in mid-2008 during the ramp-up of the fiscal crisis).

On Friday, Rep. Kevin Mahan (R) of Hartford City, a former Indiana Gaming Commission enforcement director, sat down with Tim George and Ed Breen on WBAT 1400-AM’s Good Morning Grant County in Marion and discussed the proposed fee.

“I watched the committee hearing,” said Rep. Mahan, “and oh, my gosh, they put an amendment on the bill that told this owner-operator that if you want to move one of those licenses to 80/94 you’re going to have to pay a $100 million fee to do that. Then they want to take the other license away from him and basically just kind of put it up for bid for all competitors, anybody that may want to have it and have a $50 million price tag on it. Kind of tough for me to swallow when you want to take something from somebody like that that bought it. If this was Honda, if this was Caterpillar, if this was Amazon, the State of Indiana would be showing up with a checkbook trying to do everything that they could to welcome them here to the state of Indiana. For some reason, whenever we’re dealing with the gambling industry, we tend to want to start throwing $100 million, or in one case when they started the racinos, a $250 million license fee. So that bill’s got a long way to go.”

Taking an opposite position was Rep. Carolyn Jackson (D) of Hammond, the freshman lawmaker in whose district Horseshoe Casino Hammond is moored, and whose community would be hard hit by a new inland Gary casino.

She told Dan Carden of the Times of Northwest Indiana the day after the hearing that she understands the rationale behind the $100 million payment: “You have two licenses there, and if you move one away your profit is going to go up sky-high immediately,” Rep. Jackson said.

According to Carden in the Times, “Jackson suggested that if Spectacle ultimately pays $100 million to move to the Borman, and Gary develops Buffington Harbor into an intermodal facility, the fee paid in connection with that move should be used to construct overpasses that eliminate road-rail intersections throughout Hammond,” given that if Buffington Harbor were to be transformed “into an intermodal shipping and warehousing center, following the Majestic Star move ... it will mean many more long trains blocking Hammond’s streets. ‘You would split up my town,’ Jackson said. ‘What’s going to happen if there’s an emergency?’

House Committee on Ways and Means Co-Chair Todd Huston (R) of Fishers, who has worked through the jigsaw puzzle that is the Hoosier gaming process, helped to sum up the debate on the fee. “There is value to that move” off the footprint, Rep. Huston asserted. “I think all the taxpayers, all the people of the state, should have the [ability] to benefit if we believe that’s the right thing to do from the public policy standpoint of the state.”

Channeling the mantra of the first lawmaker to truly understand implications of the interconnected and interdependent nature of the Hoosier gaming milieu and its connection to government and taxation, former Sen. Luke Kenley (R) of Noblesville, Rep. Huston told fellow House members, "The State is heavily involved in the regulation of gaming and whatever we do has to be in the best interest of not just one particular community, it has to be in the best interest of the overall state," and all of the state should benefit.

He confirmed Rep. Smaltz's contention that, under law, the operator's license for a casino or racino is a privilege subject to revocation, and does not constitute a property right.

Although neither Smaltz nor Huston are attorneys, the two top legislative leaders are lawyers, and they backed up the property right assertion on Thursday.

"It's my understanding that it's not a property right," said House Speaker Brian Bosma (R) of Indianapolis. "The casino does not own the license. The state is granting a license authority to conduct certain activities. I'm not a legal expert in this regard It's my understanding - I've been told - that it's not a property right; that the license itself is not a property right- and the State has the authority to grant it or retract it at its will."

Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) of Martinsville confirmed a few minutes later, "I think that's been pretty clear in our statutes that the license is not a property right that they have. So we have some control over it in that regard."

Rep. Huston also told the panel that should the legislature allow a casino to move to a more lucrative location, it will enhance the value of that license, further justifying a fee ... although he allowed that the $100 million figure "may not be perfect," he is not sure just what the appropriate price tag should be.

Huston is already finding support for his position from some of the non-Gary members of the Lake County delegation who are enamored with the idea of the move, a coalition that we told you in our last issue was being organized by Hammond Mayor Tom McDermott, Jr. (D).

Spectacle General Counsel John Keeler, a former Republican lawmaker, reacted calmly to the Smaltz changes, even as he opposed the imposition of any fee. "It's a pretty significant price," he acknowledged, "But it's a process and we've gotta work through it." Keeler added to reporters, "We do hope the license fee will be more reasonable, more business-friendly," particularly given that he believes Spectacle is taking "a tremendous risk. One is the investment of $300 million in Gary, and the other is ... potential competition from a Chicago casino."

However, Terre Haute businessman Greg Gibson, a principal Spectacle partner, was more direct and seemingly unequivocal when he told Howard Greninger of the Terre Haute Tribune-Star "the amendments as they now stand 'will essentially kill the relocation efforts, if they remain in a final version of the bill. I hope that common sense eventually prevails. I got into this project because I saw an opportunity to help my home county and home state,' he said. 'The possibility of 400 new jobs and an investment of more than $100 million would be very meaningful to Vigo County, as would millions in additional gaming revenue for the state.'"

Gibson added, "We realized that this was a daunting task that would have well-funded opposition and face many challenges. I just hope that we can move this legislation forward under reasonable terms.'"

Rep. Smaltz reiterated that the $100 million fee is largely intended to be just a placeholder that will be finalized as the proposal moves through the long process ahead.

Perhaps underscoring the tenuous nature of the number was the fact that there was no specific use for the money delineated in the Smaltz amendment (nor, of course, the underlying legislation).

Meanwhile, broadcast voices - including radio show hosts Tony Katz on WIBC 93.1-FM in Indianapolis and WJOB 1230-AM's Ron Harlow in Hammond - were apoplectic about the $100 million fee, with Katz asking what lawmakers were thinking, and Harlow blasting it as socialism.

With History as a Guide on License Fees . . .

By the day after the hearing, three of the four legislative leaders had weighed in on the fee. One was in favor. One was opposed. One was unsure.

House Speaker Bosma supported the fee, labeling it "very appropriate" given that the attractive inland location and the prospect of a second casino facility in Terre Haute would boost the value of Spectacle's initial investment by well in excess of $100 million. "(A fee) is what we've done previously as well when there's been either a transfer or a big enlargement like the racinos," the Speaker explained.

President Pro Tem Bray was undecided. "There is maybe some value that's being added there, so maybe it justifies the fee," he said. "Whether it's $100 million - which is a big one - I don't know. But we'll take a look at it," the Senate leader promised. "They're working on it, trying to find the best language for them. I understand that. I expected there would be changes."

With another week's perspective under their respective belts, the legislative leaders still weren't willing to be pinned down on specifics, but seemed prepared to support a significant or substantial fee as determined first by Ways and Means members.

In answering questions from reporters about the fee on Thursday, Speaker Bosma raised the $250 million fee for the conversion of each pari-mutuel horse-racing track into racinos when a questioner referenced a more recent $50 million transfer fee. "So I don't know that there's any real standard - standard charge," said the Speaker. "It's very clear that the movement of the one license - and the possible relocation of the other - creates an enormous amount of wealth. Someone said I said $100 million. It's much more than that; it's multiples of that. So I think it's appropriate since the state has to approve these licenses, has to regulate the facilities that a fee is charged for that. And I don't know exactly what the number is, but I am certain that the Ways and Means Committee will come to the proper conclusion."

Sen. Bray a few minutes later on Thursday told reporters, "There's real value in that license and being able to move it. So there is reasonable number there. I haven't spent a lot of time trying to decide what that the number is yet. That $100 million is out there as part of the conversation, and we'll see where it goes."

Senate Committee on Appropriations Chair Ryan Mishler (R) of Bremen, the Senate budget leader, tells IndyPolitics.org early last week, "I think there needs to be some form of transfer fee. I think the question is what should that number be, and I don't know if we're there yet on what the number should be. I think you'll see a transfer fee, just we don't know what that number is."

Neither Speaker Bosma nor Sen. Bray appeared interested in license cash from the perspective of the biennial state budget being crafted this month. Speaker Bosma said Thursday of the upcoming state revenue collection forecast, "I don't know that it will affect the gaming bill Any money that's generated through license transfers is one-time money. We've been very explicit about not including one-time money into operating expenses because that just takes the future budgets up with funds that are no longer there because it was one-time. So I don't think that will impact the discussion in any way."

Asked the same forecast, Sen. Bray also responded, "I don't know how much impact the revenue forecast has on that Sen. Mishler may have a different opinion on that, but I don't know that I can tell you that that has a big impact on the gaming bill."

Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D) of Anderson, whose district is home to Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino, blasted deployment of "strong arm" tactics by the State by virtue of the "aggressive" fee, given that Spectacle sought to invest in a depressed area, add jobs, and grow state gaming tax revenue. "I look at it as economic development. That's exactly what I see is going on with this legislation. I think it's a way to help various communities. Certainly it would help Gary, Terre Haute. So I hope that whatever changes are made it doesn't interfere with the economic development opportunities that I see in that bill."

"It is unprecedented," agrees Rep. Smaltz. "We're just trying to take it slow and careful and we'll see what happens in the next step" as it moves to the fiscal panel.

So what should you watch for in Ways and Means, on the House floor, and in conference with respect to the fee?

Bear in mind that the last time this issue arose, in the 2007 slots at the track racino negotiations orchestrated by Sen. Kenley, there ultimately was a target - a mind-bending $500 million - that lawmakers sought to hit to provide statewide property tax relief.

Yet it certainly didn't start out that way, and so it's time for a history lesson as we turn the dial on the Wayback Machine to a dozen years ago, the Spring of 2007. Fortunately, your favorite gaming newsletter was there to chronicle events, and we'll fall back on our contemporaneous coverage.

In our March 12, 2007 issue, we talked about a move by one House Democrat from a non-casino community to raise the licensing fee for the tracks from $75 million to $100 million, with the lawmaker making it clear that it was "quite likely that [the two tracks] will get that amount back in their profits in their first year." Even at his suggested $100 million license fee, he acknowledged, "In my opinion, we're letting 'em off cheap here."

Then-Rep. Trent Van Haaften (D) of Mount Vernon, then the chair of the House Committee Public Policy, backed the license fee hike, "and in a heartbeat the House overwhelmingly adopted the amendment that would mean an additional $50 million in upfront revenue to the state if the bill becomes law."

But "Even with the big bump in the fee, some feel the state is losing out on a lot of revenue by pegging the license fee so low." We reported that Dan Lee, then the chairman and CEO of Belterra Casino Resort parent at the time, Pinnacle Entertainment, Inc., detailed his logic to number-savvy Wall Street analysts on an earnings conference call. Lee explained that "They're paying $75 million [now $100 million] up front for their licenses. You run the math. We do $240 or $250 per slot machine per day at Belterra, and there are several casinos in Indiana that do more. If you do $250 or $300 per machine per day times 2,500 slot machines, and take it after the gaming tax and apply the 10 [times earnings] multiple or 11 multiple that Harrah's just went private at, or the 13 multiple that Station's going private at, these licenses are worth half a billion to a billion dollars each, and the state is saying 'Pay us $75 million up front for it.' That's like being handed a winning lottery ticket, okay. We would readily, easily pay more than $75 million for either of those licenses," he adds, confirming the offer that a Belterra lobbyist made to the House Public Policy Committee last month as it considered the measure."

Two weeks later as March approached its conclusion, there then-Sen. Kenley unfurled an amendment to quadruple the license fee for the two tracks from $100 million in the House-passed measure to $400 million. "Sen. Kenley said that the increase in the license fee was driven in part on discussion of a possible public auction of the licenses, but he was concerned that if the slot licenses and racing permits were not owned by the same entity, 'there would be kind of a conflict there that would kind of be carried forward,' portending problems. He mentioned the Illinois riverboat license auction a few years ago that he said produced a bid of around $550 million, but ultimately failed to go forward. Based on this, he says he looked at the potential net profits and applied a multiplier to arrive at the four-fold increase from the House-fixed price. 'I don't know if $400 million is going to turn out as a reasonable number,' Kenley acknowledges."

So far you can see that there was no real rationale for the wildly varying racino license fee numbers a dozen years ago, and solons just seemed to throw out amounts that they thought might stick in the heady days of still-growing casino profits at a time when we all still believed that gaming was recession-proof, effectively tracking counter-cyclical to any economic woes.

Things got real interesting during the final week of session in April 2007.

The House-passed bill sought $100 million from each horse-racing track for licensing (up from $75 million as drafted), while the Senate wanted to extract (some said extort) $400 million from each for a slot franchise privilege. "The tracks tell legislators that $400 million is totally unreasonable (not that anyone seems to care about whether what the state can wring out of gambling operator is reasonable or not), and that it is also not possible."

MOVING INDIANA FORWARD!

Senate Bill 552 means new jobs,
investment and tax revenue.

A YES VOTE

*on Senate Bill 552 will create a variety
of opportunities:*

NEW POSSIBILITIES FOR BUFFINGTON HARBOR

Senate Bill 552 calls for Majestic Star and Majestic Star II to vacate Buffington Harbor, making it possible for the harbor and adjacent real estate to realize its true potential as an intermodal hub, port and logistics center.

A MORE VIABLE LOCATION FOR A GARY GAMING FACILITY

Senate Bill 552 permits one of the properties to relocate adjacent to I-80/94. The subsequent $300 million investment would create 400 new jobs and increase tax revenue by more than $78.75 million annually as compared to that produced by the two existing properties.

A NEW FACILITY AND ECONOMIC BENEFITS FOR TERRE HAUTE

Senate Bill 552 authorizes the relocation of one of the Majestic licenses to Vigo County, which would create 400-500 new jobs, $100 million in economic investment and approximately $24 million in annual tax revenue, while making Indiana increasingly competitive with Illinois within the gaming industry.

*After 25 years of the status quo, it's time
for Indiana to be bold. To take action. To win. It's time to turn Senate Bill 552 into a reality and move Indiana forward.*

Then we told you that “The Senate needs every penny of the $400 million license fee for property tax relief, but the tracks have brought in investment bankers to try to persuade the key legislative players that $125 million is a more appropriate valuation and attainable (read: ‘reasonable’) figure to shoot for . . . and that was the figure that Centaur told conferees . . . that it could live with – although they would also have to live with years of debt at that level.” And again it was a lawmaker from a track district who sought to protect his corporate constituent, with a Republican House member from Anderson griping at the time that “$400 million per facility for the licensing fee is high.” Kenley acknowledged that the $400 million might sound “outlandish, but it does coincide with some of the fees being paid around the country on this issue.”

We noted again at the time that “what is ‘reasonable’ may be of little concern to the conferees, and what is ‘affordable’ may be of not much more consequence. What the state needs to get out of it is more important to the Senate, and even the House is likely to believe it acceptable to add a premium to what might be reasonable or affordable (to cover itself, as it failed to do with casinos in 1993). Indeed, Sen. Kenley stunned some those in attendance when he suggested during (conference committee deliberations) that it might be appropriate – as a ‘fall-back position’ to auction the slot licenses to the highest bidders if the tracks won’t pay the mandated entry fee (‘not just a good fee, but a very good fee,’ as he puts it) . . . and Belterra Casino Resort was on hand to indicate its corporate interest in the franchise with a price tag potentially as high as $500 million,” thanks to Dan Lee, who is involved today as the President and CEO of Full House Resorts, Inc., parent company of Rising Star Casino • Resort, which was first two years ago to push for moving “unused capacity” from Rising Sun to Terre Haute – and Full House remains interested in making the move yet this year, even as they are not the favored candidate after the Spectacle double-dare deal.

We also pointed out back in 2007 that the House and Senate were not the only players. “We believe that if the House attempts to lower the license fee much below $400 million, the Governor may not be amenable to signing any final package. We’re also picking up signals from the Administration that they are not impressed by the reports from the tracks suggesting the fee would be too high at $125 million, the number that Centaur, Inc. CFO Kurt Wilson told conferees Thursday would effectively be his company’s limit (if they were permitted 2,000 machines). ‘I would not be able to justify the fee of $125 million with an allowance of 1,500 machines,’ Wilson said. A fee of $125 million with 2,000 machines would allow ‘a level at which we can make a credible case to the banks’ and others involved that the deal would pay off, and still allow them to build a facility that the state could be proud of. Wilson and consultant Will Cummings told conferees that even $100 million is double the nation’s next highest fee, Pennsylvania’s $50 million.”

Then we told readers that “At least one top (Daniels) Administration official dismisses such claims by saying that he could get $400 million in the market in less than one month with the legislation backing him, and that the true value of the license, given the estimated cash flow, would be closer to $650 million (that estimate is based on track projections of $55 million to $60 million in annual EBITDA – about what the two casinos in Gary and the one in East Chicago have each been posting – and applying a slightly lower multiple than was used in the Ameristar Casinos purchase of Resorts East Chicago Casino).”

So there were a lot of players in the 2007 negotiations just as there are today (although the Governor’s Office was much more engaged back then as it sat vulture-like, poised to pick off more than just the scraps left on the table from a license move; 206 today appears much more content to leave the value and valuation issues to the General Assembly and is more concerned with maintaining the way that the casinos have become parts of the economic and social fabric of their respective communities).

Another big difference between then and now: The 2007 process began with an expectation that a toll would be exacted from the horse-racing venues for the privilege of adding slots; there was no such starting point in 2019; indeed, it almost started out as the casinos effectively doing the City of Gary and State of Indiana favor by abandoning the suddenly valuable land at Buffington Harbor (and that narrative has certainly shifted!).

Lawmakers will have a difficult time devising appropriate payment amounts (if any) for any license move or live dealers. Echoing the Kenley of 2007, we mentioned earlier that Rep. Huston acknowledged that the $100 million fee is not a perfect number, but the new increased value of the license is appropriate to take into account. With the Gary licenses in particular, there is some scattered talk about directing some cash to shoring up the local schools . . . or to teacher pay hikes statewide, similar to the decade-old property tax relief motive for authorizing “slots at the tracks.

We doubt that the Gameboys have any interest in being placed in the position of having to value a license in this new process, but with consensus building for some type of fee, some type of valuation process will effectively be needed to drive the state (lawmakers or regulators) to a bottom line. There is now a general belief that while the way the state set fees back a generation ago is not the way of the world today, although no one seems to be quite sure that any given state has found the kind of sweet spot that Indiana should emulate.

There seems to be growing sub rosa talk about a fee dictated by the market, but the difficulty is in constructing a mechanism for doing so that would be fair to all parties.

We’re also picking up some legislative “casino fatigue” of sorts, where lawmakers are not happy with the inter-industry bickering and would prefer a unified front to present it with an option to tinker with or vote up or down . . . and that this could translate into a game-changing legislative decision to open up any new license to any company, whether already licensed in Indiana or not – to maximize value to Terre Haute (one assumes that solons are not sold on the ability to find value in a new second Gary license on the current footprint).

Forfeiture of Second Gary License.

Rep. Smaltz’s amendment would require Spectacle to surrender its second license if it moved the first one to the inland Gary site off the current footprint – a forfeiture that would come on top of payment of the $100 million fee for the inter-city move . . . and free up the second license for a move to Terre Haute, where it could be competitively bid under the aegis of the State – without the need to “expand” gambling by manufacturing a new 12th license (or 14th, if you consider the racinos to be the functional equivalent of casinos, at least when they ultimately gain the ability to offer live dealers at table games).

Asked Thursday about the propriety of taking away a license from an operator, Speaker Bosma was adamant that the Smaltz language did not do so. "It does not take it away," the Speaker said of the second Spectacle license. Rather, he explained, "they have to surrender it if they want to go forward so that would be their choice. They don't have to. They purchased two licenses for two boats in a harbor, and they will still have that even if no legislation passes, so it's their choice."

Again, as Smaltz sees it, the licenses are state property, and the legislature should be able to intervene. Because they were effectively issued to a location and not to operators (though some would find fault with that assertion), if the location changes, the State was entitled to "change the conditions of those licenses." He adds, "It's not as though we're going in and taking the licenses away where they sit," because if Spectacle stays in the Buff, they can retain both licenses, free of any new fees or encumbrances.

But that was not convincing to Rep. Terri Austin (D) of Anderson, whose district includes Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino, a property which had long been owned by Ratcliff's Centaur Gaming. Rep. Austin, who has longer continuous service on the public policy panel than any other current member, expressed her concern: "I think we are entering a new era in state government where the state can actually take someone's property" when there have been no citations or any violations of the law. She believes this "certainly could have a chilling effect" on future investment.

Rep. Austin also noted that lawmakers have gone to great lengths to protect Hoosiers and their property from eminent domain, and "We need to proceed with caution on this issue." She also pointed out that this would not be the first time that the state has tried to protect an investment, reminding colleagues that "We did that with the toll road."

Part of this discussion is some concern that if a Terre Haute licensing process is not available on an equal basis to other licensees, litigation could result, delaying the administrative licensing process and frustrating the intended legislative purpose behind the change.

Elimination of Hold-Harmless Provisions

We've told you that the hold-harmless provisions in previous versions of SB 552 have proven anathema to the mayors of Hammond and East Chicago (a microcosm of sorts of the overall harm that they see being caused to their respective communities and casinos from a Gary inland move after what they says is well more than a decade of neglect of the Buffington Harbor facilities by a penurious Majestic Star management).

They do not believe that they would be adequately compensated for the jobs and revenues predicted to be pinched off in their communities by the special advantage sought by Gary, and they have not been shy in maneuvering to protect their respective communities.

As we pointed out last week in our flagship sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA LEGISLATIVE INSIGHT, the respective NWI mayors have been heavily involved and strongly vocal as they face mayoral primaries in six weeks - and winning a primary, of course, is effectively tantamount to winning election in East Chicago, Gary, and Hammond.

While Hammond Mayor McDermott (D) is safe, Mayor Tom is looking at making a strong electoral statement for possible statewide (or CD 01 congressional) aspirations as the longest-serving mayor in Hammond's history seeks an unprecedented fifth term.

East Chicago Mayor Anthony Copeland (D) is being pressed by former Rep. John Aguilera (D) in the May primary, and Aguilera - a veteran former county elected official who ran statewide for state treasurer in 2018 - knows his casino history, having settled out of court with Donald Trump after being dumped as a local investor in Trump's Gary casino (most others, including a prominent Indianapolis business leader and a top Indianapolis trial attorney challenged Trump in federal court on the same grounds and lost).

Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) needs a big win in Indianapolis as she faces her city council arch-rival and a county elected official in what is being described locally as an extremely tight race not necessarily trending in Mayor Karen's direction . . . so the casino conundrum could help to control the fate of two of the three big local May mayoral primaries. - as could just how viable the Buffington Harbor port proposal may be in the case of Gary's mayor, who has pushed state lawmakers for an inland casino option since first being elected.

So the mayors of East Chicago and Hammond - and the City of Evansville and Orange County entities - were not only expecting compensation, but pushing hard for what they saw as fairer compensation in the form of a bigger slice of the pie than the initially proposed amount that would guarantee them no less than their 2019 gaming tax revenue.

Recall that there is precedent for government hold-harmless payments; the legislature approved such subsidies for casino communities as part of the 2002 dockside gaming package which impacted riverboat admission revenues.

But enough was enough for the House shapers of the bill, who simply excised all the hold-harmless provisions from 552, perhaps in response to concerns aggregated and passed along - if not evinced - by Speaker Bosma. "There was a lot of concern about the provisions of the bill as it came over from the Senate, with a lot of payments back and forth, hold-harmless payments, that made a lot of people uncomfortable," the Speaker explained to reporters the day after the hearing.

"I think if we try and make everybody harmless we're going to wind ourselves completely up in a ball," Rep. Huston explained. He promised that Ways and Means will work through the hold-harmless language with the objective of eliminating any harm to everyone.

That was not acceptable to the intended recipients, but Rep. Eberhart seemed to like the precedent and opening that to allow consideration for ending the flow of hold-harmless funds being paid by the racinos to French Lick. This started in 2015, he explained, under the assumption the racinos would have live dealers at table games, but did not get changed despite the Pence-forced push back of the live dealers to at least 2021. This subsidy mandate needed to either be eliminated or sunsetted, Eberhart argued, asking that it be reviewed in Ways and Means.

In Southwest Indiana, local hold-harmless provisions have at least two prominent vocal advocates.

Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch (R), who used to represent Evansville in the General Assembly, tells Tom Langhorne of the Evansville Courier & Press after a Southwest Indiana Chamber event – at Tropicana Evansville – March 22 of her Evansville-centric position that would seem to have broader implications for hold-harmless language and those looking for sympathetic Holcomb Administration ear.

“I would love, whatever happens, to see Tropicana’s assessment protected because they just invested $50 million for a land-based casino here in this area,” the Lieutenant Governor tells the paper. “So we want to ensure that if anything happens, it doesn’t hurt those people and those corporations in those communities that have already created investments in their own communities.”

Langhorne also reports that Sen. Vaneta Becker (R) of Evansville, also “railed against” the changes proposed in SB 552 on the same day, speaking out about even the limited hold-harmless distributions that were proposed as it left the Senate. “When Tropicana was built, we had to live under the rules of the state,” said Sen. Becker, who was in the House and a supporter of casinos when the authorization measure passed in 1993. “Tropicana spent $50 million (on its land-based casino) and played by the rules, and now they’re changing the rules of the state on gaming issues. Now they’re going to move a license. Before, you couldn’t. We had to build in our footprint. (Tropicana) couldn’t pick a new location if they thought it was going to be better for their business. They had to live within the footprint.”

While the Messmer measure as it exited the Senate would have provided $1.2 million in one year, $900,000 in the second year, and $600,000 in the third year to the City of Evansville, Sen. Becker called those figures “ridiculous,” and cited estimates that the changes would cost Tropicana $10 million annually. “The three payments don’t come close to making up for what the local casino would lose, she said.”

The locals will fight hard to hold onto hold-harmless dollars, but there are many lawmakers who were not around when such deals were first struck more than 15 years ago and even debated again around the 2015 legislation. There also seems to be a more “free market” attitude among newer legislators, and outside of Lake County, it will be difficult to find legislators willing to stand up for keeping NWI communities whole . . . while inside Lake County, the parochial interests make it difficult to achieve the kind of unity needed for The Region to win a special privilege.

Bear in mind that Lake County and The Region generally only win a privilege from the General Assembly (or a governor) when communities are united, as we explained it in our sister flagship newsletter.

As the bill moved out of the Senate, there was clearly disarray in Lake County alone over this bill, with some lawmakers conflicted within their own districts by the casinos they represent. For example, the district of Rep. Earl Harris, Jr. (D) of East Chicago includes both the Gary port property on which the Gary casinos currently sit, as well as Ameristar Casino East Chicago, in Harris’ home EC, which vehemently opposes the new off-footprint competition. The mayors of the two big cities in Rep. Harris’ district also are opposed.

And it’s not just Lake County lawmakers who find themselves wrapped up in this thanks to ownership changes and multiple ownership provisions. Consider the position in which Rep. Randy Frye (R) of Greensburg finds himself when he looks at the two casinos in his district. While Ohio County’s Rising Star Casino • Resort wants to move to Terre Haute, Boyd Gaming Corporation is the new owner of Belterra Casino Resort in Switzerland County, and its Blue Chip property in Michigan City doesn’t want the new Gary casino on the main route from Chicago – which it began mining last year to help compensate for revenue lost to the Native American casino in South Bend.

Here’s a look at who represents which properties in both the House and Senate so you can have a scorecard for potential internal conflicts . . . and be sure to note the sheer number of freshmen lawmakers or those who have not yet been through a full budget session, making it more difficult for them to be as effective as some of their more experienced colleagues:

2021 Automatic Approval for Live Dealers

The Smaltz amendment would retain the 2021 authorization date for live dealers at the two racinos as in current law, but would allow this to happen automatically on January 1, 2021, instead of at the discretion of the Indiana Gaming Commission. However, this is a major change from SB 552 as it passed the Senate, because the bill had allowed the authorization date to be scooted up to 2019. The change proposed by the committee chair caused panel members, led by Rep. Eberhart, to recite some history lessons.

He praised the amendment provisions as generally promoting good public policy, but said that he and Rep. Smaltz disagreed on how we move to that point. While Eberhart explained that he appreciated the enabling language with respect to the racino table games changing from a discretionary to a mandatory provision and affording certainty, he was not happy about the date remaining some 18 months down the road.

"The only reason Indiana Grand and Hoosier Park don't have live table games now is because of Gov. Pence and his threat to veto the entire gaming bill in 2015," Eberhart asserted. "There was no grand compromise." He pointed out that unlike the situation four years ago, when "It was simply the threat of a veto by Gov. Pence, We have no threat of a veto from our current governor," who is open for discussion about this and other aspects of the gaming legislation.

The Shelby County lawmaker reminded his colleagues that the Senate overwhelmingly passed legislation calling for live table games in 2015 – on an immediate basis – and did so again this year, so it shouldn't be considered much of a mystery across the Rotunda. "I am confident that majority of my colleagues would support immediate table games," Rep. Eberhart told his fellow committee members, "and I hope to have that opportunity."

That chance could come on Second Reading for SB 552 in the House, because he plans to offer an amendment on the floor to restore the accelerated 2019 date.

He also told Rep. Smaltz that he appreciated his recognition of the importance of taxation principles related to table game revenue, and drove home the importance to Shelbyville and Anderson and the industry to devise a more industry-favorable taxation rate on table games.

While Rep. Eberhart has been the loudest legislative voice for live dealers over the past five years, he saw this issue take a back seat at the committee hearing to the $100 million move tariff; the mechanics of the Terre Haute move; the hold-harmless payments; mobile wagering as a component of sports betting; and even the expansion of sports betting to sports bracket pools for veterans and fraternal organizations . . . even as no one in the legislature has the back of now-Vice President Pence on his 2015 insistence that live dealers not occur on his watch as governor.

The problem that Eberhart faces: Only Caesars Entertainment Corporation and lawmakers from Madison and Shelby counties are vested in seeing this change happen, and they must do some horse-trading to see this come to fruition (bear in mind that Caesars may have bigger fish to fry in this as well, preferring for the sake of its Horseshoe Casino Hammond that no casino move happens in Gary, which would mean a much greater loss for it in the long-term than 12 to 18 more months of live table games at the two Caesars racinos).

This is effectively a fight between operators, and it's not clear which group will win (and some just are rooting for injuries!). Watch for this issue to be a pawn in the larger casino discussions, with the live-dealer date debate to be a trading tool in conference.

Terre Haute/Vigo County Referendum and Fee.

As the bill passed the Senate, if voters in Vigo County had not approved a public question for gaming, the referendum question "Shall riverboat gambling be permitted in Vigo County?" was to be placed on the VC ballot during the next primary or general election . . . even though a land-based casino would presumably not be built upon pillars on the non-navigable Wabash River.

The Smaltz amendment, however, would mandate the referendum vote, change the language to "Shall inland casino gambling be permitted in Vigo County?," and move it up to the 2019 general election – which would mean voting by non-municipal residents for whom this would be the only item on the ballot, because there are no offices up for vote outside municipalities this year.

Those who have been involved in the casino cause since its inception will recall that in several counties, the votes of rural residents caused the demise of local riverenda, even as those in the municipal areas largely voted for the opportunity. While Terre Haute is "All-in," and Hoosiers have had a generation to see the significant local benefits of casinos in their respective communities, this tactic, should it become law, could prove interesting (and expensive for the county, given the need to gear up for voting where voting would not otherwise be on tap).

There was talk in the public policy hearing of also imposing a $50 million fee to move a license to Vigo County, but there was a consensus of sorts to leave that option to the discretion of House Ways and Means on recommittal.

And will the current license holder be compensated for the second license going to Vigo County? Rep. Smaltz, responding to a question raised by Rep. Moed, told him that any such payment was not in the current version of the bill, because "that is the cost of moving the license."

Sen. Jon Ford (R) of Terre Haute tells the Terre Haute Tribune-Star, "The positive takeaway is that Terre Haute is once again in the bill and that we continue to move ahead to another day." He noted that this panel was "likely the legislation's biggest hurdle, Ford said, and he added he is glad it cleared. 'The committee makeup is very interesting, and this is where you would do the amending of the structure of the legislation,' he said. 'And, in that, they could have taken Terre Haute out very easily.'"

Tax Rate for Sports Wagering.

The tax rate for sports wagering will fall to the members of the House Committee on Ways and Means, where Rep. Huston likely already has a rate in mind that will be in line with that sought by the operators: Low enough to be an incentive for the legitimate industry and help drive out illegal sports books, and high enough to provide some return to the State based upon volume. Tax rates also can affect payouts to winning bettors, which can be important given competition from surrounding states and the overseas gray world.

We expect the rate will be toward the high end of the single digits, and, given the inevitability that all of the casino companies will be involved in sports wagering, the sports wagering rate may be tied to changes in tax rates (particularly for table games) and free play deductibility (and expect some discussion of whether free play taxation will apply to any sports wagering comps as well as "free coin" and VIP and VVIP comp play).

There has been little formal legislative talk to date about tax rates and even less discussion of application fees. You can be sure, however, that Rep. Huston and some of the more "woke" members of Ways and Means are not only reviewing fees and rates across the nation with Sen. Messmer and Rep. Smaltz, but are also watching closely developments in Illinois in the last week of March.

As Illinois held hearings on assorted sports wagering models, the Illinois Casino Gaming Association testified in favor of the New Jersey model, which regulated the activity through the Illinois Gaming Board (other options considered in Illinois include regulation by the Illinois Lottery), with betting permitted at the Garden State's brick-and-mortar casinos and racetracks – and online. Sports wagering licenses would be priced at $10 million, with brick-and-mortar facilities permitted to partner with no more than two digital platforms – “skins” – for mobile betting. The tax rate would be 15% on in-person wagers placed at the brick-and-mortar legacy facilities, and a 20% tariff for wagering on the electronic platforms.

You won't see Indiana casino operators advocating for such tabs and rates as a starting point (Illinois lawmakers have more leverage over the casinos and potential sports wagering partners there because the situation is so much more fluid; a number of credible options are being debated; and the new governor has already plugged in some $200 million for sports wagering in his new budget – an example of policy being led by finances, anathema to Indiana's leaders), and we don't think that the ultimate levels chosen by lawmakers will be quite as high as the New Jersey numbers, but with many of the same players in Illinois and Indiana, these are figures that can help to get the fiscal conversation kicked off, if not completed.

No Mobile Sports Wagering

As we've told you, the provision about which Rep. Smaltz has been most actively speaking on – and against – in the past two months has been the ability of Hoosiers to wager on a mobile device outside the friendly brick-and-mortar confines of a casino facility.

He had broadly hinted for several months about his reservations about mobile betting, and has based some of his reluctance to support the mobile option because of what it would mean in terms of an expansion of gaming, for example telling Legal Sports Report in this context, “I think that the public has to make the decision on if they want wagering available throughout the four borders of the state of Indiana. I think the answer to that in a lot of places is probably not.”

He went on to explain, “I think having it available everywhere within the four walls of the state is a problem, and I think consumer protections are a problem. I don't know why we wouldn't have all casino games allowed to be played on a device if we are going to allow sports wagering on that device,” a theme he echoed late in the hearing Media reports on this issue seemed to fit a pattern: national online reports focused on the elimination of the mobile element from the bill, while reporting from communities with State House news bureaus that were not directly impacted by casino moves (such as Fort Wayne and Indianapolis) were treated to stories that put the kibosh on mobile wagering on effectively the same level as the new casino move license fee and the move prospect itself. Reporting in areas that would be specifically affected by a license move (such as within Lake County and Vigo County) concentrated on that news and gave short shrift to the mobile wagering aspect – and ditto for media in the Madison and Shelby county areas which focused on the shuffle surrounding live dealers for table games.

There was virtually no in-state attention paid to the decision by the chair at this point to remove the requirement for use of official league or sanctioning body data for in-play betting.

At the hearing, Rep. Clere was the first member to express concern about the removal of mobile sports betting from SB 552, suggesting that removing this option “denies the reality that people are walking around with these devices today,” and the fact that smart phones have become a part of people's lives and the social fabric.

But Rep. Clere had bigger fish to fry in the bill, and left it to others to push for its return . . . though no one did in committee (after some in-depth discussion, if not dialogue at the initial House panel hearing), despite its importance to operators, and what senators had been led to believe about how Hoosier gamblers could already conveniently wager illegally overseas via personal electronic devices, and mobile gaming was needed to match the ease of participation and drive illegal sports books out of business and increase the universe of operators within the regulated community.

Terre Haute Sen. Ford told Lindsey Erdody of the Indianapolis Business Journal, “It's a little disappointing” that the mobile component was cast aside in committee. “I believe it's an important part to bring the illegal market into sports wagering so we can regulate it” – which had seemed to be a prevailing view among many leading lawmakers throughout this debate.

Sen. Ford explained to David Williams of WISH-TV in Indianapolis that more than $300 million a year is spent in Indiana on illegal sports betting, “Much of it on cell phones, using illegal apps. There are right now in Indiana a little over 100 illegal apps that people can use to bet on sports. They don't ask for age verification. They don't ask for location verification. These sites, who knows where they're run out of? They could be run out of any place in the world. They're so easy for kids to get on and use. So, my goal has been to try to bring that into a regulated market, similar to daily fantasy sports.”

“I don't know that having electronic sports wagering be legal, stops the illegal book making,” countered Rep. Smaltz to WISH's Williams. “Illegal bookmakers can take credit. They can do it over the phone. It doesn't matter if you're 21 or not.” Sen. Ford adds, “For the illegal sports wagering market, that amendment is a huge boom for them. It'll allow them to grow their business and continue.”

As he delivered his final comments on the bill as amended, Rep. Smaltz detailed his belief that mobile wagering would lead to every community having gambling. “I worry about the tentacles of gaming coming to all of our communities and having it become so pervasive,” he said (“I think it stretches the gambling footprint to the four corners of the state, every community,” he told WISH-TV).

Rep. Smaltz sees mobile gaming as “a pervasive way of recreating at great expense,” and constituting “the very first step to a very large expansion.”

He explained that this would not be moving from step one or two to step three in terms of steps toward expansion, but “If mobile is in, I think it goes from ‘one to 100.’”

If someone could bet on a sporting event from his or her phone, Rep. Smaltz suggested, it starts us on a “slippery slope,” making it hard to argue that Hoosiers shouldn't be able to play black jack and roulette online from their personal electronic devices as well.

Regardless of his personal beliefs, Rep. Smaltz may have overestimated the waning nature of general legislative concern about “expansion” and, perhaps even more importantly, “misunderestimated” the Hoosier Zeitgeist on this issue.

If sports wagering is legalized, there is certainly a public expectation – particularly among the under-40 demographic that operators will target and would love to have – that mobile gaming will be allowed. While Rep. Smaltz doesn’t want to extend gaming into all the nooks and crannies of the Hoosier state, many people would have to travel a few counties to watch a game or race and bet on sports, and that could deter them (or shift them to online off-shore operators).

You can bet that consumers in any major metropolis or college community without a brick-and mortar facility (think, e.g., Fort Wayne, Terre Haute, Bloomington, West Lafayette, and South Bend) will want mobile gaming, as will bar, tavern, and restaurant operators, who want butts in seats to watch games with friends (and wagering will draw interest even on games and sporting events that otherwise wouldn’t draw crowds. The same attitude should be present north of Downtown Indianapolis and southern Hamilton County among consumers and the food and beverage industry.

Like the move from “must-cruise” and limited-hours gaming sessions to dockside gaming open boarding, and Sunday sales of alcohol, Hoosier attitudes and mores are changing, and people expect the law to change with them. You’ll hear lawmakers point out that restricting gaming on the sports wagering front only to brick-and-mortar facilities will inevitably result in lawmakers being forced to revisit and reopen the law in a year or two so they can liberalize it . . . and it makes little sense to: (1) put Indiana at a competitive disadvantage to our neighbors from the start (particularly when some of the changes are being sold to make us more competitive regionally); (2) ignore the reality of the role in which personal electronic devices play in daily lives of Hoosiers and what we expect from them; and, (3) intentionally force a future session to reopen anything related to gaming – particularly in the context of “expanding” things, which can require a quid pro quo from other sectors for support.

Expect mobile gaming advocates to successfully reinsert their favored language in Ways and Means or even on Second Reading . . . and not to have to trade a higher than expected tax rate for it (though it may well be higher than on-site, in-person wagering, that was likely even before the authorization was stripped from the bill).

You will, undoubtedly hear questions from sports wagering skeptics about whether the mobile end of the business is driving the overall concept, but this should not likely prove to be much of a drag on any discussion.

Then there is the actual amount of revenue counted on from mobile wagering . . . and, unlike some other states, as we’ve been hammering home for the last few weeks, Indiana’s legislative leaders aren’t going to let the tail lead the dog here, and will let their beliefs on what the appropriate policy should be guide the discussion, with any revenue serving as gravy (and also seeming to want to keep tax rates low to make Indiana attractive to operator competition and consumers who might otherwise opt for overseas (and unregulated and untaxed vendors). We’re not scrambling to figure out what policy options will bring us say, $200 million to fill a budget hole like Illinois’ governor.

Senate Appropriations Chair Mishler was asked by Abdul Hakim-Shabazz of IndyPolitics.org early last week about how important mobile gaming would be for the budget, and he immediately dismissed the premise.

“It doesn’t bring in that much revenue,” Sen. Mishler responded, before continuing, “I think it’s just a matter of policy. Do we want to do the online gaming as well? We passed it out of here (the Senate), so obviously we didn’t have a problem on our side. So we’ll just have to take a look at the bill as they passed it out (of the House) without the online portion.”

Rep. Smaltz, however, warned that he will continue to fight against such an effort, telling Legal Sports Report, “I’ll certainly keep talking about it. There’s people who want to be on the other side. It will be an active issue.”

Think back, however, to the issue we raised above about trying to use tax policy to help minimize rogue operators. Rep. Smaltz is not persuaded by such arguments, and breaks from Republican leadership on the legalization and regulation being a tool to eliminate the illegal market.

The public policy panel chair tells Legal Sports Report last week “that a black market also would have other advantages that would keep people from moving to a regulated market, such as betting on credit or not having the same age requirements or background checks. ‘Someone could start an account on a mobile device and then sell it to anyone. If I have a cloned phone account set up to the game, it can circumvent age requirements. I think there are many problems with mobile gaming that should not be summarily dismissed.’ Finally, he questioned the size of the black market. ‘Just the definition of a black market means that there isn’t any real data showing its size,’ Smaltz said. ‘How do you know? We don’t know if it’s a big problem or a little problem. Trying to solve it by creating mobile sports wagering seems dubious to me.’”

Such talk with respect to illegal slot machines 12 years ago would have been considered heresy as legislative leaders and the then-governor used the proposed crackdown straw man as justification for allowing slots at the tracks.

Fiscal considerations aside, is mobile wagering needed as part of the sports wagering provisions to win Senate approval?

“I don’t know that it is a necessary component,” Senate President Pro Tem Bray told reporters at the end of March, while conceding that “It’s going to be a much smaller piece of business if it’s confined to the casinos and things.” He continued, “I understand exactly what the chairman is doing over there. He’s got concerns about having it just be everywhere across the state of Indiana and that’s the chairman’s prerogative. So we’ll continue to work on it and look at it.”

Official League Data Requirement Excised.

Stripping the requirement that official league or sanctioning body data be used for in-play wagering received no response from panel members, but sets up a big behind-the-scenes battle now between – in particular – local heavyweights led by the Indianapolis Colts and IndyCar who believe their data is necessary to protect the integrity of complicated wagering, and the casino operators, who don’t want to pay for such information and insist that their operations are free of ethical concerns.

At the initial House committee hearing, members did not seem enamored with league arguments for use of official data (presented by officials or lobbyists with the Colts and National Football League, IndyCar, the National Basketball Association, Major League Baseball, and the PGA Tour), and there didn't seem to be any sentiment toward making Indiana the first state to require use of official league data. This pushback of sorts may have led Rep. Smaltz to yank the league-favored fees.

"We don't normally require single sourcing for any good service information," Smaltz tells Legal Sports Report. "If you can only get it from one source, how do you responsibly charge for that? It seems like that's unreasonable and nobody is doing it."

Rep. Huston faces a heavy lift if he wants to forge a compromise on this in Ways and Means to avoid a big public battle that could prove confusing to some lawmakers and the general public on the difference between straight wagers (such as who wins or loses a game, or on point spreads) and those that may be subject to interpretation (such as how many yards a running back gains on a given play or how fast a race car was on a given lap or what position it was in relative to another car in the field).

Still, he may face a more educated and fiscally aware cadre of lawmakers (as well as more from Indianapolis) on Ways and Means, some of whose members participated in negotiations back in 2013 to provide a $100 million state loan to the Indianapolis Motor Speedway . . . or earlier were involved in state help to the Indianapolis Colts for their Lucas Oil Stadium (expensive Capital Improvement Board and sports facility issues will be on the Ways and Means agenda on Monday, April 8, the day before the gaming bill is addressed).

Potential "compromise": prohibit betting on things for which no data is readily publicly available (e.g., trap times for race cars) or allow the Gameboys to require payouts to be delayed as long as necessary to ensure "final" resolution of a given wager.

Sports Brackets for Veteran/Fraternal Groups.

Among the surprises at the "Amend and Vote Only" Committee on Public Policy session was the amendment offered by Rep. Clere, the champion of expanded gaming options for veterans and fraternal organizations and bars and taverns (he represents a district with an aging population along the Ohio River across from Louisville).

The Clere amendment would allow those two categories of organizations to participate in a limited number of sports bracket wagering events (defined as (1) National Collegiate Athletic Association tournaments; (2) the Super Bowl; (3) the Kentucky Derby; (4) the Indianapolis 500; and (5) other similar events) annually, with proceeds after expenses only allowed to be directed back to the respective organizations.

Rep. Clere suggested that given SB 552 would legalize sports betting, entities existing for the public good should also be permitted to participate. "I thought it would be an appropriate time to add this new opportunity so that they could conduct spots brackets or pool-surrounded events," and allow them to "diversify" their revenue stream, he told fellow committee members. He described it as an appropriate new opportunity for our veterans and fraternal organizations, many of which are struggling to keep their doors open.

Clere was concerned that if sports betting on a more general basis as proposed in SB 552 were to be legalized there would be a push to crack down on illegal sports betting – which was how some leaders have outlined (and justified) legalized sports wagering, relating it to the 2007-08 get-tough policy on illegal slot machines with the approval of slots at the track. "I think it's reasonable to think" that those granted franchises for sports wagering "will not like the idea" of sports betting bucks that are not flowing through the legal framework, he told Rep. Moed, whose district includes the Winner's Circle Pub, Grille & OTB.

Some members of the panel – including the chair, Rep. Smaltz, were clearly uneasy with adding the Clere provisions to SB 552. Some of that concern dealt with issues related to some of the specific language (or lack of it) – the committee agreed to change the word "ass" in the amendment to the correct "as," perhaps a microcosm of the haste and lack of deliberation on this amendment.

"We need to set up proper guardrails so that we are all on the same page," said Rep. Eberhart after questioning the difference between full-blown sports books in the larger SB 552 and the Clere-sought sports pools. Clere told him that he was spare in his language because he was "trying not to be overly prescriptive in crafting this amendment."

Perhaps the bigger concern of the chair and members, however, was that the measure as a whole did not get weighed down with extraneous provisions that distracted from the larger picture and that could generate an excuse for opposition. The distraction issue became more of a reality as members realized that they actually spent more time working through – without resolving key internal issues – the Clere amendment than they had spent on all other provisions in SB 552.

The Indiana Gaming Commission's Charity Gaming Division would be responsible for creating rules for this form of gambling as foreseen by Clere. Revenue would be divided between the winners and the charitable organization, but no money beyond a permit fee would go to the state, and "the revenue would support charitable purposes."

In terms of specifics, House Majority Floor Leader Matt Lehman (R) of Berne pressed Clere about whether there was a definition of the term "similar event in this legislation," questioning whether an entity could simply contend that "every Saturday night" was a "similar event." Rep. Clere told him that the measure provided a cap of four times per year, but didn't want to limit those activities to just the events listed in the bill.

Clere was also pushed on whether the amendment might mean a group licensed for the activity "could have multiple in-play pools," and he tried to suggest that would not be permitted because the activity would be for "final" results – only to be told that the word "final" did not appear in his draft. That led to a discussion of how the phrase "the outcome" could be read, with Rep. Smaltz expressing concern about how it might be interpreted.

When Rep. Lehman wondered about entities holding multiple licenses, the author conceded that "We may need to tighten that up a little bit."

Rep. Dan Forestal (D) of Indianapolis asked Clere to provide an example of something his amendment helped to address, and was told that it provides a new opportunity for veterans groups and fraternal organizations to support the charitable purposes “that they are all about.” Rep. Forestal asked whether the State was stepping in to get a cut “of what is already happening,” and Clere told him if the groups are already engaging in the activity, “they are doing it illegally,” and reiterated that “100%” of the revenue that is not paid to the winners, minus permit fees, would remain with the charitable organization. Forestal asked Clere whether he believed four legal opportunities for gambling a year will stop some entities from conducting the activity more frequently. “That’s a question for the Charity Gaming Division,” Rep. Clere responded, adding that he hoped that if lawmakers established a policy creating a legal framework, they would take advantage of that opportunity.

Rep. Moed was unconvinced, reminding his colleague that illegal gambling is taking place in such entities “now and they are not doing anything about it.” Rep. Moed asked, “Why would this change?” Rep. Clere said that while he didn’t want to call anyone out individually, there was someone in the hearing room today that is a part of a group that was just caught doing this.

Rep. Matt Hostettler (R) of Fort Branch tried to move things along by summarizing that SB 552 was seeking to bring sports wagering into the Indiana gaming milieu, “and you want to bring it into charity gaming, which is already here. Is that right?” That is correct, replied Rep. Clere. “This is just a good starting point for the conversation,” and we can work on language with the Charity Gaming Division. “We all know this bill has a long way to go and I hope we can continue to have a meaningful discussion.”

But in response to the next question, from Rep. Austin, Clere acknowledged that he had not consulted with the Gaming Commission on his amendment.

Rep. Austin asked some pointed question about regulatory authority and definitions that she thought Rep. Clere had overlooked, prompting a request for the committee’s indulgence, and a reiteration of the most over-used phrase during March and early April in the halls of the State House: that “This is a work in progress.”

But solons were divided on where to go with this. Rep. Moed found Rep. Clere to be “well-intentioned,” and “does want to work with us,” and suggested that he could support the Clere amendment moving forward. Rep. Eberhart, however, hoped that Clere would “pull back” and take care of it in Ways and Means. There is more fiscal impact to this measure than just licenses and revenues, he suggested

Rep. Clere said that had he made this amendment more prescriptive, the questions would be regarding why he did so. Rather, he continued, I kept it “basic” and as a result “no one is happy.” “This is a simple piece of legislation,” he said, in the other most-overused phrase that is heard Inside the Limestone during session.

Clere’s amendment was adopted by consent, but even he was surprised by the amount of debate fostered by his proposal.

As to where this language might be headed . . . legislators have been willing in recent years to expand some gaming options for the types of entities that would be covered here, but have been torn between helping them and dealing with the seemingly increasing number of bad actors.

While no one raised the issue of the comprehensive Indiana Gaming Commission rewrite of charitable gaming laws also proceeding through the General Assembly with no apparent opposition (and the backing of stakeholders, who sought the revisions and participated in its drafting, as well as separate more specifically targeted charity gaming legislation authored by Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem that eventually passed the public policy panel last week) proceeding, look for the broader legislation – authored by Chairman Smaltz – to perhaps be amended to include some of the basic Clere provisions, and not even necessarily conditioned upon the legalization of sports wagering.

Gaming enforcement officers have had their hands full chasing down and dealing with these illegal pools around key sporting events (albeit many at bars and taverns that would not be covered by the Clere amendment), and this could resolve a burden while performing community good. If the Clere amendment finds its way into the larger charity gaming measure, there could be a provision for similarly limited and regulated pools for Type II gaming license holders, but with those that are not charitable entities forced to tithe to the state or charity.

You could also potentially see a proposal like this added with an interesting caveat: that a Type II or other charitable gaming operator seeking to gain the privilege of limited sports bracket betting barred from being licensed if they had participated in illegal sports gambling (or subject to having permits revoked if they would later do so). Stronger penalties could help reassure lawmakers who might be on the fence about this.

Illinois legislation on a broader scale is proposing this, but not targeting the small fries, but rather the fantasy sports operators Draft Kings and FanDuel, whom lawmakers there believe have been operating illegally under current state law.

County Recapture of Sports Wagering Revenues.

Rep. Moed of Indianapolis offered an amendment that he said seeks to examine how much revenue is likely to be derived from sports wagering, and how those dollars would be distributed. He specifically wanted to look at Marion County to see how that money would be captured and spent because, as he framed it, “this is entirely new money,” and any time new revenues are generated, lawmakers look to see where it goes and how it is spent.

While the Moed amendment had a specific directive for the direction of local cash – he would direct tax revenue attributable to sports wagering occurring in Marion County into the housing trust fund – discussion seemed to assiduously avoid talk of any specific earmark.

Rep. Huston reminded Rep. Moed that Marion County receives $5.2 million in gaming revenue shares even though it is a non-casino county. He told colleagues that there are a number of “technicalities” in these discussions, and he anticipated that this would be addressed in Ways and Means.

Rep. Clere asked Rep. Moed about the implications for the state General Fund and other counties. "I'm not a fiscal expert," he was told by Moed, who reminded him that the Legislative Services Agency would prepare a fiscal note if the amendment were to be adopted. He said that there is a broad estimate that $3 million will be generated, but much of this will be determined by Ways and Means.

The Moed amendment was adopted by consent.

Miscellany.

Look for any final package to include more attention to and more funding for problem gambling programs. While it may have seemed that committee members only politely listened to advocates such as the Indiana Council on Problem Gambling, there is considerable sentiment – and not just from anti-gamers – to beef up state programs, particularly given a likely expansion into the sports wagering milieu, which would attract a much younger demographic – particularly college students and those recently graduated.

At the March 27 hearing, Rep. Austin, whose district includes Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino, expressed concern that an appropriation for problem gaming was "missing in this bill." She wanted an appropriation, citing statistics that some six percent of problem gamers are college students. "College kids are the most vulnerable" population under a legalized sports wagering construct. She also said that she wanted to know the Indianapolis-based National Collegiate Athletic Association's comprehensive plan to protect players, officials, and coaches.

That's the problem gambling problem in a nutshell: the new form of wagering, if authorized, would create a new class of customer, presumably more vulnerable than the typical casino patron, while there has been no attendant new funding mechanism set forth.

The SB 552-proposed 75-mile buffer for overlapping markets also fell victim to Rep. Smaltz's amendment.

And there were questions about the ownership caps and the proposed definition of "undue economic concentration" as a factor to be considered by the Gameboys in licensing decisions. (and some confusion about whether this applied to license ownership "cap" decisions, license moves, or both)

Rep. Clere asked Rep. Smaltz about his intent with respect to the definition of undue economic concentration. Rep. Smaltz explained that undue economic concentration would mean a person or entity would have actual or potential domination of casino gambling in Indiana that would be sufficient to: (1) substantially impede or suppress competition; (2) adversely impact the economic stability of the casino industry in Indiana; or, (3) negatively impact the purpose of the act – including tourism, benefits to the local communities, and state and local revenues.

There will still be concerns over "expansion," regardless of how hollow the concept may ring in the minds of lawmakers who preceded the 2007 authorization of racinos. Majority Floor Leader Lehman – who is a cosponsor of SB 552 – labels it "an expansion" of gaming and not merely a "shift," and he asks rhetorically, if solons allow the move of a casino license from the water to the interstate in Gary, what prevents other casinos that want to move to more "desirable" areas from doing the same.

On top of all this, sports gaming, Rep. Lehman says, is a whole new "avenue" opening up. Yet he acknowledges that gaming is now a part of our life in Indiana, and "we are all in."

Rep. Lehman acknowledged that while he did not like everything in this bill, he found it to be "much better with the amendments" that were included, and he would be among those who supported the bill in committee as it passed 12-0.

Rep. Huston explained that he viewed his charge upon recommitment to Ways and Means as working to determine what is the correct public policy for the entire state, the Kenley "adult at the table" role from 2009 that didn't quite work out then.

He reminded committee members that the organic gaming law specifically states that a license to operate a casino is revocable and not a property right. He pledged to work through the hold-harmless language with his fellow Ways and Means members. "We want to make everybody 'harmless,'" he added.

Huston also outlined a need to ensure that the horsemen were treated appropriately in any measure.

Finally, he returned to the concepts that he has posited over the past few years, and which we thought he and the Governor had looked toward when the administration changed at the outset of 2017: long-term implications need to be assessed; we need to ensure that Indiana stays competitive with our neighboring states; and we need to pay careful attention to the concerns around problem gaming.

One last item to ponder: will esports – struck down seemingly from the start – emerge as a topic again in any sports wagering discussion?

"Prior to us amending the bill, I don't think it would have passed committee," Rep. Smaltz tells Legal Sports Report. "After amending, it had a unanimous vote. That bodes well for it."

"Nothing, absolutely nothing, from this point forward will be easy about this," said Rep. Huston at the end of the House hearing Wednesday late afternoon as the bill headed to his Ways and Means panel for an early morning hearing on Tuesday, April 9 . . . and then a new wrinkle emerged.

The Governor's Role.

Complicating things further just a few hours later: a Thursday Indianapolis Star story by Kaitlin Lange and Tony Cook that drags the Governor into the battle in an unflattering light.

Lange and Cook reported, "An Indiana casino magnate last year treated Gov. Eric Holcomb to two private-jet flights and directed six-figure sums to Holcomb's biggest 2016 campaign donor, all while pushing for big changes to the state's gaming laws that would benefit his new business. Rod Ratcliff, chairman and CEO of Spectacle Entertainment, flew Holcomb to meetings in Aspen, Colorado, and Scottsdale, Arizona, in July and November, respectively, that were hosted by the source of that campaign money, the Republican Governors Association. The flights, one of which tax records show cost about $20,000, gave Ratcliff and his business partners hours of exclusive access to the governor, who will have final say over their plans to move two Gary casinos to more lucrative locations. One of the flights was just a day before Ratcliff announced plans to acquire those two casinos."

Your favorite gaming newsletter has reported in detail on the contributions by Ratcliff and Centaur officials to RGA and the Republican State Leadership Committee in recent years, but the flights – and their timing – is new, and comes at a delicate time in the process, as SB 552 headed to fiscal revisions in Ways and Means.

Terre Haute businessman Greg Gibson, a top Spectacle partner who has remained largely silent to date about the proposed Wabash Valley project, spoke out about the RGA trips to Howard Greninger of the Terre Haute Tribune-Star. Gibson told him that all of the flights were within the law, and that while he and his wife were passengers on the July 2018 flight, he had not yet joined Spectacle and “the subject of gaming was never raised in any conversation that I was a part of.” He further explained, “We were invited to go along after the trip was already planned,” and “At the time, I was not a partner in Spectacle. I was considering the opportunity, but had not yet made a final decision.”

He reminded Greninger that “Eric and I have known each other for nearly 30 years. My wife and I consider Eric and Janet to be close friends. And here’s another news flash for you, it’s not the first time that I’ve been on a plane with Eric Holcomb,” Gibson said. “We see and speak with them often. I don’t need to get on an airplane to have a conversation with them,” he added.

While the Indiana Republican Party went to great lengths to provide reporters with a detailed memo emphasizing that the flights were entirely legal and that reporting requirements (largely falling on the RGA side of the equation) were followed, note that the law is a moral minimum, and Gov. Holcomb has gone to great lengths to protect his personal and political reputation over the years. This is something that, while perfectly legal, will a tough time passing the “smell test,” and will give any lawmaker who might be on the fence an excuse to vote against it because it just doesn’t look good and might be difficult to justify to constituents – who, in districts which are not directly tied to a beneficent local casino owner, have an entirely different perception of “casino magnates” that fits the negative historical narrative.

On his March 29 paid political radio show on WJOB 1230-AM in Hammond, Hammond Mayor McDermott (D) reviewed the Star story live on the air. “This is so corrupt,” he charged. “It’s total corruption.” “This confirms my worst fears,” hizzoner said, walking listeners through the RGA flight mechanics and reminding them that “I would never even dare crossing that line,” and hasn’t taken contributions from casinos or their execs. “This thing is done. It’s bought and sold. They’ve got the governor right in their back pocket,” he said with his usual dose of hyperbole. Calling the RGA flights “bribes from the casino industry,” Mayor Tom suggested that if something similar had happened “in Lake County ... you’d be indicted.”

Legislative leaders have expressed concern over appearances in cases involving legislators and casinos in the past, leading to more hurdles in the legislature for casinos until time passed.

Senate President Pro Tem Bray said of the Spectacle flights at the end of March that “if you follow the laws ... nothing was done incorrectly there. There was maybe a report that the Republican Governors Association should have filed; they’re going to clean that up. That was probably just simply an error.”

The Senate leader added that Gov. Holcomb “has been kind of keeping an eye on it, but has not been engaged or advocating for anything. He has just simply been letting the legislature work through this process, so he really has not been involved in that.”

And will the Governor push for the revival of the Gary port proposal? Is this a project that he even countenances? If Gov. Holcomb seeks the revival of the port complex proposal, does that then change this back into a true legislative issue again, and drive the debate and start the dominoes tumbling?

IN General

- Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) joins a bipartisan coalition of attorneys general from 23 states and the District of Columbia in expressing concern to the U.S. Department of Justice over a sweeping legal opinion that may negatively impact state-run and multi-state lotteries, including the Mega Millions and Powerball draw games. The letter, sent March 21 to U.S. Attorney General William Barr and Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, warns that the new interpretation of the Wire Act encroaches on state sovereignty, notes that it contradicts conclusions by the majority of states that multi-state lottery games are consistent with federal law, and represents a reversal of course on prior interpretations of the law by DoJ (reverting back to its 1961 perspective), explaining that this controversial new legal opinion regarding the Wire Act could reach beyond the realms of sports gambling and into areas traditionally controlled by the states, potentially jeopardizing in-state lotteries, as we’ve told you in these pages.

- The bipartisan letter contends the new DoJ opinion, which in the industry some suspect emanated from casino mogul Sheldon Adelson, the leading Republican Party donor nationally and a longstanding opponent of online gaming, could call into question interstate transmissions related to all bets or wagers, even where fully authorized under relevant state law. That reality, combined with the increasingly interstate nature of internet and cellular transmissions, may mean conduct that was long understood to be legal now invites exposure to severe criminal penalties. The new interpretation reversed the U.S. Department of Justice’s prior (2011) legal opinion, which prohibited only interstate transmission of information regarding sporting events or contests, and states fear it could end mobile sports wagering before it even gets underway in most states.

- The state coalition’s letter seeks a meeting with AG Barr and Rosenstein. DoJ has seen fit to extend a safe harbor period because of state reaction to the new view of the Wire Act. The state AGs also ask for an extension of Rosenstein’s initial 90-day compliance window for an additional 90 days, from April 15 until or beyond August 13. The state officials contend an extension would provide time for states to meet with the Justice Department and their vendors to enhance each state’s ability to safeguard state services and its citizens.

- “Whatever one’s opinions about legalized gambling,” Attorney General Hill said, “we all can agree on the need for consistent and sensible rules governing states’ participation in lotteries. Indiana relies on lottery proceeds to fund multiple worthwhile programs, and we rely on financial projections from past fiscal years when budgeting for the future. Our office works daily to protect the interest of Hoosiers, and that’s what we’re doing yet again in this instance.”

● An Indiana Department of Administration-organized evaluation team recommends selecting BMM North America, Inc. and Gaming Laboratories International, LLC for contract negotiations to provide Gaming Laboratory Certification Testing Services for the Indiana Gaming Commission, effectively awarding those two entities the IGC contract. These were the only two bidders to respond to the IGC Request for Proposals.

□ BMM North America has committed to subcontract 8% of the total contract value to Phelco Technologies (a certified minority-owned business), 8.717% of the total contract value to ETI Performance Improvement (a certified woman-owned business), and 3.11% of the total contract value to Rivera Consulting Group, Inc. (a certified Indiana Veteran Owned Small Business).

□ GLI committed to subcontract 4.0% of the total contract value to former IGC commissioner Justin Christian's Bucher & Christian Consulting DBA BC forward (a certified MBE), 4.0% of the total contract value to Sondhi Solutions LLC (a certified MBE), 7.0% of the total contract value to NetlogX LLC (a certified WBE), 1.0% of the total contract value to former IGC general counsel Kay Fleming's Fleming Stage, LLC (a certified WBE) and 3.0% of the total contract value to Paladin Defense Groups, Inc. (a certified IVOSB).

□ The contract will run for a period of two years from the date of contract execution. There may be two one-year renewal for a total of four years, at the State's option.

● Indiana's direct gaming employment remained stable in February, but only after benchmarking (yeah, again) dropped the preliminary January numbers by 200 jobs from the preliminary 11,700 direct gaming jobs in January we touted for you in our last issue. Looking back at January, that means a larger (400-job) drop from January 2018, the month in which the Native American casino opened in South Bend, as well as a much smaller (200-job) growth over December 2018, and not 400 more jobs. Preliminary February gaming employment numbers of 11,500 is down by 400 jobs (- 3.36%) from the benchmarked February 2018 total of 11,900 such jobs. February 2018 marked the first full month in which the Four Winds Casino South Bend was open for the full month, and the comparison to February 2019 is the first month in which we now have comparable same-unit comparisons. February 2018 was also notable for the heavy flooding along the southern tier which caused some casino closures. February has seen only three over-the-year gains in direct gaming employment since the racinos debuted in 2008.

□ If we had not factored in the ≈ 1,200 Four Winds jobs, January gaming employment would actually be at its lowest level since 1997, in spite of the number of new jobs created by property additions, renovations, and partial land-side moves at the commercial casinos. February becomes the 66th consecutive month – 5½ straight years – in which the state has seen the gaming employment level linger below 13,000 direct gaming industry jobs, a figure surpassed in each month of the first decade of the 21st century, even through the impact of the 9/11 attacks and the 2008-09 fiscal crisis.

Direct Gaming Employment - Past 16 Months

02/19	01/19	12/18	11/18	10/18	09/18	08/18	07/18

□ After 2018 became the first time in which Indiana's February direct gaming employment demonstrated over-the-year growth since 2011 (thanks to the new Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians casino), it dropped again in February 2019. Compared to February just five years back, Hoosier gaming industry direct employment is down by 600 jobs (- 4.96%) from 2014. Dating back 10 years, the number of jobs are off by 2,500 (- 17.86%) from 14,000 in February 2009, as the national fiscal crisis was making its mark in Indiana (particularly across the northern tier) during the presidential transition. Indiana is also down by 4,600 gaming jobs – off by 28.57% – from the peak of February direct gaming employment, a robust 16,100 jobs in the salad days of 2001 (even through all riverboats were still forced by law to cruise; there was one fewer commercial casino; we were bereft of a Native American casino; and both racinos were not yet open).

● In Supplemental Memorandum of Decision: 01-20181996, the Indiana Department of Revenue finds that out-of-state individuals provided sufficient documentation permitting them to “net” their “per session” gambling losses and gambling winnings on a “per session” basis in determining the amount of “other income” reported on their Indiana income tax return. In this case, the taxpayers argued that the Department erred in denying them a refund of individual income tax on the ground that they had presented sufficiently reliable documentation justifying an offset of their gambling “losses” against their gambling “winnings.”

□ The taxpayers are individuals living in Illinois but who file Indiana income tax returns. They filed a 2016 Indiana tax return seeking a refund of income tax withheld on Indiana gambling winnings, reporting winning approximately $590,000 from an Indiana casino. On the same return, they reported “same day losses” of approximately $460,000. They “offset” their Indiana gambling losses against their gambling winnings resulting in “Indiana taxable winnings of [approximately $130,000].” Revenue reviewed the return, rejected the gambling calculations, and denied the originally claimed refund. The taxpayers disagreed with the conclusion, appealed, and an administrative hearing was conducted during which the taxpayers representative explained the basis for the protest. Final Order Denying Refund 01-20180755R (June 29, 2018), 20180829 Ind. Reg. 045180335NRA, was issued denying the protest. As explained in that order, the taxpayers failed to provide the required documentation necessary for the Department's review and verification.

□ The taxpayers disagreed with the Department's decision and requested a rehearing conducted during which their representative again explained the basis for the argument. The issue here is whether the taxpayers presented sufficient information justifying their assertion that they are entitled to offset their daily gambling losses against their dialing gambling winnings.

□ In this case, the taxpayers provided the Indiana casino's daily gambling activity report, a spreadsheet prepared by the taxpayers' representatives summarizing the taxpayers' own contemporaneous journal, their own handwritten journal summarizing net winnings and losses by date and location, and their federal 1040 calculation of Indiana adjusted gross income.

□ The Department of Revenue ultimately concludes that the documentation provided is sufficient for the Department to substantiate their calculation of the net winnings attributable to Indiana gambling activities and – after verifying the calculation – to issue any consequent refund.

IN Illegal Gambling

● Former five-term Steuben County prosecutor Tom Wilson (R) passed away, leaving us with some great stories about his colorful stand against illegal gambling in Northeast Indiana, where his crusade against Cherry Masters earned him both the respect of some upright members of the community and the enmity of owners of businesses targeted by his efforts and prosecutors of neighboring counties who were not interested in being as aggressive in rooting out illegal gambling in their communities.

□ Long-time readers of this newsletter will likely recall how Wilson's efforts, launched in 1995 and maintained through the end of that decade, brought the force of the law down on Cherry Masters; pull-tabs; stamp machines; and quarter-pushing devices that became pervasive throughout the county. After issuing a July 1995 county-wide order to local establishments calling upon them to end their illegal gambling (by way of context, that was just as the Indiana Gaming Commission had granted certificates of suitability to the first two Cincinnati market casinos), "That was followed in 1996 with a string of prohibition-style raids on businesses that defied Wilson's orders to remove the games," reports the Angola Herald Republican. Local convictions on both misdemeanor and felony professional gambling counts followed, and "In February 1998, Wilson issued an order to mainly bars to remove pull tabs. After Wilson gave businesses a two-week period to remove the machines, some establishments took that to mean they could bring back Cherry Masters for that stretch of time. The machines reportedly were kept in homes of friends of proprietors of establishments that had Cherry Masters."

□ While prosecutors in some other counties (particularly Boone County, Fountain County, Wells County, and also Whitley County) were cracking down on illegal gambling at that point as well (as was the Indiana Alcoholic Beverage Commission, a sit was named then, the Steuben County actions led at least two prominent Allen County Republican lawmakers at the time to open discussions of legalizing machines for bars, taverns, and fraternal organizations.

IN Sports Wagering

● Yet another box of abandoned pigeons turns up at a state-run I-65 rest stop in White County (we think this marks the third such instance in about four months), but a big local pigeon race seems to be unaffected.

□ The Wanatah-based proprietors of the 2019 Hoosier Classic Million Dollar Pigeon Race, featuring the "biggest prize payout in the history of one-loft racing" in North America, claim that nearly 4,000 perches have already been reserved. The organizers are accepting entries from all over the world and have facilities on 20 acres of farmland that can accommodate some 9,000 birds . . . and we're not quite sure whether these folks would qualify under the pending sport wagering bill as an official sanctioning body – or if pigeon racing will be an activity for which the Gameboys will allow wagering.

□ At wincompanion.com, where the races are streamed live, the organizers report that new entries are coming in daily. "4-5 days a week the post office is calling at 6:30 letting us know there are birds to be picked up" according to the pigeon race purveyors. "When shipping remember not to overcrowd the boxes and also include information for the loft in the box along with the payment if not pre-paid."

□ The initial 100 mile qualifying race will be September 1, followed by a series of 125-mile, 150-mile, 180-mile, and 220-mile races. The final 350-mile race (lasting eight hours) is scheduled for October 14, weather permitting. The organizers promise "total guaranteed prizes of over $1,267,000," including a top prize of $500,000 for the 350-mile winner. The breeder of the "Best Average Speed Bird" from across all races will take home a choice of $40,000 or a 2019 Ford F-150 truck. No word as to whether the winner and its crew will peck a yard bricks at the start/finish line.

□ In addition to the prize payouts, the top 100 pigeons from the final race will be auctioned off at I-Pigeon, with breeders receiving 50% of their bird's auction proceeds. Elite racing pigeons have been known to fetch more than $1 million at auction.

IN Native American Gaming

● The Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians becomes just the fifth tribe to be granted a Certificate of Self-Regulation from the National Indian Gaming Commission (NIGC). The tribe's certificate of self-regulation went into effect on January 1, 2019, and it becomes first tribe in Michigan and Indiana to receive such certification. Under the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (IGRA) and NIGC regulations (25 C.F.R. Part 518), self-regulation status allows a tribe to regulate Class II gaming with reduced NIGC oversight. The Commission only issues certificates of self-regulation to a tribe that can demonstrate it has satisfied the applicable requirements, which include a three-year review to ensure its gaming activities have been in compliance with the IGRA, NIGC regulations, and the tribe's laws and regulations.

□ As part of the self-regulation process, the NIGC spent a significant amount of time reviewing the Tribe's gaming regulatory structures. This review process ensures the Tribe has conducted its gaming activity in a manner that effectively accounts for all gaming revenue; that it has a reputation for a safe, fair and honest operation; and that it is free of criminal or dishonest activities. Additionally, the NIGC confirms that the Tribe's gaming operation is operated on a fiscally sound basis and that it has adequate systems for accounting, investigations, licensing and enforcement.

IN Casinos

IN Other Casino News . . .

● In a quick visit to Terre Haute for an Indiana Economic Development Corporation meeting a few days before the House Committee on Public Policy met to discuss SB 552, Governor Eric Holcomb (R) was asked about casino prospects by Howard Greninger of the Terre Haute Tribune-Star. The Governor told him, "I applaud the leaders here in the Wabash Valley for coming together and singing from the sheet of music, so to speak. We depend, as a state, on the revenue that is generated from our casinos from gaming across the whole state. I have said, while it is not part of my legislative agenda or administrative agenda, it is something that I am willing to take a second look at because, after all, when all of these (casino) licenses were passed out initially, things have changed over time. He added, "I think it is appropriate to have this discussion in the legislature," and "it does make sense to me that one of those [two Gary licenses] could be split off and moved to another place."

□ Where does Lieutenant Governor Suzanne Crouch (R), who used to represent Evansville in the General Assembly, stand in the gaming debate? She tells Tom Langhorne of the Evansville Courier & Press after a Southwest Indiana Chamber event - at Tropicana Evansville March 22 "that she isn't a player in the debate over a Senate-passed bill that could place a casino in Terre Haute. That would likely mean stiff competition for Tropicana Evansville - and, some say, significant losses." "There's a lot of conversations that I'm not privy to," said the official who presides over the Senate. "Until the bill's actually reached the Senate in a final form, I am not too engaged in the process of that until then because that may be when I might have to vote on something if there's a tie vote," she said. The LG told Langhorne she isn't taking a strong stand on the legislation "because it is such a fluid process, and it is such a fluid topic. What came out of the Senate, I know will change in the House," she said. "I expect it will go to conference committee, and we'll have to see what is hammered out."

□ Of note, however, is her Evansville-centric position that could have broader implications for hold-harmless language and those looking for sympathetic Administration ear. "I would love, whatever happens, to see Tropicana's assessment protected because they just invested $50 million for a land-based casino here in this area," she tells the paper. "So we want to ensure that if anything happens, it doesn't hurt those people and those corporations in those communities that have already created investments in their own communities."

Vice Lotteries seeks to sell games resembling the Hoosier Lottery's scratch-off and quick-pick games, as well as keno. Vice "plans to use artificial intelligence tools to suggest betting and odds limits for individual gamblers to ensure that the frequency and probability of their play aids in their savings and investments rather than depleting them."

Vice does not expect to offer games similar to Powerball and Mega Millions, explaining that the distributional odds for these games "would make equitable gambling equitable in theory only to all except billionaires."

The company wants to "restore states to their roles as business regulators, rather than lottery purveyors" via the "equitable gambling" model, which it believes will also help to "reverse income inequality by building tools to develop financial responsibility and literacy. Starting by taking loss out of lotteries, Vice Lotteries will provide gamblers with transparent, statistical data for informed wagering and saving with knowledge of the effects their decisions can be expected to have on their personal wealth."

The company's founder and top exec is Matthew Curtis, the named plaintiff on the lawsuit who describes himself as a "serial entrepreneur," and an attorney who has litigated constitutional claims for the Institute for Justice. Joining Curtis on the team is Michael Esposito, a former long-time editor for the Chicago Tribune, and senior developer Brett Kirby, a former GM employee.

Curtis, a computer programmer, also says that he has written the necessary code for "equitable gambling" games, and built a payment and odds-sourcing infrastructure, along with algorithms to set individual betting limits. He says that he is optimistic about bringing the concept to market within six months, pending necessary approvals.

As you might expect, the State was not pleased with Curtis' plans nor impressed by his argument. The Office of the Attorney General last month filed a motion to dismiss accompanied by a lengthy memorandum in support of the motion effectively contending that the Curtis complaint should be dismissed because he does not have standing and has failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. "While Mr. Curtis asserts that the Indiana Lottery and Indiana law violates the First, Tenth, and Fourteenth Amendments, Courts have repetitively concluded that the state has police powers to regulate gambling for the legitimate health, safety, and welfare of the public."

While Curtis seeks to enjoin OAG from enforcing the lottery law and pursuing him (and Vice) for any violations, OAG notes that the Lottery is a body separate corporate and politic, and "The Attorney General is not authorized to implement or control the Lottery." While "the State criminalizes operating and advertising a gambling enterprise in Indiana the Attorney General is not charged with enforcing criminal law in the State of Indiana."

Further, "Plaintiff brings no case or controversy to this Court." He also "lacks standing to bring a case on behalf of the public. While Plaintiff claims that Indiana citizens are harmed by the State's monopoly and the loss of money by playing the Indiana Lottery, he has not shown how he has standing to sue on their behalf."

OAG also shoots down each of the respective allegations of constitutional violations, including a contention that "The First Amendment claim fails because Plaintiff is engaging in unlawful speech."

“‘That’s against the law, and you can’t talk about it,’ seems to be the opinion of the State of Indiana, as it protects Hoosier Lottery’s profits and entrenches the misfortune of its citizens,” claims a Vice Lotteries spokesperson. “Indiana also claims that ‘the State is able to protect its citizens from unlawful gambling through its close regulation.’ This from a state that skims about 37 percent of every lottery ticket purchase, adding to many wealth-disparity problems it tries so hard to help. Vice Lotteries simply wants to create a lottery wherein 100 percent of wagers stays in the prize pool, returning the money to the communities where it began. This seems like something Indiana should want, but it doesn’t.”

● The $768.4 million Powerball jackpot won by a single ticket in Wisconsin in the Wednesday, March 23 draw ranked as the third-largest jackpot ever up for grabs domestically (and second-largest ever for Powerball). The lump-sum cash payout value of $476.9 million was the fourth-highest in U.S. history (third for Powerball). The big bucks were the result of a string of 25 successive draws without a winner that started with a $40 million prize on December 29, 2018.

● The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for Saturday, April 6, grew to $33.5 million, ascending by $500,000 over the April 3 jackpot of $33.0 million. The April 3 top prize had represented just a $200,000 jump over March 30, which tied for the lowest increment since February 20. Jackpot growth slowed for three consecutive draws after two successive $400,000 jumps and a $500,000 infusion for the March 9 draw, the second $500,000 addition during March (after the state had not seen that high a jackpot improvement since the November 7 drawing). The March 6-16 run of jackpot infusions constituted the four largest consecutive additions to the jackpot pool since the quartet of draws that spanned October 31 through November 10. The draw on Wednesday, March 6 had marked the first time in more than seven years (since February 18, 2012) that the Hoosier Lotto jackpot topped $30 million, a key psychological number for casual players.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for April 6 ranks as the third highest domestically behind only Powerball and Mega Millions. This is also the largest jackpot available in more than seven years, since the $34.50 million jackpot hit on February 18, 2012 (a similar-sized jackpot was also won October 30, 2010).

□ The current jackpot also still significantly lags the top two jackpots on record, $54.5 million (won more than 10 years ago, on November 7, 2007) and $42 million (won on June 5, 1999). The jackpot was last hit on February 7, 2018, so the current jackpot has now gone unclaimed for more than a full year, and has become the third-largest on record dating back at least 17 years.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot reigned as the nation’s fourth-largest domestic jackpot from the $24.2 million December 19 draw until January 2, trailing the two multistate draw games and California’s SuperLotto Plus . . . but after the California jackpot was hit, the Hoosier Lotto jackpot was third domestically, and the top non-multistate game (by a $14.1 million margin) since January 24. However, Hoosier Lotto is in danger of being overtaken by the twice-weekly California draw game later this week, because the value of the April 6 Golden State jackpot was $33 million, and it balloons by $1 million per draw.

IN Horse Racing & Racinos

● The frustrating weather-related issues that had held back workers from completing the new track surface at Indiana Grand Racing & Casino that we told you about in our last issue lingered on through March. Jon Schuster, the facility’s vice president and general manager of racing, took to social media late in March to update horsemen about the status of the upgrades, and while he wasn’t able to be particularly encouraging at that point, things eventually worked out for the horsemen.

□ He explained that Indiana weather and its typical seasonal patterns have “continued to slow down efforts in getting track cushion material manufactured and delivered. While this entire endeavor has been dictated by the weather at this point, I would like to make sure that everyone knows we are making it our very top priority to get the surface applied to the track correctly. It’s important that this is done the right way – it’s a big project, and it’s a big deal to all of us. We are not going to cut any corners to speed things up by a day or two; the safety of our horses and riders are far too important to us and we intend to get the renovation done right.”

□ “That being said,” Schuster continued, “there is no current planned date for the track to be open for training, but April 1st has been identified as a potential target date. As we gain more information, get more material manufactured and delivered, and begin to actually lay the cushion down, I will keep everyone apprised of how we are proceeding. Taking all that information into account, I will do my very best to get everyone a solid date as soon as I can reliably give you one. Once we are able to confirm an opening date for training, folks can begin making shipping and staffing plans, etc.”

□ As things worked out, April 1 was the opening date for training with the $700,000 track renovation complete. There will be a daily break between 8:30 a.m. - 9:00 a.m. EDT, same as previous years. The track will be open for training until 11:00 a.m. EDT each day.

● A motion to dissent was filed in the House on Monday on HB 1196, the Indiana Horse Racing Commission’s seemingly noncontroversial agency bill that passed the House 94-0 before clearing the Senate in amended form 46-2, and on Tuesday, the House dissented from Senate amendments

□ The Senate Committee on Public Policy had added a technical amendment by consent to the measure, authored by Rep. Bob Cherry (R) of Greenfield, that struck the definition of a claiming race so that claiming races will continue to be exempt from sales taxes; changed conflict of interest rules for veterinarians to allow them to treat other breeds; and eliminated language on the panels themselves appointing chairs for each breed development committee, because that conflicted with current law affording that power to the governor.

IN Bingo and Charitable Gaming

● Fourteen days after it passed the Senate (unamended) on a 41-7 vote, HB 1517, the Indiana Gaming Commission’s agency bill revamping Indiana’s charity gaming laws, was signed by Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) of Martinsville, and heads to the House for signature by the Speaker of the House before proceeding to the Governor’s desk for final approval.

□ By comparison, the Senate concurred Tuesday on the high-profile bias crimes bill that the House passed on March 26, and the Governor signed the measure on Wednesday.

● The House Committee on Public Policy held a Wednesday hearing on SB 393, legislation authored by Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem that would grant certain bona fide civic organizations the ability to hold an annual charity game night license.

□ Before the panel heard from Sen. Houchin, the panel chair, Rep. Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn, offered a technical amendment, adopted by consent, that was suggested by the Indiana Gaming Commission to make some of the language and citations in the bill consistent with HB 1517, Rep. Smaltz’s agency bill rewriting the charity gaming law. That measure has been passed in the same form by both chambers and should soon be on its way to the governor.

□ Sen. Houchin explained that the genesis of the annual charity game night license came from the Hardinsburg Lions Club in her district, a “civic organization” that sought to conduct a card game on a regular basis, only to be told by the Gaming Commission that the law only allowed one such event per month. With proceeds largely funding utility bills for the Lions building and Bearcat Civic Center, hosting games only once per month would not be enough to keep the facility open. “The Lions Club is the only game in town, no pun intended,” said Sen. Houchin, adding that it was “the only thing to do” in town.

□ While a veterans or fraternal organization license allowed the type of more frequent activity sought by the Lions Club, a charitable organization license did not. She said her measure was drafted with the help of Gaming Commission staff to be very narrowly tailored to counties with three or fewer such opportunities for this type of gaming so that it would not interfere with the ability of other entities to have weekly game. The number of bona fide civic organizations – she mentioned groups such as Lions, Kiwanis, and the Rotary – that may hold an annual charity game night license would be limited to one per county, and they would have to be a bona fide civic organization tied to a national group in existence for a certain period of time, and be housed in “a standalone building.” She believes that only 48 counties would have an entity that could qualify for such a license. If more than one license is requested in a community, the Gaming Commission would determine by random draw who would be licensed for a two-year period, at the end of which, the process would be reopened. for the commission to apply in awarding a license.

□ No one appeared to testify on the matter, no committee members had any questions about the Houchin bill, and the measure advanced to the House floor on an 11-0 vote.

Some hate how bias bill played out

What happened and the implications for the process and the Governor

Indiana will have a new bias crimes law, but the process by which it occurred may have been more important for the long-term than any short-term gain – which itself may be debatable.

Indeed, like the wake of the forced “RFRA Fix” a few years ago, passage of the bias crimes bill via a Senate concurrence on SB 198 Tuesday didn’t result in a statewide self-congratulatory high-five. Rather, the final measure – which was not heralded by either proponents of “the list” nor derided by opponents of any special treatment – just felt like a box had been checked on a perfunctory basis, and it was time to move on.

However, with no list – and age, gender, and gender identity left off the otherwise ostensibly inclusive protected classes in the measure – advocates for a comprehensive list split on whether the measure was sufficient to cover what “needed” to be covered to make Indiana a more “welcoming” state, or even to get Indiana off the list of states without a meaningful bias crimes law.

Like RFRA, this was “a simple bill” in terms of language, but left anyone who tried to work through it coming down on opposite sides as to what it really meant, depending upon the perspective the reader brought to the table. The American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana contends it chills and threatens to criminalize speech, is unconstitutionally vague, and will lead to litigation.

The language and meaning will be worked through in public debate, writings, and perhaps legal proceedings going forward, and (unlike RFRA) it will take some time to determine the implications, legal and economic, of the measure. But there are some other implications that will emanate from the way that SEA 198-2019 came to be this session that deserve to be tackled here.

Process Implications for the General Assembly. Everyone seemed to be impressed with how Senate leadership and the Senate Committee on Public Policy addressed the initial bill. New Senate President Pro Tem Rodric Bray (R) held the measure in his Committee on Rules to get a sense of his caucus as to their preferences, and to avoid assigning it to an inappropriate panel or to a chair who might hold a hearing too early or too late in the process.

There was praise from all sides and parties for how Sen. Ron Alting (R) handled SB 12 in his public policy panel, hosting a lengthy hearing and hearing from anyone who wished to speak on both sides of the measure (and those who just sought to shape whatever might emerge into good legislation).

When the bill emerged with just one negative vote, those on the outside assumed that the measure – with full backing from Governor Eric Holcomb (R), who sought “the list” that was included in the bill authored by Sen. Mike Bohacek (R) – was headed to the House on rails.

But despite only one negative vote in committee, the Senate Majority Caucus wasn’t able to come to consensus on “the list.” Behind closed doors, tacit agreement was reached for Sen. Aaron Freeman (R) to offer an amendment that would become the GOP alternative, stripping the list, but allowing the majority to coalesce around explicitly allowing judges to aggravate a person’s criminal sentence based on a bias motive . . . even though that didn’t satisfy the business groups that sought the comprehensive list.

Federal race cash race changes

New realities may mean new challengers

Since the 1971 passage of the Federal Election Campaign Act and the ruling in Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976), upholding the constitutionality of campaign contribution limits in federal office elections, the long-held conception has been that raising “federal money” was a daunting task, particularly for political newcomers.

But the long-held incumbent advantage on this front may have gone by the wayside given the new realities of fundraising under which a candidate who finds a niche, cause, mentor/sponsor, or good email list can count on being able to tap into a national fundraising network that can mean big bucks in a short time, with those dollars not only helping to fund the campaign, but bringing credibility in the eyes of national and state party officials that further boosts a given candidacy.

The old norms of candidates spending most of a day (at least between retail appearances) phoning interminable lists of $500 to $2,750 prospects may be traded in for email consultants who can free up candidate time and raise bigger bottom lines from a bigger base. The new norm may “democratize” the range of candidate who would consider running . . . and you may also see parties recruiting self-funders to fend them off.

The Freeman amendment – driven behind the scenes by Sens. Freeman and Erin Houchin (R) with the help of social conservative groups – was adopted (and the bill passed) with other Republicans largely staying silent during all debate. But just as important to its adoption as the work that Sens. Freeman and Houchin did was the insistence by a handful of Democrats that law enforcement personnel and veterans be dropped from any list . . . which caused the measure to lose support among a handful of Republicans, and made it easier for the Freeman amendment to win support in his caucus as the proverbial needle found itself “unthreaded.”

The bill moved to the House, where Speaker Brian Bosma (R) had long warned that his members were not enamored with a list (and several members were unconvinced that any new law was needed). SB 12 languished without a committee hearing until House Republicans, again behind closed caucus doors, opted to attach an amendment offered by Rep. Greg Steuerwald (R) to a bill authored by Sen. Eddie Melton (D) that would have clarified Bureau of Motor Vehicles gender identity policies for driver’s licenses and identification cards.

House Republicans believed that Rep. Steuerwald had threaded the proverbial needle with his amendment that he said treated everyone equally, and passed his amendment . . . again, with their own members not taking to the floor to defend it or respond to Democratic lawmakers who pointed out what they saw as its flaws, and the non-public process that produced it.

And that was the big rub.

The decision – behind closed caucus doors in the Senate – to use the Freeman amendment to reverse course on SB 12 (and not even put members on record defending it on the floor) left the public out after the committee hearing had focused on something entirely different. And there was no opportunity for the public to weigh in at all on the House side once the closed-door caucus discussions there decided to short-circuit public participation and debate by attaching the Steuerwald amendment to another piece of legislation and not even hold a committee hearing. Republican House members also largely stayed silent, leaving the floor speeches on the amendment to Democrats.

Those from the business community or who were among the classes that sought specific protection hoped that there would be a Senate dissent from SB 198, if only to allow public input for the first time on the Steuerwald language, but Senate Republicans – in caucus – decided not to pursue that course, and the concurrence vote Tuesday came with little Republican floor debate (most notably from Sen. Alting, who emotionally lamented the loss of the list for which he had fought).

Think back to when Democrats controlled the House in the early part of the century (!). Republicans – led by Rep. Bosma – were not pleased with strong-arm Democratic leadership tactics which saw the budget bill dropped on the desks of members just a few hours (and sometimes scant minutes) before a final vote.

Rep. Bosma pledged that when Republicans took control of the House again, members would have at least 24 hours to review the budget bill before voting on it (and that was largely before everything was presented to members in electronic format). He was true to his word, and minority Democrats benefited perhaps more than the majority from the change in practice, which is now an entrenched policy.

Look for Democrats to make some kind of pledge to change rules or practice – if they are to ever regain the majority – to ensure public input on measures of significant public interest if they undergo major amendment throughout the process.

Democrats may also seek to place some restraints on rules of germaneness of amendments. Early last week, several Democratic amendments – and amending bills has typically been the only avenue to impact policy afforded Democrats laboring under the supermajority – were ruled non-germane, even as a neutral arbiter would almost certainly have decided differently, and Republican amendments that seemed even less relevant were approved for votes. When leaders couldn’t even make a straight-faced claim of non-germaneness in some cases, bills were withdrawn rather than allowing Democrats to force Republicans into having to make some uncomfortable votes.

Expect Democrats to look for ways to change germaneness rules in the amendment process going forward. These process concerns are not politically sexy issues, but in their reduced role, Democrats have few opportunities to affect the outcome of legislation, or even to highlight things by forcing symbolic votes, and they need to pursue what they can in any way that they can.

Democrats also had some internal disputes of their own, one of which between an urban and (the) rural member spilled into the hallway. The big process issue: whether Democratic leaders should have called for a roll call vote on the attachment of the Steuerwald amendment to the Melton BMV bill.

Political Implications for the Governor. A bias crimes law with “the list” specifically including the LGB – and especially “T” – community was sought by the Governor in advance of the session, and he pledged to put the full faith and credit of his office behind it. Democrats and the business community lauded the announcement and inclusion of the issue on his “Next Level” legislative agenda – perhaps the heaviest 2019 lift outside of teacher pay hikes, given how reserved and non-committal Republican leaders were about the announcement.

Gov. Holcomb largely served as a cheerleader while the Senate passed SB 12 in committee, and his public presence was absent as Senate Republicans agonized in private over how to proceed on the floor.

He was publicly disappointed by the adoption of the Freeman amendment, but did not condemn nor condone it, expressing his hope that with lots of time left in session House Republicans and eventually the Senate would revive language with which he was more comfortable.

As SB 12 crossed the Rotunda to the House, there was much public speculation – not discouraged by 206 – that the Gov would publicly testify in committee on the measure, expressing his preference for a list. Such appearances by the state’s chief executive before a committee are historically rare, and emphasize the gubernatorial gravitas.

While the folks in 206 will probably tell you that he never had the opportunity to appear before a House panel because SB 12 was not afforded a hearing, he also didn’t force the hand of House Republicans by saying up front that he wanted the chance to speak in public before a House committee.

When it became clear that there would not be a committee hearing, the Governor didn't lament the inability of the public and the business community to weigh in with House members, nor did he seek to intervene in caucus. There have been some examples of governors in the past making dramatic appeals in caucus – and while they may have been more symbolic than effective in driving policy change, much of the hate crime debate has been about symbolism. Even some advocates of a new law would privately suggest that it was largely a matter of sending a message on behalf of the state to the business community (and particularly the growing tech sector) that state government was supportive. Such an appearance would have sent such a message, even if it failed to mean much in practice.

The Governor also raised some eyebrows when he offered a bare minimum of praise for SB 198 after it passed the House, suggesting that there was still time for the bill to be shaped further, but not publicly intervening and calling for (if not demanding) a Senate dissent and full hearing, given the lack of public input on either the Freeman amendment that went to the House nor the Steuerwald amendment in the House.

He seemed willing to settle for the Steuerwald language, serving up post hoc rationalization for it effectively comporting to the criteria he sought at the beginning of the session . . . but it was obvious by the lack of a victory lap of sorts that he found this language less than satisfactory – if minimally meeting standards set by some.

One might even suggest that he moved the goalposts (a tad to the right) to be able to claim a victory . . . to which others might respond: haters gonna hate.

Nevertheless, some gubernatorial allies paint this as a strong victory for him. Indiana Republican Party Chair Kyle Hupfer explains, "From the beginning, Governor Holcomb said his goal was to pass a long overdue bias crimes bill to get Indiana off the list of states without one, to reaffirm that Indiana is welcoming to all, and to aid our economic development efforts. This bill achieves all those goals."

GOP Chair Hupfer adds, "It's important to remember that the only reason – the only reason – we are on the verge of making Hoosier history and joining with the other 45 states that have a bias crimes bill is because of Governor Holcomb's leadership. He recognized it was long overdue to pass a bill and he has courageously led on this issue publicly and privately."

Democrats, however, were apoplectic during their floor speeches Tuesday about what they saw as gubernatorial abandonment of a cause they had championed and for which they saw him as leading in a bipartisan manner. They had publicly and effusively praised him on this issue until SB 12 was changed behind closed Senate Majority Caucus doors.

The Indiana Forward coalition said in a statement that, after consulting with the Anti-Defamation League, the bill "is not a true bias crimes law" and "will not get Indiana off the list of states without one." Besides the obvious omission of a comprehensive list of characteristics, the language is "so vague and overly generalized" that "it can be applied to virtually any crime, targeting almost any person, for almost any reason."

The Governor lost a lot of political goodwill from Democrats, and probably the members of the business community that advocated a much stronger and more explicit law . . . and legislative Republicans find themselves more empowered than before. They had always looked over their collective shoulder at the prospect of a personally and politically popular Republican governor calling in some of his many chits on a given issue, and this was the one in which they feared he would intervene. Since he didn't go to the well on his issue – one on which he arguably had more support from the public for a strong law than did lawmakers on a weaker law – there's not much you might look to going forward on which he might take on his own party or the legislature as a collective body. That shifts more power to the General Assembly, at least through the end of session.

Federal Office Races . . .

● In an action no doubt being followed closely by largely self-financing U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) (and U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) in 2016), U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz (R-TX) files suit in U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia challenging the $250,000 cap on the amount of money a federal candidate can raise after an election to repay any personal funds the candidate loaned to his or her campaign. Ted Cruz for Senate, et al., v. Fed'l Election Comm'n, et al., No. 1:19-cv- 00908.

□ Sen. Cruz and his campaign committee allege in the complaint that "The $250,000 post-election loan-repayment limitation violates the fundamental First Amendment rights of candidates, their authorized campaign committees, and their donors. It restricts the political speech of candidates and their campaign committees by limiting the time period in which the candidate may raise money to communicate his or her political message and by effectively limiting the candidate's ability to lend the campaign necessary funds. Criminalizing this basic means of financing political communication" infringes a candidate's fundamental right to spend personal funds for campaign speech, and the post-election repayment limitation "restricts the speech of those potential donors who would otherwise support a candidate financially by contributing after an election to fund pre-election political speech These arbitrary restrictions on core political speech by candidates, their campaign committees, and their supporters are invalid and must be struck down."

● While everyone – including himself – has written off South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) as a statewide candidate going forward in Indiana, the new realities of federal office fundraising (which we noted briefly on the front page) and his newfound national buzz could prompt a reassessment of sorts should his presidential (or vice presidential) candidacy flame out late into the 2020 process. At that point, the 2022(!) cycle would be next up, and while that's a long way from today, anyone who can raise $7 million+ in federal cash in just 68 days (without even being an official candidate) could pose a threat to U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) then – particularly if his position as chair of the National Republican Senatorial Committee heading into the critical 2020 cycle requires him to divert energy and attention away from home. Sounds intriguing but even as Democrats are seemingly short on options (and a line-up, much less a bench), it ain't gonna happen.

State Office Races . . .

● With the office of the superintendent of public instruction now off the ballot going forward beginning with the 2020 cycle, that puts even more emphasis and attention on the attorney general race – and potentially also frees up some cash for that race as well (even though the SOPI campaign has traditionally not been a big-buck enterprise). Given the dynamics that already might be at play in this race in both the state convention and in the general election for Republicans, the deletion of the superintendent race from the ballot leaves AG as the sole 2020 statewide race outside of governor/LG (we will have no U.S. Senate race for the first cycle since 2014).

IN Mayoral Races . . .

● Nile Arena is planning to run for mayor of Bloomington as an independent . . . Marvin Belcher (D) is seeking to withdraw from the Jasper mayoral primary . . .

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D) was the first presidential hopeful to release first quarter 2019 fundraising numbers on Monday morning, getting strong media attention out of the gate last week for what an MSNBC anchor described as a “staggering” $7 million+ raised during the quarter – although he was helped by the fact that as an unknown, there were no (unreasonable) expectations imposed upon him (and just to underscore how unknown he is, MSNBC's veteran correspondent Andrea Mitchell, who spent time anchoring from Indiana in the 2008 campaign, identified him an hour later as the mayor of Fort Wayne. The fact that he released his preliminary numbers so early in the day on Monday while others waited, not only allowed Mayor Pete to dominate the national morning shows with the news, but also the full day's 2020 race news, given that the other candidates all chose to wait, so no one stepped on his coverage . . . key Q1 Buttigieg fundraising metrics: 158,550 donors (about 150% greater than the population of South Bend), an average donation of $36.35, and almost two-thirds (64%) of the total raised was generated through contributions under $200 – all figures that the left-handed mayor charted out on a whiteboard in a video detailing the haul . . . apropos of nothing, Chasten Buttigieg, Mayor Pete's 29-year-old husband, is the same age as Susan Bayh was as the incoming First Lady of Indiana 30 years ago . . . Politico.com chips away at the facade by pointing out that the Buttigieg campaign has no human infrastructure in place in key states. While this has traditionally been important, bear in mind that lots of political rules and mores have changed – even (or especially) in the last 2½ years . . . virtually any set of metrics you might tap into suggest that Mayor Pete is killing it on social media . . . the Buttigieg net favorability has jumped up by 11 points since Morning Consult began tracking in early February (based on 24,000+ interviews with registered voters each week) – the biggest increase of any candidate . . . a Vox.com explainer published Wednesday made the case that Mayor Pete successfully appeals to both the liberal and moderate wings of the Democratic Party “Some moderates like his Midwestern background, elite credentials (he's a graduate of Harvard and Oxford), and soft-spoken but knowledgeable way of talking about policy. Liberal Democrats see in Buttigieg an intellectual who could be President Trump's polar opposite, and whose focus on political reforms like abolishing the Electoral College channels their frustration with a system that feels rigged in the GOP's favor.” At the same time, the Daily Beast headlined a lengthy analysis, “Conservatives Have No Idea How to Handle Buttigieg” . . . New York Times columnist David Brooks observed on Monday that Buttigieg “makes people on all sides feel comfortable” and “he's a progressive on policy issues, but he doesn't sound like an angry revolutionary. Buttigieg's policy positions are not all that different from the more identifiable leftist candidates. But he eschews grand ideological conflict” . . . Mayor Pete invites folks to South Bend for a special announcement on April 14, and all indications are that he's not using the occasion just to unveil a special pothole blitz.

IN Federal Circles . . .

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) Young (R-Ind.) joins U.S. Sens. Bob Menendez (D-NJ), Marco Rubio (R-FL), and 12 other senators to introduce bipartisan legislation to help restore democracy and address the humanitarian crisis in Venezuela. In what the senators label as the most comprehensive effort to date to confront the crisis in Venezuela, the “Venezuela Emergency Relief, Democracy Assistance and Development (VERDAD) Act” would dramatically increase humanitarian assistance, expand current tools to address kleptocracy, and formally recognize and support the interim president of Venezuela's efforts to restore democracy and prosperity in the country, and accelerates planning with international financial institutions to advance the country's post-Maduro reconstruction. “The Maduro regime has created a humanitarian crisis and turned the proud nation of Venezuela into a land of deep suffering. I am proud to join with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to introduce this comprehensive bill that will ease human suffering, sanction human rights abusers and narco-traffickers, and help restore the Rule of Law and democracy in Venezuela,” said Sen. Young. “With a Hoosier in custody in Venezuela, the pain of this regime reaches all the way to Indiana. It’s time to stand with the people of Venezuela and hold those in power accountable.” Todd Leininger from Bloomington has been imprisoned in Venezuela since April 2014 when he was convicted by a Venezuelan court in the midst of anti-government protests. Questions linger over the due process afforded to Leininger during that trial. In November 2018, a San Cristobal court ordered Leininger’s release, yet the Venezuelan authorities have refused to comply with the order. Sen. Young has been working with the White House and the U.S. Department of State to secure Leininger’s release and to ensure that his case remains a high priority. While those efforts are underway, this legislation is aimed at holding those in power in Venezuela accountable for the continued detention of Hoosier Leininger and many others . . . Sen. Young and U.S. Sen. Doug Jones (D-AL) introduce the “Nursing Where It’s Needed (Nursing WIN) Act,” bipartisan legislation that to address the high demand for qualified nurses in underserved areas. Specifically, the bill would allow nurses at health care facilities with critical nursing shortages to benefit from the NURSE Corps Loan Repayment Program, regardless of the facility’s tax status. “In the coming years, our nation will face a critical nursing shortage as baby boomers age into retirement and require more healthcare services. Shortages are already being felt in our underserved rural and urban areas who are in dire need of caregivers,” said Sen. Young. “We must address this lack of qualified professionals now by incentivizing nurses to practice in the communities where they are needed most.” This legislation would again expand eligibility under the NURSE Corps Loan Repayment Program – initially limited to public or non-profit facilities – to also include all types of facilities, as it stood between 2002 and 2007.

- U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) continues to lead on health care issues, and the President may not be happy about it. In a media call last week, he said that “I don’t like the discussion on repealing [the Affordable Care Act], especially if it’s not combined with a defined, comprehensive plan” as a replacement. His advice to the President: “Quit focusing on repeal until you’ve got something that the American public is going to trust.” As we’ve told you, he wants any Republican ACA replacement to cover pre-existing conditions, contain no lifetime payment caps, and allow individuals to remain covered under insurance plans of their parents until they hit age 26. “Some of the tenets of Obamacare actually were good,” he said, while expressing his concern that “big government and big health care” were responsible for the “details.”

- POLITICO undertakes a takedown of a Hoosier federal agency head, and a one-time low-level press aide from Indiana in a lengthy piece. “The Trump appointee who oversees Medicare, Medicaid and Obamacare quietly directed millions of taxpayer dollars in contracts to Republican communications consultants during her tenure atop the agency – including hiring one well-connected GOP media adviser to bolster her public profile. The communications subcontracts approved by CMS Administrator Seema Verma – routed through a larger federal contract and described to POLITICO by three individuals with firsthand knowledge of the agreements – represent a sharp break from precedent at the agency. Those deals, managed by Verma’s deputies, came in some cases over the objections of CMS staffers, who raised concerns about her push to use federal funds on GOP consultants and to amplify coverage of Verma’s own work. CMS has its own large communications shop, including about two dozen people who handle the press.” One “subcontract is with Marcus Barlow, whom Verma worked with in Indiana and considered hiring as a top communications official in 2017 before he was blocked by the White House.” As a contractors, Barlow is “paid between $185 and $200 per hour, said two individuals with knowledge ... a far higher pay rate than the majority of high-level government officials.” South Bend’s Barlow was a former FSSA media aide who also worked in the Indianapolis Ballard Administration and the Chocoma congressional office. Verma “relied on subcontracting to bring aboard longtime associate Barlow – after the White House blocked him from a permanent job leading CMS communications. Barlow, who served as a spokesperson for Verma’s health care consulting firm in Indiana, had run afoul of the White House for writing a column critical of Trump, POLITICO reported at the time. Nahigian Strategies hired Barlow instead in March 2017, which helped the firm strengthen its relationship with Verma. When Barlow left Nahigian Strategies in August 2018 to return to his own consulting firm, he continued to work for CMS under a separate subcontract that remains in effect,” and he “helped write some of Verma’s most high-profile speeches, including a November 2017 address in which she signaled the Trump administration’s plan to require some Medicaid enrollees to work to keep their coverage for the first time – a controversial policy that a federal judge blocked for the second time” March 27. “Advocates panned Verma’s remarks, contending she misrepresented the patients that she was appointed to serve,” and a top Obama SMS official told POLITICO “he’s more surprised to learn that Verma and her staff don’t always write their own speeches, like CMS did when he worked there in 2016.”

□ U.S. House Committee on Energy and Commerce Chair Frank Pallone, Jr. (D-NJ) called these contracts “a highly questionable use of taxpayer dollars. Given that this agency should be spending tax dollars to ensure Americans can access quality health care, it is particularly egregious that it is using millions to ensure its Administrator has access to outside public relations and image building services.”

□ Rep. Pallone will ask the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General “to immediately begin an investigation into how these contracts were approved, whether all regulations and ethical guidelines were followed, and why taxpayers are stuck paying for these unnecessary services. This is not the way to drain the swamp,” he adds.

● U.S. Sens. Todd Young (R) and Mike Braun (R), joined by U.S. Reps. Pete Visclosky (D), Larry Bucshon (R), and Todd Hollingsworth (R) – who represent port districts, send a letter to Mick Mulvaney, director of the U.S. the Office of Management and Budget in support of the nation’s waterway system and to impress upon our federal government “the significant impact these waterways have on Hoosier farmers, workers, and families, as well as our nation’s economy.” The lawmakers ask OMB to “adequately fund our nation’s inland waterway system in the President’s FY 2020 budget request.”

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) is the lead Republican cosponsor of the bipartisan, bicameral E-FRONTIER Act, legislation on which U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) is an original cosponsor. The bill would prevent the U.S. government from managing the construction of a nationwide 5G network, and instead rely on the expertise of the private sector to lead the U.S. mobile broadband expansion.

□ Said Rep. Banks, “Cyber threats are a leading cause for national security concerns. China, Iran, North Korea, and Russia have invested billions of dollars to influence and infiltrate our broadband technology. Each day, U.S. wireless carriers experience billions of cybersecurity incidents and have developed innovative methods to prevent many more. This institutional knowledge can only come from experience and has equipped the American telecommunications industry with the prerequisite expertise to build a robust and secure 5G wireless system. America won the race to 4G by relying on the economic value of free enterprise, not the central planning and economic control of nations like China. 5G technology holds the tremendous potential of unleashing a new technological revolution by providing incredible speeds and use applications. Nationalizing a project of this magnitude would be a massive overreach by the federal government into a marketplace in which it does not have any business. It also would greatly increase the probability of corruption and mismanagement; two problems we cannot afford to have when dealing with major cybersecurity threats. For the sake of the free market and sound national security operations, the federal government should stay out of constructing the 5G broadband network.”

□ Rep. Brooks adds, “As the co-founder and co-chair of the 5G Caucus, I understand how important it is for our laws to support this kind of innovation, but the federal government should not infringe upon the deployment of 5G communications networks in the process. The United States led the way in 3G and 4G, and it is critical that we win the race to 5G as it will create jobs for Americans across the country, boost our economy and provide a new generation of connectivity that will support our increasingly connected world. Government’s role in the race to 5G is to cut regulatory barriers and help establish a spectrum pipeline, but beyond that, the government should stay out of the way. The government must continue to let the expertise and knowledge of industry leaders take the lead in shaping the internet’s capabilities, development, and deployment so we can continue to allow the internet to transform the way we live.”

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) and U.S. Rep. Liz Cheney (R-WY), both members of the House Committee on Armed Services, join forces to introduce the “Ensuring a Secure Afghanistan Act,” a measure which endeavors to prevent a significant U.S. troop drawdown from Afghanistan in case of a bad deal between the United States and the Taliban, specifying a list of requirements that must be met and certified before U.S. troop levels can fall below 10,000 in Afghanistan. If the Taliban does not comply with the standards outlined in this bill, the United States will not be able to withdraw a significant number of troops using FY 2019 funding. Said Rep. Banks, who served in Afghanistan in 2014-15 as a U.S. Navy Reserve officer, “Every American longs for the day when U.S. troops will return home from Afghanistan after a nearly two decade struggle against those responsible for the 9/11 terrorist attacks. However, we cannot afford to be overly eager to strike any deal, especially a bad one, that looks to satisfy short term political pressures at the risk of long-term national security threats. The failed blunders of history, especially President Obama’s disastrous Iraq withdrawal, have demonstrated the grave risks posed by power vacuums in unstable regions of the world that were caused by a premature retreat. As the Administration negotiates with our adversaries to set the terms for a drawdown of U.S. forces in Afghanistan, the Ensuring a Secure Afghanistan Act would set the conditions by which a safe and responsible agreement should be reached. Should America not get this right the first time, ISIS-K and al Qaeda patiently wait to fill the void.” Also concerned about Afghanistan becoming a safe haven for terrorism are U.S. Reps. Elise Stefanik (R-NY) and Michael Waltz (R-FL), Armed Services panel members who join Reps. Banks and Cheney as lead cosponsors. Rep. Stefanik is a Bush 43 White House policy staffer. Rep. Waltz is an Afghan combat-decorated Green Beret, and a former White House and Pentagon policy advisor. A statement from the four lawmakers says that “We find the Afghan government’s exclusion from the ongoing peace talks troubling. Also troubling is the Taliban’s continued relationship with al Qaeda. This bill makes clear: The American homeland is more secure when Afghanistan is stable and safe” . . . – Republican Study Committee (RSC) Chair Mike Johnson (R-LA) and RSC Budget and Spending Task Force Chairman Banks released a statement Thursday after House Democrats opted against producing a budget proposal and voted to raise discretionary spending caps to some $2 trillion over 10 years: “Rather than focusing on our ballooning federal debt, currently $22 trillion and counting, and releasing a budget resolution, Democrats have decided to ignore their responsibilities and drive us further into the hole,” said Reps. Johnson and Banks. “Their proposal to raise the discretionary spending caps not only fails to address America’s increasingly dangerous fiscal situation but highlights just how out-of-touch the Left has become. Moreover, their contention that providing for national security in some way obligates unnecessary spending on non-defense programs is patently absurd. “President Trump is right – Congress cannot maintain the status quo by continuing to push irresponsible caps deals. We stand with the president and look forward to releasing our own balanced budget that will promote many of our shared priorities and restore fiscal sanity to the legislative process” . . . we’ve followed in these pages the work of Rep. Banks to highlight and thwart what the Washington Post last week labeled as “China’s attempts to infiltrate the United States’ higher-education system and abuse those relationships to advance Beijing’s strategic agenda.” Indiana University on Wednesday “decided to immediately close the Confucius Institute” at IUPUI, one of the “Chinese government-sponsored language and culture schools embedded inside U.S. educational institutions. They are wholly controlled by China's education ministry and are part of the Chinese Communist Party's 'United Front' foreign influence operations, and the Post observed that "When national security professionals first sounded the alarm about Chinese partnerships in U.S. universities last year, the academic sector was skeptical and resistant. Now, through a mixture of external pressure and internal debate, more U.S. colleges and universities are taking a sober look at the Chinese government's presence on their campuses – and are deciding to curtail it." Indiana University and MIT are leading the way as examples for other colleges to follow in untangling themselves from dangerous Chinese influences like Confucius Institutes and Huawei," said Rep. Jim Banks (R-Ind.). "Undoubtedly more universities will follow suit as they better understand the threats."

- U.S. Rep. Jim Baird (R), ranking member of the House Committee on Science, Space, and Technology Subcommittee on Research and Technology, which has jurisdiction over the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST), joins 13 other House colleagues to introduce the "Internet of Things Cybersecurity Improvement Act of 2019," a bipartisan bill to promote security standards for devices on the Internet of Things (IoT) across government and industry. "I'm excited to be working with my colleagues to lead the way on security in this new and innovative field," says Rep. Baird. "The Internet of Things is going to reinvent the way we live, do business, and communicate across the globe. Ensuring that this network is safe from bad actors is of the utmost importance." He notes that despite the growing capabilities and promising innovations of the IoT, many of the devices on the market today come with only limited security features, and the Defense Intelligence Agency considers exploitation of insecure IoT devices as one of the two most important emerging cyber threats to our national security. The IoT Cybersecurity Improvement Act would work to fix potential vulnerabilities by requiring NIST to issue recommendations to ensure secure upgradeable systems. The Office of Management and Budget would then issue guidelines to each agency consistent with NIST recommendations and review those guidelines every five years. Any IoT devices purchased by the federal government would have to comply with those recommendations. "I look forward to ensuring that the U.S. is setting the standard for cyber security in the Internet of Things," says Rep. Baird . . . Rep. Baird has been named co-chair, along with U.S. Rep. Bill Foster (D-IL), of the Congressional Research and Development (R&D) Caucus, a bipartisan group that advocates on behalf of continued U.S. leadership in research and development. Primary caucus activities include hosting briefings to better inform members of Congress of accomplishments across the country in all sectors of the economy and academia. "It is important to identify areas of research that are critical to advancement, so we can invest in initiatives that will move us forward," notes Rep. Baird. "The advances we make in technology and development shape the world for future generations, and it is our duty to ensure that America remains at the forefront of innovation. In order to do that, the work of our scientists must be highlighted."

- U.S. Rep. Greg Pence (R) tells NewsTalk WCSI 1010-AM in Columbus that the issues he hears about most while talking to his constituents are infrastructure, jobs, and the health of veterans. Rep. Pence, a member of the House Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, said that beyond just roads, trucks, and third lanes, he's focusing on a new port for Southern Indiana, short rail, and high-speed internet.

- U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) last week signed a discharge petition that would bring the "Born-Alive Abortion Survivors Protection Act" to a vote on the House floor. This bill is designed to ensure any baby who is born alive after an attempted abortion receives the same protection under the law as any other newborn baby, and would require medical professionals, clinical staff, and other relevant personnel to preserve the life and health of the child as well as to report any violations to state and federal law enforcement. Anyone who violates the requirements would be subject to fines, imprisonment of as long as five years, or both. The mother of the abortion survivor would also enjoy a civil cause of action and protection from prosecution. Rep. Brooks calls the measure "a common sense bill every Member of Congress, whether Republican or Democrat, should support because it protects people who cannot protect themselves – newborn babies" . . . Rep. Brooks teams with U.S. Rep. Paul Tonko (D-NY) in the introduction of the "Advancing Critical Connectivity Expands Service, Small Businesses Resources, Opportunities, Access, and Data Based on Assessed Need and Demand (ACCESS BROADBAND) Act," bipartisan legislation that would expand broadband access in underserved areas and create a simpler process for small businesses and local economic developers to access federal broadband resources. "Hoosiers and Americans across the country who live in rural communities need better access to the internet so they can live and prosper in the 21st century economy," said Rep. Brooks. "Currently, pursuing and managing federal broadband resources is overly burdensome for small businesses and communities as they search and manage multiple federal agencies' application processes. The ACCESS BROADBAND Act will simplify this process for small businesses and local communities and will facilitate their interaction with government agencies as they apply for federal broadband assistance in order to bring internet connectivity to their communities." H.R. 1328 would also fund local training workshops to help small businesses and economic developers put federal broadband resources to work. A bipartisan companion bill was introduced in the Senate.

- U.S. Rep. Trey Hollingsworth (R) teams with U.S. Rep. Josh Gottheimer (D-NJ) to introduce the "Senior Security Act," bipartisan legislation that would create an interdivisional task force within the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) to strengthen financial protections for "our senior citizens and protect their life-long savings and investments from financial scammers," says Rep. Hollingsworth. The SEC task force would be comprised of staff from the Division of Enforcement, Office of Compliance, Inspections and Examinations, and Office of Investor Education and Advocacy, and would be charged with examining and identifying challenges facing senior investors. Every two years, in consultation with other SEC offices, state securities and law enforcement authorities, state insurance regulators, and federal agencies, the task force would be required to report its findings to Congress and recommend any regulatory or statutory changes. Within two years of enactment, the U.S. Government Accountability Office would be charged with studying and reporting on the economic costs and frequency of financial exploitation of senior citizens . . . Rep. Hollingsworth tells the Bloomington Herald-Times that "he wants to see the Mueller investigation report to be released in full."

- U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) presided over the House floor Wednesday during debate on reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act.

● U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) joins U.S. Reps. Paul Tonko (D-NY), Earl Blumenauer (D-OR), Brett Guthrie (R-KY), Maxine Waters (D-CA), and Chris Smith (R-NJ) to introduce the “Improving HOPE for Alzheimer’s Act,” bipartisan legislation that would require the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to inform health care providers about care planning benefits available through Medicare. H.R. 1873 would also require HHS to identify other barriers individuals may be facing in accessing care planning. “For Alzheimer’s patients, as well as their families and caregivers, care planning can make a real difference in their quality of life and help them get the best care possible,” Rep. Walorski said. “Medicare coverage now includes comprehensive care planning so individuals with Alzheimer’s disease and other forms of dementia can learn about the treatments, services, and other supports available to them. The Improving HOPE for Alzheimer’s Act will improve access to care planning by ensuring doctors and other medical providers are fully informed of the services they can provide under Medicare.” H.R. 1873 would build on the HOPE for Alzheimer’s Act, co-sponsored by Walorski in the 114th Congress, and which created a Medicare coverage benefit for comprehensive care planning services after a dementia diagnosis. Many providers, however, remain unaware of this benefit, so many eligible Medicare beneficiaries are not receiving the assistance that a comprehensive care planning visit can provide. This legislation would increase access to this benefit by ensuring more providers are informed and prepared to offer it . . . Rep. Walorski joins U.S. Reps. Ron Kind (D-WI), Grace Meng (D-NY), and Darin LaHood (R-IL) to introduce the bipartisan “Restoring Access to Medication Act,” designed to improve access to care and help families afford the medications and other health care products they need. The bill would afford individuals the ability to use Health Savings Accounts (HSAs) and Flexible Spending Accounts (FSAs) to purchase over-the-counter medications and menstrual care products. “For millions of Americans, HSAs and FSAs are critical tools to pay for health care, but currently they can’t be used to buy over-the-counter medications,” Rep. Walorski notes. “Restoring this eligibility and expanding it to feminine hygiene products would improve both access and affordability. This is a bipartisan, commonsense way to lower costs, and give consumers more control over their health care” . . . Rep. Walorski signed the discharge petition to bring the “Born-Alive Abortion Survivors Protection Act” to the House floor for a vote. She says the subject of H.R. 962 “is not a partisan issue, and it shouldn’t be controversial – it is simply what’s right. This is about giving babies born alive after a failed abortion attempt the same chance at life as babies born any other way. When it comes to protecting newborns, the American people deserve to know where their elected representatives stand. It is time for Democrat leaders to let us vote.”

● U.S. Rep. Pete Visclosky (D) testified before four House Committee on Appropriations subcommittees during the final days of March on priorities for Northwest Indiana in Fiscal Year 2020 Appropriations bills. He expressed support for several federal programs, including:

- Federal Transit Administration’s Capital Investment Grant program that supports transit projects, including South Shore Rail Line expansion and recapitalization. Rep. Visclosky asserted that the Trump Administration’s request for the Capital Investment Grant program “of $1.5 billion is wholly inadequate in supporting key transformational investments in our transportation infrastructure,” and urged the panel to “flatly reject this inadequate funding level proposed in the Fiscal Year 2020 budget request.”

- International Trade Commission. The agency instrumental to enforcing U.S. trade laws and supporting steel and manufacturing workers “needs to update and modernize their informational technology infrastructure, hire additional personnel, and manage increasingly high unfair trade caseloads.” He urged the panel to ensure ITC is fully funded at $101 million for Fiscal Year 2020, “so that it can perform its investigative work, as well as judiciously and expeditiously resolve cases.”

- National Park Service Facility Operations and Maintenance account that supports projects to address the NPS deferred maintenance backlog. He observed, “For Fiscal Year 2018, the Indiana Dunes had a maintenance backlog of nearly $28 million. This has hindered the Park’s ability to maintain trails and roadways, demolish structures, and restore parcels of land to their natural state for public enjoyment. Nationwide, the National Park Service’s deferred maintenance backlog totals nearly $11.9 billion.”

- Centers for Disease Control and Prevention’s Childhood Lead Poisoning Prevention program that supports efforts to ensure children exposed to lead can receive blood screenings and be connected with treatment services. Rep. Visclosky explained, “While these efforts are commonly associated with the need to address lead in household paint products, they are also vitally important in communities with an industrial legacy, such as East Chicago, Indiana, which is a city in my district that contains a Superfund site contaminated with lead and arsenic in the soil. No resident of my district or any other area, should have to suffer from the harsh effects of lead exposure, particularly children.”

- Implementation of the Civil Rights Cold Case Records Collection Act of 2018, the law which requires the National Archives and Records Administration collect, prepare, and publish civil rights cold case records kept at the Department of Justice for public disclosure. He asserted, “For too long, families of lynching and other hate crime victims have gone without information regarding crimes against their ancestors. I remain deeply cognizant of the legacy of racial inequality that continues to be present today in the United States, and I believe that we should do everything in our power to confront and address the suffering caused by racial terror and violence.”

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) said last week after signing the discharge petition to bring the “Born Alive Abortion Survivors Protection Act” to a vote in the House, “It is unthinkable that any health care professional would not do everything in their power to save a baby born alive after a failed abortion. I stand with my colleagues in signing this discharge petition and it is a shame that Speaker Pelosi and Democrat leadership will not bring this bill to a vote in the House of Representatives.” He continued, “As a physician, I took an oath to preserve all life to the best of my abilities and I expect all health care providers to do the same. The Born Alive Abortion Survivors Protection Act ensures that every child who survives an abortion will receive the same care and diligence to preserve the life and health of the child, regardless of the terms of their birth. During my time practicing medicine, I operated on babies as young as 23 weeks gestation, and I know that these unborn lives are precious. It is critical that this life-saving legislation be brought up for a vote in the House of Representatives so that we can be a voice for those that cannot speak.”

IN State Circles . . .

● Legislative leaders are targeting Wednesday, April 24 as the final day of session, if all goes according to plan . . . with the House side more optimistic than the Senate about that timetable.

● South Bend-based Vice Lotteries seeks to break into the lottery business on a national basis with a novel “equitable gambling” model under which every dollar wagered will be returned as prize money . . . and the fledgling venture launches its crusade by seeking to overturn the Hoosier Lottery’s Hoosier monopoly status. Backed financially by Y Combinator, an American seed accelerator and incubator, Vice Lotteries, led by Matthew Curtis, an attorney with a law degree from the University of Notre Dame, files suit in U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, Curtis v. Hill, No. 3:19-cv-00073-JD-MGG, in part seeking a declaratory judgment allowing Vice to prepare for and conduct its “equitable gambling” for the benefit of the public.

□ Vice Lotteries filing contends that “The State violates its sovereignty by offering and engaging in quid pro quo bargains for exemptions from its laws in exchange for payment to the Hoosier Lottery”; violates Vice’s due process and equal protection rights by barring competition to protect “monopoly profits”; and violates Vice’s free speech rights by criminalizing certain of its preparations for competing with the Hoosier Lottery.

□ The Office of the Attorney General filed a motion to dismiss the lawsuit, accompanied by a lengthy and compelling memorandum in support of the motion effectively contending that the Curtis complaint should be dismissed because he does not have standing and has failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

● A discussion of “Lead Poisoning of Indiana’s Children” is on tap for the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights Indiana Advisory Committee when it meets April 18.

● Coal interests are all fired up over a favorable amendment added to SB 472 Wednesday by House Committee on Utilities, Energy and Telecommunications Chair Ed Soliday (R). The bill, which started out as an effort by Sen. Eric Koch (R) to help eliminate some ratemaking red tape for small utilities, now heads to the House floor with a moratorium (from April 30, 2019 to January 1, 2021) on Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission final in any individual matter or proceeding concerning a proposed (1) electric generation facility; (2) change in fuel source or other resource used to generate electricity; or (3) purchased power agreement; regardless of the number of megawatts of generating capacity involved, once the total number of megawatts of generating capacity approved by the IURC during the moratorium period exceeds 10,000 megawatts on a statewide basis. That would effectively seem to freeze the approval of all new alternative energy sources through the presidential election, offering an incentive for a longer window for coal use after major utilities had committed to phase-outs.

□ The bill as amended would also create and convene a “21st Century Energy Policy Development Task Force” to develop recommendations during that same timeframe for the General Assembly and the governor concerning: (1) Outcomes that must be achieved in order to overcome any identified challenges concerning Indiana’s electric generation portfolios, along with a timeline for achieving those outcomes; (2) Whether existing state policy and statutes enable state regulators to properly consider the statewide impact of changing electric generation portfolios and, if not, the best approaches to enable state regulators to consider those impacts; and, (3) How to maintain reliable, resilient, and affordable electric service for all electric utility consumers, while encouraging the adoption and deployment of advanced energy technologies.

□ The bill as amended passed 8-4, and will face opposition in the full House. If it passes as amended, look for SB 472 to cause some heartburn in the Senate, where Senate Committee on Utilities Chair Jim Merritt (R) could end up having to make some public decisions about this bill in the late weeks of his Indianapolis mayoral primary campaign.

● Expect a lengthy proceeding over the NIPSCO electric rate increase request. An Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission evidentiary hearing is scheduled to start April 16 and you shouldn’t be surprised to see the proceedings last until the end of the month given the nature and extent of the requested change, which effectively transforms an old-school electric generator and provider into a new-era redistribution company that would buy electricity on the market and also allow large industrial users in Northwest Indiana more flexibility in how (and where) they obtain their respective power sources.

□ One thing to watch: LaPorte County Commissioners have instructed attorneys representing the county in the pending electric rate case not to oppose NIPSCO’s plans to close the coal- and natural gas-fired Michigan City Generating Station seven years early . . . but to “see that any generating capacity used to make that up lost capacity – whether it be wind, solar or natural gas-fired is built in LaPorte County so we keep those good paying jobs and millions in tax revenue right here.” NIPSCO originally planned to close its coal-fired Michigan City generating station in 2035, but has moved up closure to 2028 in its latest plan submitted to regulators.

● All parties in the Citizens Energy Group sewer rate case in Indianapolis are scheduled to file a settlement agreement and supporting testimony on April 12.

● The Indiana Department of Revenue is in the market for a quality, cloud-enabled, Information Technology Infrastructure Library (ITIL)-based Service Delivery Solution and related implementation services to replace the current standalone, custom “Service Desk” application which IDOR says is no longer maintainable nor does it meet the Department’s overall Business and IT functionality needs. The existing system also is said to pose a risk to the Department’s security requirements because of both obsolete technology and maintainability.

● The Domestic Relations Committee of the Judicial Conference of Indiana is seeking comments on proposed changes to Indiana’s Child Support Guidelines, which are used to make decisions about child support in dissolutions of marriage, legal separations, paternity cases, Title IV-D proceedings, and all other actions for child support. The proposed changes address:

- A parent’s legal duty to support a prior-born child when no court order exists
- Consideration of whether a child support amount prohibits a parent’s ability to support himself or herself
- In-kind benefits and payments from structured settlements as income
- Situations in which a parent is incarcerated
- Clarification of children’s health insurance costs

● None of the Indiana cases we’ve been monitoring for you were accepted nor disposed of by the Supreme Court of the United States at the March 29 conference of the justices. There is was no conference scheduled for April 5, so we’ll update you on relists in our next issue.

● While the House Republican Caucus continues to freeze out Rep. Curt Nisly (R) (they would not even provide a second for his constitutional carry firearms legislation nor grant him a hearing for his protection at conception bill), measures liberalizing firearms laws and tightening abortion laws did pass the House, and a pair of measures aimed at further curtailing the number of abortion procedures in Indiana are headed to the Governor for signature (and then to court, insist detractors).

□ SB 201 would expand Indiana law to extend conscience protections to additional medical providers, including nurses, physician assistants, and pharmacists. The bill was authored by Sen. Liz Brown (R) and sponsored in the House by Rep. Ron Bacon (R).

□ HB 1211 would proscribe dilation and evacuation (D&E) procedures, labeled as “dismemberment” abortions in the legislation authored by Rep. Peggy Mayfield (R) and sponsored by Sen. Brown. The American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana has already vowed to file suit should it become law.

● The Supreme Court Disciplinary Commission is decidedly not impressed by the response filed with the Indiana Supreme Court on behalf of Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) by Don Lundberg, a long-time former leader of the disciplinary panel, in the battle over potential disciple for General Hill. As you recall, Lundberg had effectively sought to short-circuit any substantive proceedings at the onset, and the Commission quickly responded to his challenge.

□ The Commission reminds General Hill and his attorneys that rules and procedures designed to assure protection of the public and fairness to the lawyer accused of wrongdoing is a system that “has functioned well for several decades.”

□ The Commission’s response labels the Hill motion as “an extraordinary request for the Court to ignore its long-established rules and procedures and grant an order ending the case summarily, despite his statement that the allegations are ‘contested.’ In short, the respondent has requested a special procedure, or rather, non-procedure, just for him.” The Commission acknowledges that “an order dismissing the case would certainly be beneficial to the respondent, it hardly would give assurance to the public that it has been protected. The Commission is mindful of the public interest in this case. Due to the heightened scrutiny and consequences, the Commission requested a three-person panel instead of a single hearing officer. The purpose of that request was to give added assurance to the public that the facts of the case were presented in a complete, thorough process, free of bias or influence, and that no short cuts have been taken.”

□ The Commission, in a filing signed by staff attorney Seth Pruden, suggests that the AG should be treated as any other attorney facing charges. “What his motion boils down to is that the respondent seeks special and favorable treatment by the Court that no other lawyer would ever obtain. He seeks this Court, in essence, to declare that he is a lawyer whose conduct is above the Rules of Professional Conduct, simply because he is the Attorney General. The Commission can think of nothing that would deepen the mistrust of the judicial system, diminish the esteem of the Supreme Court and prejudice the administration of justice more than if the Court were to grant the respondent’s motion.

□ The Pruden filing proceeds to knock down each of the contentions raised by the Hill brief, explaining – as we largely did for you recently – that the lawyer discipline process is the best-suited to consider the allegations; lawyer discipline is independent of criminal proceedings and the special prosecutor did not exonerate Hill; private conduct often results in attorney discipline (and the AG’s conduct was not entirely private); lawyer discipline is also independent of inspector general proceedings and civil remedies; the administration of justice is prejudiced when the chief legal officer of the state commits crimes; and “offensive personality” is a well-established professional violation.

□ Because the assorted assertions raised by AG Hill in his initial motion “are likely to be raised again in any further disciplinary proceeding, the Commission urges the Court, to the extent possible, to issue specific rulings or opinions regarding each of the respondent’s assertions. Definitive rulings on these assertions will better permit a hearing panel or hearing officer to focus on the primary goal of determining the factual record of this proceeding.”

□ Lundberg quickly responded with a 30-page brief on Hill’s behalf Tuesday afternoon, contending that Hill was not looking to interpose a new roadblock in disciplinary cases in the form of his contest of the hearing officer (panel) appointment. “Indeed,” he suggested, “the Commission itself recognizes this as an extraordinary case, having proposed to the Court that a three-member hearing panel should be appointed,” and this was effectively a matter of first impression that should be resolved. “There is no reported case (and in counsel’s memory no case) where the decision to appoint a hearing officer was the subject of briefing by the parties. It is warranted in this case because its extraordinary nature. There is no reason to believe that it will become a procedural phase in run-of-the-mill lawyer discipline cases” writes Lundberg.

□ Lundberg also proceeds to answer each of the Disciplinary Commission’s responses to Hill’s initial assertions, once again reaching back to his overarching contention “that the lawyer discipline system is not an appropriate tool for addressing the perceived ills of society-at-large by trumping the decisions of other officials who are authorized by law to make decisions that fall squarely within their realm and that do not relate directly to the practice of law.” He reiterates that there is no nexus between Hill’s alleged misconduct and his fitness to practice law, and that when “a duly authorized prosecutor has affirmatively determined that a crime should not be charged and when the alleged criminal conduct lacks a nexus with fitness to practice law, the use of the lawyer discipline system to address the alleged conduct is unwarranted.” He asserts that “Initiation of the discipline process is by itself an affront to the deference the lawyer discipline process should show toward decisions made by the criminal justice system, by the Indiana Inspector General, by the voters of the State of Indiana, and to be made by the civil justice system.”

□ Lundberg also believes that “negative public perception” alone is insufficient “to provide the nexus with fitness to practice law.” He also questions reliance on the battery allegations, and asks the Court to “defer to the experienced special prosecutor’s correct conclusion that there is no viable basis in fact or law to claim the Respondent engaged in criminal conduct,” nor to have prejudiced the administration of justice. He also labels the oath against engaging in offensive personality as merely a “statement of aspiration.”

□ Look for the Court to allow the Commission to prevail on the issue of allowing the proceedings to go forward at this point – or perhaps even taking the issue on themselves without a hearing officer or panel – but we’re not sure that the Supreme Court wants to get itself wrapped up and on record at this point in offering a detailed legal rationale with respect to each point at this juncture . . . but you can expect Any final ruling will cover going forward the key items capable of repetition yet potentially evading review – an this could be particularly important if General Hill is disciplined and chooses to ask for rehearing or opts to pursue a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States (which could be an option, according to attorneys we’ve consulted about the process.

IN the Economy

● A new state-by-state analysis, released by the National Partnership for Women & Families to mark Equal Pay Day, finds that women employed full-time, year-round in Indiana are typically paid just 73¢ for every $1 paid to a man in Indiana, a yearly pay difference of $13,615. Each year, Indiana Latina women working full time, year-round are typically paid $23,750 less than white, non-Hispanic men, with black women facing a $19,529 gap, and white, non-Hispanic women posting the lowest deficit at $13,202.

□ If the wage gap were closed, on average, the Partnership estimates that a working woman in Indiana would be able to afford more than 17 additional months of rent, more than 17.5 additional months of child care, or 9.3 additional months of premiums for employer-based health insurance. The cents-on-the-dollar gender-wage gap is largest in Louisiana, followed closely by Utah and then Indiana and smallest in California and the District of Columbia.

● The RV Industry Association’s monthly survey of RV manufacturers continues to bring bad news. The Association found that total RV shipments ended February with only 36,421 wholesale shipments, down 15.4% from the 43,038 units shipped in February 2018. This was the seventh consecutive month of declines in shipments, which some see as a larger economic harbinger.

□ Towable RVs totaled only 31,876 units for the month, a decrease of 15.0% compared to February 2018’s bottom line of 37,481 units. Motorhomes finished the month with 4,545 units, down by 18.2% compared to the February 2018 total of 5,557 units. Park Model RVs ended February down by 11.4% vs. February 18, with only 349 shipments to retailers. For the first two months of 2019 shipments are down more than one-quarter (- 27.5%) from January and February 2018.

□ What you’ll hear if you ask around North Central Indiana, home to the RV industry: the slump in shipments is simply due to excess inventory – but dig a bit deeper and query why that surplus exists and units aren’t selling. Manufacturing orders in general nationally were reported to have been particularly strong in March, so we will be watching the RV data for that month to see if there is some recovery that matches the broader national trend.

● Producer sentiment weakened slightly in late Winter, according to the March Purdue University/CME Group Ag Economy Barometer reading, based upon a survey of 400 U.S. agricultural producers.

□ James Mintert, the barometer’s principal investigator and director of Purdue’s Center for Commercial Agriculture, attributes the drop “largely due to producers’ weaker outlook regarding future economic conditions in agriculture and, in some cases, stress regarding their farm’s future financial performance.”

● GTA Containers Inc., of South Bend is one of four entities sharing a maximum $47 million Defense Logistics Agency Troop Support contract for tank fabrication berm liners. This was a competitive acquisition for one-year base contracts with four one-year option periods, and seven offers were received.

● National Express LLC seeks to acquire control of Free Enterprise System/Royal, LLC (Royal) from Sodrel Holding. Former U.S. Rep. Mike Sodrel (R) holds all of the equity stock of Sodrel Holding, which owns Free Enterprise System, which provides interstate and intrastate passenger charter services in Illinois, Indiana, and Kentucky. Sodrel would retain Star of America LLC, which does not currently have any operations; and Student Transit, LLC, which provides non-regulated school bus transportation services in Indiana. National Express also owns Durham School Services, L.P., which provides student school bus transportation services in Indiana.

● As lawmakers debate gaming law changes, in large part to help Indiana remain competitive with our neighboring states, some are skeptical about that motivation . . . but our sister Hannah newsletter, INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT, serves up a handy little pair of charts that show just how Indiana is feeling the effects of competition from Illinois (which long since surpassed our monthly gaming revenue thanks to more than 31,000 video gaming terminals in more than 6,800 establishments, in addition to the 10 casinos) and Ohio (which brings in even more money from its seven racinos than its four urban land-based casinos), which has cut the monthly revenue gap compared to Indiana casino win by almost one-half in just the last six months.

IN Transition

- Sen. Randy Head (R) has been selected to serve on the Council of State Governments Healthy States: What Works National Task Force. The CSG task force appointment runs for two years. Sen. Head will serve on the panel's Capacity, Preparedness and Resiliency Subcommittee, which will examine case studies and review recent state responses to health crises, including ways to prevent or reduce the impact of crisis through preventive care. There will be four subcommittees, which will convene several times between now and December 2020 to help develop comprehensive solutions to public policy issues facing states, with each comprised of 12 state leaders, including two co-chairs.

□ Sen. Head will be asked to collaborated with his fellow committee members to help subject-matter experts and private-sector partners identify and promote innovative approaches to state health policy challenges, while forging state-centric, problem-solving partnerships.

- Assistant Water/Wastewater Director Edward Kaufman is retiring this month after almost 30 years of service with the Office of the Utility Counselor, relocating to the East Coast to be closer to family. During his OUCC tenure, Kaufman also served at the national level as chair of the National Association of State Utility Consumer Advocates Water Committee, and on the board of directors for the Society of Utility and Regulatory Financial Analysts.

- A late addition to the Governor's commission on teacher compensation advisory council: Becky Gardenour, a school board member from the New Albany-Floyd County Schools, and the Indiana School Boards Association Region 10 director.

- Hoosier Jessica Smith, who moved from reporting for WISH-TV to parent Nexstar Media Group's Washington, D.C. Bureau, is now working as a Washington reporter for Yahoo Finance.

IN the Lobby

- A change in family circumstances will bring a familiar and well-liked face back to Indiana State University and the State House – for a second time. Greg Goode will rejoining the leadership team at ISU as executive director of government relations, and add oversight of university communications to his portfolio. Goode, the 2008 CD 08 Republican nominee, had left Terre Haute at the end of 2018 to become president and CEO of The Historic Trust in Vancouver, Washington. He had spent five years in the pacific Northwest in between his previous stints at ISU, returning in 2012, and he and his family will settle back in the Wabash Valley in time for him to start working again at ISU on May 1.

□ ISU alum Dennis Faulkenberg and his APPIAN Advisors have been handling legislative representation for the university.

- Bose Public Affairs Group files a federal lobby registration on behalf of the Metropolitan School District of Washington Township to lobby Congress on "Issues related to school safety compliance."

IN Court

- As soon as Hoosier lawmakers are able to convince the U.S. Senate to confirm the two current nominees to the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana, look for a concerted effort by the delegation to remedy the situation in the Southern District, which currently is struggling under what we understand is the highest weighted caseload per judgeship in the country . . . even at full strength on the bench.

- Axios tips that the President decided against nominating Judge Amy Coney Barrett of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit to the Supreme Court of the United States last year because " 'I'm saving her for Ginsburg,' Trump said of Barrett, according to three sources familiar with the president's private comments. Trump used that exact line with a number of people, including in a private conversation with an adviser two days before announcing Brett Kavanaugh's nomination." Judge Barrett of St. Joseph County, a former law professor at the University of Notre Dame, "is a favorite among conservative activists ... She's young and proudly embraces her Catholic faith. Her past academic writings suggest an openness to overturning Roe v. Wade. Her nomination would throw gas on the culture-war fires, which Trump relishes."

Proposed gaming industry investments are huge economic boost for Indiana

By Spectacle Entertainment

Indiana Senate Bill 552 (SB552) proposes changes to the gaming industry that would mean huge economic benefits for Indiana. This bill warrants support for three reasons:

1. Moving the two casino vessels out of Buffington Harbor would allow it to be used as an intermodal hub, port and logistics center. SB552 will allow our company, Spectacle Entertainment, to move Majestic Star and Majestic Star II out of Gary's Buffington Harbor. The harbor is a shallow-water port on Lake Michigan with only limited maritime operations currently taking place. This move presents Gary with an opportunity to diversity its economy, create good jobs and increase tax revenues.
2. Relocating one of the Majestic Star casinos adjacent to I 80/94 in Gary would boost economic development and job growth, generating higher state and local tax revenues. SB552 authorizes one casino to be relocated near I 80/94 in Gary, where Spectacle will build a casino/hotel project costing $300 million and generating many building trades jobs. We project that the 800 current team members would be necessary to operate the new venue, plus 400 new hires, for a total work force of 1,200. In addition, the new casino and hotel are expected to generate $78.75 million annually in state and local tax revenues, compared to the two existing properties.
3. Relocating the second Majestic Star casino to Terre Haute would create jobs, generate increased state and local tax revenues and possibly avert Illinois casino competition. SB552 authorizes the relocation of the second Majestic license to Terre Haute in Vigo County. Siting a casino in Terre Haute makes sense because the area does not have convenient access to gaming facilities and has a long history of advocating for a casino. This relocation would result in an investment of $100 million and generate $24 million in annual tax revenue. Also, a casino in Terre Haute would draw from Illinois, including the population center of Danville, Ill., and possibly would forestall the opening of a casino in Danville.

Altogether, these investments would make Indiana increasingly competitive with other states for gaming revenue and would likely lead to additional economic investment by lodging, restaurant and entertainment businesses. Please join us in supporting SB552 to bring these exciting economic opportunities to our state.

BUTTIGIEG TALKS CAPITALISM, FAITH ON MEET THE PRESS: South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg began the week he is expected to formally announce for the Democratic presidential nomination by talking about capitalism and faith on NBC's Meet The Press this morning (Howey Politics Indiana). Buttigieg will announce his candidacy in South Bend next Sunday. Host Chuck Todd asked the mayor, "Are you a capitalist?" Buttigieg responded, "Sure. America is a capitalist society, but it's got to be democratic capitalism and that part is really important. It's slipping away from us. When capitalism comes into tension with democracy, which is more important? I believe democracy is more important. When you have capitalism capturing democracy, when you have a regulatory capture where powerful corporations are able to arrange the rules to their benefit, that's not real capitalism. If you want to see what happens with capitalism without democracy, you can see it very clearly in Russia. It turns into crony capitalism and that turns into oligarchy. I know the temptation especially from the communitariat is to align everybody as dots on a spectrum. That's not how most voters think. Think of the number of voters mathematically in St. Joseph County, Indiana who must have voted for Obama and Trump and Mike Pence and me. There's a lot more to this than an ideological analysis, especially with the ideology in our country so scrambled, having a president who doesn't even have an ideology, just a style, undertaking a hostile takeover of the Republican Party."

MAYOR PETE ON TRUMP AND GOD: Mayor Buttigieg was asked about President Trump and God, with Vice President Mike Pence and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo saying that "God" wanted him to become president (Howey Politics Indiana). Buttigieg responded, "It's something that really frustrates me because the hypocrisy is so unbelievable. Here you have somebody who not only acts in a way not consistent with anything I hear in Scripture and church, where it is about lifting up the least among us and taking care of strangers, which is another word for immigrants, and making sure you're focusing your effort on the poor. But also personally how you're supposed to conduct yourself, not chest-thumping and 'look at me,' but humbling yourself before others. Foot washing is one of the central images in the New Testament and we see the diametric opposite of that in this presidency. There was a process where he began to pretend to be pro life and govern accordingly, which is good enough to bring a number of evangelicals to his side. I can't believe someone who is writing hush money checks to adult film actresses is somebody they should be lifting up."

NISOURCE TO CUT GREENHOUSE EMISSIONS BY 90%: NiSource plans to slash greenhouse gas emissions from electricity generation by 90 percent by 2030, as compared to 2005, as it takes coal-fired plants offline in favor of greener energy sources (Pete, NWI Times). The Merrillville-based parent company of NIPSCO unveiled new emission reduction targets in its 2018 Integrated Annual Report that it says builds upon "the aggressive environmental targets the company announced in 2016." "NiSource has long been committed to improving the environmental performance of our energy systems and making it more affordable for our customers," NiSource President and CEO Joe Hamrock said. "The updated targets we're highlighting in our 2018 Integrated Annual Report demonstrate our continued progress doing just that. We'll continue to make our business more sustainable for our customers, the communities we serve, our employees and our investors." By 2030, NiSource aims to reduce nitrogen oxide, sulfur dioxide and mercury emissions by 99% as compared to 2005 levels. The utility hopes to reduce water withdrawal by 99%, wastewater discharge by 99% and coal ash generation by 100%. After being pressured by environmental groups like the Sierra Club to reduce its carbon footprint, the company now aims to retire all its coal-fired power plants by 2028. Instead, NIPSCO will generate power with wind, solar and battery storage technology.

SOLIDAY DENIES AMENDMENT AIMED AT 'SAVING COAL': At a time when two of the state's biggest electric utilities are planning to retire a majority of their coal power, a House committee has voted to put a moratorium on such decisions (IndyStar). The House Utilities committee voted 8-4 on an amendment that would temporarily prevent Indiana regulators from approving large projects that generate electricity for Hoosiers. The new amendment, which was added to Senate Bill 472 on Wednesday without testimony, would prohibit the Indiana Utility Regulatory Commission from approving plans written by electric utilities to change the way they generate electricity. The moratorium would be in effect from April 30 to January 1, 2021. Rep. Ed Soliday, R-Valparaiso, said the amendment was necessary to slow down the rapid changes happening in Indiana's energy markets. It would give a statewide energy task force, formed by another amendment to the same bill, the time to properly study and make recommendations about the state's energy future. "If we don't do something that slows things down we will have a policy dictated by decisions" made by utilities and the IURC, Soliday said at a House Utilities committee meeting this week. Opponents of the measure say it's just another way to keep coal alive in the state, an idea that Soliday vehemently denied in this week's committee meeting. "Neither amendment is a coal amendment," Soliday said on Wednesday. But Kerwin Olson, executive director of the Citizens Action Coalition, said that he finds that hard to believe, as the only parties benefiting from the amendment are coal companies. "This is sort of the Hail Mary, in our opinion, for coal, because the only way that we can keep burning coal is to effectively stop the commission from issuing orders for new generation, which sort of requires the coal plants to stay open," Olson said.

TIPPING POINT REACHED ON COAL: Is the Indiana coal industry heading for the scrap pile? Its biggest traditional customers, electrical utilities, are quickly moving to less-expensive fuel sources—including natural gas, solar and wind—to power their generating plants. The shift, years in the making, is accelerating and shows no signs of letting up (Russell, IBJ). Three years ago, Indianapolis Power & Light sent a shudder through the coal industry when it converted its Harding Street Station power plant—which used to burn 2 million tons of coal a year—to natural gas, ending a coal tradition that began when the plant opened in 1931. A few months later, IPL converted the coal-fired units at its Eagle Valley power plant in Martinsville to natural gas. Vectren Corp., based in Evansville, plans to retire three of its four coal-burning generating units by 2024. In their place, Vectren will substantially increase the use of natural gas as a fuel source and build a 50-megawatt solar farm. “We have demonstrated a tipping point where coal is no longer the exclusive solution for southwest Indiana customers and continues to be highly risky due to plant age and environmental regulations,” Mike Roeder, Vectren’s vice president of government affairs, told the Indiana House Utilities Committee last month. And last fall, in the latest bombshell for the coal industry, Merrillville-based Northern Indiana Public Service Co. said it plans to retire four of its five remaining coal-fired electricity-generating units within five years and the other within a decade. The move will save NIPSCO $4 billion over the next 20 years, the company said. It plans to generate 65 percent of its power from solar, wind and other renewables by 2028, and at least 25 percent from natural gas, as it shifts toward less-costly energy sources. “As utilities look further into the future, where they expect things to trend, that dynamic is not changing,” said Doug Gotham, director of the State Utility Forecasting Group at Purdue University. “On an economic basis, coal has trouble competing.”

HAMILTON ELECTION BOARD TO PROBE CARMEL ALLEGATION: The Hamilton County Election Board plans to look into allegations that Carmel Mayor Jim Brainard’s re-election campaign offered money to his challenger to drop out of the race. But the meeting will be after the May 7 primary election involving both candidates (Quinn, IBJ). The board has tentatively slated a meeting for May 14 to meet with both campaigns and the two major political parties to hear testimony and determine whether the people involved have evidence supporting the claim. Election board member Ray Alder, a Republican, likened the meeting to a probable cause hearing in a court case. Last week, the Hamilton County Democratic Party called for an investigation into the allegations made by Republican mayoral candidate Fred Glynn that Brainard’s campaign offered him $140,000 to withdraw from the race. Joe Weingarten, chairman of the county Democratic Party, told IBJ he filed a request with the election board in order to get to the bottom of the claims, which were originally reported in a March 21 Current in Carmel article. Glynn told the Current that the alleged bribe took place during a Feb. 3 meeting involving Glynn’s former campaign manager Dan Hennessey, Brainard consultant Allan Sutherlin and Hamilton County GOP chair Laura Campbell, who is also a Carmel city councilor. Hennessey then reported the bribe to Glynn—who said he turned down the offer—before resigning from his campaign to work with Brainard, the Current reported. The Brainard campaign said it is not employing Hennessey or paying him directly. Stakeholder International, a consulting firm owned by Sutherlin, hired Hennessey. Sutherlin and Campbell told the Current there was a bribe offered during the meeting, but it didn’t come from Brainard’s team. Instead, Hennessey asked for the money on Glynn’s behalf, Sutherlin said.

FARMERS TELL PENCE TO PASS USMCA, END TARIFFS: It was anything but a typical day at Lamb Farms in Boone County when the Vice President and a gaggle of media showed up for a visit. “I told the President I was going home to Indiana to listen to farmers,” Vice President Mike Pence told the group of about 50 Hoosier farmers who gathered for the event. True to his word, Pence did more listening than talking during the 90 minute event (Truitt, Hoosier Ag Today). The message the former Indiana Governor heard was loud and clear: pass USMCA, remove the tariffs, strike a deal with China, and get the farm economy back on track. The listening sessions were emceed by Indiana Farm Bureau President Randy Kron who told HAT Pence got the message, “I think he heard the message that agriculture needs the USMCA. We have got to get this done.” In his closing remarks, the Vice President said the President is committed to getting the deal ratified by Congress this spring, “President Trump has done his job it is time for Congress to do theirs.” Kron said Farm Bureau has made adoption of USMCA by Congress its top legislative priority this spring. Jeff Demerly, from Wolcott, told Pence, “I know of some young farmers who will not be able to start their tractors this spring because they just don’t have the money to farm.” Mike Beard, a corn grower from Clinton County, told HAT that farmers are beginning to lose patience with the lack of progress on trade and continued low crop prices.

YOUNG SAYS USMCA PASSAGE UNCERTAIN : President Trump’s replacement for the North American Free Trade Agreement faces an uncertain path to approval by Congress (WIBC). Indiana Republican Todd Young says he supports the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement. He says Indiana’s heavy concentration of manufacturing and agriculture makes a trade deal with America’s neighbors critical. And he says the deal improves on NAFTA by covering services as well as goods. But Young says it’s unclear whether Trump’s renegotiated NAFTA has the votes to pass the Democratic House. He says many members have policy disagreements with the deal, and charges some Democrats want to deny Trump a victory. Trump added a complication with a threat to impose tariffs on Mexican auto imports even if the trade deal is approved, unless Mexico makes progress in controlling illegal border crossings. Young says he doesn’t expect that threat to affect the debate -- he says lawmakers are focused on the deal itself. He’s steering clear of commenting on the tariff threat itself.

KNIGHT RETURNS TO IU CAMPUS: Former IU men’s basketball coach Bob Knight returned to IU’s campus Saturday afternoon to take in a baseball game at Bart Kaufman Field (Drummond, Indiana Daily Student). The 78-year-old Knight arrived prior to the start of IU’s afternoon doubleheader against Penn State, marking his first public and most visible appearance on campus since he was fired in September 2000 and spoke to a crowd in Dunn Meadow. He entered the stadium on a golf cart driven by an IU official, and was followed in another golf cart by former Herald-Times sports editor Bob Hammel and IU Deputy Director of Athletics Scott Dolson. Knight watched the game from a suite inside the stadium press box. As he entered the suite, Knight said "it's nice being here." During his time at IU, Knight led the men's basketball program to three national championships over his 29-year career. The Hoosiers also reached five Final Fours under Knight and won 11 Big Ten Regular Season titles. IU Athletic Director Fred Glass told the Herald-Times in a text message he was happy to help Knight attend the baseball game, but hadn't talked to him yet and didn't expect to.

TRUMP TO SPEAK TO NRA CONVENTION IN INDY: President Donald Trump will be in Indianapolis on Friday, April 26 to speak at the NRA Annual Meeting, according to the NRA's Institute for Legislative Action (WIBC). For the third consecutive year, Trump will address NRA members at the NRA-ILA Leadership Forum, according to the group's website. It will be his fifth consecutive year appearing at the Annual Meeting. "Donald Trump is the most enthusiastic supporter of the Second Amendment to occupy the Oval Office in our lifetimes. It is truly an honor to have President Trump address NRA members for the fifth consecutive year," said Chris Cox, NRA-ILA Executive Director, on the NRA-ILA website. "Our members are excited to hear him speak and thank him for his support for our Right to Keep and Bear Arms." The NRA Convention will take place from Thursday, April 25 - Sunday, April 28 at Lucas Oil Stadium and the Indiana Convention Center.

WILL TRUMP'S ANSWERS TO MUELLER BE MADE PUBLIC? Investigators for the special counsel spent months trying to get answers from President Trump: what he knew about a meeting between senior campaign aides and Russians; about changes to the Republican Party platform making it more Russia-friendly; about his associates' outreach to WikiLeaks as it prepared to publish Democratic emails stolen by Russian hackers (Savage, New York Times). After months of resistance, his lawyers finally turned over written answers in November to those questions and others. But the public has not seen them. Now, the question of whether they become part of the available history of Russia's 2016 election interference and its aftermath — along with whatever else the special counsel, Robert S. Mueller III, may have gathered — turns on Attorney General William P. Barr. Since Mr. Mueller submitted a nearly 400-page report on his investigation two weeks ago, Mr. Barr, his aides and other law enforcement officials have been reviewing it to determine which portions to provide to lawmakers and the public — and what to black out. Mr. Barr has promised to give lawmakers — by mid-April, "if not sooner" — as much of the report as possible, subject to several categories of necessary deletions. But much will turn on how expansively or narrowly he interprets those categories.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: We are in for a compelling week, folks. Hopefully we'll see the unredacted portions of the Mueller report, as promised by Attorney General Barr. Next Sunday, Mayor Buttigieg kicks off his Democratic presidential campaign in South Bend. HPI and our commentators will be ready to report, analyze and weigh in. - Brian A. Howey

BIDEN STRUGGLES WITH ALLEGATIONS: If Joe Biden was hoping on Friday to move past the controversy over his unwelcome physical contact with women, he did not succeed (Politico). The former vice president, even as he inched closer to announcing a presidential bid, twice made light of his touchy, close-talking political style during a speech to a major labor union, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers — drawing further attention to a fraught issue that has generated damaging headlines for days. Biden opened his address to the IBEW conference at the Washington Hilton by joking about his embrace of the man who introduced him, union president Lonnie Stephenson. "I just want you to know, I had permission to hug Lonnie," Biden told the crowd, prompting laughter. Fifteen minutes later, Biden invited a group of children on stage with him, shaking each of their hands. He put his arm around one male child before telling the crowd: "He gave me permission to touch him," again prompting laughter from the crowd. "I'm sorry to take so long. Everybody knows that I like kids better than people."

PRIEBUS SAYS TRUMP MUST WIN PA, MI, WI: Former White House chief of staff Reince Priebus warned in an interview that aired Sunday that President Trump needs to repeat his success in Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin in 2020 to win re-election (The Hill). Priebus told AM 970's "The Answer" that the president's path to victory in 2020 lay in reigniting the support that he received in working-class communities across the Rust Belt. "[Trump] has to win Wisconsin and Michigan," Priebus told host John Catsimatidis. "We have to win Pennsylvania." "We're likely to have a battle in Arizona, which is new for the Republican Party. I think we have to be very careful in Georgia," he continued.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES DON'T HAVE TRACTION IN HOME STATES: Sen. Kamala Harris has been elected three times to statewide office, and she's one of the most popular politicians in California. Yet according to the latest Public Policy Institute of California poll, just 38 percent of likely state voters say she should be running for president (Politico). In New Jersey, only 37 percent of Sen. Cory Booker's constituents think he would make a good president. In Massachusetts, two-thirds of likely voters told a Suffolk University Political Research Center/Boston Globe Poll last fall that Sen. Elizabeth Warren shouldn't run for the White House.

Sunday Talk

MULVANEY SAYS TAX RETURN ISSUE ALREADY RESOLVED: Acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney said Sunday that congressional Democrats will "never" see President Donald Trump's tax returns, arguing that any controversy surrounding the elusive financial statements was "already litigated" during the 2016 campaign. "Oh no. Never. Nor should they," Mulvaney told host Bill Hemmer on "Fox News Sunday." "Keep in mind, that's an issue that was already litigated during the election," Mulvaney said. "Voters knew the president could have given his tax returns, they knew that he didn't, and they elected him anyway — which, of course, is what drives the Democrats crazy."

SEKULOW SAYS IRS 'WEAPONIZED': House Democrats' request for President Trump's tax returns amounts to "using the IRS as a political weapon," Trump's attorney Jay Sekulow said on Sunday morning. Sekulow told ABC's George Stephanopoulos on "This Week" that Congress may only request individual citizens' tax returns for a "legitimate legislative purpose," which he claimed House Ways & Means Committee Chair Rep. Richard Neal (D-Mass.) has not identified.

NADLER SEES 'COLLUSION IN PLAIN SIGHT': There was "open collusion" between President Trump's campaign and Russia regardless of whether special counsel Robert Mueller found evidence of criminal conspiracy, House Judiciary Committee chairman, Rep. Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.), said Sunday morning. Donald Trump Jr. and Jared Kushner's 2016 Trump Tower meeting with Russian associates allegedly indicates "there was in plain sight open collusion with the Russians," Nadler said on CBS' "Face The Nation." Mueller last month concluded his investigation into Russia interference in the 2016 election and possible collusion between Trump's campaign and Moscow. He did not find evidence of cooperation between Trump's campaign and Russia, according to a four-page summary of his findings provided to Congress by Attorney General William Barr.

GIULIANI SAYS NADLER WILL SEE FULL MUELLER REPORT: President Trump's attorney, Rudy Giuliani, said Sunday that House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler (D-N.Y.) should "get all of the information" from special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation. Nadler should have access to "everything," including grand jury material, Giuliani said on CBS' "Face the Nation." "Except for little quibbles, I'm not worried about the report at all," Giuliani added. Giuliani also said that while Trump "can't waive all executive privilege," the president's team is eager to disclose as much information as legally possible. "The [attorney general] has said he's going to put up the maximum amount...possible," Giuliani said. "The only thing that will stop him will be legal barriers."

KUDLOW DEFENDS CAIN: Top White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow on Sunday weighed in on sexual harassment allegations against Herman Cain, whom President Trump plans to nominate to the Federal Reserve Board, saying accusations sometimes "don't necessarily pan out." "Look, we are going through a vetting process in the White House. I'm sure the Senate Banking Committee will do likewise," Kudlow, the director of the National Economic Council, said on CNN's "State of the Union" when asked if the allegations against Cain trouble him. "There's big disputes here. Mr. Cain disagrees with this point of view. I'm not going to litigate that here," he added, confronting past allegations by four women that ended Cain's 2012 presidential bid.

SCHIFF SAYS DEMS, JEWS WILL CEMENT: Rep. Adam Schiff (D-Calif.) on Sunday dismissed comments from President Trump, who the previous day said a "radical agenda" being pushed by Democrats could "very well could leave Israel out there all by yourselves." "I hate to even dignify those remarks, but look, it's not the Democratic Party that believes that there are good people on both sides of a Nazi rally. There's just one party and one party leader who believes that, and that's Donald Trump," Schiff, one of the highest-ranking Jewish members of Congress, said on CNN's "State of the Union." "If there's anything that is likely to cement the relationship between the Democratic Party and the Jewish community, it's the presidency of Donald Trump."

SCHIFF DEFENDS CALLING OUT TRUMP: House Intelligence Committee Chairman Adam Schiff defended his past comments about President Donald Trump on Sunday, disavowing calls from Republicans that he step down from leading the key committee. "I don't regret calling out this President for what I consider deeply unethical and improper conduct," Schiff said on CNN's "State of the Union" with Jake Tapper.

He continued, "Not a bit. And I think the moment that we start to think that we should back away from exposing this kind of malfeasance and corruption is a dangerous point."

ROMNEY BLASTS DEMS OVER TAX RETURNS: Sen. Mitt Romney (R-Utah) on Sunday called Democrats "moronic" for attempting to obtain President Trump's tax returns through legislative action. Romney added, however, that he wishes Trump would publicly release his tax returns. "[Trump] said he would be happy to release his returns. So I wish he'd do that. But I have to also tell you I think the Democrats are just playing along his handbook, which is, going after his tax returns through legislative action is moronic," he said during an interview on NBC's "Meet the Press." "That's not going to happen," Romney continued. "The courts are not going to say that you can compel a person running for office to release their tax returns. He's going to win this victory."

KILDEE DEFENDS TAX RETURN QUEST: Rep. Dan Kildee (D-Mich.) defended Ways & Means Committee Chair Richard Neal's (D-Mass.) authority to request President Trump's tax returns Sunday, calling Trump the "least transparent president in half a century." Contrary to language used by Trump's attorneys in a letter to the Internal Revenue Service Friday, Neal's request is "not a Pandora's box" and derives from "legitimate authority," Kildee told ABC's George Stephanopoulos. "We are looking very carefully right now as to whether or not the IRS is properly auditing and enforcing tax law on the President of the United States, and we're considering legislative changes to that end," Kildee said on ABC's "This Week."

General Assembly

HATE CRIME SIGNING HEADLINES WEEK: Gov. Eric Holcomb signed hate crimes legislation into law. Two anti-abortion bills are headed to the governor's desk. And the Senate approved a measure allowing pregnant minors to make their own health care decisions (Indiana Public Media). Here's what you might have missed this week at the Statehouse.

Hate Crimes Bill Signed: Gov. Holcomb quietly signed into law a bill that aims to create hate crimes protections – one day after the Senate gave final approval to the language sharply criticized by many hate crimes measure advocates as inadequate. The new law allows judges to enact harsher penalties for crimes committed because of bias and references a list of victim characteristics. But that list falls short of what advocates had long pushed for – it leaves out sex, age and gender identity.

Anti-Abortion Legislation: The Senate gave final approval to two anti-abortion measures. One allows pharmacists, nurses, and physician assistants to refuse to provide abortion services. Doctors and hospital employees already have that ability. The other bill largely bans dilation and evacuation abortions, second trimester procedures known as D&Es. Anti-abortion activists call them "barbaric." Many doctors say they're the safest way to end a pregnancy at that stage.

Pregnancy Care For Minors: Senate lawmakers approved a bill Tuesday allowing 16- and 17-year-olds to make their own decisions about pregnancy care. Indiana law generally doesn't let minors make their own health care decisions without a parent's consent. That includes 16- and 17-year-olds who are pregnant. But the Senate voted down such a bill earlier this year in part because of concerns the girl's parents were entirely left out. The new version requires physicians to try to contact the pregnant teen's parents.

School Safety Referenda: A proposal moving forward at the statehouse would allow school districts to ask voters for a property tax increase specifically to pay for school safety projects. School corporations can ask voters to approve two types of referenda, to fund construction projects or, general operations. Many districts have included school safety improvements as part of the reason for their referendum proposals, along with other expenses like teacher pay, but the House Ways and Means Committee approved a bill this week to let schools ask for tax hikes for safety costs alone.

Volunteer Coach Discipline: Senate lawmakers approved legislation Thursday that ensures Indiana law deals with how volunteer coaches at high schools are disciplined. State law already governs how coaches who are employees of a high school are treated when fired for criminal acts or misconduct. But the law didn't contemplate volunteers. The bill applies to public, charter and private schools. The Senate approved the measure unanimously. The House could vote to send it to the governor as early as next week.

House Rejects Rental Fee Cap Increase: The Indiana House rejected an attempt Monday to raise the cap on rental fees cities can charge to landlords. Current law says municipalities can't charge landlords an inspection fee of more than $5 per unit. Those charges are often passed on to renters. An amendment would have raised the cap for all cities to $150 per unit. It failed, 21 to 73.

TOWNSHIP SURPLUS BILLS ADVANCE: Legislation that would require officials of Indiana's townships with high budget surpluses to explain their plans for capital projects passed this week through the state Senate Committee on Local Government (Miley, CNHI). The legislation, House Bill 1177 by Rep. Cindy Ziemke, R-Batesville, now heads to the Senate floor. The bill has already passed the House. Ziemke's bill attempts to address excessive budget surpluses in many of Indiana's 1,005 townships. Across the state, townships had budgets totaling $389.3 million in 2017. But they had a total cash balance of $453.6 million, more than 16 percent above their budgeted amounts. That's enough for 14 months of operating revenues, as much as seven times the generally accepted threshold for government units. The bill is geared to townships that have capital improvement funds amounting to 150 percent of the total budget and exceeding $200,000. They would be required to complete a three-year capital improvement plan by Sept. 30, 2020. Without such a plan, the township wouldn't be able to receive property taxes. "After they complete the capital improvement plans (the bill would) allow them to transfer surpluses into another fund they can actually use. That's been a big issue with a lot of these townships," Ziemke said.

Congress

BRAUN ENJOYING 'GUMMED UP' SENATE: U.S. Sen. Mike Braun said Wednesday he has enjoyed his first few months on Capitol Hill even if Congress is "a gummed-up process." "I think it's been going great," he said during a conference call with Indiana news reporters (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Braun, R-Ind., said he plans to concentrate on legislation affecting health care, infrastructure and the budget, "and if I can do well in those three arenas, I think it's going to be well worth the price of admission." He said that price was an "acrimonious" campaign in 2018 that was "a long, hard journey to get here." Braun is the wealthy owner of a Jasper-based auto parts distribution business who lent millions of dollars to his campaign. He defeated U.S. Reps. Todd Rokita and Luke Messer in the Republican primary election and Democratic Sen. Joe Donnelly in the general election to reach the Senate. "The problem is, it is such a gummed-up process," he said about Congress. "It becomes so polarized. ... It's very congenial, even reaching out across the other side of the aisle, when you're not talking about anything important on policy. Once it becomes a significant policy issue, pretty well everybody gets into their own camp, nothing gets done. "That's disappointing. You could never run a school board, a state government, any business in that fashion. And to be honest, I don't see that changing for a while. I think it's been so built into the dynamic here," Braun said.

BRAUN PRAISES DONNELLY: U.S. Sen. Mike Braun praised Donnelly's constituent work (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). "Sen. Donnelly ran a very good operation back in Indiana. He interfaced with agriculture well, many of the other business interest groups. I built my business on customer service; that's how you distinguish yourself. ... I made it clear we want to emulate what Sen. Donnelly did and even make it better. I think we're off to a great start," Braun said. He said Donnelly's staff worked with his staff "to get our Senate office off to a good start, and I appreciate that."

EDUCATION: MORE STUDENTS PREPARED FOR COLLEGE - More Hoosier students than ever are prepared for college. That's according to the most recent College Readiness Report compiled by the Indiana Commission for Higher Education (Lanich, NWI Times). The 2019 report, released this week, shares data based on students who graduated high school in the previous academic year and enrolled in college within a year of their graduation. Major takeaways include data trends showing fewer college-age students are in need of remediation, and more high school students are receiving college credit early, as well as a decrease in Indiana high school graduates immediately enrolling in college. "While we understand that people are benefiting from a strong economy and job opportunities, we must continue to make a case for a quality degree or credential to ensure that Hoosiers are prepared for a dynamic economy," Indiana Commissioner for Higher Education Teresa Lubbers said in a news release.

HEALTH: MEASLES EXPOSURE IN ANGOLA - State health officials confirm a new case of measles in northern Indiana (AP). They're working with local health officials in LaGrange and Steuben counties to identify anyone who may have been exposed to the infected patient to prevent it from spreading any further. They're also consulting with their counterparts in Michigan and Texas because there may be exposure in those states as well because of this same case. Anyone who has visited these locations on the dates indicated may have been exposed: Friday, March 29, Cameron Memorial Community Hospital Urgent Care – 1381 N. Wayne St., Angola, IN 46703; 3:45 p.m. - 6:35 p.m. Saturday, March 30; Cameron Memorial Community Hospital Laboratory 5:30 p.m. - 8 p.m. Saturday, March 30.

ECONOMY: SHORT TERM RENTALS FACE NEW TAX - Ruth Floyd uses the income she earns from Airbnb to fund improvements to her circa-1880s home in downtown New Albany (Thomas, News & Tribune). A retiree and "not quite a spring chicken anymore," Floyd also is an unofficial ambassador of sorts for the Ohio River town, nudging guests toward places to grab a bite to eat and relax just a short stroll from her Mansion Row home on Main Street. But Floyd is concerned about an Indiana law, passed in 2016 but effective July 1, requiring the collection of sales tax from online short-term rental platforms like Airbnb. She's worried how potential guests might react to a possible increase in rates to compensate for the added levy. "A lot of people that I meet, if it weren't for Airbnb, they probably wouldn't travel as much," said Floyd. "They wouldn't be spending money in Indiana, so if the fees start going up and people start saying, 'well, I can't travel anymore,' then Indiana or whoever's trying to make some money will lose out on all of that." Indiana is one of three states that currently doesn't charge a sales tax for online short-term rental platforms, so how that levy will be collected and remitted is still up in the air. The law that will go into effect this summer stipulates that sales tax to be collected by a facilitator, like Airbnb, if the rental transpired on such a platform, or the property owner if the property owner makes the transaction directly. A short-term rental is defined as a period of less than 30 days.

INDOT: SECTION 6 WORK ON I-69 BEGINS - In Martinsville, it looks like a tornado hit right along the State Road 37 corridor (WRTV). Trees are down, homes and businesses are boarded up. Martinsville residents and those who drive through the Morgan County town are seeing sure signs that work on the next phase of I 69 is underway. Its official name is "Section Six," the 26 miles of highway between Martinsville and I 465 in Indianapolis which will follow the current State Road 37. When it's done, I 69 will be complete from Evansville to Indianapolis.

DNR: TURKEY RUN SP ON NATIONAL REGISTRY - Western Indiana's Turkey Run State Park has been added to the National Register of Historic Places more than a century after it opened (AP). The park near Marshall, Indiana, boasts scenic views of Sugar Creek, which meanders along sandstone cliffs and outcroppings and is traversed by a 200-foot-long suspension bridge. The Indiana Department of Natural Resources says Turkey Run State Park was added to the national registry because of its cultural value to Indiana and its national history. The park was founded in 1916 about 25 miles northeast of Terre Haute. It's Indiana's second-oldest park, after McCormick's Creek. Turkey Run includes the Lusk Home, which was already listed on the national registry.

SPORTS: GUY LEADS UVA TO FINAL GAME - Think of all the kids who spent 10,000 hours in practice, hoping for this moment. U.Va. will play for the national men's basketball title for the first time after pulling off a last-second stunner last night in the Final Four in Minneapolis (Axios). Kyle Guy of Indianapolis, 21, made three free throws with 0.6 seconds after a disputed foul call, steadily swishing each one to dance past Auburn, 63-62. Lookahead: The Virginia Cavaliers and Texas Tech Red Raiders, with two of the three best defenses in the nation, will meet for the title Monday night — the first appearance in the final for each program.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SEEKS QUICK FIX AS IMMIGRATION SURGES - More than halfway through President Trump's first term, unauthorized immigration has surged to the highest levels in a decade, leaving him searching for quick-fix solutions and his administration roiling with internal tensions over how to address a problem the president promised to solve (Washington Post). Trump sought to project confidence and strength on a visit to a renovated section of border fencing in Calexico, Calif., on Friday, amid warnings from federal authorities that the U.S. immigration system is at a "breaking point" in handling a record influx of Central American families. But his public indecision over the past week — threatening in a tweet to close the border with Mexico before reversing himself six days later — revealed an administration that is grasping to deal with a humanitarian challenge without a well-defined strategy and with significant divisions within Trump's team.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SAYS DEMS WOULD ABANDON ISRAEL - President Donald Trump warned on Saturday that a Democratic victory in 2020 could "leave Israel out there," as he highlighted his pro-Israel actions in an effort to make the case for Jewish voters to back his re-election (AP). Speaking at the annual meeting of the Republican Jewish Coalition, Trump touted his precedent-shredding actions to move the U.S. Embassy to Jerusalem from Tel Aviv and recognition last month of Israeli sovereignty over the disputed Golan Heights, a strategic plateau that Israel seized from Syria in 1967. "We got you something that you wanted," Trump said of the embassy move, adding, "Unlike other presidents, I keep my promises." The group, backed by GOP megadonor Sheldon Adelson, supported Trump's 2016 campaign and is preparing to spend millions on his 2020 effort. "I know that the Republican Jewish Coalition will help lead our party to another historic victory," Trump said. "We need more Republicans. Let's go, so we can win everything."

WHITE HOUSE: CAIN NOMINATION DRAWS FIRE - Payments to women who complained of sexual harassment. Accusations of groping. Allegations of a 13-year extramarital affair. As President Trump moves ahead with his plan to nominate Herman Cain, a 2012 Republican presidential candidate, for a seat on the Federal Reserve's board of governors, Republican lawmakers are being forced to confront a fresh round of uncomfortable allegations of sexual misconduct against women as the 2020 campaign begins. A day after Mr. Trump made the choice of Mr. Cain official, Senate Republicans expressed quiet anxiety over the prospect of another #MeToo minefield even as the White House exalted the decision. The choice of Mr. Cain comes as Mr. Trump's other pick to fill an open seat on the seven-member Fed board, the conservative economist Stephen Moore, has been under fire for ethical and financial lapses that emerged from his divorce records. In both cases, the White House has publicly backed Mr. Trump's selections despite criticism that he was installing loyalists with questionable credentials in two of the country's top economic policy jobs.

ECONOMY: 196K JOBS CREATED IN MARCH - Hiring in the United States rebounded in March as U.S. employers added a solid 196,000 jobs, up sharply from February's scant gain and evidence that many businesses still want to hire despite signs that the economy is slowing (AP). The unemployment rate remained at 3.8%, near the lowest level in almost 50 years, the Labor Department reported Friday. Wage growth slowed a bit in March, with average hourly pay increasing 3.2% from a year earlier. That was down from February's year-over-year gain of 3.4%, which was the best in a decade. The employment figures reported Friday by the government suggest that February's anemic job growth figure—revised to 33,000, from an initial 20,000—was merely a temporary blip and that businesses are confident the economy remains on a firm footing. Even with the current expansion nearly 10 years old, the U.S. economy is demonstrating its resilience.

PENTAGON: U.S. TROOPS MOVED IN LIBYA - American forces currently operating inside Libya have relocated temporarily outside the war-riven country due to growing unrest in the Libyan capital, the U.S. military's top commander for Africa said Sunday (Washington Post). "The security realities on the ground in Libya are growing increasingly complex and unpredictable," Marine Corps Gen. Thomas Waldhauser, head of U.S. Africa Command, said in a statement Sunday.

MUELLER: BARR DEFENDS HANDLING OF REPORT - Attorney General William Barr is defending his handling of special counsel Robert Mueller's report on the Russia investigation, saying the confidential document contains sensitive grand jury material that prevented it from being immediately released to the public (AP). The statement Thursday came as Barr confronts concerns that his four-page letter summarizing Mueller's conclusions unduly sanitized the full report in President Donald Trump's favor, including on the key question of whether the president obstructed justice. House Democrats on Wednesday approved subpoenas for Mueller's entire report and any exhibits and other underlying evidence that the Justice Department might withhold. The disparity in length between Barr's letter and Mueller's full report, which totals nearly 400 pages, raises the likelihood of additional significant information that was put forward by the special counsel's office but not immediately shared by the attorney general. Barr is now expected to release the entire report, with redactions, by mid-April. "Given the extraordinary public interest in the matter, the Attorney General decided to release the report's bottom-line findings and his conclusions immediately — without attempting to summarize the report — with the understanding that the report itself would be released after the redaction process," the Justice Department statement said.

CITIES: HOMICIDES UP IN GARY - Homicides and shootings have been on the rise this year in Gary, but police said gang-related cases are down and they've been able to secure charges or have a person of interest in a majority of the cases (NWI Times). Another positive sign is that the number of gang-related homicides is down, police Cmdr. Jack Hamady said. Of the 17 homicides this year, police currently think two were gang-related. Last year, nine of the 15 homicides reported during the first quarter were believed to be gang-related.

CITIES: BARNES & THORNBURG TO MOVE TO NEW DOWNTOWN SOUTH BEND SITE - Plans for the downtown's first new high-end office building in nearly three decades now include a major tenant (South Bend Tribune). The law firm Barnes & Thornburg LLC will occupy the middle three floors of a five-story modern glass and steel structure to be built at the southwest corner of Main Street and Jefferson Boulevard, and it will be called "The Barnes & Thornburg Building," the firm announced. The firm will remain in its First Source Bank Center space until the new building is finished, expected in the summer of 2021. A groundbreaking ceremony is set for Tuesday.

CITIES: NEWFIELDS GETS $22M GRANT - Newfields announced it has received nearly $22 million in grants and gifts that will go to upgrades to the popular attraction's infrastructure (WIBC). The money, which was gifted by private donors as well as foundations and public entities, will go to upgrading The Virginia B. Fairbanks Art & Nature Park: 100 Acres and The Garden. "Newfields is committed to strategic, impactful and sustainable growth that benefits the Indianapolis community. With these key infrastructure improvements, new contemporary art commissions and the addition of a Harvest festival, we will be able to welcome more people to Newfields for exceptional experiences with art and nature," said Dr. Charles L. Venable, The Melvin & Bren Simon Director and CEO. "Over the next 30 years the institution will expand its offerings in the Indianapolis Museum of Art, The Garden, the Lilly House and The Virginia B. Fairbanks Art & Nature Park. This funding lays the groundwork for the development of a campus and programs unlike anywhere else in the nation."

CITIES: FORT WAYNE CUTS PARK DEAL WITH RAILROAD - The plan for Headwaters Junction has chugged forward, moving closer to being part of the redevelopment of the North River property in Fort Wayne (Rodriguez, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The nonprofit organization behind the attraction has secured a purchase agreement with the Norfolk Southern railroad for 1.4 miles of railroad right of way. The acquisition would bring historic trains up to the approximately 30-acre former OmniSource property across Clinton Street from Science Central. The multimillion-dollar proposed attraction would offer the public a chance to learn about, view and ride trains headed by 20th-century locomotives already woven into the city's culture and history. Backers say the venue could attract 140,000 visitors and provide more than $63 million in economic impact annually.

CITIES: KOR'S MUSEUM SEEKS NEW HOME - The CANDLES Holocaust Museum in Terre Haute aims to give visitors more than a lesson in history (Indiana Public Media). That's because Holocaust survivor and Terre Haute resident, Eva Kor, founded the museum on a unique message she continues to spread to this day: forgiveness. Eva and her sister Miriam were among the thousands of twins who were subjected to disturbing genetic experiments at the Auschwitz concentration camp. Together, Eva and Miriam were among only a few of the children who survived. Holocaust survivor, Eva Kor founded the CANDLES Holocaust museum to spread her message of healing and forgiveness. In 1993, Eva conceived the idea for the CANDLES Holocaust Museum and founded it in honor of her sister who died that year.

CIB, GAMING, ON DECK THIS WEEK: The House Ways & Means Committee will have its hands full with two of the largest remaining bills receiving hearings this week (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). After a several-weeks hiatus for negotiation and revision, both the Capital Improvement Board bill (SB7, set for today's 10:30 a.m. meeting) and the major gaming bill (SB552, to be heard Tuesday at 9:00 a.m.) are on the block for committee members to amend and vote on. Once that's done, the bills will be eligible for floor discussion. The House has already changed the gaming bill significantly in the Public Policy Committee, moving back some dates and adding additional charges to planned casino moves, among other things. On the CIB bill, Speaker of the House Brian Bosma's comments through March and April have indicated that his caucus is receptive to concerns shared by Indy's hoteliers over the current bill's impact on the market, signaling that SB7 will also be seeing some changes. So, these likely won't be the final committee discussions on SB7 and SB552 – they'll almost certainly head to conference.

2ND HALF DEADLINES NEARING; BOSMA AIMS FOR APRIL 24 SINE DIE: Both chambers of the Indiana legislature will be pressed by time this week, as the last days for third readings and conference committee reports are coming next Monday and Tuesday (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). The General Assembly is also just three weeks shy of its adjournment deadline, April 29. With these deadlines approaching, lawmakers are still grappling with some major issues like the budget, DCS, the CIB bill, a payday lending bill, and the gaming bill. Speaker of the House Brian Bosma, however, has been telling members "that the only thing we have to do this session is the budget," where he says discussions are going down a good path. Bosma also told reporters that he wants to avoid last year's late-ending debacle and close session early – April 24th, to be exact. His Senate counterpart, President Pro Tempore Rod Bray, wasn't ready to name a date, but agreed that it was "something to shoot for." If that is the goal, it's going to be a busy two-and-a-half weeks in the Statehouse.

SOUTH BEND TO BE BUTTIGIEG'S KICKOFF BACKDROP: Mayor Pete Buttigieg began his latest next big week on NBC's "Meet The Press" talking not only about capitalism and faith, but his hometown of South Bend which he will portray in the coming days as the scene of success. He'll end the this week kicking off his Democratic presidential campaign on Palm Sunday in the city he has led for seven and a half years and one where voters reelected him with 80% of the vote (Howey Politics Indiana). It comes as Buttigieg's social media contacts have soared, he reported $7 million raised by his exploratory committee, and he has made an array of national TV appearances, with a recent Iowa poll showing him trailing Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders with a third-place 11%. With Buttigieg's announcement that is expected to draw more than 10,000 people, this urban backdrop will receive unprecedented scrutiny for the first presidential campaign by a Hoosier headquartered outside of Indianapolis since Wendell Willkie's 1940 effort was run out of Rushville. But Buttigieg made clear Sunday morning that South Bend will become a campaign metaphor. "There's the sense we've really changed the story for our city," Buttigieg told moderator Chuck Todd. "I think that's something the country needs to hear because you've got a president who's telling anybody from a community like mine, be it an industrial community or a rural community where people growing up, means getting this message that success means you have to get out. "He's telling us the greatness is in the past; we've got to stop the clock and turn it back," Buttigieg said of Trump and his campaign slogan "Make America Great Again." The mayor added, "I'm out there making the case that South Bend is living proof that good politics is not one based on the word 'again.'"

BRYCE CLAUSEN DIES: A 14-month-old Indianapolis boy who inspired legislators to pass a bill adding Krabbe and two other diseases to the state's list of medical screenings for newborns died Friday (Brosher, Indiana Public Media). Bryce Clausen's parents didn't learn he had Krabbe until a few months after he was born. The deadly genetic condition attacks the nervous system. But, it can be treated with an early stem cell transplant. In a post on Facebook, Bryce's father Joel says his son died in his sleep in Florida. The family was vacationing there as they tried to complete several "Greatest Hits" goals for Bryce. "I like to think that he wanted to wait until he got the bill signed, and he wanted to go to Heaven while feeling the sun on his face here in Florida, while knocking off one last item on his list," Joel wrote.

INDY GOES THROUGH WEEKEND SHOOTING SPREE: It may be the start of a long summer, said Rev. Charles Harrison. "It very well could be," Harrison told WISH-TV. "When the weather tends to warm up we tend to have more violence on the streets. It should be concerning to all of us and we have to address it immediately." Harrison's prediction comes as six people were shot and killed in the span of about 24 hours over the weekend in Indianapolis. IMPD does not have any suspects to speak of an any of the shootings.

NIELSEN OUT AT HOMELAND SECURITY: Kirstjen Nielsen resigned Sunday as homeland security secretary, adding another challenge for an administration grappling with its core immigration agenda while facing a surge of migrants at the southern border (Wall Street Journal). Ms. Nielsen met with President Trump and acting chief of staff Mick Mulvaney at the White House on Sunday to discuss immigration and personnel issues, one person briefed on the meeting said. Ms. Nielsen had been blindsided by Mr. Trump's sudden decision to drop the nomination of Ron Vitiello, a veteran border official, from consideration to head U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, this person said. That, at a time when the agency is wrestling with record numbers of families crossing illegally in search of asylum, prompted Ms. Nielsen to resign, the person said. Mr. Trump made public Ms. Nielsen's exit via Twitter on Sunday, thanking her for her service. He named U.S. Customs and Border Protection Commissioner Kevin McAleenan as acting homeland security secretary. Mr. Trump's defense secretary and interior secretary are also serving in an acting capacity. In a letter to the president, Ms. Nielsen wrote that "despite our progress in reforming homeland security for a new age, I have determined that it is the right time for me to step aside."

MORE POWER FOR HARDLINER MILLER: Secretary Nielsen's departure empowers White House hardliner Stephen Miller (Axios). A Republican Senate aide tells Jonathan Swan: "Nielsen leaving will make conservatives who were getting fed up with DHS happy. Real question will be who's the [permanent] replacement and does that person have the credentials? Whoever replaces will have one hell of a confirmation hearing." As President Trump roils the capital over illegal immigration, his influential aide Stephen Miller is playing a more aggressive behind-the-scenes role in a wider administration shakeup (Politico). Mr. Trump in recent weeks had asked Ms. Nielsen to close the ports of entry along the border and to stop accepting asylum seekers, which Ms. Nielsen found ineffective and inappropriate (Politico Playbook). While the 30-minute meeting was cordial, Mr. Trump was determined to ask for her resignation. After the meeting, she submitted it.

MULVANEY ON TRUMP TAX RETURNS ... 'NEVER': President Trump's acting chief of staff said Sunday that Democrats will "never" see the president's tax returns, abandoning Trump's long-held position that he would someday release the documents for public inspection and setting up what could be a protracted fight with Congress (Washington Post). Mick Mulvaney and other Trump allies spent the weekend casting Democrats as politically motivated for formally asking the Internal Revenue Service to turn over six years of Trump's personal and business tax returns. House Democrats last week asked the IRS to release the documents, setting a deadline of Wednesday, part of an ongoing battle with the White House as they seek information about Trump for numerous investigations into his businesses, campaign and conduct. The Trump administration has been trying to shield the president from such inquiries, and Mulvaney was adamant that Democrats won't ever gain access to Trump's tax returns. When asked about it on "Fox News Sunday," Mulvaney said: "Never. Nor should they."

ESCALATING POLITICAL BATTLE OVER MUELLER REPORT: The escalating political battle over special counsel Robert S. Mueller III's report centers on redactions — a lawyerly editing process that has angered distrustful Democrats eager to see the all evidence and conclusions from his 22-month investigation of President Trump's conduct and Russia's elaborate interference operation during the 2016 campaign (Washington Post). Attorney General William P. Barr is redacting at least four categories of information from the report, which spans nearly 400 pages, before issuing it to Congress and the public. Legal experts say he has wide discretion to determine what should not be revealed, meaning the fight over blacked-out boxes is likely to spawn months of fights between Congress and the Justice Department, and it may end up in the courts. The first public confrontation is imminent, with Barr scheduled to appear Tuesday and Wednesday before the House and Senate Appropriations committees for hearings ostensibly about the Justice Department's budget. He is expected to face extensive questioning about the Mueller report and his ongoing redaction process, though, and his testimony will be scrutinized for any sign he is trying to protect the president. "There's a lot of pressure all pointing in the direction of doing a robust release," said John Bies, who held senior roles in the Justice Department during the Obama administration and now works at American Oversight, a liberal watchdog group. "We are very hopeful the attorney general will do the right thing here and make everything public that can lawfully be made public."

TRUMP SEES RYAN, PENCE AS 'BOY SCOUTS': You'll find a trove of deeply sourced reporting in the new book, out Tuesday, by Politico's Playbook authors Jake Sherman and Anna Palmer. Here's a taste of the reporting from Trump's Washington, found in "The Hill to Die On" (Swan, Axios): On November 10, [Paul] Ryan and Trump met face-to-face. The Speaker hosted Trump; his wife, Melania; and Mike Pence on Capitol Hill for lunch at the Capitol Hill Club, and a subsequent tour of the Capitol and the Speaker's balcony, the space off of Ryan's office. When Ryan walked into the Capitol Hill Club, Trump grabbed the Speaker's hand and brought him close in. "I think I got you figured out," Trump said to him. "That thing really rattled you." He was talking about the Access Hollywood tape. "Yeah, it really did," Ryan replied. "I get you," Trump said. "You're just a Boy Scout. You're also kind of religious, aren't you?" "You're like Mike on that, aren't you?" Melania chimed into the conversation. "I'm a devout Catholic," Ryan said, "and yes, I take that stuff very seriously." "Oh, okay," Trump said. "You're just a Boy Scout. That's what it is."

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Mr. President, let's review the Scout Oath is: "On my honor, I will do my best; To do my duty to God and my country and to obey the Scout Law; To help other people at all times; To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake and morally straight." By the way, Mr. President, the Scout Law is: "A Scout is ... Trustworthy, Loyal, Helpful, Friendly, Courteous, Kind, Obedient, Cheerful, Thrifty, Brave, Clean, and Reverent." These have been the guiding light for many of us for most of our lives. All of us should keep these tenets in mind as we live our lives, including you, Mr. President. - Brian A. Howe

SANDERS EMERGES AS FRONTRUNNER: Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders is ... surpassing his rivals in early fundraising and establishing himself as an indisputable front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination, AP's Juana Summers and Julie Pace write. Less than two months into his second White House bid, no other declared candidate in the crowded Democratic field currently has amassed so many advantages: a $28 million war chest, a loyal and enthusiastic voter base. He now carries the weight of high expectations and will face heightened scrutiny over everything from the cost and feasibility of his government-funded policy proposals to his tax returns, which he has not yet released."

MAYOR PETE CALLS TRUMP EVANGELICAL SUPPORTERS 'HYPOCRITES': Democratic mayor and presidential candidate Pete Buttigieg argued that evangelicals who support President Donald Trump are hypocrites in a Sunday edition of "Meet The Press." "It's something that frustrates me because the hypocrisy is unbelievable," Buttigieg said, defending past comments he made about Trump's religion (Daily Caller). "Here you have somebody that not only acts in a way that's not consistent with anything I hear in scripture, lifting up those among us, immigrants, focusing your efforts on the poor but personally how you're supposed to conduct yourself, not look at me-ism but humbling yourself among others. Foot washing is a central image in the new testament," Buttigieg continued. "We see the diametric opposite of that in this presidency. I think there was a cynical process where he decided to, for example, pretend to be pro-life and govern accordingly which was good enough to bring many evangelicals over to his side. But even on the version of Christianity that you hear from the religious right, which is about sexual ethics, I cannot believe that somebody who was caught writing hush money to adult film actresses is somebody they should be lifting up as the kind of person you want leading this nation," he concluded. "Mayor Pete" announced his candidacy in January and has made news criticizing Trump's religion before. He called Vice President Mike Pence the "Cheerleader for the porn-star presidency" during a CNN town hall last month. "I'm reluctant to comment on another person's faith, but I would say it is hard to look at this president's actions and believe that they're the actions of somebody who believes in God," Buttigieg told Kirsten Powers, according to an op-ed in USA Today.

BUTTIGIEG TALKS OF PENCE AND BEING GAY: Pete Buttigieg got a hero's welcome as he took the stage Sunday at a fundraising brunch for a group that supports LGBTQ candidates (Groppe, USA Today). The improbable presidential campaign of the previously little-known, openly-gay mayor of South Bend, Indiana, has been generating significant buzz, positive headlines, and large crowds in important primary states like New Hampshire. He arrived at the LGBTQ Victory Fund event fresh off an interview with NBC's "Meet the Press." He was on the front page of that morning's Washington Post. "In Buttigieg, gay Americans see a symbol of acceptance," the headline read. But as he spoke to a packed hotel ballroom illuminated with lavender lights, Buttigieg shared something that he's still uncomfortable admitting. "It's hard to face the truth that there were times in my life when, if you had shown me exactly what it was inside me that made me gay, I would have cut it out with a knife," he said. "If you had offered me a pill to make me straight, I would've swallowed it before you had time to give me a sip of water." Fortunately, there was no knife and no pill, Buttigieg said. Because then he would not have met his husband, Chasten, who has made him a better person, he said – and their marriage has moved him closer to God. The message many gay people get that there's something wrong with them, he continued, "is a message that puts you at war not only with yourself, but with your maker." "That's the thing that I wish the Mike Pences of the world would understand," Buttigieg said of the vice president, who has opposed same-sex marriage. "That if you have a problem with who I am, your problem is not with me. Your quarrel, sir, is with my creator."

MAYOR PETE CITES DC 'MESMERIZING HORROR SHOW': Pete Buttigieg is eager to "change the channel" from what he said is Washington's "mesmerizing horror show" (POLITICO). "Here you have this moment, probably the only moment in American history where it just might make sense for somebody my age, coming from experience in the industrial Midwest, nonfederal, different background, bringing something that will actually help Americans envision the world as it will be in 2054," the 37-year-old mayor of South Bend, Ind., said Sunday, referring to the year he'll be the current age of President Donald Trump, "and just change the channel from this mesmerizing horror show that's going on in Washington right now."

MERRITT CONDOLENCES TO VIOLENCE VICTIM FAMILIES: State Sen. Jim Merritt has issued the following statement regarding the violence that has occurred in Indianapolis over the past 24 hours (Howey Politics Indiana). "It is with deep sympathy that I offer my condolences to the families and friends of the four people who were killed by senseless violence overnight, as well as to those who were wounded and their loved ones. It's difficult to know what to say at times like these. There's nothing rational about brutal acts of violence. Nothing to explain the damage it does to families and our community. Nothing we can say will help loved ones accept the tragic outcomes. There's only the compassion, strength and support offered through your family, your friends and your faith that can help you through these dark times. I hope that peace and comfort come to those who are personally affected. I offer my thoughts and prayers for last night's victims, as well as for all who deal with the senselessness of violent crimes. And I encourage everyone to pray for those who have perished and for a safer, more secure future for our city."

BUTTIGIEG IN NEVADA TODAY: Mayor Pete Buttigieg will be in Las Vegas, NV today for the first time since announcing his exploratory committee. He will speak with voters at a meet and greet over coffee and join fellow veterans at Veterans Village. 10:30 AM: Meet and Greet, Location: MadHouse Coffee, 8470 W Desert Inn Road, Las Vegas, NV 12:00 PM: Veterans Village Location: Veterans Village II, 50 North 21st Street, Las Vegas, NV 89101 Host: Nevada Democratic Veterans and Military Families Caucus Chair Mikey Kelley.

BOOKER POSTS $5M: New Jersey Sen. Cory Booker's campaign for president announced Sunday it raised over $5 million in February and March, and it had over $6.1 million cash on hand (Fox News). It was among the smallest fundraising figures to be disclosed voluntarily by a Democrat so far, with roughly 10 months left before the start of primary voting. Six candidates have released totals: Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders said he raised $18.2 million; California Sen. Kamala Harris raised over $12 million; former Rep. Beto O'Rourke raised $9.4 million; and Pete Buttigieg, the mayor of South Bend, Ind., raised $7 million. Booker outpaced only the political newcomer Andrew Yang, who said he'd raised $1.7 million.

ROUSER NEW CASS COUNTY DEM CHAIR: Lita Rouser was recently named the Chairwoman for the Democratic Party of Cass County. In a news release last month, Paul Ulerick, longtime chairman of the party, stepped down from that post which he had held since 2011. "I offer my resignation, not because I want to do so, but because I must," Ulerick said (Logansport Pharos-Tribune). "I have found that I am not able to commit the time necessary to properly represent our Democratic Party." Rouser, on the other hand, said now is the perfect time for her to step forward and lead the party. She explained that it's that vision that drives her in a video posted on social media — not the chicken noodle dinners, the newsletters, the election-night stress and most certainly not the pay. "Now, I am ready to step forward and build a team to continue our party's progress," Rouser said in a news release.

TODAY LAST DAY TO REGISTER: Care about your garbage pickup? Potholes? Where your tax dollars are going? Then register to vote. Hoosiers have until Monday to register so they can vote in the May 7 municipal primary election (Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). Most cities and towns will have races for mayor, council and even city ballot questions.

Sunday Talk

BUTTIGIEG DEFENDS HIS EXPERIENCE: Pete Buttigieg, the mayor of South Bend, Indiana, defended his lack of experience Sunday, arguing that voters should look at the "quality, as well as quantity" of time spent in public service. Appearing on "Meet the Press" a week before he formally announces his presidential bid, Buttigieg argued he would step into the White House with more executive and military experience than the two most recent presidents, and said he's been on the front lines of major issues like infrastructure, economics and race relations as mayor. And the 37-year-old mayor brushed aside any worry that Americans might want a more seasoned candidate to follow President Donald Trump, who never served in public office until he won the White House in 2016. "I would stack up my experience against anybody," he said. "I know it's not as traditional, I know I haven't been marinating in Washington here for a very long time and I'm not part of the same establishment. But I would argue that being a mayor of a city of any size means you have to deal with the kinds of issues that really hit Americans." He added: "I think you can see pretty clearly I'm about as different from this president as you get."

RYAN URGES DEMS TO UNITE: Citing his time as a quarterback in high school and college, Ohio Rep. Tim Ryan, the latest Democrat to join the crowded and diverse primary field for the presidential nomination, said his party needs to "move the ball down the field" and unite around issues like single-payer healthcare — a progressive proposal some of his fellow candidates have already endorsed. "Here is the key: progress. We're going backwards," Ryan said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. "I'm an old quarterback. Look, you got to get first downs, you got to move the ball down the field if you're going to score, and we're going backwards right now. So, we've got to find issues we can unify around and pass them."

MULVANEY SAYS WHITE HOUSE HASN'T SOUGHT MUELLER REPORT: Acting White House chief of staff Mick Mulvaney said Sunday no one in the White House has requested from the Justice Department an advance copy of special counsel Robert Mueller's final report — but he also noted that "anything could change" in the days before a redacted version of the document is delivered to lawmakers. "No," Mulvaney said on "Fox News Sunday," when asked whether any West Wing personnel had asked Attorney General William Barr to see Mueller's findings. "Mr. Barr is going to make those decisions," Mulvaney added. "Will that change?" Fox News guest host Bill Hemmer asked. "Anything could change," Mulvaney responded. "But our position is that Mr. Barr runs this process because that's the way the law is, and we're very interested in following the law."

NADLER DEMANDS FULL, UNREDACTED MUELLER REPORT: New York Rep. Jerry Nadler, the Democratic chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, said Congress is "entitled to see all" of special counsel Robert Mueller's report, doubling down on his demand that the Justice Department provide his committee with the findings of the nearly two-year Russia investigation with no redactions. "Congress has a right to the entire report with no redactions whatsoever so we can see what's there," Nadler said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. "We're entitled to see it because Congress represents the nation. And Congress has to take action on any of it. So we're entitled to see all of it."

GIULIANI SAYS TRUMP WANTS 'MAXIMUM TRANSPARENCY': President Trump's personal attorney Rudy Giuliani said he's "not worried" about the looming release of a redacted version of special counsel Robert Mueller's 400-page report, saying the president wants "maximum transparency." "I guarantee you, except for little quibbles, I'm not worried about the report at all. There's no way those two good lawyers would have written that kind of letter if there's any issue," Giuliani said on "Face the Nation" Sunday, referring to Attorney General William Barr and Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, who authored the four-page summary of Mueller's conclusions.

KUDLOW SAYS BORDER CLOSING 'OFF THE TABLE': White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow said the "worst case scenarios" for the economic impact of a full closure of the U.S.-Mexico border "are off the table," but added that President Trump's threats to shut down ports of entry should be taken "quite seriously." "The worst case scenarios are off the table for the moment," Kudlow said on "Face the Nation" Sunday. Still, Kudlow said people, including the Mexican government of Manuel López Obrador, need to understand the president is not bluffing. "We're not there, but people should take it quite seriously," he added. "Mexico should take it quite seriously. This is a major issue."

BENNET PANS BIDEN JOKES: Likely Democratic presidential contender Michael Bennet on Sunday criticized former Vice President Joe Biden for joking about the controversy swirling around his touchy, avuncular style that some women say made them uncomfortable (Politico). "I don't think anyone should make jokes about it," the Colorado senator told CNN's Jake Tapper on "State of the Union." "This is an important time in our country's history when women are coming forward and able to say when they've been made to feel uncomfortable, whether in a sexual way or a nonsexual way. People's voices should be heard on that."

General Assembly

BUDGET GETS SENATE HEARING THURSDAY: The Senate's approach to the House's proposed budget will reach the public eye Thursday, as HB1001 is up for a Committee on Appropriations hearing (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). That hearing signals the beginning of the "official" movement of the budget for the second half of this legislative session, but lawmakers from the House and Senate have been meeting to discuss the bill for some time already. GOP leadership has said those discussions have gone smoothly, telling reporters that the disagreements between the two chambers aren't as wide as might typically be the case. Education issues will be the number one concern, and the complexity funding index for Indiana schools has garnered particular attention. The funding, meant to aid schools in dealing with impoverished students, is being cut in districts across the state. Expect that to be one of the big talking points on Thursday.

ELECTION BILLS STILL MOVING: In the House, two election bills are currently on the floor after passing out of the Committee on Elections and Apportionment last week (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). Senate Bills 558 and 560 both make numerous changes to elections laws, largely designed to ensure ballot security and expedite the voting process. Passing out of the Senate Elections Committee and now set for 3rd reading this week is HB1217, which establishes a new bipartisan election board in Porter County, requires Porter County to count absentee ballots in a central location, and enacts statewide anti-nepotism laws for county election boards. HB1217 is meant to cleanup some of the practices that led to long delays and confusion over vote counting on election night last year in Porter County. One elections bill that hasn't moved at all in the second half? Senate Bill 105, a redistricting standards bill that imposes a few new rules meant to guide lawmakers when drawing districts (but nothing beyond that). That bill barely passed the Senate by a two-vote margin, and Elections and Apportionment Chair Rep. Tim Wesco has indicated it's unlikely to see House progress, meaning it's likely dead.

Congress

HOUSE ACTION ON INTERNET EXPECTED: The House is in session Monday through Wednesday before House Democrats leave town for their policy conference in Leesburg, Virginia, per a senior House Democratic aide (Axios). The Democrats' main floor action will be a vote on net neutrality (Save the Internet Act). Several Cabinet secretaries will testify on Capitol Hill this week: Education Secretary Betsy DeVos before the House Committee on Education and Labor, EPA administrator Andrew Wheeler before Energy & Commerce, and Attorney General Bill Barr before Appropriations. Democrats plan to press Barr on the Mueller report and on the Trump Justice Department's support for a lawsuit to kill the Affordable Care Act. After this week Congress breaks for a two-week Easter recess.

SENATE SET TO CONFIRM BRADY OF INDIANA: The Senate will confirm a slate of Trump nominees under the new rules that McConnell instituted to shrink debate time from 30 hours to 2, according to a Senate Republican leadership aide (Axios). This week's expected confirmations, per the aide: Daniel Domenico to be a judge for the District of Colorado; Patrick Wyrick to be a judge for the Western District of Oklahoma; Holly Brady to be a judge for the Northern District of Indiana; David Morales to be a judge for the Southern District of Texas; Cheryl Stanton to be administrator of the Wage and Hour Division in the Department of Labor; John Abizaid as ambassador to Saudi Arabia.

DISASTER BILL STALLS IN SENATE: With a disaster relief bill deadlocked in the Senate, House Democrats are prepared to move ahead with their own package that includes billions of dollars in aid for the rain-swollen Midwest. The Democrats' revised bill would add $2.5 billion for heartland states reeling from catastrophic floods, an overture to Republicans after months of partisan bickering (Politico). "But the new version is unlikely to advance in the Senate because it includes the same contentious pot of money for Puerto Rico, which has been among the GOP's chief criticisms against the bill."

SENATORS SEE NO NEW TRUMP HEALTH PLAN: President Donald Trump promised a new plan to replace Obamacare. But the four Senate Republicans he tapped for the job aren't jumping at the opportunity (Politico). Sen. Rick Scott (R-Fla.) says any new plan has to come from the White House — and that he had no warning Trump planned to make him part of the health policy group. Mitt Romney (R-Utah) won't say more than he and colleagues are 'working on health care thoughts.' John Barrasso (R-Wyo.), when asked about the Republican plan, turned the question back on the opposition, saying, 'Democrats want to go to the complete government takeover of health care.' And Sen. Bill Cassidy (R-La.), the fourth member of Trump's team, hasn't committed to anything more than conversations with colleagues' about health care affordability

State

STATEHOUSE: REVENUE BEATS ESTIMATES - Indiana revenue exceeded the most recent projections in March. The Indiana State Budget Agency says General Fund revenues totaled more than $1.1 billion last month, nearly 4 percent higher than the December revenue forecast and nearly 11 percent higher than the same month last year (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). Individual income tax collections and corporate tax collections were both above the monthly estimate. However, sales tax collections, riverboat wagering collections and racino wagering collections all fell below estimates. "Overall, for the month of March, higher than expected collections from individual income taxes, corporate taxes and interest outweighed lower than expected collections in sales and use taxes," the agency said. "Significant monthly fluctuations are expected and revenues are better interpreted within the context of the longer term trend for fiscal year 2019 as April and June are by far the months with the most revenue activity." Year-to-date, the state has collected nearly $11 billion, which is only one-tenth of a percent higher than the revenue forecast and nearly 4 percent above collections through the same period in the previous fiscal year.

EDUCATION: IVY TECH TO HELP SINGLE MOTHERS - Ivy Tech Community College is one of four community colleges across the nation chosen for a push to boost single mothers' college success rates (AP). The national nonprofit Education Design Lab will oversee a structured process under which the four colleges will design, implement and scale efforts intended to dramatically improve single mothers' success rates at the four institutions by addressing the unique needs of those women. The other participating schools are Central New Mexico Community College, New York's Monroe Community College and Louisiana's Delgado Community College. Each will launch a pilot effort to test strategies for single mothers' academic success over six years. Ivy Tech will launch its pilot effort at the Indianapolis, Muncie, Lafayette and Sellersburg campuses, but eventually expand across its 19-campus system.

EDUCATION: IU DATA CENTER TO GET UPGRADE - The Indiana University Board of Trustees has approved $12 million worth of upgrades to the IU Bloomington Data Center. The university says the project will include enhancements to the overall reliability and backup capabilities of the data center's infrastructure (Brown, Inside Indiana Business). The data center provides space and infrastructure for computing technology services for all of IU's campuses statewide. IU says the project will enhance the facility in the event of a power failure and during equipment maintenance, while also increasing electrical and cooling capacity. The upgrades will include equipment such as power distribution units and electrical panels, an uninterrupted power supply, emergency power supplies, computer room air handling units, among others. The university says the upgrades will position IU to be competitive for advanced research computing initiatives. "In its first decade of use, the IU Bloomington Data Center has been an amazing asset for all IU campuses," said Bradley Wheeler, vice president for information technology and chief information officer at IU. "These needed upgrades, along with the already completed 100 Gigabit I-Light fiber optic network across the state to all IU campuses, will enable the Data Center to do even more as IU competes at the highest levels for federal research supercomputing contracts and grants."

EDUCATION: ISU CREATES SPORTS MEDICINE GROUP - Indiana State University's College of Health and Human Services will serve student athletes' health care and performance needs through its new Center for Sports Medicine and Performance (McLaughlin, Inside Indiana Business). The center will focus on providing independent medical care for student athletes and support for improving athletes' performance. The center will also combine Indiana State's athletic training services and athletics strength and conditioning units while implementing recommendations by the NCAA Interassociation Consensus: Independent Medical Care for College Student-Athletes Best Practices. "The center builds on the deep history of athletic training education and practice at Indiana State University," said Caroline Mallory, dean of the College of Health and Human Services, in a news release. "We expect the center to serve student athletes and provide excellent opportunities for students in our degree programs to access experiential learning opportunities."

DNR: NORTH ENTRANCE TO BROWN COUNTY SP CLOSSES - The north entrance into Brown County State Park, which is 2 miles east of Nashville on Ind. 46, will be closed from Monday through May 9 while repairs are made to the park's Ramp Creek Covered Bridge (Bloomington Herald-Times). During the time the bridge is being repaired, park visitors must use the state park's west entrance 2 miles south of Nashville on Ind. 46. Horse campers can continue to use the south entrance into the equestrian campground.

MEDICAID: WORK REQUIREMENTS FACE LEGAL CHALLENGE - Starting July 1, some Hoosiers on Medicaid will be required to work part time or risk losing their health coverage (Carden, NWI Times). But there's a chance that might never happen. Late last month, a federal judge blocked similar Medicaid work requirements in Kentucky and Arkansas, saying they went against the health insurance program's objective of providing medical care for the needy. And a lawsuit has been filed to stop the only other active program of its kind, in New Hampshire. So where does that leave Indiana? Some observers say its new work requirements could be challenged in court, as happened in the other three states, and potentially overturned. "Local lawyers are waiting to see how hard this hits their clients," said Sara Rosenbaum, a professor of health law and policy at George Washington University.

HONORS: 3 RECEIVE KATIE HALL AWARDS - Three people were honored by the Katie Hall Educational Foundation, including a longtime publisher, news anchor and a historical society chairwoman (NWI Times). The Katie Hall Educational Foundation, Inc. held its 7th annual Katie Hall Public Service Awards Luncheon Saturday at the Genesis Convention Center in Gary. Dorothy Leavell, publisher of the Chicago Crusader and the Gary Crusader, was honored with the Katie Hall Public Service Award. Leavell is also the chairwoman of the National Newspaper Publishers Association. The Chicago Crusader is the largest African-American weekly newspaper in Chicago. Steve Sanders, anchor for WGN-TV Channel 9 Chicago, was honored with the Chairman's Award. Sanders, a native from Alabama, began working in radio and then transitioned into being a reporter and most recently works as a broadcast journalist.

SPORTS: NOTRE DAME LOSES TITLE GAME - Baylor lost a star player, then the rest of its 17-point lead. But the Bears, led by Chloe Jackson, kept their composure (AP). Jackson drove for a tiebreaking layup with 3.9 seconds left, and that put the game into the hands of another tournament hero. Notre Dame's Arike Ogunbowale missed the first of two free throws with 1.9 seconds remaining, and Baylor held on for an 82-81 victory Sunday in the NCAA women's basketball championship game. "They just kept doing what we've been taught to do, and that's guard people," Baylor coach Kim Mulkey said. "We just beat the defending national champions. That team is so good, so talented. You're going to see those guys play at the next level. Wow."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP TRABES McALEENAN AT DHS - One of the most difficult jobs in Washington now belongs to Kevin McAleenan, who President Trump is placing in charge of the Department of Homeland Security after the ouster of Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen on Sunday (Washington Post). As the new acting secretary at DHS, McAleenan faces the largest wave of illegal crossings at the Mexico border in more than a decade. In Washington, he'll contend with an impatient boss who is demanding an immediate halt to the surge. And to deliver that, McAleenan will have to court Democratic lawmakers with little political incentive to help the White House ahead of the 2020 election.

TRUMP ON MANIC BORDER CONFRONTATION: Tensions are rising, fingers are pointing and the search for solutions is becoming increasingly fraught. Overwhelmed by an influx of migrants at the U.S.-Mexico border that is taxing the immigration system, President Donald Trump is grasping for something — anything — to stem the tide (AP). Trump, who campaigned on a promise to secure the border, has thrown virtually every option his aides have been able to think of at the problem, to little avail. He has sent out the military, signed an emergency declaration to fund a border wall and threatened to completely seal the southern border. On Thursday he added a new threat, warning of hefty tariffs on cars made in Mexico if the country doesn't abide by his demands. Now, with the encouragement of an influential aide and with his re-election campaign on the horizon, Trump is looking at personnel changes as he tries to shift blame elsewhere. The first move was made Thursday, when the White House unexpectedly pulled back the nomination of Ron Vitiello to permanently lead U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, where he had been acting director. The abrupt reversal was encouraged by top Trump policy adviser Stephen Miller and seen by some as part of a larger effort to bring on aides who share Miller's hard-line immigration views. "We may go a different way. We may have to go a very tough way," Trump said in an interview with "Fox & Friends Weekend" that aired Saturday.

WHITE HOUSE: CAIN NOMINATION GETS SUPPORT - White House officials on Sunday backed Herman Cain for a seat on the Federal Reserve's board of governors even after the former restaurant executive and onetime GOP presidential candidate warned that he expects renewed scrutiny of sexual-harassment allegations against him (Wall Street Journal). White House economic adviser Lawrence Kudlow said the administration is vetting Mr. Cain, a process of background checks conducted before sending formal nomination documents to the Senate for confirmation. President Trump already has nominated for the Fed board former campaign adviser Stephen Moore, who like Mr. Cain has frequently echoed the president's complaints about the central bank and its interest-rate policies. The seven-member board has two vacancies after two earlier Trump nominations expired last year without a vote. "We've seen a lot of charges here. They don't necessarily pan out," Mr. Kudlow said of Mr. Cain on CNN, suggesting the sexual-harassment allegations wouldn't necessarily disqualify the 73-year-old former restaurant executive, who ran for the 2012 GOP presidential nomination.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump's schedule, per a White House official: Monday: Trump has lunch with Mike Pence and meets with Secretary of State Mike Pompeo. Tuesday: Trump hosts Egyptian President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi for meetings at the White House. Wednesday: Trump travels to Texas — San Antonio and Houston — for events with supporters. Thursday: President Trump and first lady Melania Trump will meet with South Korean President Moon Jae-in and first lady Kim Jung-sook. Trump is also scheduled to meet with World War II veterans.

NEW YORK: BILL IN LEGISLATURE AIMED AT TRUMP TAX RETURNS - In an attempt to work around the White House, Democratic lawmakers in Albany are trying to do what their federal counterparts have so far failed to accomplish: to obtain President Trump's tax returns (New York Times). Albany lawmakers are seeking state tax returns, not the federal ones at the heart of the current standoff in Washington. But a tax return from New York — the president's home state, and the headquarters of his business empire — could likely contain much of the same financial information as a federal return. Under a bill that is scheduled to be introduced this week, the commissioner of the New York Department of Taxation and Finance would be permitted to release any state tax return requested by leaders of three committees of the House of Representatives for any "specific and legitimate legislative purpose."

CITIES: COLORADO CBD FIRM CHOOSES MICHIGAN CITY - Denver-based PHM Brands LLC has announced plans for a Michigan City facility that will produce cannabidiol, or CBD. Our partners at The Times of Northwest Indiana report the industrial hemp processor will create more than 50 jobs over the next five years (Inside Indiana Business). Jenilee Haynes Peterson, economic development manager for Economic Development Corp. Michigan City tells the publication PHM Brands had previously acquired the Prinova wheat germ plant in the LaPorte County city, however low demand and sales led to the decision to convert the facility for industrial hemp processing and CBD production. The existing Prinova employees will be retained and the company plans to add 32 workers as part of the project's $6 million first phase. Haynes Peterson says the company looks to add another 20 workers in the second phase.

CITIES: PORTAGE CONSIDERS RAISING FEE - Over the next 10 years, the city's population could increase some 3,700 people, according to a study commissioned by the park department (NWI Times). With more people comes the demand for more recreational facilities, according to the study completed by Lehman and Lehman of Mishawauka. The study was commissioned as an update to the park department's recreation impact fee. The fee is charged on a per residential unit basis to developers to help defer the additional costs of providing recreational amenities to new residents. The study proposes raising the present $697 per unit fee to $986 with a 3% annual escalator.

COUNTIES: MONROE DEMOCRATS CALL FOR BARGE TO RESIGN - The Monroe County Democratic Party is calling on Monroe County Commissioner Amanda Barge to resign in the wake of sexual harassment allegations (Brosher, Indiana Public Media). Brandon Drake accused Barge of repeatedly hitting on him when he was working as an independent contractor for the county. He provided text messages, emails and recordings to the Indiana Daily Student, which published a report detailing the allegations. In a press release sent Sunday, the county's Democratic Party says Barge's alleged actions are incompatible with public office and the party's platform. "As we have done in the past, the Monroe County Democratic Party will continue to speak up for the voiceless and defend the marginalized and vulnerable in our community by holding those in power accountable," the release says. In addition to resigning, the party is also asking Barge to clarify that she will not accept the nomination for Bloomington mayor if she gets enough votes in the primary. While Barge suspended her mayoral campaign in the wake of the allegations, she could still win the primary.

COUNTIES: HOWARD TO MOVE OFFICES - Howard County government officials are in the early phases of a project that could relocate numerous departments and potentially eliminate the need to construct a new morgue (Myers, Kokomo Tribune). The project was publicly unveiled during this week's meeting of the Howard County Board of Commissioners, when President Paul Wyman said the county is "looking at doing some renovation work and/or moving some offices within county government." A document submitted by DLZ – the county will work with the same engineering consultant it used to help implement its work release program – details the potential scope of work, which Wyman said could be completed by the end of 2019 or early 2020 and have a price tag of up to $1 million. The proposed work includes renovating the Community Corrections department in the Howard County Courthouse; moving part of the prosecutor's office from the courthouse to the county's Administration Center; and relocating the Plan Commission offices from the Government Building to the main level of the Administration Center.

A Few Items worth Mentioning

The rumor mill is abuzz with what's going on with gaming legislation and why things seem to have gotten so complicated lately. From what we're able to figure out it is Spectacle's competition that is behind the recent roadblocks of late.

And from what we're told they've been behind everything from the $100,000,000 now $50 million transfer fee to the story about Rod Radcliff underwriting the flight for Governor Eric Holcomb to the most Republican Governor's Association conference.

And allegedly a couple more stories are about to drop as well, with the logic and rational being that the casino bill will die and Rod will take a hit, making life easier for the competition. We plan to do some follow up with all this in our LNG capacity, but at least we know that this out there and it's finally coming to light.

Rumors keep popping up that Indiana House Speaker Brian Bosma is going to announce he is retiring after this session. We don't think so, but we do understand that the Speaker is looking at winding things down soon. The way we know he would stay at least through the next cycle to oversee redistricting. The likely replacement, we're hearing, is State Rep. Todd Huston of Fishers.

If there's been any pushback on bias crimes, we haven't heard much of it. We've been talking to lawmakers from across the state, and no one has really been out of sorts. The only real blowback we've heard is from some supporters who don't think it goes far enough and the measure doesn't have any real teeth. They say if it did, the people who usually oppose these types of laws would not have been so quick to get on board.

The Indiana Republican Party is stepping up its attacks on South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg. The folks we've spoken to say it's a clear sign they are taking him seriously and have seen some long-term polling that he could be a serious contender against Donald Trump.

One of Indiana Democratic Party Chairman John Zody's latest news releases has some folks scratching their heads because they're not sure if he was attacking Republicans or Democrats. Shortly after the bipartisan Houe ethics committee unanimously dismissed a complaint against House Speaker Brian Bosma Zody wrote, "I don't blame Hoosiers for distrusting a shadowy process where the judge and jury are politicians, and the trial is conducted completely behind closed doors. After nearly a decade in complete control, it's clear Republicans just don't think the rules apply to them. Today's result is just another confirmation to Hoosier taxpayers that the system appears rigged to protect politicians." Does that mean Democrats Sue Errington, Matt Pierce, and Terri Austin are part of the problem?

We're hearing Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett's administration is not very happy with the Central Indiana Community Foundation, especially when it comes to crime prevention. The organization has spent millions doling out crime grant prevention dollars, but the results seem spotty at best, especially in the wake of the last four years of rising murder rates. The CICF has a news conference today to announce a "reboot" of its crime prevention efforts.

We're hearing the FBI may be taking a look at the Hamilton County Drug Task Force.

Look for some no so flattering news to break soon out of Johnson County involving a prominent elected official being investigated for reportedly holding a woman against her will, battering and confining her on March 4 in Trafalgar.

Look for Congressman Greg Pence to report raising more than $405,000 in the first quarter of 2019.

The Cheat Sheet, Vol. 8, Issue 10 – April 2019

Chalkbeat Indiana's Shaina Cavazos is reportedly leaving to go work for the city of Indianapolis' Office of Education and Innovation.

We keep hearing Courtney Arango may be leaving the Governor's office soon and may be replaced by Abby Grass at the IEDC.

BIRCH BAYH MEMORIAL SERVICE SET FOR MAY 1: A memorial service honoring the career of Indiana's former United States Senator and House Speaker Birch Bayh (1928-2019) will be held Wednesday, May 1, 2019, at noon EDT in the south atrium of the Indiana Statehouse (Howey Politics Indiana). Among those remembering Sen. Bayh's accomplishments will be Gov. Eric Holcomb, House Speaker Brian Bosma, Purdue President Mitch Daniels, former Congressmen Lee Hamilton and Baron Hill, and Federal District Court Chief Judge Jane E. Magnus-Stinson. Indiana's former Secretary of State, Governor and United States Senator Evan Bayh and Indianapolis attorney Christopher Bayh will eulogize their father. Former First Lady Susan Bayh will attend, as will their sons Beau (2LT, USMC) and Nick (2LT, USA). Sen. Bayh's widow, Katherine "Kitty" Bayh (née Halpin), will read a poem written by the Senator. The event is open to the public and no RSVPs are necessary. Attendees should enter the Statehouse from either the upper east (Capitol Street) or lower west (Senate Avenue) entrances. While the Indiana General Assembly is not scheduled to be in session, attendees should adjust for parking challenges in the vicinity of the Statehouse.

PENCE RESPONDS TO BUTTIGIEG CRITICISM: Vice President Mike Pence is pushing back at criticism from South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (Howey Politics Indiana). "He said some things that are critical of my Christian faith and about me personally, and he knows better," Pence said in an interview with Joe Kernen on CNBC's "Squawk Box". "We had a great working relationship. He knows me." It was Pence's response to South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg's NBC "Meet The Press" interview in which the mayor discussed his own sexuality, saying, "That's the thing I wish the Mike Pences of the world would understand: That if you have a problem with who I am, your quarrel is not with me. Your quarrel, sir, is with my creator." Second Lady Karen Pence also weighed in, saying, "Well, it's kind of funny, because I don't think the vice president does have a problem with him, but I think it's helping Pete get some notoriety by saying that about the vice president." Buttigieg stopped by "The Ellen DeGeneres Show" to talk about Pence's recent comments, and this historic moment in politics and in his own life. "I'm not critical of his faith; I'm critical of bad policies," Buttigieg said. "I don't have a problem with religion. I'm religious too. I have a problem with religion being used as a justification to harm people and especially in the LGBTQ community. So many people, even today, feel like they don't belong. You can get fired in so many parts of this country just for who you are and that's got to change. And if the VP, I'm not interested in feuding with the Vice President, but if he wanted to clear this up, he could come out today and say he's changed his mind that it shouldn't be legal to discriminate against anybody in this country for who they are. That's all.""

BUTTIGIEG 3RD IN ANOTHER IOWA POLL: Former Vice President Joe Biden leads the 2020 Democratic presidential field in Iowa, according to a new poll released Thursday that also suggests Pete Buttigieg — a previously unknown, small-city mayor from Indiana — is gaining significant traction with likely caucus-goers (Politico). The Monmouth University poll shows Biden, who hasn't officially entered the race, is the first choice of roughly a quarter of likely caucusgoers, 27 percent. He's followed by Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) with 16 percent and Buttigieg, the mayor of South Bend, Ind., with 9 percent. That places Buttigieg marginally ahead of a handful of candidates who entered the race with more established profiles: Sens. Kamala Harris (D-Calif.) and Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) are at 7 percent, former Rep. Beto O'Rourke (D-Texas) is at 6 percent, Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-Minn.) is at 4 percent and Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.) is at 3 percent. Buttigieg has his fans: 45 percent of caucusgoers view him favorably, while 9 percent have an unfavorable opinion of him. "Buttigieg's current standing in the horse race is impressive given that nearly half of likely Democratic caucus goers have yet to form an opinion of him," said Patrick Murray, the director of the Monmouth University Polling Institute. "He has one of the best positive to negative ratios in the field. He could move up if he is able to maintain that rating as he introduces himself to more voters." It's the second early-state poll released Thursday showing Buttigieg surging into third place. A St. Anslem's University poll in New Hampshire showed Buttigieg at 11 percent in that state's first-in-the-nation primary.

GAMING BILL FURTHER AMENDED ON HOUSE FLOOR: The Indiana House debated 11 amendments to the major gaming bill into the evening on Thursday en route to its final vote Monday (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). The 11 considered on the floor was just over one-third of the 30 amendments filed for the bill, and only 6 were adopted. However, there were some key changes. Two amendments added to provisions on the matter of casino licenses, with one clarifying that should a casino move from Gary its previous license would be terminated, and the other adding an additional $50 million fee to the casino should they transfer or sell the new license within 5 years. An amendment from former House Speaker Pat Bauer mandates that all meetings between the governor (or any representative of the governor) or a gaming commission member with a casino license operator or intended operator be put on public notice 48 hours in advance. Similarly, an accepted proposal from Rep. Holli Sullivan adds conflict-of-interest provisions to membership eligibility for a casino advisory board. The House also accepted sending some of the new tax revenues to the West Baden historic fund, as well as an amendment mandating job-assurances and transition training for casino employees should their facility be moved to Vigo County. Interestingly, among the amendments that went uncalled was a sweeping change filed by bill sponsor and Ways & Means Co-Chairman Rep. Todd Huston which would have struck out all portions of the bill dealing with the Gary riverboat moves, leaving only the sports wagering provisions behind.

HOUSE REJECTS ENERGY 'MORATORIUM': A controversial decision to add what has been called a "moratorium" on major energy projects into a utilities bill in the House was reversed in a 53-38 vote by that body on Thursday (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). Republican Rep. Ed Soliday introduced the proposal in a committee amendment, which lead opponents to decry the bill as an attempt to prop up Indiana's struggling coal operations at the expense of the renewable industry. The reversal came in the form of an amendment authored by Rep. Matt Pierce striking Soliday's language from the bill, SB472. Pierce relayed that opposition to the bill when he spoke on the floor and added that there was little precedent – or interest – for the legislature to halt an industry in this manner. Soliday defended his addition to the bill, saying it had been mislabeled as a moratorium when it was really meant to slow down the industry to avoid a potential "bust" of the energy market caused by short-term overconfidence in newer parts of the industry. 26 Republicans joined with 27 Democrats to pass the amendment.

'VOTE COMPACT' REJECTED IN HOUSE: House Republicans, and four Democrats, voted down an amendment put forward by Democratic Representative Matt Pierce which would have added Indiana to the National Popular Vote Interstate Compact (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). The compact, which currently includes 14 states and Washington D.C., is an agreement by all of its members to pledge their electoral college votes to the presidential candidate that wins the national popular vote. That would kick in only if the total elector count of the members reaches the 270 needed to win the election. Pierce argued that the compact shouldn't be seen as unconstitutional because it is up to the individual states to choose how they allocate their electoral college votes. He also added that it shouldn't be seen as partisan, saying that past Republican presidents have won by narrow electoral college numbers despite larger margins in the popular vote. The amendment wasn't well received, GOP Rep. Ethan Manning, who served as a member of the electoral college in 2016, said detractors of the system were politically motivated and called the compact "sour grapes." Speaker Bosma wasn't fond of the idea either, quipping after its defeat "the republic shall survive."

SEN. YOUNG PRESSES VENEZUELAN ON IMPRISONED HOOSIER: Senator Todd Young (R-Ind.) says he met with a representative from Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro's government months ago to try and get answers about why a Bloomington man hasn't been released from a prison there (Brosher, Indiana Public Media). Police arrested Todd Leininger when he was visiting the country in 2014. He was convicted of attempted homicide and concealing a firearm, but a court ordered his release in November. Leininger remains in prison. Young says the meeting took place before the political and humanitarian crisis in Venezuela escalated, and the Maduro representative said Leininger was still imprisoned because of a disagreement between the courts and the country's justice agency. "Frankly, they've come up with all manner of excuses to try and explain why Todd remains in prison long after there was a court order indicating that he needs to be released, none of which were credible," Young says.

CONVENTION ADVOCATES FRET LACK OF HOTEL ROOMS: For 25 years the annual FDIC firefighters instructors conference has come to Indianapolis and plans to return annually until 2028 (Fox59). Organizers said any commitment after that may depend on the city's ability to add more hotel rooms connected to the Indiana Convention Center downtown. "Indianapolis growing is really critical, and has been really critical, to our success and our growth out here. Our firefighters love this city," said Eric Schlett, senior vice president of Clarion UX Fire & Rescue Group, the conference organizer. "Literally our biggest hang up so far now is the fact that we are so limited on hotels in the downtown area. We could grow this thing bigger. We already bring about $43 million of economic impact into the city for the week that we come and that's with 34,000 firefighters. If we had more rooms downtown we could blow this thing up to $50, $60 million economic impact for the city." Chris Gahl, senior vice president of Visit Indy, said he hears the same worries from other convention planners. "It's this one roof everything is under with connected hotel rooms that continues to help Indianapolis win major business," he said. "They pay a premium for hotel rates. The city of Indianapolis is making money and keeping the hospitality workforce growing and working."

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: Here's a hunch ... the Mueller report will be released late this afternoon by Attorney General Barr. He's promised the report released by mid-April. If there is troubling political news for President Trump, the best time to do it would be the bad news dump hour, which is about 5 p.m. on a Friday. - Brian A. Howey

Campaigns

HOGSETT, OSILI JOIN FORCES: Indianapolis Democrats are making earlier-than-usual organizing efforts to try to ensure as many victories as possible in the municipal election this November, when Mayor Joe Hogsett and all 25 City-County Council seats will be on the ballot (Colombo, IBJ). Hogsett and Council President Vop Osili have decided to pool resources and launch what Democrats say is the first true citywide coordinated campaign in Marion County in order to try to re-elect the one-term mayor and expand Democrats' current three-seat majority on the 25-member council. The coordinated campaign is also staffing up early, opening new offices and investing in technology they say will enable them to reach more voters. Hogsett and Osili hope to devote $250,000 to the effort, according to a source with knowledge of the campaign. It is being funded by their campaigns, and individual council candidates are not being asked to contribute. "It's a landmark campaign for Indianapolis," said Hogsett's campaign spokeswoman, Heather Sager. "We've never seen an effort like this at this level." This weekend, the coordinated campaign will open two physical offices: one at 5416 W. 38th St. and one at 2111 Washington St. It plans to open a total of four throughout the campaign, which will be used by campaign staff and volunteers. It also hired Democratic strategist Peter Luster as the coordinated campaign manager, and four field organizers: Courtney Meyers, Shea Joyce, Alex Nyirendah and Spencer Garner.

General Assembly

SENATE GOP REVEALS BUDGET PROPOSAL: The Senate majority's take on the budget bill that came to them from the House was revealed Thursday, showing slight increases in general education spending and corresponding cuts in other areas (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). The most noticeable addition is on school funding, where the Senate proposal puts forward increases to the total fund of 2.7% in 2020 and 2.2% in 2021, up from 2.2 and 2.1 in the House version. That's also above Governor Holcomb's request of a basic 2-and-2 increase that he proposed in his state of the state address. Also seeing an increase is Teacher Appreciation Grant funding, which Senate Republicans would like to fund at $90 million for the biennium, a 50% increase. The overall spending increases come out to be about 1.3% higher than the total set out in the House version. Seeing a decrease is virtual student funding, which drops to 80% of basic tuition support in this proposal. Also getting cut for the benefit of the general education fund is a 13th check provided per year to Indiana's pensioning educators. In addition, while the Senate budget would still meet the governor's proposal to spend $150 million once to fund the post-96 Teacher Retirement Fund perpetually, opening up savings to give to current teachers, it does so by taking money from the pre-96 plan's pension stabilization fund. Also, although the Senate GOP would maintain the current complexity-foundation spending ratio for schools, its proposal still lowers the total funding like the House. Finally, the Senate budget meets Holcomb's request to fully fund DCS, but uses a less direct route than the House, opting to mandate about $105 million less in increases over the biennium and leaving the remainder as an option available through a flexibility fund created under last session's gas tax.

BOSMA RAISES CAUCUS CONCERNS ON SENATE BUDGET: Speaker of the House Brian Bosma told reporters Thursday that while his GOP caucus was not "overly surprised" by the Senate budget proposal, there are a few points of disagreement that will need to be worked out (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). Bosma said the Senate's take on topping out the post-96 retirement fund, taking money from the pre-96 fund, caused "heartburn" amongst himself and some members of his caucus. On the use of gas tax money, the speaker doubted whether or not rerouting the flexibility money to DCS matched that particular fund's purpose. Moreover, he relayed concerns on virtual education funding decreases, saying that to his knowledge the majority of virtual schools have seen successful results in Indiana. The elimination of a 13th check to teacher retirees also caught Bosma's eye, as he stated it would be the first time such a check would not be provided since 2008. These are all closely tied to the Senate budget's key additions to the school funding increases of 2.7% and 2.2%, however, and will require significant negotiation over the General Assembly's final weeks. The speaker acknowledged that, saying "we'll have good faith discussions with all parties, including the governor. We'll try to get to 'yes' and get a great state budget that keeps our strong AAA credit rating, keeps our reserves in place, and does the best for Hoosier and, especially, educators."

DEMS STILL UNIMPRESSED WITH GOP TEACHER PAY EFFORTS: Senate Democrats continued their party's disapproval of Republican efforts on teacher pay in wake of the Senate budget reveal Thursday (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). Indiana Senators Karen Tallian and Eddie Melton led a press conference where they outlined adjustments to the budget that they say would lead to direct teacher pay increases. The Senators proposed repurposing Teacher Appreciation Grants into base salary pay, saving money by stretching out the timeline for paying down the post-96 Teacher Retirement Fund, and diverting planned increases to charter and voucher grants (about $96 million in total). The Dems' plan also makes vouchers available only to students who have previously attended public schools and would eliminate a proposed tax credit to scholarship-granting organizations. Tallian and Melton, both members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, introduced these proposals in an amendment to the budget bill and said that almost all of the freed-up money could go towards teachers and classrooms, but received no Republican votes (unsurprisingly) en route a 4-9 defeat. Committee Chair Ryan Mishler expressed interest in some of the ideas going forward, but said he was uneasy making the changes in short measure.

HOUSE PASSES CIB BILL: The Capital Improvement Board Bill is nearing Governor Holcomb's desk after the Indiana House voted 78-13 to pass the bill Thursday, but still needs to meet the Senate's approval (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). Earlier this week, the House Ways & Means Committee adopted an amendment from co-chair Rep. Todd Huston removing the state from discussions over bringing new hotels to Indianapolis, following concerns from the industry. The amendment also relaxed the requirements for the Indy Eleven soccer team to build a public-private funded stadium, requiring the team to join a "pro league" rather than a "major league," which would allow the facility to be built under the team's current status.

The version that came out of the Ways & Means Committee went unchanged on the floor and passed with strong margins, but its deferral from the hotel question could cause a hang up in the Senate.

MORRISON DEFENDS GAMING INDUSTRY: Legislation that could bring a casino to Vigo County lived on Thursday evening when the Indiana House by voice vote ordered Senate Bill 552 on to its third reading, which is set for Monday (Modisitt, Terre Haute Tribune-Star). Vigo County's casino effort seemed to face a challenge earlier in the day as Rep. Todd Huston, R-Fishers, filed an amendment that could have cut the county out of the legislation entirely. Amendment 10 was filed by Huston but never brought forward on the floor, ending the scare for now. Also OK'd was an amendment offered by Rep. B. Patrick Bauer, D- South Bend. On the heels of recent news that owners of Spectacle Entertainment treated Governor Eric Holcomb to private flights to a Republican governors' conference, the Bauer amendment requires that any meeting with the governor's office regarding gaming be public. Rep. Alan Morrison, R- Brazil, seemed to take exception, and he took to the podium to offer his opinion. "The way we treat gaming in this state so differently, and I understand there will be arguments about other industries, but they are job creators and put a lot back into their communities," Morrison said. "They are a big part of this state, and so I'm not going to vote for this. I think it's bad policy." Morrison ended up being one of 39 no votes, with the amendment passing 55-39.

BEEKEEPING BILL TO HOLCOMB: A bill that would loosen restrictions on beekeepers is heading to Gov. Eric Holcomb's desk (Indiana Public Media). The measure comes after some Indiana governments began exploring beekeeping bans. Legislators say they don't want to keep cities from regulating beekeeping activity, but say it's impossible to ban something that occurs in nature. Mooresville beekeeper Debbie Seib says she doesn't want to limit a city's ability to regulate either. "We're not trying to get them to prevent to be able to ban bees," she says. "We want them to regulate them, we just don't want them to ban them." The bill isn't expected to affect communities like Indianapolis and Bedford who already have ordinances limiting beekeeping.

LEGISLATORS EYE 20% VAPE TAX: Legislators are still looking to tax vaping, but the Senate has a different idea of how to do it (Berman, WIBC). The House voted to tax e-liquids by the ounce. A Senate committee has changed that to a straight 20% tax on the price. Markle Senator Travis Holdman says he wanted a tax more directly related to the potential health effects, including a tax based on the nicotine content. But he says that would be too hard to calculate. And Holdman says with so many one-man operations making e-liquids, it's not practical to tax the wholesale price. Holdman says the 20% tax accomplishes another goal of creating rough parity with the cigarette tax. Cigarettes are taxed per pack regardless of the price, but Holdman says the tax works out to about 22%. The amendment originally would have added a registration fee for sellers of CBD oil, to pay for testing to confirm the product is staying within legal limits for THC content.

TALLIAN SEEKS EMS INTEGRATION: This week, Senate Bill (SB) 498, authored by State Senator Karen Tallian (D-Ogden Dunes), passed out of the Indiana House of Representatives unanimously. SB 498 would allow the creation of a mobile integrated healthcare program (Howey Politics Indiana). Sen. Tallian had the following comments on the passage of her bill: "Paramedics repeatedly service patients whom they call 'frequent fliers' – Hoosiers whose long-term illnesses force them to seek ambulance services for simple medical needs and treatments. Medics have the knowledge and capability to treat these Hoosiers in their own homes for routine care, but they currently cannot bill Medicaid for these services. Currently, emergency medical service (EMS) providers can only bill Medicaid for costly emergency transport services. "My proposal allows certain EMS providers to be reimbursed for covered services that they provide to a Medicaid recipient. In consultation with the State Departments of Health and Homeland Security, the EMS Commission can develop a community paramedicine program. The Commission will also be able to establish and administer grants for cities and towns who start up such a program.

CONSTRUCTION EROSION BILL ADVANCES: A controversial bill regarding erosion on construction sites is headed back to the state House. It wouldn't allow local governments to make stricter erosion control rules than state ones. But now, after a Senate amendment, there's one exception (Indiana Public Media). Legislators recently amended the bill to allow local governments to make stricter erosion regulations for projects covering less than an acre of land. The state doesn't currently have rules for these very small construction sites. Kerry Daily heads the legislative committee for the Indiana Association for Floodplain and Stormwater Management. He says the sites tend to be closer to the road and so sediment can more quickly find its way into storm drains and then local waterways. "There's a lot less room for error on these sites and — from what we've heard from some of our members — that those are the sites they get the most public complaints about," Daily says. Daily says local governments should be allowed to make rules that are stricter than what the state requires to protect sensitive areas like parks and wetlands.

SEN. J.D. FORD CHOSEN AS PARADE MARSHAL: On Thursday, the 2019 Cadillac Barbie Pride Parade announced State Senator J.D. Ford (D-Indianapolis) as one of four Grand Marshalls of Indy Pride's annual summer event. Sen. Ford had the following remarks on his appointment (Howey Politics Indiana): "I am incredibly humbled to have been selected as a Grand Marshall of this year's Pride Parade. It has always been my personal policy as a legislator that the Statehouse is your house."

Congress

YOUNG SEEKS TO MONITOR OVERSEAS NUKE TRANSFERS: U.S. Senators Todd Young (R-Ind.), Edward J. Markey (D-Mass.), Marco Rubio (R-Fla.), and Tim Kaine (D-Va.), members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, yesterday introduced legislation to ensure that Congress has the legislative authority to review all materials related to so-called "Part 810 authorizations" and is aware when the U.S. government authorizes persons or companies to transfer certain nuclear technologies and services to governments overseas (Howey Politics Indiana). Part 810 agreements authorize the transfer of nuclear technologies and information related to the production of "special nuclear materials" as defined in Title I of the Atomic Energy Act. Some authorizations, which are approved by the Secretary of Energy, may be non-public and can thus be withheld from Congressional oversight. These 810 authorizations are different than civil nuclear cooperation – so-called "123" – agreements, which are subject to Congressional approval. The Senators are introducing this legislation after revelations that seven undisclosed authorizations were recently granted for companies to engage in nuclear cooperation with Saudi Arabia. In March 2018 Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed Bin Salman stated in an interview that his country would develop nuclear weapons "without a doubt if Iran developed a nuclear bomb". Just a few months later, Saudi Arabia's Foreign Minister Adel Al-Jubeir echoed these comments. "The transfer of nuclear technology overseas poses a major threat to our security as a nation and demands rigorous Congressional oversight," said Senator Young. "This bipartisan legislation would ensure that the transfer of nuclear technology or expertise to foreign countries, like Saudi Arabia, cannot move forward without Congressional review. Nuclear technology is too sensitive and the risks are too great to allow for these agreements to move forward in the dark."

YOUNG QUESTIONS TELECOM EXECS: In reaction to the high volume of illegal robocall scams flooding Hoosiers' phones, U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R-Ind.), a member of the Senate Commerce Committee, questioned a panel of telecommunications experts in today's Commerce Hearing on his recently released Telephone Robocall Abuse Criminal Enforcement and Deterrence (TRACED) Act (Howey Politics Indiana). During the hearing, Senator Young asked the panel about improving phone call authentication standards to proactively prevent unsolicited phone calls. Mr. Kevin Rupy, Partner at Wiley Rein's Telecom, Media & Technology (TMT) Practice, responded by saying, "The TRACED Act does two things that are going to help with that – the facilitation and interagency work... will make finding these actors easier and faster, but I really think that at the end of the day, that the criminal enforcement component so if they get caught that first time they can't set up shop again."

BANKS SEEKS MED DEVICE REPEAL: U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R-IN) released the following statement regarding his cosponsorship of the "Protect Medical Innovation Act of 2019," which would repeal the excise tax on medical devices. Northeast Indiana is a leader in medical device development and manufacturing (Howey Politics Indiana). Said Rep. Banks, "Since I first entered Congress, I have been fighting for the permeant repeal of the disastrous medical device tax that has cost 29,000 jobs and made health care more expensive. As the representative of the 'Orthopedic Capital of the World,' it is important that we give clarity to medical device makers so that they can invest in lifesaving innovations. I am proud to support this bipartisan effort to fully eliminate this counterproductive tax once and for all."

CAIN LOSING GOP SENATE SUPPORT: Four Republican senators say they oppose President Trump's latest pick for the Federal Reserve Board, Herman Cain, effectively sinking the former presidential candidate's chances (Wall Street Journal). Sens. Mitt Romney (R., Utah), Cory Gardner (R., Colo.), Lisa Murkowski (R., Alaska) and Kevin Cramer (R., N.D.) all said this week that they wouldn't vote to confirm Mr. Cain if he were formally nominated for a Fed board job. "If I had to vote today, I would vote no," Mr. Cramer said Thursday, the latest senator to take a public stance on the matter.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB COMMENTS ON SENATE BUDGET – Gov. Eric J. Holcomb offered the following statement regarding the budget proposed by the Senate (Howey Politics Indiana): "I appreciate the Senate's hard work in crafting its budget priorities. There are now three budget proposals – the House, the Senate, and my administration. Now we can and will build consensus during the final stretch."

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB NAMES KOSCIUSKO JUDGE - Gov. Eric J. Holcomb today announced Christopher D. Kehler as his appointment to the new Kosciusko County Superior Court which will open July 1. Kehler has been in private practice in Warsaw, Indiana since graduating law school (Howey Politics Indiana). He has also served as an adjunct professor at Ivy Tech Community College. Kehler earned a Bachelor of Arts from Franklin College and his law degree from Valparaiso University School of Law. Kehler will be sworn in as the judge of the Kosciusko County Superior Court on a date to be determined.

GOVERNOR: HOLCOMB SELECTS WABASH JUDGE - Gov. Eric J. Holcomb today announced Benjamin D. Vanderpool as his appointment to the Wabash County Superior Court to succeed Judge Amy Conner Cornell who passed away earlier this year (Howey Politics Indiana). Vanderpool has been in private practice in Wabash and Warsaw, Indiana since graduating law school. Vanderpool earned his Bachelor of Science from Purdue University and his law degree from Thomas M. Cooley Law School. Vanderpool will be sworn in as the judge of the Wabash County Superior Court on a date to be determined.

EDUCATION: JUDGE CURIEL SEEKS TO INSPIRE STUDENTS - Federal judge and Region native Gonzalo Curiel returned to his home turf Thursday to talk to hundreds of local high school students about the door-opening benefits of higher education (. Speaking at a town hall at Purdue University Northwest (Racke, NWI Times), Curiel recalled the journey from his hometown of East Chicago to the heights of the U.S. legal system, where he now serves as a U.S. district judge for the Southern District of California. The key to his rise, he said, was seeing challenges related to his upbringing not as obstacles, but as way to prove what he was capable of achieving. "Embracing challenge is the greatest opportunity you can have," he told the students. "They are opportunities because they test us." Describing himself as an "accidental judge," Curiel reassured students it wasn't a big deal if they didn't know what subjects they wanted to study or careers they wanted to pursue. He confessed he didn't even consider the legal field until late in college, and only then after dropping his original dream to be a jazz guitarist.

EDUCATION: IU KELLEY SCHOOL RANKS HIGH - The Indiana University Kelley School of Business is ranked at the top of the 2019 World Rankings for Entrepreneurship Activity. IU is the only Indiana school included in the top 20 (McLaughlin, Inside Indiana Business). The list, determined by the Neely Institute for Entrepreneurship and Innovation at Texas Christian University, ranks schools based on research published in three top entrepreneurship journals. The university says research activity by faculty in Kelley's Department of Management and Entrepreneurship "far outpaced" those at other universities. This year, Kelley faculty published 37 articles. "Even amidst that enormous growth on schools, Indiana University's Kelley School of Business maintains the No. 1 ranking solidifying its global reputation as the very best in entrepreneurship research. This is a huge tribute to the quality of our entrepreneurship faculty," Donald Kuratko, the Jack M. Gill Chair of Entrepreneurship and executive director of the Johnson Center for Entrepreneurship and Innovation, said in a news release.

EDUCATION: PURDUE NW REMAKE ACHIEVES MILESTONE - Purdue University Northwest achieved a significant milestone this week in a process that began a year ago to chart the university's future (Michigan City News-Dispatch). The comprehensive initiative – Imagine PNW – is intended to map PNW's path forward and determine how best to invest the university's resources to realize those plans, university spokesman Doug Clark said. "Working together, faculty and staff members from throughout PNW have examined each academic program and support function to assess how each contributes to PNW's success," he said. "Decisions to be made by senior leaders over the next several months based on this assessment will help inform development of a new strategic plan for the university."

PUBLIC SAFETY: FIRE MARSHAL GLEESON HONORED - Indiana State Fire Marshal Jim Greeson was honored today at an Indiana Volunteer Firefighter's Association ceremony for his 50 years of service to the City of Indianapolis and the State of Indiana. Greeson was among several firefighters from across the state who were recognized for their longstanding careers in the fire service (Howey Politics Indiana). In a letter read to Greeson during the ceremony, Indiana Governor Eric J. Holcomb said, "Your professional achievements are surpassed only by your character and your extensive involvement in your community. We could not be more proud of our first responders, and for 50 years, you've been a real life hero." During the ceremony, Greeson was presented with lifetime honorary memberships to both the Indiana Volunteer Firefighter's Association and the Indiana Fire Chief's Association. Former Chief of the Indianapolis Fire Department, he was appointed Indiana State Fire Marshal in 2008. He continues to dedicate his career to serving the citizens of Indiana through promoting and enforcing fire and building safety.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP BELIEVES CAMPAIGN WAS SPIED ON - President Donald Trump said Thursday he believes there was "spying" into his presidential campaign, echoing remarks made by the attorney general a day earlier, but going further and accusing the government of committing an illegal, unprecedented act (AP). The president's comments came a day after Attorney General William Barr testified at a congressional hearing that he believes "spying did occur" on Trump's 2016 campaign, suggesting the origins of the Russia investigation that shadowed Trump's presidency for nearly two years may have been mishandled. Barr provided no details about what "spying" may have taken place, but appeared to be alluding to a surveillance warrant the FBI obtained on a former Trump associate. He later said during the hearing that he wasn't sure there had been improper surveillance and wants to ensure all proper procedures were followed. "I think what he said was absolutely true. There was absolutely spying into my campaign," Trump said Thursday. "I'll go a step further. It was my opinion it was illegal spying, unprecedented spying, and something that should never be allowed to happen in our country again."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP CLAIMS HE DOESN'T KNOW WIKILEAKS - It was a far cry from "I love WikiLeaks!" President Donald Trump declared on Thursday that "I know nothing about WikiLeaks" after its disheveled founder Julian Assange was hauled out of the Ecuadorian Embassy in London to face charges, a stark contrast to how candidate Trump showered praise on Assange's hacking organization night after night during the final weeks of the 2016 presidential campaign (AP). Asked about Thursday's arrest, Trump said at the White House, "It's not my thing. I know there is something having to do with Julian Assange. I've been seeing what's happened with Assange and that will be a determination, I would imagine, mostly by the attorney general, who's doing an excellent job. So, he'll be making a determination. I know nothing really about him." "It's not my deal in life."

WHITE HOUSE: MIGRANTS TO SANCTUARY CITIES WAS EXPLORED - President Trump's top aides considered an idea to pressure immigration agencies to release apprehended migrants into so-called sanctuary cities represented by Democratic lawmakers, according to several people familiar with the proposal (New York Times). The idea was floated in an email by a top White House policy adviser in November, when Mr. Trump was furiously condemning migrant caravans from Central America headed toward the southwestern border, the people, including two government officials, said. In the email dated Nov. 16, with the subject line "Sanctuary City Proposal," May Davis, the deputy White House policy coordinator, raised the idea with officials from the Department of Homeland Security, Immigration and Customs Enforcement and Customs and Border Protection.

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE TO GIVE TAYLOR U COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS - Taylor University, a Christian liberal arts school, says Vice President Mike Pence will be its featured commencement speaker (AP). Taylor University announced Thursday that Pence is scheduled to address graduates of the school in Upland on May 18 at the Kesler Student Activities Center. University President Paul Lowell Haines said in a statement that the former congressman and Indiana governor "has been a good friend to the university over many years, and is a Christian brother whose life and values have exemplified what we strive to instill in our graduates."

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SCHEDULE - President Trump will speak about 5G technology at 2:25 p.m. in the Roosevelt Room, and at 3:15 p.m., he'll meet with the Fraternal Order of Police executive board in the Cabinet Room. Trump and his top telecom regulator will announce plans today to unleash the largest-ever swath of radio frequencies in the U.S. — plus a $20 billion fund to help wireless companies to keep pace with China in the 5G race. Proponents maintain that a significant economic advantage will be won by the first country to broadly deploy 5G networks, which will deliver wireless speeds 100 times faster than today's mobile internet. The U.S. lead in building current 4G technologies led to smartphone ubiquity and apps like Uber and Spotify. The next generation is expected to power self-driving cars and smart cities.

WHITE HOUSE: HUBBARD AT BUSH EVENT - Spotted at the Bush Center's 2019 Forum on Leadership in Dallas: former President George W. Bush and Laura Bush, Bill and Melinda Gates, Henry Kissinger, Robert Gates, Michael Chertoff, Don Evans, Paula Dobriansky, Anne Finucane, Dennis Muilenburg, Dan Gilbert, Ken Hersh, Ariane Cornell, Sean O'Keefe, Peter Altabef, Peter Pace, Dylan Tete, Jan Langbein, Holly Kuzmich, Kevin Sullivan, Ed Gillespie, Kelly Craft, Joel Kaplan, Al Hubbard, Mark Langdale, Margaret Spellings, Craig Stapleton, Thomas Stephenson, Robert McCallum Jr. and Mike Rawlings (Political Playbook).

INTERIOR: BERNHARDT CONFIRMED - The U.S. Senate confirmed David Bernhardt as the new Secretary of the Interior on Thursday, amid concerns about his conduct when he was a lobbyist for oil, mining and extractive industries. Democrats have called for Bernhardt to be investigated and questioned whether a former lobbyist for industries harmful to the environment should oversee public lands (CBS News). Bernhardt was confirmed largely along party lines in a 56-to-41 vote. Bernhardt was confirmed as Deputy Secretary of the Interior in 2017, where he has helped guide much of the Trump administration's deregulatory policies that has increased fossil fuel production on public lands. He became Acting Secretary of the Interior in January, after Ryan Zinke stepped down amid ethics concerns.

JUSTICE: OBAMA LAWYER CRAIG INDICTED - Former Obama administration White House counsel Greg Craig was indicted Thursday on charges of making false statements and concealing information in a Justice Department foreign lobbying investigation that intersected with the Russia probe (AP). Craig was charged in a two-count indictment that accuses him of willfully concealing material facts about work he and his former law firm performed for the Ukrainian government. The U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia announced the charges. They came a day after Craig's lawyers said he expected to be charged in the probe, which spun off from special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation. In the statement, his attorneys, William Taylor and William Murphy, said, "Mr. Craig is not guilty of any charge and the government's stubborn insistence on prosecuting Mr. Craig is a misguided abuse of prosecutorial discretion."

MEDIA: SUNDAY TALK - CBS "Face the Nation": Senate Democratic Whip Dick Durbin (D-Ill.), Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.), Brad Parscale. "Fox News Sunday": Panel: Rich Lowry, Anna Palmer, Kristen Soltis Anderson and Neera Tanden. Power Player: Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, daughter of Robert F. Kennedy, reflecting on his most famous speeches. NBC "Meet the Press": Panel: David Brooks, Kasie Hunt, Danielle Pletka and Eugene Robinson. CNN "State of the Union": Panel: Andrew Gillum, Scott Jennings, Jen Psaki and Linda Chavez. CNN "Inside Politics": Panel: Eliana Johnson, Toluse Olorunnipa, Karoun Demirjian and Jeff Zeleny.

OHIO: DEWINE SIGNS ABORTION HEARTBEAT BILL - Ohio's governor has signed a bill imposing one of the nation's toughest abortion restrictions (AP). Republican Gov. Mike DeWine followed through Thursday on his pledge to sign the heartbeat bill. It cleared the state Legislature on Wednesday. DeWine's signature makes Ohio the fifth state to ban abortions after the first detectable fetal heartbeat. That can come as early as five or six weeks into pregnancy, before many women know they're pregnant. DeWine's support for the bill breaks with his predecessor. Former Republican Gov. John Kasich twice vetoed it on grounds it was unconstitutional and would spark a costly court challenge. Opponents in Ohio have already vowed to sue.

CALIFORNIA: AVENATTI CHARGED WITH CRIMES - Federal prosecutors in California announced on Thursday three dozen charges against Michael Avenatti, the prominent attorney best known for his criticisms of President Trump, accusing the lawyer of stealing millions of dollars from his clients and funneling their money into his own interests, including co-ownership of a $5 million private jet (Washington Post). The indictment was sweeping in its scope, accusing Avenatti of defrauding clients over a period spanning more than four years. The charges included bleak details, including claims that Avenatti's alleged actions caused a paraplegic client to lose his Supplemental Security income benefits, which are paid to adults and children with disabilities, and prevented the same client from using settlement money to buy a home. Avenatti denied wrongdoing and wrote on Twitter that he will "fully fight all charges and plead NOT GUILTY."

CITIES: 300 JOBS COME TO CARMEL - The Indiana Economic Development Corp. says a suburban Indianapolis information technology consulting and staffing company plans to create up to 300 new jobs by 2021 with an expansion including a training center for employees and customers (AP). The agency says Carmel-based BCforward will invest more than $1 million over three years to establish the training center. As part of the expansion, the company will hire for positions at both BCforward and a subsidiary, Stafforward, in technology consulting and administrative and clerical positions. The IEDC offered BCforward up to $2.6 million in conditional tax credits based on the company's job-creation plans.

CITIES: JOURNEY GUITARIST IGNORES FORT WAYNE OFFICIALS - Lawyers for Memorial Coliseum have been trying for months to interview Journey guitarist Neal Schon and his wife, Michaela, who are suing the venue, a security company and a security guard accused of assaulting the woman at a concert in 2017 (Leblanc, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). No luck so far, according to court documents filed in Allen Superior Court. Instead, the couple have responded to attorneys' requests to sit for depositions with emailed threats to take the case and video of the alleged assault to the media. "Hate to rattle you but I don't think we will need to do any depositions - when you see all my evidence we will take it straight to media soon," a message sent Feb. 26 from Neal Schon's Gmail account states. "Have a nice day. You are messing with the wrong person."

COUNTIES: MARION BEGINS NEEDLE EXCHANGE - In the war against the hepatitis C epidemic, Marion County health officials are pulling out their newest weapon: a mobile health unit that will roam the city, offering clean syringes in exchange for dirty ones (IBJ). The customized vehicle, about the size of a small school bus, will also be equipped with laboratory and medical supplies, and will offer health screenings and educational information, along with syringes. The county's public health department unveiled the vehicle Wednesday, the latest effort to put a dent in the soaring rate of hepatitis C. Reported cases in the county rose from 0.6 to 7.6 per 100,000 people between 2013 and 2017, with much of the rise due to the opioid epidemic. Last summer, the health department declared an epidemic of hepatitis C, an often-deadly liver disease linked to injection drug use and dirty syringes. The City-County Council later approved the county's first-ever syringe-exchange program in an effort to boost public health and increase public safety. Dr. Virginia Caine, the county's public health director, said syringe services can increase treatments, reduce health care costs and prevent the spread of infectious diseases. "The time is now for Marion County to step forward and take action for the health of residents and the community," she said.

COUNTIES: BARTHOLOMEW EMERGENCY DIRECTOR DIES - A local county emergency management director who led his community through some of the darkest moments of the past three decades has died (Columbus Republic). Dennis Moats, who served as Bartholomew County's Emergency Management Director from 1991 through 2015, died Wednesday afternoon at Columbus Regional Hospital. He was 68. "He was an awesome guy," said Todd Noblitt, a former Chief Deputy Sheriff who is now Bartholomew County's Emergency Operations Center director. "Dennis was just a wealth of knowledge who never seemed to get overwhelmed or bent out of shape over anything."

COUNTIES: LAWRENCE MAN ARRESTED FOR SCHOOL BOARD THREATS - Intimidation and harassment are some of the charges against a man in Lawrence County (WIBC). State police say they were called by a North Lawrence school board member last year. They said they had been emailed by a man identifying himself as James White. This man said they intended to ridicule and ruin the school board member's life and reputation if they tried running for re-election. Troopers say not long after the investigation began, a second school board member came forward saying the same thing. The second school board member said they had several threatening emails from a James White dating back to 2016. ISP put their Cyber Crimes Unit on the case and they eventually tracked down Jade Miller of Bedford. They say Miller sent the emails not only from his home computer but from where he worked and even from where he was taking a vacation. Miller was arrested and taken to jail Thursday night. He's charged with intimidation, deception, and harassment.

INDIANA EDUCATION INSIGHT

Cramming for finals

Final education budget, fiscal look before Wednesday's forecast

Here's your handy guide to the Senate Republican education spending plan unveiled on Thursday.

K-12 formula funding

- The Senate GOP boosts the foundation amount to $5,586 in FY 2020 and $5,692 in FY 2021 – increases of 4.4% in year one and 1.9% in the second.

- The complexity index declines by 14% in the Senate budget proposal, just as in the House. “I had a chance to meet with a lot of superintendents, school business managers, and ISTA, and we took different ideas on what to do with complexity, but when we tried them, and run the numbers, there was a negative impact on schools,” explained Sen. Eric Bassler (R) of Washington, chair of the Senate Committee on Appropriations K-12 Funding Subcommittee. That included running simulations using Medicaid data. Look for solons to bring people together over the Summer for a comprehensive review of the complexity factors. Sen. Bassler also explained that for every $1 put into the foundation amount, 66¢ goes into complexity.

- The Senate adopts the same approach to kindergarten funding as the House. The ADM cut-off date for kindergarten students who are at least five years old would move from August 1 to September 1 in 2020, and then from September 1 to October 1 in 2021 – capturing an additional 2,000+ students each year.

- Per-pupil funding for students in virtual charter schools and students in traditional public school corporations who receive more than 50% of their instruction virtually would decline to 80% of the foundation amount – a steeper cut than in the House-passed budget, which set it at 90% of the foundation amount. Notably, both chambers are in agreement on parity in per-pupil funding for virtual students regardless of whether they are enrolled in virtual charter programs or virtual programs operated by traditional public school corporations. In a move aimed at trying to get a better handle on the growth of virtual charter schools, the Senate pulled virtual charters out of the funding formula and put them in a separate $80 million line item under the Indiana Department of Education. Senate Committee Appropriations Chair Ryan Mishler (R) of Bremen borrowed the approach from the playbook of former appropriations chair Luke Kenley (R), who did the same thing back in the day to help control the rapid expansion of adult charter high schools. The Indiana Department of Education will determine annually the maximum number of students that may be funded at each virtual charter.

- English Language Learner funding increases by $5 million annually to $22.5 million, up from $17.5 million in FY 2019 – nearly double the $2.6 million per year increase approved by the House. The Senate served up a two-tiered approach to distributing funds, while the House had only one tier.

- The Senate and House agree on the Career and Technical Education funding formula. Beginning in the second year of the biennium, reimbursement for the highest-value CTE programs would nearly double from $6,080 to $1,020, and apprentice and work-based learning programs would be funded at $500, up from the current paltry amount of $150.

- Both the Senate and the House increase preschool special education funding for the first time since 1991.

Ivy Tech approves Titans

The Ivy Tech Community College Board of Trustees votes to approve the continuation of the Fort Wayne baseball program, Ivy Tech's first and only athletics program, which is currently wrapping up the second year of a two-year pilot phase.

The Board of Trustees also voted to authorize a women's sport for Fort Wayne. The women's sport is yet to be determined but could be volleyball.

Given the federal Title IX proportionality requirement that the ratio of female-to-male participation in athletics be equal to the ratio of female to male full-time campus enrollment, Ivy Tech may have to offer more than one women's sport for every men's sport.

There are no immediate plans to expand athletics on any other campus . . . but the door to do so is now open.

Ivy Tech has said that athletics can only be paid for using money raised from external sources and that no state appropriations or student tuition and fee revenue may be spent on athletics.

For what it's worth: the son of Rep. Bob Morris (R) of Fort Wayne plays on the Ivy Tech Fort Wayne baseball team.

Teacher Compensation

- Teacher Appreciation Grants that the Governor proposed for elimination and the House voted to sustain at $30 million per year would increase to $45 million annually in the Senate's version of the budget. School corporations would receive $45 per ADM to distribute to effective and highly effective teachers. To support the retention of early career teachers, the Senate stipulates that 1/3 of each district's TAG dollars must be provided to teachers with less than five years of experience.

- Teacher career ladder programs proposed in House Bill 1008 are funded at $3.5 million, down from the $5 million the House wanted. The other $1.5 million has been redirected to the Industry Credentialing Organizations program devised by Senate Committee on Education and Career Development Chair Jeff Raatz (R) of Centerville. The teacher residency training pilot program in House Bill 1009 would receive $1 million, the same as in the House.

- The Senate endorses the ingenious proposal announced by the Governor in his State of the State address to allocate $150 million to the Post-1996 account of the Teachers' Retirement Fund, which will result in the contribution rate paid by school corporations on behalf of teachers declining from 7.5% to 5.5%. The Senate added a requirement that school boards hold a public meeting to disclose how they will spend the savings from the reduced contribution rate.

- Like the House, there are no appropriations directly to teacher base salary increases and no mandates to increase base salary. "We've agreed that's still a local decision," said Sen. Mishler, echoing the words of House Committee on Ways and Means Co-Chair Tim Brown (R) of Crawfordsville, who said earlier this year, "For us to become the deciding influence and body for teacher contracts is the wrong approach."

Student and Parent Choice

- The Senate restored the second ADM count date for school funding purposes, a change supported by school choice groups but not by others. The House budget remained at a single count date in the Fall.

- The Senate did not double the Charter and Innovation School grant from $500 to $1,000 per student, as they did in the House. The House increase cost an additional $15 million per year. The Senate chose to put that $15 million into Teacher Appreciation Grants.

- The annual cap on the Scholarship Granting Organization (SGO) Tax Credit rises from $14 million in Fiscal Year 2019 to $15 million in Fiscal Year 2020 and $16 million in Fiscal Year 2021. The Senate does not include the escalator in the House version that allowed the amount of tax credits available to automatically increase by 20% in a year subsequent to a year in which the cap was reached.

- The Senate also broke with the House on adding a middle tier to the Choice Scholarship formula. The House had proposed that families with income between 100% and 125% of free- and reduced-price lunch could qualify for a voucher worth 70% of state tuition support, up from 50% today.

- The cap on adult charter school funding increases by 250 adult learners per year: 50 additional students at the Gary Middle College and 200 additional students for the Excel Centers.

STEM, Safety, Success

- The Indiana Department of Education sees a new $5 million per year Student Success line-item, in addition to $1 million annually for STEM program alignment.

- There's no money in the Senate budget for the Governor's Next Level Computer Science program, which was funded at $3 million annually in the House. Last year, the Senate joined the Governor in championing legislation to teach computer science in every school by 2021. The Governor's Office told us Thursday that "To accomplish that goal, we need the funds to pay for this important teacher training so that our students are prepared for the careers that await them."

- The Senate provides $16.5 million in FY 2020 and $14 million in FY 2021 for Secured School Safety Grants – quite a bit less than the $19 million annually in the House budget. Like the House, the Senate budget authorizes grants to be used for student mental health services.

- Both the Senate and the House provide $22 million per year for the pre-K pilot program, although the Senate specifies that $1 million each fiscal year shall be used for the Upstart early education technology program.

- Both the Senate and the House provided $300,000 annually for professional development and technical assistance to pilot the new high school-to-postsecondary transitions math course.

Talent and Workforce

- The Office of Career Connections and Talent led by Blair Milo will be funded at approximately $800,000 per year.

- The Office of Work-Based Learning and Apprenticeship created by the Governor via executive order is in line for $1.8 million over the biennium, identical to the House.

- Funding for the Next Level Jobs Employer Training Grant doubles to $20 million per year. Funding for the Workforce Ready Grant doubles to $2 million per year.

- The Governor's Workforce Cabinet will have $2 million annually at its disposal to seed new models of Career Navigation and Coaching, the same amount of funding provided by the House.

Postsecondary

- The Senate took away the dual credit line item and folded it into each institution's base operations. Without guaranteed funding for dual credit moving forward, there's no longer any direct financial incentive for the institutions to increase dual credit offerings in K-12.

- The Senate said it followed the recommendations of the Indiana Commission for Higher Education in terms of funding capital projects, but that's not entirely true. Both the Senate and the House included the Purdue College of Veterinary Medicine, which were not in the ICHE recommendations. Moreover, ICHE recommended a special statewide R&R appropriation for Ivy Tech that the Senate left out, even as the Senate included a new line item of $11.6 million for deferred maintenance projects at the IU and Purdue regional campuses which again, were not a part of the ICHE recommendations.

- Student demand for financial aid obligations are fully met.

IN Elementary & Secondary Ed

IN General . . .

● As a result of the Gary Community School Corporation being forced to hold a new auction (because it broke certain notice provisions the first time out of the blocks), it was able to sell a the wooden replica it held of the famous Chicago Daley Plaza Picasso sculpture for $40,500, more than twice the price that was fetched at the original cancelled auction. The 12-foot plywood statue was donated to the district in 1970 by American Bridge, which helped erect the statue.

IN Administration . . .

● Through a cooperative effort between members of the Allen County School Safety Commission and all four Allen County school districts, with support from the Allen County Prosecuting Attorney's Office and local Law Enforcement, a Public Service Announcement is being created to raise awareness of School Bus Stop Arm violations. A large-scale video is being planned for Fall 2019 with small-scale videos being planned for social media in the near future.

● Warsaw Community High School is working on an agreement with the Warsaw Police Department to be assigned a full-time drug dog to be partnered with the current school resource officer.

IN Budgets & Finance . . .

● S&P Global Ratings lowers its underlying rating to 'A' from 'A+' and revised its outlook to negative from stable on the M.S.D. of Wayne Township's existing debt, reflecting a decline in available reserves in each of the past two years, with further declines expected in 2019, despite the passage of a referendum in May 2015 that has generated approximately $10 million annually.

□ The new referendum would raise another $10 million per year beginning in 2020 and would be in addition to the 2015 referendum. Since 2010 the district has lost approximately $102.8 million to property tax caps, and state funding per ADM (foundation + complexity) increased by $1 over the past four years from $6,500 to $6,501. If the referendum is successful, the district still intends to cut about $5 million through attrition savings from by leaving approximately 100 positions unfilled. If the new referendum fails, the district has identified $11 million in cuts, including the reduction of 64 teaching positions and 96 staff, plus the closure of the early college high school, preschool, and alternative school.

□ The early college high school in partnership with Vincennes University has a stellar track record, as 87% of its students have graduated with an associate's degree.

● S&P Global Ratings raises its underlying rating to 'A+' from 'A' on Decatur Township Metropolitan School District's existing debt. At the same time, S&P Global Ratings assigned its 'AA+' long-term rating and 'A+' underlying rating to the Decatur Township Multi-School Building Corporation's series 2019 ad valorem property tax first mortgage bonds, issued on behalf of the school corporation. S&P Global Ratings also affirmed its 'AA+' long-term rating on the district's existing debt. The outlook is stable.

□ S&P Global Ratings credit analysts explain the raised rating reflects the ratings agency's view of the school corporation's positive operations in recent years, which have resulted in an available fund balance that S&P considers strong on a cash basis. The 'A+' rating reflects an ad valorem tax pledge and the 'AA+' rating reflects S&P's view of the Indiana state-aid intercept framework.

□ The 'A+' rating reflects S&P's view of the school corporation's general creditworthiness, including its diverse local tax base that benefits from participation in the broad and diverse Indianapolis metropolitan statistical area economy; strong market value per capita indicators; history of positive operations leading to a strong level of available cash reserves; and history of voter support for operating taxes, which helps diversify and stabilize revenue.

□ As S&P perceives it, partially offsetting these strengths are MSD Decatur Township's moderately concentrated tax base, and income indicators which, while at levels that S&P considers adequate to good, are not commensurate with those of its higher-rated peers.

● The Northeast Dubois County School Corporation is considering closing Celestine Elementary School, as the district works to cut costs toward a goal of not needing to renew the general fund referendum in five years.

● On April 17, the Northern Wells Community Schools plans to issues $9,520,000 in lease rental bonds to finance HVAC and site improvements at Norwell High School and roofing improvements at Ossian Elementary School, which was originally constructed in 1925. Stifel served as underwriter on this issuance.

IN Charter Schools . . .

● Indianapolis charter schools are 59% more cost-effective than traditional public schools, according to a new report from the University of Arkansas. The authors of A Good Investment: The Updated Productivity of Public Charter Schools in Eight U.S. Cities, calculated how many points on the National Assessment of Educational Progress (the nation's report card) each sector produced per $1,000 in taxpayer spending per student.

□ Charter schools in Indianapolis were associated with an average of 27.15 NAEP reading points per $1,000, compared to 17.07 points at traditional public schools. The difference of 10.08 NAEP reading points represents a 59% charter school sector advantage over traditional public schools. That's the second-highest cost-efficiency advantage produced by charter schools among the eight cities included in the report, behind only Atlanta. The advantage in math was identical, with Indianapolis charter schools again found to be 59% more cost effective. According to the researchers' recent findings, Indianapolis charter schools operate with 36% less (- $5,611) per-pupil funding than traditional public schools.

IN Programs & Curriculum . . .

● The Hamilton Southeastern Schools unfurls CurioCity, an online portal to promote employer engagement with the school system. CurioCity will serve as a hub or repository of businesses that have offered up enrichment and field study opportunities for students and teachers, including apprenticeships, internships, externships, project-based and service-based learning activities, study trips and tours, and more. The City of Fishers seeded the project with a $250,000 contribution that was used to pay KSM Consulting to build out the website architecture. "We are trying to break the walls of the school into the community so that the community becomes the classroom, representing a place where students can have projects that affect something bigger than themselves," said HSE Superintendent Allen Bourff, reported Current in Fishers.

● The Evansville Vanderburgh School Corporation adopts the nationally recognized work-based learning program known as RAMP (Real-world Application; Maximizing Potential). The program will be run through EVSC's OptIN initiative in partnership with the AmeriQual Group and will allow students to earn manufacturing industry certifications at the same time they earn a high school diploma. Students will spend four hours in a traditional classroom and four hours engaged in a paid work experience while embedded on the job at the AmeriQual campus in Evansville. RAMP is based on a similar program from the Richmond County Schools in Augusta, Georgia.

□ The Indiana State Board of Education voted April 10 to approve a locally developed plan proposed by the Evansville Vanderburgh School Corporation for improving the Academy for Innovative Studies, an alternative school that has earned six consecutive "F" grades. The turnaround plan includes both the RAMP program as a CTE concentrator graduation pathway and a partnership with the Vanderburgh County Juvenile Court Division. Students who attend AIS while receiving juvenile court services through a pre-court diversion program have been shown to demonstrate higher attendance rates and greater academic success, and so, the intervention plan calls for hiring an AIS assistant principal and a social worker to serve as "probation officer interns" in close collaboration with Superior Court Judge Brett Neimeier and a "dedicated AIS probation officer" to expand court services to more students at the school.

● JPMorgan Chase provides $1 million to the Indianapolis Public Schools to increase access to work-based learning opportunities for IPS high school students.

□ The hefty two-year commitment from JPMorgan Chase includes technical assistance from Jobs For the Future's Pathways to Prosperity project to develop a strategic plan for EmployIndy to serve as the work-based learning intermediary in Indianapolis.

● Education Workforce Innovation Network (EWIN) Director Erin Foster recently delivered a presentation to the Grant County Economic Growth Council about career pathway models that let students earn an industry credential or technical certificate by the time they graduate high school. Foster noted that the Perry Community Schools has successfully aligned its manufacturing curriculum to Jasper Engines and the Waupaca Foundry, despite operating on a shoestring budget, reported the Marion Chronicle-Tribune.

IN Policy . . .

● The Carmel Clay Schools has discussed the possibility of swapping start times for elementary and secondary students, similar to the revisions in the Westfield, Noblesville, and Zionsville schools.

IN Referenda . . .

● The M.S.D. of Lawrence Township plans to pursue a construction referendum in November to raise approximately 25¢ per $100 of assessed value to pay for improvements at Lawrence Central and Lawrence North high schools, four elementary schools, and four early learning centers.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

● The Decatur County Community School Corporation expects construction to commence this month on a renovation and improvement project financed with an $18.695 million lease rental bond issue. None of the individual projects exceed $5 million. Bids were received in February, and the project should be substantially complete come October. Fifth Third Bank Securities is the underwriter.

● The Penn High School Building Corporation issues $14,000,000 in lease rental bonds to finance renovations and improvements to facilities throughout the Penn-Harrison-Madison School Corporation. Construction should begin this month and wrap up by Fall 2020. The district will sell a portion of Discovery Middle School and Walt Disney Elementary School to the building corporation for $10.946 million and lease the facilities back for 12 years. The bonds are underwritten by Robert W. Baird.

● The East Allen County Schools Board of School Trustees approves the selection of Barton-Coe-Vilamaa to provide architectural/engineering services for facility improvements at the former Meadowbrook Elementary School to house the planned career and technical education programs and the alternative school.

● The Clinton Prairie School Corporation in Frankfort receives $4.7 million in energy performance improvements through a guaranteed energy savings contract with Johnson Controls. The deal includes state-of-the-art LED lighting, improved exterior brick and stucco, upgraded door access control systems, new exterior doors, improved duct sealing and insulation, a new roof with added insulation, new kitchen equipment, and building control optimization.

- The M.S.D. of Wayne Township Schools issues $7,835,000 in lease rental bonds on April 16 to renovate and improve North Wayne Elementary School, Westlake Elementary School, Bridgeport Elementary School, and various other facilities. Stifel served as underwriter.

- The Brownsburg School Corporation issued $12,450,000 in bonds on April 10 for the renovation and improvements to school facilities throughout the district. Stifel served as underwriter.

- Look for ARC Construction to handle the $9.1 million project for expansion of the Princeton Community Primary School North campus after it submitted the low bid to the North Gibson School Corporation School Board of Trustees.

IN Transition . . .

- Here's the roster for the Governor's Workforce Cabinet policy committee, which met for the first time April 8:

Danny Lopez, GWC chair

Fred Payne, Department of Workforce Development commissioner

Teresa Lubbers, Commission for Higher Education commissioner

Jennifer McCormick, superintendent of public instruction

Paul Perkins, Amatrol

Jason Ells, Custom Concrete

Rebecca Schroeder, Whiteshire Hamroc

Tony Vespa, Vespa Group

Bruce Watson, Fort Wayne Metals

- Wayne Barker will resign as superintendent of the Bluffton-Harrison Metropolitan School District to accept the superintendent's position at another school corporation. His last day will be April 25.

□ Brad Yates, the current assistant superintendent, is the frontrunner to replace Dr. Barker.

- The Southeast Dubois County School Corporation selects Forest Park Jr.-Sr. High School Principal Jaime Pund as the new superintendent.

□ The 39-year old Pund graduated from Purdue University in West Lafayette in 2001 and taught math for five years before going into administration. She earned her Ph.D. from Ashland University in Columbus, Ohio.

- Donald Street is hired as the new Kankakee Valley School Corporation superintendent. He comes from the West Central School Corporation, and will succeed veteran acting superintendent Iran Floyd on July 1.

- Al Remaly will succeed the retiring Ralph Walker as the Superintendent of the Clinton Central School Corporation. Remaly, a Clinton County native, has been principal at Clinton Central High School for the past three years, in addition to service as a principal in Rossville and an assistant superintendent in Kokomo.

- Levi Yowell will leave his post as assistant principal of North Putnam High School to become the new principal at South Putnam High School July 1.

- Jeremy Tucker will leave Pioneer Jr./Sr. High in Royal Center after five years to become the new principal for Winamac High School, succeeding Rick DeFries, who has decided to leave the job at the end of the school year.

IN Government . . .

- The Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Transportation votes 6-1 to approve House Bill 1398, legislation to encourage schools and law enforcement to share information about potential criminal activity involving a child. The colloquy in committee mirrored a similar Senate floor debate earlier in the session on a Senate bill related to school violence.

□ "We're dealing with a crisis somewhat of violence spilling into the schools," said the bill's author, Rep. Tony Cook (R) of Cicero, a retired superintendent. Sen. Jim Tomes (R) of Wadesville sought an amendment to clarify that the information about a child shared by schools and law enforcement would not be stored or maintained in any type of data base. "We've got to be very careful that we don't get ourselves out too far that what would have been a minor incident years ago is now in a mix of a database that could haunt somebody when they are an adult," said Sen. Tomes. He worried that as a consequence of the bill, school officials would be under tremendous pressure to over-share with law enforcement, and that as a result, "some kid is going find himself at age 30 prohibited from getting on an airplane or not getting a job that would require a security clearance."

- When House Bill 1034 was first heard in the Senate Committee on Tax and Fiscal Policy, the committee chairman, Sen. Travis Holdman (R) of Markle, hinted that he's exploring language to crack down on school corporations that "game the system" by splitting up construction projects in order to stay under the controlled project thresholds . . . and, true to his word, when the Committee met again to amend and vote on the bill, Senate Republicans tacked on language providing that a debt-financed project would be subject to a referendum if the cost of the project plus the cost of all other debt-financed projects approved over the past five years exceeds 2.0% of the district's assessed valuation. If the cost of the proposed project plus the cost of all other projects approved over the past five years equals between one percent and two percent of the district's assessed value, the petition/remonstrance process would apply.

□ The bill provides that referenda ballot language may include a statement that the estimated property tax increase will be offset in whole or in part by the retirement of existing debt. The bill also provides that the restrictions on the promotion of a referendum apply to any unit of local government with overlapping assessed valuation.

- As House Bill 1003 lingers on the Senate's Third Reading calendar, Rep. Jeff Thompson (R) of Lizton, a retired teacher, noted during a meeting of the Senate Tax and Fiscal Policy Committee that some districts will find it easy to hit the 85% target, but for others, "it's almost mathematically impossible."

- The Indiana House votes to approve Senate Bill 436, an 83-page Medicaid bill that includes two pages related to the funding of school-based services.

□ The measure requests that the Family and Social Services Administration apply to the federal government for an amendment to the state Medicaid plan to cover reimbursement for mental health services delivered in a school setting to students who are Medicaid eligible and their families. The bill would require that, within one year after Indiana receives approval for the state plan amendment, all school corporations must contract with a community mental health center to provide the Medicaid-eligible mental health services. The Family and Social Services Administration would also be required to study and make recommendations by November 1 on the best way to provide Medicaid reimbursement for services provided by a school-based health center.

□ The Indiana Small and Rural Schools Association tweeted, “It is time to simplify Medicaid Reimbursement. IN is facing a vast population of special needs students on the back end of the opioid crisis. We are probably three years away from a massive group of pre-k students who will need lots of support due to opioid-addicted parents.”

● The Indiana House voted to approve Senate Bill 325 after two separate “strip and inserts.” As it passed the Senate, the bill created a grant program to fund student-created public service announcements that raise student awareness of personal safety issues. That concept vanished after the House Committee on Education removed it and replaced it with language to expand the purpose of the Secured School Fund matching grant program to mental health services, social emotional services, and “integrated school-based mental health and substance use disorder identification” programs. But on Second Reading, the House wiped the slate clean again in favor of language expanding the Secured School Fund to cover “student and parent support services plans” . . . which the legislation only vaguely defines.

● The House Committee on Education never provided a hearing to Senate Bill 434, which directed the State Board of Education to adopt alternative accountability standards for schools that focus “primarily” on students with developmental, intellectual, or behavioral challenges. Currently, alternative accountability standards are only available for schools that focus “exclusively” on such students.

● The Senate should soon be approving House Bill 1002, a package of career and technical education changes recommended by the Governor’s Workforce Cabinet and endorsed by Governor Eric Holcomb (R) in his legislative agenda. The bill is authored by Rep. Holli Sullivan (R) of Evansville and sponsored by Sen. Chip Perfect (R) of Lawrenceburg.

□ The bill would require the Governor’s Workforce Cabinet to comprehensively review whether the primary, secondary, and postsecondary education systems are aligned with employer needs and whether students are being adequately prepared for workforce success, and require the Cabinet to write a strategic plan for aligning employer needs, workforce training programs, and primary, secondary, and postsecondary education. Indiana has 54 workforce programs spread across six state agencies that account for $1 billion in state funding and $400 million in federal money.

□ The bill would allow the Indiana Commission for Higher Education to expand eligibility for Workforce Ready Grants to certificate programs at institutions beyond Vincennes University and Ivy Tech Community College.

□ The bill would also authorize the Governor’s Workforce Cabinet to award grants to eligible entities to establish or implement a career coaching program. Earlier this year, Skillful Indiana, a non-profit initiative of the Markle Foundation, launched the Governor’s Coaching Corps, a program that brings together career coaches from workforce centers, post-secondary education and training institutions, high schools, staffing agencies, and non-profit organizations to learn skills-based approaches to career coaching.

□ The measure as it stands would shift the authority for receiving and distributing federal Perkins Act dollars for career and technical education from the State Board of Education to the Governor’s Workforce Cabinet. The bill would allow a school to employ unlicensed teachers for up to 50% of its career and technical education courses, as long as the individuals have either (1) three years of industry work experience over the past five years; or (2) two years of industry work experience over the past ten years in combination with an occupational license or certification, two-year or higher degree in the area the individual will teach, or completion of an apprenticeship or internship. Retroactive to January 1, 2019, the bill would void the regulation (511 IAC 8-2-6) requiring that all teachers in vocational programs be appropriately licensed. The State Board of Education would be required to replace the existing teacher licensing examinations that have been customized for Indiana with an off-the-shelf exam. Based on the results of a Request for Proposal, that means Indiana would return to administering the Praxis exams. HB 1002 would require at least 15 of the total number of professional growth experience points required to renew a teaching license be obtained through the completion of (1) an externship with a company; (2) professional development on promoting career navigation in partnership with employers; or (3) professional development on current and future economic needs. School corporations could provide pay increases to career and technical education teachers without collective bargaining. Students, before the end of their freshmen year, and in consultation with their parents and a school counselor, would have to establish postsecondary goals and indicate whether they plan to complete a certificate, two-year, or four-year postsecondary program. School corporations that are members of a career and technical education cooperative would not need to obtain the co-op’s approval to establish a new CTE course if the course is offered in partnership with an employer. The Let Indiana Work for You program could provide information to college students on workforce opportunities in Indiana and the economic benefits of residing and working in Indiana after graduation; the program would be administered by the Indiana Commission for Higher Education in coordination with the Indiana Economic Development Corporation and the Indiana Department of Education. The maximum grant amount as reimbursement for employer-provided adult education through the WorkIndiana Program would rise from $500 to $1,000. The bill adds credential attainment as a criteria for receiving a Next Level Jobs Employer Training Grant and allows high school students to participate in the grant program.

- The House passed Senate Bill 119, legislation that would allow people to carry guns in an elementary, middle, or high school while (1) attending a religious ceremony at a house of worship located at a school; or (2) working or volunteering at a house of worship located at a school.

□ The bill is headed to conference committee. The lead conferees are Sen. Jim Tomes (R) of Wadesville and Rep. Jim Lucas (R) of Seymour, perhaps the leading Second Amendment protectors in the legislature. Everytown for Gun Safety is urging lawmakers to oppose allowing more guns in school.

- The Senate Committee on Education and Career Development approved House Bill 1253, a bill authorizing state funds to pay for handgun training for teachers and school employees who volunteer, undergo a psychological assessment, and are approved by their local school board. Parents affiliated with Indiana Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense in America and Everytown for Gun Safety argued that arming teachers is not only ineffective but also puts students and teachers at greater risk for gun violence. Teachers unions argued that the responsibility for responding to an armed threat should be left to the security professionals.

□ The bill details a firearms training curriculum consisting of 38 hours in topics including shooting while moving to and from cover, shooting in high-stress situations, and shooting in highly populated environments. By contrast, school employees in Florida must complete at least 144 hours of training to carry a gun in school. On a party-line vote, the committee defeated an amendment offered by Sen. Mark Stoops (D) of Bloomington making it a felony crime if a person fails to secure a firearm and the use of the unsecured firearm by another person results in injury to or death of another person. The vote came exactly one week after Jason Seaman, the teacher who thwarted the Noblesville school shooter, tweeted his disbelief that “parents who don’t take precautions to secure their firearms and ammunition properly then have their child shoot up their school don’t get penalized” and urged his followers to “Contact state legislators and ask them why they aren’t passing bills to protect students and children.” The committee also rejected an amendment from Sen. Stoops requiring a school board to notify parents if the school board decides to allow armed teachers in the classroom. Recall that in 2018 the committee approved mandatory parental notification on the content of human sexuality courses, and earlier this session, the committee voted to require schools to provide detailed written parent notice in advance of any medical health service.

□ The committee adopted an amendment offered by the chair, Sen. Jeff Raatz (R) of Centerville, to allow the firing of pellets at teachers as part of an active shooter training drill only if the teachers are notified in advance of the nature of the training and provide advance written consent.

- The Senate Committee on Education and Career Development voted 9-1 to approve House Bill 1404, which directs the State Board of Education to revamp the high school accountability model to align with graduation pathways. In 2018, 87.4% of high schools received an A or a B (88.5% of high schools received an A on the Multiple Measures domain).

- Mandatory cursive writing instruction was amended into House Bill 1640 by the Senate Committee on Education and Career Development, which then approved the amended bill by a unanimous vote of 9-0. The underlying bill sets in motion the establishment of a new school accreditation system with a single set of standards for public and private schools. The hefty bill has garnered little attention because accreditation in K-12 is toothless and a box-checking exercise and vastly overshadowed by the significance of the school accountability system.

- The Senate Committee on Education and Career Development votes 7-2 to approve House Bill 1641, legislation that restates the law on charter access to vacant school buildings and reduces the time frame that a school corporation must make a vacant building available to a charter school from two years to 30 days. A charter school that submits a request within the 30-day window would be able to lease or purchase the vacant or unused building for $1. The charter school would have to start using the building for instruction within two years. The bill sets out a process for what happens in the event that two or more charter schools submit a request for the building. During the lease, the charter school is responsible for building utilities, insurance, maintenance, repairs, and remodeling, while the school corporation remains responsible for any debt attached to the building. If no charter school files a claim within the 30 day window, a nonpublic school, postsecondary institution, or nonprofit organization would have the right of first refusal to purchase the vacant or unused building at fair market value.

□ The bill was amended in committee to resurrect the ability of Greene Township in St. Joseph County to disannex from the South Bend Community School Corporation. A standalone Senate bill on this topic was defeated on Third Reading in the House. The new amendment frames the disannexation as a two-year pilot program administered by the State Board of Education. SBOE will issue a report on the pilot at the end of the two years, which legislative leaders would take into consideration when determining whether to take the disannexation pilot statewide.

- The Senate voted to approve House Bill 1004, the big school safety bill based on the recommendations of the school safety working group convened by Gov. Eric Holcomb (R) after the school shooting in Parkland, Florida. The bill requires school corporations to conduct an active-shooter drill each semester. However, schools would be prohibited from conducting or authorizing an intruder training drill that involves firing projectiles at school employees or students, under an amendment inserted into House Bill 1004 by the Senate Committee on Education and Career Development.

□ The Indiana State Teachers Association requested the amendment after teachers in the Twin Lakes School Corporation were shot at with airsoft guns by officers with the White County Sheriff’s Office during ALICE training (Alert, Lockdown, Inform, Counter and Evacuate). The drill, which left some educators with welts and abrasions, was traumatic to some teachers because they were not given any warning that they would be shot. Proponents claim that exposing staff and students to intensely realistic simulations and stress inoculation exercises will better prepare them if they ever have to deal with a real threat.

□ The bill would expand the purpose of the Indiana Secured School Fund matching grant program to cover student mental health services. In addition, the bill would expand the grant program to cover the employment of law enforcement officers who are not school resource officers. The bill clarifies that accredited non-public schools are eligible to receive a matching grant. The maximum grant amount would double from $50,000 to $100,000. In contrast to the current law requiring all grant recipients to provide a 100% match, the bill creates a three-step scale with the smallest schools required to match 25% of the grant amount, schools between 500 and 1,000 students required to post a 50% match, and schools with more than 1,000 students on the hook for a 100% match. HB 1004 would allow schools of any size to receive the maximum $100,000 grant if they are willing to provide a 100% match.

□ As it stands the measure would require schools to receive “prior informed written consent” from parents before a student may participate in any mental health services. Schools must also provide parents with written notice describing in detail the proposed mental health services or assessment. The term “mental health services” is broadly defined to include “any social, emotional, or behavioral interventions,” even including multi-tiered systems of support, positive behavior interventions, response to intervention, and universal design for learning. The bill would allow the Indiana Attorney General to assess a civil penalty against a school that provides mental health services to a student without the informed written consent of the parents.

□ There’s no provision for parents to opt their child in or out of participating in a realistic active shooter training drill (or to opt in/out of a classroom with an armed teacher), and there’s no requirement that parents be provided with detailed written information about the nature of an active shooter training drill and whether the training (as it often the case with ALICE) includes teaching students how to use counter measures to fight back against an armed intruder.

● The Senate voted 48-0 to approve HB 1209, legislation to address misconduct by high school coaches who do not have a teaching license. The bill would require schools to report to the Indiana High School Athletic Association when non-teaching and volunteer coaches have been convicted of certain offenses. IHSAA must then revoke their coaching accreditation. Prior to hiring an athletic coach, schools would be required to check with IHSAA to determine whether the individual’s coaching accreditation has ever been suspended or revoked.

□ The bill was authored by Rep. Donna Schaibley (R) of Carmel and was sponsored by Sen. Randy Head (R) of Logansport.

● The Senate approved House Bill 1629 after removing the requirement that students complete the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) in order to receive a high school diploma. Remaining provisions in the bill include allowing a school corporation or charter school to charge a search fee for time in excess of five hours spent searching for an electronic record; allows charter school students to participate in career and technical education center programs on the same basis as students from traditional public school corporations; and allows secondary students to participate in internships through the EARN Indiana program.

● A student who withdraws from high school to enroll in a home school would be counted as a high school dropout, under language amended into Senate Bill 567 by the House Committee on Education at the request of the committee’s chair, Rep. Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis. This is a serious problem that we’ve been trying to figure how to nip in the bud for a long time, indicated Rep. Behning.

□ On Second Reading, House Majority Floor Leader Rep. Matt Lehman (R) of Berne offered Amendment 8 to dramatically improve the home school section “so we don’t have a negative impact on schools that are doing things right,” explained Rep. Lehman. “There are a lot of schools where we are seeing evidence of students in their senior year who are not on track to graduate being moved out to a home school so they don’t have a negative impact on the graduation rate,” said Rep. Lehman, who added, “Some of those percentages are extremely high.” If at least 10% of students exit to home-school from a small high school with a cohort of 100 students or less or at least five percent of students exit to home-school from a large high school with a cohort of more than 100 students – and the applicable students are not on track to graduate with their cohort – then the high school must appear before the State Board of Education. The State Board will review the data, and unless the high school can demonstrate good cause, the State Board must order that the students who withdrew to home-school be counted as dropouts.

● The Senate voted to approve House Bill 1029 after tacking on a Second Reading amendment to require all employees who have direct, ongoing contact with children to receive training on seizure recognition and response at least once every five years and within 30 days of starting employment. The training requirements must be consistent with the programs and guidelines developed by the Epilepsy Foundation of America or a successor organization.

□ The bill provides that if a school receives a seizure management and treatment plan for a student that was developed by the student’s health care provider, the school shall develop an individual health plan for the student that applies to the student during the school day or while the student is participating in a school-sponsored activity. Moreover, a school nurse, or the school nurse’s designee, must be available to perform the tasks necessary to implement the student’s individual health plan during the school day or while the student is participating in a school-sponsored activity.

● Indiana would adopt and implement the Praxis teacher licensing exams by September 1, 2021, under Senate Bill 532, which was approved by the House Education Committee.

● The Indiana House votes 93-3 to create a school referendum option specific to safety and security enhancements in an amount not to exceed 10¢ per $100 of assessed valuation. Senate Bill 127 previously passed the Senate 42-7.

□ The bill also picked up language on its journey expanding the purpose of the Secured School Fund to support a school corporation or charter school in providing “a response to a threat in a manner that the school corporation or charter school sees fit, including firearms training or other self-defense training.”

- The Indiana House was set to approve Senate Bill 390, authorizing civil penalties against an exclusive representative or school employer who commits an unfair labor practice. The civil penalties are intended to deter teachers' unions from intimidating teachers who are trying to organize a second union, explained the bill's author, Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem. Eric Hylton, a partner with Riley Bennett Egloff LLP, and lead counsel for the Indiana State Teachers Association for more than 20 years, testified in committee that the bill was a solution in search of a problem, since there has never been an unfair labor practice complaint found against a local ISTA affiliate in all his years.

□ Collective bargaining negotiations would occur at public meetings in accordance with the Open Door Law, under an amendment added to the bill by the House Committee on Education. The parties would be allowed up to three private meetings to conduct contract negotiations. Hylton said that negotiating in public will squelch the ability of parties to openly and honestly discuss issues and may actually lead to less money going into teacher paychecks. By making negotiations public, this is going to make teachers pull back and not ask for what they should because they will fear losing their job if they publicly criticize and push back against administrators, he warned. Moreover, there are certain issues that cannot be discussed in public because of teacher and student confidentiality, he added. Republican legislators who backed the amendment claimed that transparency in the process would be a net positive.

□ On Second Reading, the controversial changes were walked back, as the House approved an amendment offered up by Rep. Ed Clere (R) of New Albany allowing collective bargaining to continue to be conducted in private only after holding at least one collective bargaining session in public. Once the parties reach a tentative collective bargaining agreement, the school board must hold a public hearing and take public testimony 48 hours before ratifying the agreement. Education panel chair Bob Behning (R) of Indianapolis explained on Second Reading that the parties will have a public meeting up front, and then on the back end, once the school board is ready to ratify, the board has to take public testimony. "I think it's a real opportunity for the public to get involved and probably direct more attention to teacher salaries," said Behning. The Indiana State Teachers Association griped that "there is little that could exemplify more distrust of teachers than to restrict their ability to negotiate with their employer on the one subject they are still permitted to bargain - salary and wages. This bill is another example of the General Assembly's efforts to remove local control and become the state's single school board."

□ The Education committee also tacked on an amendment offered by Rep. Woody Burton (R) of Greenwood guaranteeing speech-to-text accommodation on the statewide exam for certain students. Rep. Burton indicated that he worked on the language with Cheryl Clemens of Decoding Dyslexia, who resides in his district. Sen. Houchin also has a son with dyslexia. But Charity Flores, director of assessment for the Indiana Department of Education, warned in testimony that it could undermine the integrity of ILEARN.

- Bose Public Affairs Group files a federal lobby registration on behalf of the Metropolitan School District of Washington Township to lobby Congress on "Issues related to school safety compliance."

IN Courts & Conduct . . .

- The mother of a 15-year-old who took a handgun to Blackford High School has been sentenced to four years in prison after pleading guilty to dangerous control of a child. The teen took the weapon to school on October 30, resulting in a lockdown and delay in student dismissal.

- A former Haubstadt Community School Parent Teacher Organization president pleaded guilty to two Level 6 felony counts of theft in Gibson County Superior Court last week, and part of her plea agreement will be a restitution order of $15,282.55 to the PTSO.

IN Higher Education

IN General . . .

- IUPUI will close the Confucius Institute on its Indianapolis campus. Confucius Institutes are located on nearly 100 college campuses nationwide, are operated by China's Education Ministry, and offer Chinese language and culture classes.

□ U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) applauded the IUPUI closure, as well as the news that the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) will sever ties with Chinese firms Huawei and ZTE. "For too long, U.S. universities have turned a blind eye to the snakes in the grass, like Huawei and ZTE, and the propaganda messaging through Confucius Institutes," said the Indiana University alum. "The Chinese Communist Party in Beijing knows that U.S. universities are home to important research, some of which involves sensitive national security information funded by U.S. federal departments. By using businesses and cultural exchanges as fronts, the Chinese government infiltrates these institutions and steal our nation's intellectual property and secrets. Thanks to the necessary steps by IUPUI and MIT, more schools are waking up to this reality, and I suspect many more will follow their lead."

- Vice President Mike Pence (R) will be the commencement speaker for Taylor University on May 18.

- The Fort Wayne campus of International Business College - which dates back to 1889 - will close after February 2020. IBC primarily offers associate degrees. The school plans to continue operating its Indianapolis campus at Shadeland Station.

- The Indiana State Board of Education grants approval to the Relay Graduate School of Education to operate a two-year Teacher Residency program in Indianapolis as a transition to teaching program. The Mind Trust has raised an initial $3.5 million to support the Relay Teaching Residency program, which caters to college graduates and career changers who are seeking a path into the teaching profession. During the first year, residency participants engage in graduate coursework while working towards Indiana certification alongside a Resident Advisor. In their second year, they continue their coursework and advance to leading a classroom of their own. Graduates earn a Master of Arts in Teaching degree. Relay expects that its Indianapolis campus will enroll 20 to 30 teacher residents for its Fall 2019 cohort and expects the program will grow over time.

□ On the same day that Relay gained SBOE approval, the Indiana House unanimously concurred with Senate amendments to House Bill 1009, which establishes a teacher residency pilot program administered by the Indiana Commission for Higher Education. The state budget is expected to appropriate $1 million to fund teacher residencies on a pilot basis.

- The 2019 College Readiness Report released by the Indiana Commission for Higher Education shows that remediation rates are dramatically down – 12% of students in the class of 2017 who went directly to college needed remediation, compared to 28% in 2012.

- College-going rates are on the decline – 63% of the 2017 graduating class enrolled in college, compared to 64% in the class of 2016 and 65% from the class of 2015.

- Students who earn a more rigorous high school diploma are more likely to go to college – 93% of the 26,398 students who graduated with an Honors Diploma enrolled in college within a year of graduating high school compared to only 53% of the 38,046 students who earned a Core 40 Diploma and 18% of the 8,794 students with a General diploma.

- Among the 1,308 students who graduated high school with a General Diploma and enrolled directly in an Indiana public college, 44% needed remediation, vs. only three percent of Honors Diploma recipients and 18% with a Core 40 Diploma.

- The annual report shows that 45.9% of high school graduates who enrolled in college selected an Indiana public school and 8.8% chose an Indiana school in the private non-profit sector. Among those who enrolled in an Indiana public college, 69% were pursuing a bachelor's degree, and 28% were going for an associate's degree.

IN Administration . . .

- Look for Purdue University Northwest to soon release recommendations for a new strategic plan that's being dubbed Imagine PNW.

- The University of Notre Dame will deploy walk-through metal detectors at all gates of Notre Dame Stadium during the 2019 football season. The metal detectors will be in use at all home football games, men's and women's basketball games in Purcell Pavilion at the Joyce Center, and hockey games at Compton Family Ice Arena. This policy may also be in effect for other events in those locations or other campus venues on a case-by-case basis.

IN Programs & Policy . . .

- The Cook Group partners with Western Governors University to provide Cook employees with the opportunity to earn a tuition-free bachelor's or master's degree. The new opportunity is part of the education component of My Cook Pathway, Cook's award-winning workforce development program. "One of the goals of My Cook Pathway is to make it possible for someone to come to Cook without a high school diploma and get all the way through a master's degree at no cost to them," said Nicky James, vice president of Human Resources and Talent Development.

- Beginning June 1, any Cook Group employee graduating with an associate's degree from Ivy Tech Community College can attend WGU to earn a bachelor's degree for free if they begin within six months of graduating from Ivy Tech. Employees who graduate with a bachelor's degree from WGU can continue their education and earn a master's degree from WGU at no cost if they begin within 12 months of graduating.

- Bethel College will launch five new programs in Fall 2019 in computer science, cyber security, business marketing, sport administration, and English as a New Language.

- The Indiana University Board of Trustees approves a trio of new degrees: a Bachelor of Science in atmospheric science at IU Bloomington; a Bachelor of Science in applied data and information science at IUPUI; and a Master of Science in speech-language pathology at IU South Bend.

- An Indiana Wesleyan University task force charged with creating an engineering degree hopes to submit a proposal by next school year, reports the Marion Chronicle-Tribune. The program as currently envisioned would focus on mechanical, electrical, and biomedical engineering and would be housed in the former Tucker Career Center building that IWU purchased last year from the Marion Community Schools for $200,000.

- The University of Evansville unveils a new 12-month Masters of Engineering (M.Eng.) graduate program slated to begin in the Fall. The professional degree program will offer three options: Master of Engineering – Electrical Engineering, Master of Engineering – Computer Engineering, and Master of Engineering – Computer Science.

- Admission requires an undergraduate degree in electrical engineering, computer engineering, or computer science. The program cost will be $525 per credit hour.

- Indiana University Bloomington and Ivy Tech Community College expand the Hoosier Link pathway, allowing Indiana residents to transfer to IUB after one semester at Ivy Tech Bloomington if they earn a 3.0 grade point average or higher in 15 transferrable credit hours. Currently, freshmen accepted into the Hoosier Link program are required to live on the IU Bloomington campus while earning credits from Ivy Tech. This on-campus model will continue and, starting in August, the program will expand to include students who live off-campus, who may have family responsibilities or other obligations and live in the south-central Indiana community.

IN Gifts and Fundraising . . .

- The Indiana University School of Art, Architecture + Design in Bloomington has been renamed the Sidney and Lois Eskenazi School of Art, Architecture + Design in recognition of a $20 million gift from Sidney and Lois Eskenazi.

- Members of the Ball State community came together on April 9 to raise about 3,770 gifts totaling almost $425,000 as part of the One Ball State Day – a 24-hour fundraiser for the University.

IN Construction & Facilities . . .

- Look for a May vote from the Wabash College Board of Trustees on a new campus master plan calling for demolition of Wolcott Hall, Morris Hall, and the Sparks Center to make way for a new Campus Commons facility featuring, among other amenities, a pub, recreation room, bookstore, dining options, and event space. The master plan also charts out the addition of 100 beds to Center Hall and increased spectator capacity at Hollett Little Giant Stadium. Overall, the campus would see expanded gathering areas, enhanced pathways, and improved parking and pedestrian street crossings.

- A new apartment complex opening on the Purdue University campus features an integrated smart home experience allowing students and residents to control access, apartment locks, lights, thermostats, and outlets using their smartphone. The private, $86 million, three-building, 835-bed complex is located in the new Discovery Park District. Balfour Beatty Campus Solutions is developing Aspire at Discovery Park, which is slated to open in mid-August.

- The Indiana University Board of Trustees approved the architectural design for the North Grandstand facility at Bill Armstrong Stadium on the Bloomington campus. The new, two-story building will house support spaces for the men's and women's soccer teams, including locker rooms, training room and offices, and will also include an event space of about 800 gross square feet on the second level, overlooking the soccer field and track. Existing structures on the east and west sides will be renovated to provide bicycle support space for the Little 500 race on the east side and universally accessible public restrooms on the west side.

- Indiana University receives a $10.9 million grant from the Lilly Endowment for major renovations to the Lilly Library located on the Bloomington campus.

- The library of rare books and manuscripts has not had any significant interior improvements since its completion nearly 60 years ago.

- IUPUI breaks ground April 23 on the Multidisciplinary Research and Classroom Building to be located on the eastern edge of campus on what is now a parking lot. Construction is not expected to be finished until August 2020.

IN Government . . .

- Two scholarship programs died in the second half of session.

- House Bill 1064 authored by Rep. Randy Frye (R) of Greensburg, a retired firefighter, would have allowed all public safety professionals to attend Ivy Tech tuition free, beginning with the FY 2022-23 session. Once it was clear that Senate leadership did not intend to give HB 1064 a hearing, Rep. Frye prepared a Second Reading amendment to Senate Bill 420 that would have authorized a full tuition scholarship to Ivy Tech for just volunteer firefighters, not all public safety officials. Passage of the amended language would have made it eligible for conference committee, but Rep. Frye ultimately decided not to call it down.

- Nonetheless, we understand that Ivy Tech President Sue Ellspermann, has committed to finding $250,000 to fund scholarships for volunteer firefighters.

- Senate Bill 188 would have created a Nursing Faculty Loan Repayment Grant Program to increase the number of nursing faculty members teaching in the field of nursing education. Authored by Sen. Vaneta Becker (R) of Evansville, SB 188 passed the Senate 48-1 and moved out of the House Education Committee 12-0 . . . but never received a hearing in the House Committee on Ways and Means.

- Commissioner of the Indiana Commission for Higher Education Teresa Lubbers delivered her annual State of Higher Education address on April 9. In it, she observed that the "most critical issue facing our state" is "the imperative to develop human capital." Pointing to the 1.5 million working age Hoosiers without a credential beyond high school, she said Indiana must "better serve these adults" by embracing "prior learning assessments and competency based education that value knowledge gained through experience."

- Her parents would have fit into the category of working-age Hoosiers without a postsecondary credential, Lubbers explained. "My Dad sold cars for a living and later managed or owned his own dealerships. Until Indiana's blue law passed requiring that automobile dealerships be closed on Sunday, he worked 7 days and 6 nights every week. He provided job opportunities to more people than I know, but the economy shifted and many people who were employed in the auto industry - either making or selling cars - saw job opportunities shrink. It's also important to say that new job opportunities were created, but many people were left behind because they did not receive the preparation needed in a dynamic international marketplace. Vehicle sales actually doubled during the period of 1947 and 1972, as more cars were available at less cost for more people. But without the necessary investment in our people, as jobs changed and manufacturing moved into a new era, we witnessed a decline in both jobs and per capita income."

- Commissioner Lubbers continued, "My mother's story, on the other hand, is a different one. Smart as a whip and hard-working too, she transitioned from a secretary to motherhood to a return to work that included stints in both the financial and educational sectors. Like my Dad, she worked the number of hours necessary to do the job right. She learned new skills on the job, but never had the opportunity - or really the need - to return for more formal education. It's safe to say that by the end of my parents' careers, the job requirements for their roles had changed substantially. The hard work they displayed was still necessary, but not sufficient for the qualifications needed in the new economy. In many ways, this is the story of our state and where we find ourselves today."

- Hoosiers are "at a crossroads," said Indiana University and Harvard University alum Lubbers, who was appointed as commissioner in 2009 after 16 years in the Indiana Senate. She pointed to a string of college closures, declining birth rates, pressures to address workforce talent pool needs, unacceptably high student loan debt burdens, and emerging alternative providers and models. The "disruption" that is now underway "must be met with a new higher education compact," she said, "one that provides more people with affordable and flexible learning options while preserving quality and advancing economic opportunity" while at the same time "offering more personalized, more 'just in time' and more continuous learning."

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) is part of a bipartisan trio that includes U.S. Sens. Michael Bennet (D-CO) and Tim Scott (R-SC) introducing the “Fund for Innovation and Success in Higher Education (FINISH) Act,” legislation that they believe will spur innovation in the higher education system. The measure would allow the U.S. secretary of education to approve up to five Pay-for-Success pilot initiatives each fiscal year and authorize evidence-based grants to support initiatives that increase access to higher education for high-need students, increase degree attainment, and improve efficiency in higher ed systems. Institutions would partner with intermediary organizations – a non-profit, school district, SEA, or consortium of groups – to qualify for early-phase grants, mid-phase grants, and expansion grants. The bill would also encourage institutions to make all forms of post-secondary instructional content widely available. “Currently higher education is falling short in serving our most vulnerable students,” Sen. Young contends. “The FINISH Act helps to reform this broken system by using incentives to adopt innovative solutions with a track record of success. This bill works to ensure our students have the tools to finish a credential or degree pathway – not just start. It’s a win-win for our students and educators as well as our economy.”

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) and U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) introduce companion versions of the “Pell Flexibility Act of 2019,” seeking to allow the use of Pell dollars to subsidize student enrollment in short-term workforce training programs. Under the proposed pilot, Title IV-eligible institutions with programs between 320-600 hours in length could apply to the U.S. Department of Education to participate. The bill proposes limiting Pell flexibility to eight programs per institution. Institutions must demonstrate that their programs address the skills gap by using evaluations from the Bureau of Labor and Statistics Office of Employment Projections, local and regional workforce needs assessments created under recent updates to Title V of the Perkins Act, Workforce Investment Boards, or other state agencies. The program would be monitored and evaluated by federal education officials, and a report would be issued to relevant congressional committees using both qualitative and quantitative evidence indicating retention rates and job placement rates in relevant fields. “As a business owner who has hired hundreds in my career, I know first-hand there is a workforce skills gap,” observes Sen. Braun, explaining. “This legislation will address that crisis, improve job placement and reduce student debt by prioritizing skills-based programs.” Rep. Banks, a member of the House Committee on Education and Labor, adds “There are currently 100,000 jobs in Indiana that are unfilled due to a worker shortage in technical and skilled fields. We need to do more to equip students with the knowledge and training they need to find a job after graduation, and that begins with restructuring federal grant money to prioritize highly demanded skills. Pell Grant flexibility is a common-sense step in the right direction, and is a top priority of our Governor,” he notes.

IN Transition . . .

● Corning, Inc. Executive Vice President Christine M. Pambianchi joins the Lumina Foundation board of directors.

● The Indianapolis-based Strada Education Network, a national social impact entity dedicated to strengthening pathways between education and employment, adds three new board members.

□ Signing on are Sureel Choksi, president and CEO of Vantage Data Centers in Denver; Wade Dyke, chief executive of Great Heart Academies, the nation’s largest classical charter school network; and former Delaware Gov. Jack Markell (D).

● As it prepares to kick off a new strategic plan, Complete College America announces that Senior Vice President Sarah Ancel will depart for a new role in consulting. She joined CCA in 2016 from the Indiana Commission for Higher Education and served as CCA’s interim co-president after the passing of founding president Stan Jones.

● Youngstown State University names Brien Smith, dean of the Scott College of Business at Indiana State University, as its new provost. Prior to joining ISU, Smith was at Ball State University for 23 years, serving as assistant chairman of the department of management, assistant dean for graduate programs, chairman of the department of marketing and management and associate dean of the Miller College of Business.

● Indiana University Bloomington appoints Rick Van Kooten as executive dean of the College of Arts and Sciences starting July 1. Van Kooten, who currently serves as vice provost for research, replaces Larry Singell, who recently accepted a position as senior vice provost for research management at the University of Texas at Austin. Van Kooten is a physicist and served as chair of the Department of Physics before becoming vice provost.

● Andrew Klein, dean of the Indiana University McKinney School of Law since July 2013, announces he will step down in June 2020. After a leave of absence, he intends to return to the law school as a faculty member.

● Ivy Tech Community College Greencastle select Jacob Widner as its new Associate Accelerated Program (ASAP) associate director.

● Dr. Tania Basta becomes the new dean of Western Kentucky University’s College of Health and Human Services. Dr. Basta, who has served as chair of the Department of Social and Public Health for the College of Health Sciences and Professions at Ohio University since 2017, earned her master of public health degree in Community Health Education (2003) from Indiana University.

Ethics lessons going forward

What we learned (and didn't) from 2019 House Committee on Ethics

The House Committee on Ethics, in a unanimous and bipartisan decision, voted to dismiss the complaint filed by former House Democratic floor leader Linda Lawson (D) against Speaker Brian Bosma (R) "regarding his use of campaign funds to hire an attorney to defend himself against false allegations," as a statement from his office framed it.

The charges have been well-documented, and there was little doubt that the ethics panel would dismiss them after the Indiana Election Commission issued a similar unanimous and bipartisan decision in January to dismiss a similar complaint. But more important than the final action of the panel in this matter was the process that it employed to get there, and what it portends going forward.

Bear in mind that the House ethics committee has largely been symbolic in nature, a last line of defense that could be deployed only in the most dire of circumstances, and largely serving as a paper tiger – an ethics "card" of sorts that could be played to show that the body had an entity in charge of dealing with uncomfortable issues . . . although such matters only rarely arose.

Perhaps the two most significant instances of the committee being involved in probes were the inconclusive 1990 "Jobs for Votes" investigation (with a parallel federal inquiry) overseen by then-Rep. Dennis Heeke (D) as chair, and the 1996 reprimands issued under the tenure of then-Rep. Jeff Linder (R) to two lawmakers for their respective transgressions (which ultimately boiled down to incomplete disclosure of certain relationships on personal financial disclosure form; one legislator was from such a safe district that it was of no practical impact, while the other was ultimately indicted for conduct that was part of the same issue).

Neither round produced much in the way of precedent, and since any major (or even minor) ethics panel actions are so few and far between, and because the panel was specifically reconstituted and seemingly re-empowered in the #MeToo era, we thought it would be helpful to note what we learned in a procedural nature from the just-completed review involving the Speaker.

● Investigations May Span Sessions. While the preferred parliamentary view is that a legislative body is not a continuing body, and that it effectively starts fresh after each election, the complaint acted upon by this "new" ethics panel (only two of the six members were on the committee before the 2018 election) was filed in October. Ordinarily that would mean that the complaint would have failed for lack of action before the end of the last term for members of the House, or that the complaint would need to be refiled, but that did not seem to be a factor here.

● The Committee Can Retain Outside Counsel. The panel retained Bonnie L. Martin, an employment law specialist at Ogletree Deakin, to conduct an independent review of the allegations raised in the complaint. Panel rules allow the committee to "obtain the assistance of other individuals with appropriate training or experience" (which we would presume to include such assistance as a private investigator, informational technology expert, or forensic accountant depending upon the nature of a complaint and circumstances of a given situation), but we're not sure about the details.

Our health insurance gap

IN counties lag neighbors in coverage

Fully one-fourth (23) of Indiana's 92 counties have a 10.1% or greater estimated uninsured rate for the population under age 65, according to 2017 data released by the U.S. Census Bureau on Tuesday.

Nationally, more than one-third (38.4%) of all U.S. counties fell into this category. These findings come from the Small Area Health Insurance Estimates (SAHIE) program, the only source for single-year estimates of the number of people with and without health insurance coverage for each of the nation's 3,141 counties.

LaGrange County (where at least 20.1% are uninsured) and Daviess County (at least 15.1% uninsured) lead the state in this category. The problem is spread throughout the state, with counties on our borders with Michigan, Illinois, Ohio, and Kentucky all among those with at least 10.1% uninsured, as well as some in Central Indiana.

While it might appear that Indiana is in good stead as a result, only one county in Michigan (in the Upper Peninsula) and two in Ohio are at 1.1% or greater uninsured, while no counties in Illinois or Kentucky are in such straits.

If the panel votes to hire an attorney or other consultant, can it choose its own? Must it be signed off on by the Legislative Council? Is this a Legislative Services Agency decision? Is there a cap on cost? The committee engaged in some process here to retain Martin, and that sets some kind of precedent.

- The Committee Apparently has an External Budget. Tied in with the retention of external counsel is the question of budget. How much of a budget does the panel have? If the Commission undertakes an investigation, from where can it access funds, to what extent, and with what approval? Can it come to the Legislative Council or even each chamber of the General Assembly and seek and obtain an appropriation?

- The Committee Can Investigate Complaints from Non-Members. Some legislative ethics panels will only investigate complaints from members, and even executive Branch ethics commission may place limits on precisely who may initiate an investigation. While complainant Linda Lawson was a member when she initiated the complaint, she was not a member – and it was an entirely new ethics committee composition – when the complaint was investigated, confirming the operation of House Rule 174 – that the complainant can come from outside the General Assembly (the Rule says that the “committee may act upon a complaint from any person”) leaving open the question of whether the panel can initiate investigations de novo (query whether a unanimous (or majority or even tie vote) of the three Republican - three Democrat panel is needed to undertake a probe.

- Threshold Issues Can be Delegated. While the full committee itself voted on the final decision, it apparently used the external counsel inquiry to offer a recommendation at the threshold as to whether reasonable cause existed to even conduct an investigation. What we don’t know (and will never know because of committee confidentiality provisions) is whether the outside counsel investigated the actual substance of the complaint and decided that it was legally insufficient, or if she simply reviewed the complaint and spoke with the alleged victim and some associated with that person (the Indianapolis Star reports such interviews occurred) before suggesting to the committee that the complaint failed to meet the legal standard for going forward . . . and the Lawson complaint seemed a bit broad and tenuous.

- Panel Members Can Vote Even if Potentially Conflicted. Last October, virtually the entire House Republican Caucus signed a letter expressing their faith and confidence in the Speaker in this matter, yet all three members of the committee who voted to clear Speaker Bosma this month had effectively pre-judged him before the investigation. The attorney representing the alleged victim had sought their recusal. This suggests that there will be little that could be grounds for disqualifying an ethics committee member beyond an inquiry in which the individual member is “the subject of a complaint,” as spelled out in the rules.

Indeed, after the 1996 reprimand vote, the ethics chair wrote to constituents, “To be very honest, I felt horrible about having to make that decision, and at times I felt like I was deserting one of my best friends,” describing him as “not just a friend of mine; he is one of my very best friends.” The then-chair added, “He is honorable, and despite the fact that I led the committee that voted to reprimand him, I would trust him with anything and everything I have.”

Some would say that this indicates solons can judge friends; others would point to the later indictment of the reprimanded lawmaker as evidence that colleagues have a difficult enough time sitting in judgment of their own, much less if they have already pronounced a verdict before hearing the evidence.

- Amount of Input from Parties Remains Uncertain. In 1996, the ethics committee was criticized for running a draft set of findings by attorneys for the accused, who then provided suggestions on reframing some of the language. Because the 2019 process was so secretive and materials deemed confidential by House rules, we have no way of knowing whether attorneys for the complainant, alleged victim, or accused were offered an opportunity to comment on draft dismissal language, and, if so, whether their comments were incorporated in whole or in part.

Even if there was no opportunity for input, because this was a dismissal decision, the 1996 precedent involving an actual sanction could perhaps be relied upon by an attorney for one of the parties in seeking to influence the final language of a decision, particularly because the reprimand itself was apparently unique – the panel chair at the time labeled the action “the first time anyone has been reprimanded or admonished by the House of Representatives”

- Reasons for Dismissal Don’t Have to be Detailed. As Kaitlin Lange wrote in Indianapolis Star, “In its statement, the committee didn’t elaborate on the extent to which its decision involved a lack of evidence to support the allegation or whether the allegation itself would violate House ethics rules. [Committee Chair Sharon] Negele argued that the committee followed procedures laid out under Indiana law. ‘We followed those procedures and the result was, it was dismissed,’ she said. Negele said anything further about how or why the committee arrived at its decision is confidential.”

The letter to the Speaker – signed by all six members – spelling out an end to the panel investigation concluded this way: “Based upon the report submitted by outside counsel, the Committee found that reasonable cause does not exist to support the alleged violation, and the complaint is dismissed. All investigations and records of the Committee are confidential.”

- Unanimous Decisions and Public Votes. Unanimous decisions by a committee like this are always best for impact, precedent, and public confidence, and the decision not to pursue charges in this instance was unanimous (one of the 1996 votes was 5-1, perhaps close enough). What was different between the 1996 actions and that of 2019: the ethics panel in 1996 held public sessions and a public vote; there was no such transparency this year.

IN Mayoral Races . . .

- The Hamilton County Election Board will review allegations of bribery (or whatever you might call it) in the Carmel mayoral primary race – but only after the contest is over. Hamilton County Democrats seek an Indiana State Police investigation. Meanwhile, a very negative website is deployed against the incumbent linked via mobile platform ads.

IN the Presidential Race . . .

● The Drudge Report seems to have developed an April fixation with South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D), highlighting assorted appearances, pronouncements, and policies on the influential web page, and likely introducing Mayor Pete to a new audience. Drudge is not unique among conservative influencers; The Resurgent's Erick Erickson spent much of the top-line space in his daily missives trying to take down Mayor Pete in the last week or so, and Laura Ingraham has been out front slamming Buttigieg for being "sanctimonious and self-righteous" and labeling him as a pawn of the leftist media. Even The American Conservative explains that although he discusses his Christian faith in his campaign, there is little to distinguish Mayor Pete and his fellow "religious" liberals from secular liberals on policy . . . Mayor "Buttigieg's rise continues," reports Morning Consult. "He is up to 5 percent of the vote share among all Democratic primary voters, his third straight week of growth" in the Morning Consult tracking polls, and good enough for sixth place, despite not having been an official candidate at that point . . . we've been surprised to see national writers (who didn't dig very deep) diss hizzoner over how South Bend employment growth since the fiscal crisis of 2008-09 lagged the meteoric rise of nearby communities Elkhart and Goshen, which were crushed by RV-related job losses in the recession, and boosted by new investments by the industry later in the recovery (they might want to more fairly stack up Elkhart-Goshen metro unemployment rates during the period to any other metro nationally and see if any outpaced that remarkable turnaround). At the same time, we've also been wondering when any national writers will take a deep dive into the complicated SB police internal wiretapping scandal that took a lot of Mayor Pete's time during his tenure, and which produced lots of documents in litigation that we presume opposition researchers have already started poring through . . . the Pence-Pete public posturing escalates, with Mayor Pete ramping up discussion of his religious differences with VPOTUS, Indiana Republican Party Chair Kyle Hupfer dredging up a litany of kind quotes that the then-governor had to say about Mayor Pete, and Second Lady Karen Pence finally wading in to use a national Fox Radio show appearance last week to tell America that people "shouldn't be attacked for what your religious beliefs are" . . . the Monmouth University Iowa poll released Thursday and covering April 4-9 found Mayor Pete in third place (tops under the age of 75), but the key element, according to the poll director in a live CNN interview, was an "incredibly high favorable rating among those who know him." A new New Hampshire poll by the Saint Anselm College Survey Center's New Hampshire Institute of Politics shows him in the double-digits behind the same two.

IN Brief

IN Federal Circles . . .

● U.S. Sen. Todd Young (R) is part of a bipartisan trio that includes U.S. Sens. Michael Bennet (D-CO), and Tim Scott (R-SC) introducing the "Fund for Innovation and Success in Higher Education (FINISH) Act," legislation that they believe will spur innovation in the higher education system. The bipartisan measure would support the use of evidence-based innovation grants and the pay-for-success model to improve student outcomes. "Currently higher education is falling short in serving our most vulnerable students," Sen. Young contends. "The FINISH Act helps to reform this broken system by using incentives to adopt innovative solutions with a track record of success. This bill works to ensure our students have the tools to finish a credential or degree pathway – not just start. It's a win-win for our students and educators as well as our economy." The legislation would authorize tiered evidence-based grants to support initiatives that increase access to higher education for high-need students, increase degree attainment, and improve efficiency in higher ed systems. Institutions would partner with intermediary organizations – a non-profit, school district, SEA, or consortium of groups – to qualify for early-phase grants, mid-phase grants, and expansion grants awarded to accomplish these goals. The bill would also encourage institutions to make all forms of post-secondary instructional content widely available, expected to result in significant cost-savings for students and increased efficiency to higher ed institutions. The measure would allow the U.S. secretary of education to approve up to five Pay-for-Success (PFS) pilot initiatives each fiscal year, which would allow grant recipients to partner with outside organizations to achieve the goals of federally funded higher education grant programs. In order to receive federal grant dollars, grant recipients must show concrete achievement of measurable outcomes. Finally, the bill provides additional evaluation authority by having the director of the Institute of Education Sciences, on a biennial basis, develop an evaluation plan for these innovation initiatives . . . Sen. Young took to the Senate floor Wednesday to tell colleagues that “Since Republicans passed the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act, 3.2 million new jobs have been created. Our 3.8 percent unemployment rate is near a 50-year low. The unemployment rate for women in particular matches the lowest rate since 1953. And jobless claims have recently dropped to the lowest level since 1969. Additionally, manufacturing job creation was the highest in 2018 that it has been in over twenty years. As the most manufacturing intensive state in the nation, this is particularly good news for people in my home state of Indiana” . . . Sen. Young joins U.S. Sen. Thom Tillis (R-NC) to introduce the “Protect Act” with the cosponsorship of 16 other Republican senators. This legislation would amend the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) to protect Americans with pre-existing conditions. “When it comes to healthcare, Hoosiers want freedom, choice, and flexibility. We also want to protect people with pre-existing conditions,” said Sen. Young, who explains this legislation “will help ensure patients with pre-existing conditions aren’t denied coverage.” The Protect Act would guarantee the availability of health insurance coverage in the individual or group market, regardless of pre-existing conditions; prohibit discrimination against patients based on health status – including prohibiting increased premiums for patients due to pre-existing conditions; and prohibit insurance companies from excluding coverage of treatments for a beneficiary’s pre-existing condition . . . Sen. Young characterizes the U.S. Department of Homeland Security management changes as “turnover” and not a purge to Major Garrett of CBS News, saying DHS has been “absolutely strained over the last several years” due to the “crisis” at the southern border . . . Sen. Young introduces S. 1020, a measure to expand access to workplace retirement plans by giving small employers more flexibility when setting up 401K plans for their employees. The Young bill would also make it easier for savers to auto enroll into long-term savings plans and more quickly escalate their savings. “In order to improve retirement security, we must start by reforming and improving access to retirement plans,” said Sen. Young. “This legislation will help ensure families have the necessary tools to save for the days ahead.” His bill is part of a bipartisan package of bills introduced by U.S. Sens. Cory Booker (D-NJ), Tom Cotton (R-AR), and Doug Jones (D-AL) to help boost retirement security for individuals and families. Last Congress, the trio of senators Young, Booker and Cotton introduced a suite of similar legislation . . . Sen. Young and three fellow members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Sens. Ed Markey (D-MA), Marco Rubio (R-FL), and Tim Kaine (D-VA), introduce legislation to ensure that Congress has the legislative authority to review all materials related to so-called “Part 810 authorizations,” and is aware when the U.S. government authorizes persons or companies to transfer certain nuclear technologies and services to governments overseas. Part 810 agreements authorize the transfer of nuclear technologies and information related to the production of “special nuclear materials” as defined in Title I of the Atomic Energy Act. Some authorizations, which are approved by the Secretary of Energy, may be non-public and can thus be withheld from Congressional oversight. “The transfer of nuclear technology overseas poses a major threat to our security as a nation and demands rigorous Congressional oversight,” said Sen. Young. “This bipartisan legislation would ensure that the transfer of nuclear technology or expertise to foreign countries, like Saudi Arabia, cannot move forward without Congressional review. Nuclear technology is too sensitive and the risks are too great to allow for these agreements to move forward in the dark.” Specifically, the legislation would amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 to require the secretary of energy, with the concurrence of the secretary of state, submit a quarterly report to Congress summarizing any 810 authorizations reviewed and approved or rejected during the previous quarter (and the U.S. Department of Energy must also submit all 810 applications submitted to the Department for review). The Department must also retroactively turn over all 810 authorizations and applications dating back to 2015 when it most recently revised its 810 application review process. Congress would also be authorized to request that any 810 application-pending or approved-by turned over to Congress within 10 days.

● U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) joined Bloomberg Markets: Balance of Power with David Westin earlier this month to discuss the status of his plan to lower prescription drug costs through transparency and the state of the battle over health care in Washington, and then took time to speak with Abigail Robertson live on CBN News to discuss the Republican path to repealing and replacing the Affordable Care Act, as well as how to bring the healthcare industry onboard through price transparency to, as he described it, avoid government-run insurance for all . . . Sen. Braun tells the Wall Street Journal of the Federal Reserve Board confirmation challenge facing pizza magnate Herman Cain, “Everything I’ve seen so far looks like it’s got an uphill climb” . . . as he marks his 100th day in the Senate, Sen. Braun tells Tim George and Ed Breen on WBAT 1400-AM’s Good Morning Grant County show in Marion that “it’s a little more dysfunctional and kind of gummed-up than what I thought.” As for draining the swamp, “that’s going to be a long-term endeavor, labeling “the swamp” as “so built-in . . .” He says “something needs to change” to eliminate “nearly trillion-dollar deficits” and move important legislation. As for health care, he explains, “Conservatives and Republicans, I think, have been apologists for the health care industry . . . we lack credibility.” He says he has long wanted industry to “embrace competition transparency, fix yourself” before the other side wants to make the federal government your only business partner.” Pre-existing coverage, no lifetime cap, and keeping children on plans are key pillars of Obamacare that he insists need to remain in a new GOP plan. “We’ll have egg on our face again in 2020” if Republicans fail to offer a “credible alternative” health care program to “Medicare for All.” He wants to challenge health care industries that conservatives have traditionally “given cover to” . . . Americans for Prosperity-Indiana launched a new campaign advocating solutions for improving America’s infrastructure without imposing new burdens on consumers through a 25¢ per gallon federal gas tax hike, which it contends would impose an undue economic burden on Hoosiers. AFP-IN is also launching digital ads encouraging Sen. Braun, who sits on the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works Subcommittee on Transportation and Infrastructure, to oppose any efforts to increase the gas tax and instead prioritize key reforms that will improve our nation’s infrastructure, including preserving federal infrastructure dollars for targeted construction projects of a national priority; unleashing private investment in infrastructure assets; returning power and responsibility to the states wherever possible; overhauling the regulatory and permitting system to improve outcomes and efficiency; and eliminating costly and unfair labor restrictions.

- After POLITICO raised a series of questions about questionable communications subcontracts approved by Centers for Medicaid Services Administrator Seema Verma – including one subcontract with Marcus Barlow, “whom Verma worked with in Indiana and considered hiring as a top communications official in 2017 before he was blocked by the White House” – the Department of Health and Human Services “is suspending contracts with several GOP-connected communications firms, according to four people with knowledge of the situation, days after a POLITICO report revealed the existence of the contracts. One of the contractors who was hired to boost Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services Administrator Seema Verma’s profile with the media has also abruptly cut ties with the agency, two people with knowledge of the situation” told POLITICO.

- Former IRS commissioner Mark Everson, who later served a stint as Indiana’s commissioner of workforce development during the Daniels Administration, appeared live on CNN Wednesday to discuss whether the President should be required to turn over his tax returns to congressional investigators. “I would,” he said is how he would have responded to the request if he were president (he ran a quixotic campaign of his own for the job in 2016). “I do believe they are entitled to that information.” While Everson didn’t like the approach the congressional committee took, he suggested that the special counsel had probably already obtained the returns in question, calling such a review “pretty standard for criminal proceedings.” The former downtown Indianapolis resident also noted of his four-year service at the helm of the IRS that the Bush 43 White House “never got anywhere near” him to discuss any matter under his purview, much less being approached on anything like that by the chief of staff.

- U.S. Sen. Mike Braun (R) and U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) introduce companion versions of the “Pell Flexibility Act of 2019,” seeking to reduce student debt and address the widening skills gap by reforming the Pell Grant program to allow for grants to be used by students in skills-based programs. “As a business owner who has hired hundreds in my career, I know first-hand there is a workforce skills gap,” Sen. Braun observes, explaining, “This legislation will address that crisis, improve job placement and reduce student debt by prioritizing skills-based programs.” Sen. Braun tells Tim George and Ed Breen on WBAT 1400-AM’s Good Morning Grant County show in Marion we ship about as many college grads out of Indiana as stay here. He says government needs to promote career and technical education and “not to further promote more four-year degrees that most employers don’t need we’re producing plenty of them.” Rep. Banks, a member of the House Committee on Education and Labor, adds “There are currently 100,000 jobs in Indiana that are unfilled due to a worker shortage in technical and skilled fields. We need to do more to equip students with the knowledge and training they need to find a job after graduation, and that begins with restructuring federal grant money to prioritize highly demanded skills. Pell Grant flexibility is a common-sense step in the right direction, and is a top priority of our Governor,” he notes. Under the pilot program that would be created by the Pell Flexibility Act, Title IV-eligible institutions with programs between 320-600 hours in length would apply to the U.S. Department of Education to participate in the program, with a limit of eight programs at each institution eligible to participate. Institutions must demonstrate that their program(s) addresses the skills gap by using evaluations from the Bureau of Labor and Statistics Office of Employment Projections; local and regional workforce needs assessments created under recent updates to Title V of the Carl D. Perkins Career and Technical Education Act; Workforce Investment Boards; or other state agencies. The program would be monitored and evaluated by federal education officials, and a report issued to relevant congressional committees using both qualitative and quantitative evidence including how these programs meet workforce needs, retention rates, job placement rates in relevant fields, and other pertinent information.

- U.S. Rep. André Carson (D) co-authors the “National Origin-Based Anti-discrimination for Non-immigrants (NO BAN) Act,” a House bill paired with companion legislation in the Senate, to repeal the President’s executive order blocking travel from majority Muslim countries and prevent another such a travel ban from happening again. The measure would repeal the three versions of the President’s travel ban; strengthen the Immigration and Nationality Act to prohibit discrimination on the basis of religion; and restore the separation of powers by limiting overly broad executive authority to issue future travel bans. The legislation is supported by more than 90 members of Congress. “I’m honored to play a leading role in the effort to introduce and pass the No Ban Act,” says Rep. Carson. “As the President’s shameful Muslim ban heads into its third year, the toll it has taken on families, refugees and America’s reputation abroad continues to grow. As a Muslim who is deeply committed to my faith, and an American who believes passionately in the ideals of equality – I cannot simply stand by and let this disgraceful policy continue. That’s why I will work tirelessly to pass our bill and end this shameful chapter in America’s history.”

- U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski (R) saw the House on Tuesday pass the “Building on Reemployment Improvements to Deliver Good Employment (BRIDGE) for Workers Act,” her bipartisan legislation to create more opportunities for working families to get ahead by giving states more flexibility in administering existing unemployment benefits. The bill passed 393 - 24.

● U.S. Rep. Susan Brooks (R) is part of a bipartisan quartet re-introducing the “Keeping Girls in School Act” to support the educational empowerment of girls globally. She joins U.S. Reps. Lois Frankel (D-FL), Brian Fitzpatrick (R-PA), and Nita Lowey (D-NY) in advocating the measure that directs attention to the systemic barriers preventing girls from accessing secondary education, such as child marriage, religious or ethnic discrimination, female genital mutilation, and poor safety traveling to schools. A bipartisan companion bill is being introduced in the Senate. “When girls stay in school their communities are healthier, safer, and more prosperous. In order to cultivate a thriving future for our world, girls’ education and development must be a top priority,” says Rep. Brooks. “When we stand up for women and girls, we help empower them to raise their voices, grasp opportunities and reach new heights. I am proud the Keeping Girls in School Act works to support the economic and educational empowerment of girls around the world while breaking down the barriers that keep girls out of the classroom.” The Keeping Girls in School Act focuses on closing the gender gap for adolescent girls and keeping them in school at the secondary level, a time when girls are most at risk of dropping out of school due to forced marriage, pregnancy, and other family pressures. Specifically, the measure would: (1) Outline and highlights a non-exhaustive list of 14 barriers that girls face in entering and remaining in secondary education institutions; (2) Authorize a budget neutral funding mechanism where USAID is directed to enter into results-based financing and/or traditional grant project proposals to reduce these barriers adolescent girls face (the proposals would use public-private partnerships, development impact bonds, and other innovative financing mechanisms to leverage real results with measurable outcomes); and (3) Require the U.S. Global Strategy to Empower Adolescent Girls be reviewed and updated every five years.

● U.S. Rep. Larry Bucshon (R) voted against passage Wednesday of the “Save the Internet Act,” legislation that passed on a largely party-line vote of 232-190. His office contends that H.R. 1644 “would reimpose heavy-handed regulation to control the internet.” Rep. Bucshon, who has cosponsored a trio of alternative bills, explains what has transpired to this point, and the implications of the measure he opposed: “In 2015, under the Obama Administration, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) abandoned the light-touch regulatory approach to internet governance that both parties had previously pursued for almost two decades. Instead of working toward 21st century solutions to moderate 21st century high tech companies, they opted for an antiquated regulatory scheme designed for the monopoly telephone carriers of the 1930s. This caused investment in internet services to fall by 5.6%, or $3.6 billion.” Rep. Bucshon continues, “It is absolutely critical in a world and economy that is increasingly dependent on broadband internet access that we close the digital divide— especially for those who live in rural America. That is why in 2017, under Chairman Ajit Pai’s leadership, the FCC adopted a rule restoring the light-touch approach to internet regulation, clearing the way for further innovation and investment that ensures a vibrant and competitive marketplace exists. House Democrats are now trying to reverse the ruling of Chairman Pai’s approach and to bring back the same heavy-handed, antiquated regulations that caused the growth of the internet to slow down in the first place – all in the name of protecting consumers. However, you don’t need to impose the heavy hand of Washington to protect consumers. The best way to protect consumers is through a robust and innovative marketplace that gives consumers ample choice, and ... I support several commonsense measures to put in place consumer protections that will guarantee we continue to have free and open internet. The internet is not in need of saving, and contrary to its name, the Save the Internet Act would not rescue the internet. Instead, it would hand over control of the internet to Washington bureaucrats and only further exacerbate the digital divide.”

● U.S. Rep. Jim Banks (R) is not pleased with the use of taxpayer funds to purchase components of Chinese telecommunications company, Huawei Technologies Co. Ltd. by participants in the rural broadband program. Rural communities rely on connectivity from smaller telecommunications companies, some of which, he points out, use components from Huawei. The cheaper equipment gives them an advantage in the rural broadband market. Unfortunately, he points out, the use of Huawei components poses what he considers to be a significant national security threat given the Chinese government’s control of the company. The threats of espionage and cyber warfare via Huawei components is made even greater, his office points out, given the proximity of many of the rural broadband towers to military installations. Says Rep. Banks, “Over 31% of rural Americans don’t have access to broadband. While we build out rural connectivity, it cannot be done at the expense of national security. No more taxpayer funds should be used to purchase Huawei components. That’s why I requested the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Agriculture to take a whole-of-government approach to ensure our national security is not compromised in the pursuit of rural broadband connectivity” ... Rep. Banks reacts to reports that IUPUI will close the Confucius Institute on its campus and that the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) will be severing its ties with Huawei and ZTE. Confucius Institutes are operated by China’s Education Ministry and are a part of the “United Front” – which he says is the Communist Party’s foreign influence operation. With 90 branches on college campuses across America, he says Confucius Institutes exert influence through Chinese language classes and cultural programming. Rep. Banks applauds the moves by the two universities to curb the growth of malicious Chinese government influence on their campuses. For too long, U.S. universities have turned a blind eye to the snakes in the grass, like Huawei and ZTE, and the propaganda messaging through Confucius Institutes. The Chinese Communist Party in Beijing knows that U.S. universities are home to important research, some of which involves sensitive national security information funded by U.S. federal departments. By using businesses and cultural exchanges as fronts, the Chinese government infiltrates these institutions and steal our nation’s intellectual property and secrets. Thanks to the necessary steps by IUPUI and MIT, more schools are waking up to this reality, and I suspect many more will follow their lead” ... Rep. Banks cosponsors the “Protect Medical Innovation Act of 2019,” legislation to repeal the excise tax on medical devices. He says, “Since I first entered Congress, I have been fighting for the permanent repeal of the disastrous medical device tax that has cost 29,000 jobs and made health care more expensive. As the representative of the ‘Orthopedic Capital of the World,’ it is important that we give clarity to medical device makers so ... they can invest in lifesaving innovations. I am proud to support this bipartisan effort to fully eliminate this counterproductive tax once and for all.”

IN State Circles . . .

- The Office of Medicaid Policy and Planning (OMPP) proposes to continue the 3.0% reduction that is currently set to expire on June 30, 2019, for both inpatient and outpatient (excluding ambulatory surgical center reimbursement) hospital services under the Medicaid state plan and state regulations. There will be no public hearing. The 3.0% reduction is anticipated to remain in effect until the end of the next biennium, June 30, 2021. OMPP justifies the change as needed to remain within the available Medicaid appropriation.

- OMPP estimates that the fiscal impact of continuing the 3.0% inpatient rate reduction will be annual savings of state and federal expenditures to the tune of $1.2 million for federal Fiscal Year 2019 (federal share of $800,000 and state share of $400,000) and $4.7 million for FFY 2020 (federal share of $3.1 million and state share of $1.6 million), versus state and federal expenditures without the three percent reduction.

- OMPP estimates that the fiscal impact of continuing the 3.0% outpatient rate reduction will be annual savings of state and federal expenditures of approximately $600,000 for federal Fiscal Year 2019 (federal share of $400,000 and state share of $200,000) and $2.3 million for FFY 2020 (federal share of $1.8 million and state share of $500,000), versus state and federal expenditures without the three percent reduction.

- On April 17, the State Budget Committee will learn just how much money solons should have to play with in the next biennium, as the revenue collection forecast will be released amidst a period marked by seemingly contradictory economic variables and business and consumer confidence levels.

- With some fiscal leaders reviewing general economic data in the last month or so and seeing no definitive trends, trying to decipher conflicting income and employment data, uncertain about the short- or long-term impact of the Tax Cut and Jobs Act on the economy, and hearing different things from constituents about how the economy is affecting them and their businesses and where they expect it to go, we're picking up a sentiment among those responsible for shaping the budget that the mid-month numbers could perhaps prove a shade too optimistic.

- Even so, much of the State House scuttlebutt – some of it fostered by the leaders themselves – suggests anticipated revenue for the biennium to be lower than projected in December – off by perhaps a full percent. That may not sound like much, but you might recall that December numbers suggested we would see $16.5 billion in the first year and $16.9 billion in the second year. One percent is about $165 million to $170 million annually, meaning about $340 million less for the biennium than expected.

- Given that the Governor's budget request – granted by the House – sought another $286 million annually for the Department of Child Services (but viewed more skeptically in the Senate due to declining caseloads), such a shortfall would put a big crimp in the ability of negotiators to fund significant education increases, much less find cash for other priorities. Ratcheting down an already depressed forecast will make the final week of the session an exercise in cost-cutting and priority-shifting. On Thursday, Senate Committee on Appropriations Chair Ryan Mishler (R) speculated that "at best" the April forecast will stay the same as December "if not a slight decrease."

- The Senate budget amendment as unveiled Thursday would end the biennium with $2.2 billion in reserves – 12.6% in FY 2020 and 12.5% in FY 2021 (and $300 million more than the House version). K-12 education represents 50% of General Fund appropriations (a percentage point or so below what appropriators had earlier targeted), while Medicaid accounts for 15%, up by a percentage point from the current biennium, and the Department of Child Services consumes five percent, also a percentage point increase over the prior biennium. K-12 education receives a $775 million total increase over the biennium, while K-12 tuition support would increase by 4.9% over the biennium (2.7% in FY 2020 and 2.2% in FY 2021, each higher than both the Governor and House Republicans have proposed). The Senate directs $150 million to prepay teacher pension contributions on behalf of school districts, as requested by the Governor, but allocates the money from the Pension Stabilization Fund and requires school board to hold a public meeting to disclose how they will spend the savings. Teacher Appreciation Grants would be increased by $30 million (50%) over the previous budget to a total of $90 million over the biennium. The House had spent an additional $15 million per year to double charter school grants; the Senate chose instead to put that $15 million per year into the Teacher Appreciation Grant. The Senate also eliminated the middle tier for voucher funding that the House had added. The Senate would maintain the FY 2019 ratio of K-12 complexity to foundation spending per student. Sen. Eric Bassler (R) noted that "for every $1 we put into the foundation, we put 66¢ into complexity." Complexity funding would be $680 million in year one and $694 million in year two. The Senate also found $5 million per year for a pool of projects requested by the Indiana Department of Education. Higher education operating dollars grow by $69.5 million over the biennium, and the increase in student demand for financial aid is fully met. The Next Level Connections program, DCS budget request, and Medicaid forecast (at $5 billion over the biennium) are also all fully funded, according to Sen. Mishler, but there's a caveat with the DCS money, which he had earlier hinted at trimming back from the $286 million annual gubernatorial request. DCS would see $243 million in General Fund dollars allocated in FY 2020 and $223 million in FY 2021, but Sen. Mishler opens the door to an additional $105 million available for gubernatorial use if needed courtesy of a special transportation flexibility fund devised under the 2017 transportation funding bill. Money for local jails to house Level 6 felons would increase by $6 million per year. There is no subsidy for Amtrak's Hoosier State Line Indianapolis to Chicago rail service, funding also absent in the Gov's budget request, and the House budget plan.

- The budget amendment was agreed to by consent, but the overall budget was approved by a 9-4 party line vote in committee. The Indiana Democratic Party chided Sen. Mishler's bifurcated DCS budget plan, noting that "improving numbers are enough proof for GOP appropriators to cut funding, but when caseload levels were high enough to violate state law, significant funding increases were off the table."

- Lots of frosh House lawmakers are finding themselves in significant conference committee roles this session . . .

- There remains a dearth of discussion Back Home about Medicaid work requirements being phased into HIP (effective July 1), even after a federal court ruling seems to have placed the legality of the policy in doubt (at least in Arkansas and Kentucky).

● Drawing on findings in its recent study, Truth and Integrity in State Government: Preventing the Next Fiscal Crisis, the Volcker Alliance released report cards outlining each state budget's strengths and weaknesses and comparing each state to others in the same region. The report cards, covering fiscal years 2016 through 2018, are a product of a comprehensive, multi-year study in which the Alliance "meticulously" evaluated and graded the budgetary practices of all states. Grades awarded given to each state range from "A" to "D-". They are based on five areas of best practices the Volcker Alliance has defined to be necessary for transparent and sustainable budgeting: budget forecasting, budget maneuvers, legacy costs, reserve funds, and transparency.

□ Indiana assembled "A" averages in budget maneuvers and reserve funds for fiscal years 2016 through 2018. The A grade in budget maneuvers "resulted from ceasing the use of debt in 2018 to fund recurring expenditures, a strategy it employed the year before. The A for reserve funds reflected Indiana's policies for withdrawals and replenishments of cash as well as consideration of revenue volatility. The state's transparency grade rose to a B in 2018 from C in 2017, thanks to significant improvements in the disclosure of tax expenditure information." The Alliance cites a pair of 2015 laws that require consistent and detailed reporting on tax expenditures from the state budget office and the Legislative Services Agency. "Although the initial set of required reports was published in late 2016, the first year the reports could be used in budget preparation was fiscal 2018." We received a three-year average grade of "B" in legacy costs because even though pensions were funded at the level recommended by actuaries, the state set aside only 65% of the assets needed to meet obligations to retired workers as of 2017 (vs. 78.5% in Ohio). "Indiana came close to meeting its actuarially recommended funding level for other postemployment benefits. With retiree health care benefits that are significantly more modest than those in many other states, Indiana does not face fiscally draining long-term costs in this area."

□ Only four states – California, Idaho, Tennessee, and Utah – received as many as three average "A" grades among the five categories, while Indiana earned a pair – with only one other "A" to be found among our four neighbors. Note that Indiana effectively outperforms all of our neighboring states, with only Michigan coming close to Indiana's level in budget strengths.

● Even as lawmakers opt against increasing the tobacco tax to help fund cessation programs and other health-related needs (snuffing out a Democratic House amendment Wednesday), last week the Indiana Health Coverage Programs (IHCP) enhanced its coverage of tobacco cessation drug treatment (also known as tobacco dependence treatment) through the pharmacy benefit not only effective immediately, but also retroactively for service on or after March 1, 2019.

□ IHCP will now allow preferred agents, including Pfizer Inc.'s Chantix, to be used as first-line therapy; allow the use of Chantix concurrently with other nicotine replacement therapy; and remove the previously established requirement to obtain prior authorization if the user exceeds 180 days of tobacco cessation therapy.

□ The Senate on Thursday did pass an amendment imposing a 20% tax on the price of vaping liquids (the House had proposed a tax per ounce of the e-liquids), which seems to place the proposed tax on par with the comparable amount of tobacco . . . and the differences will likely be worked out in conference, given the difficulty in getting to the end result in the Senate amendment Thursday.

● The Environmental Rules Board will host an August 14 public hearing on amendments to rules concerning waste tire management, and new rules for the legitimate use of waste tires.

□ This rulemaking proposes amendments to state waste tire management requirements and includes many of the amendments originally proposed but withdrawn back in March 2016. Those proposed regulations were pulled because a portion of the proposed amendments pertained to legitimate use of waste tires in lieu of disposal and required additional statutory authority to be considered for adoption. That was resolved by enactment of Public Law 97-2016, which granted authority to the Environmental Rules Board to adopt rules for the legitimate use of waste tires. The main purposes of this rulemaking are to incorporate statutory changes enacted in public laws 37-2012 and 97-2016; add requirements for the legitimate use of waste tires; revise requirements to be consistent with current conditions in the waste tire management industry in Indiana; update the financial assurance requirements; amend outdated or repetitive requirements; improve accountability and safety for waste tire management; and clarify and improve the rule language.

□ The Indiana Department of Environmental Management does not anticipate a significant fiscal impact from the rule amendments. IDEM staff notes the proposed amendments do not require additional fees for waste tire processing operations, storage sites, or transporters. The rule amendments are also not intended to increase normal operating costs for registered facilities that operate in compliance with the current requirements. IDEM also points out that affected entities may have reduced administrative and compliance costs with the options for alternative waste tire management requirements; alternative contingency plans for mobile waste tire processing operations; allowance for an owner or operator of both a waste tire processing operation and a mobile waste tire processing operation to operate under the same registration; and the proposed legitimate use requirements that allow legitimate use of waste tires rather than disposal.

● The justices of the Supreme Court of the United States slated their next conference for Friday, April 12, and one of the two big Indiana cases we have been telling you about for a what seems like an eternity now will be on the conference agenda yet again as the justices determine whether to add to their docket . . . but the non-abortion case we've been watching continues to remain on hold.

□ Through nine conferences, the high Court has already postponed a decision on whether to review the State of Indiana's October petition for a writ of certiorari in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-483. This is the challenge to provisions of HEA 1337-2016 that would (1) require health-care facilities to dispose of fetal remains in the same manner as other human remains, i.e., by burial or cremation; and (2) prohibit abortions motivated solely by the race, sex, or disability of the fetus and require physicians to inform patients of the prohibition.

□ If the Supremes are waiting for the complete filings in Box, et al., v. Planned Parenthood of Indiana and Kentucky, Inc., et al., No. 18-1019, the ultrasound informed consent case to combine the matters . . . you should know that American Civil Liberties Union of Indiana attorneys for PPINK filed their response to the State's petition on April 5, and there was little new information in there, with the service providers reiterating their trial court argument and suggesting that there was no substantive circuit split. The State of Indiana appeal, also from the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, asks the Supreme Court to determine whether a state, consistent with the 14th Amendment, may require an ultrasound as part of informed consent at least eighteen hours before an abortion. Perhaps the Supreme Court is even holding out for a PPINK appeal of the just-decided Seventh Circuit ruling in the fetal tissue research case arising from the same law to complete the Hoosier trilogy.

□ We had thought that another Indiana case would have been relisted – for an 11th time now – on March 15 after having been rescheduled twice as well, but it apparently was not on that agenda, nor was it relisted for March 29 or April 12. Newton v. Indiana, No. 17-1511, involves the 1995 decision of a juvenile offender who, in exchange for the State's agreement to no longer seek the death penalty, pleaded guilty to a sentence of life without the possibility of parole for a murder he committed at age 17 with two older co-defendants. Newton seems to have lingered on the conference agenda more times than any other case up for consideration before being placed on hold as the Supremes consider a case with a related issue.

● The House kills the proposed two-year moratorium on regulatory approval for new power plants and sources sought by the coal industry – opposed by utilities and consumer groups.

● In Owner-Operator Independent Drivers Ass'n, et al., v. Holcomb, et al., No. 1:2019cv00086, the Indiana Toll Road rate hike discrimination litigation pending before the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, both parties have completed their respective filings, and the Toll Road manager, ITR Concession Company LLC, seeks oral argument.

□ Speaking of toll roads . . . Northwest Indiana Democrats, led by Rep. Earl Harris, Jr. (D), pushed last week for casino revenue subsidies to help cushion the blow from tolls on the new Cline Avenue public-private partnership toll bridge now expected to open in January, replacing the Cline Avenue Bridge closed suddenly in Mid-November 2009, despite carrying some 30,000 vehicles daily, including many to the Gary and East Chicago casinos. The Indiana Department of Transportation soon thereafter demolished the Cline Avenue elevated span, diverting traffic – including that from the Arcelor Mittal steel mill – through city streets.

□ Rep. Harris also points out the new bridge's importance going forward to Gary/Chicago International Airport access, as emphasized to him by Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) . . . who has been pushing for a new transmodal port at Buffington Harbor that would hook up to the underused airport asset.

● Somebody must be particularly enamored with the fancy new IndyGo passenger platforms popping up faster than the Spring daffodils on North Meridian Street in downtown Indianapolis, because the Indianapolis Public Transportation Corporation (IndyGo) is seeking bids for the improvement of various bus stop locations, including construction of new shelter and bench pads, sidewalks, and curb ramps.

IN the Economy

● General Fund collections for March of $1.149 billion topped the estimate based on the December 2019 revised revenue forecast by $41.8 million (3.8%) and surpassed March 2018 tax collections by a hefty $112.0 million (10.8%), fueled by strong individual income and corporate taxes. Fiscal year-to-date General Fund collections have outpaced the December forecast by $6.6 million (0.1%) and are running ahead of the same point in the prior fiscal year by $396.7 million (3.8%). The March numbers are about $14 million north of the budget plan, keeping the state approximately 0.5 percent above the fiscal year target.

□ Sales taxes generated $591.9 million for the General Fund in March, which is $12.5 million (- 2.1%) below the monthly estimate (marking a fifth consecutive month in which expectations fell short of reality) but $18.7 million (3.3%) above prior-year levels – perhaps due in part to online sales tax collections. State budget officials acknowledge that while it is early to identify the specific impact of the state enforcement of the recent changes in the taxation of remote sales on the fiscal year-to-date tax collections, revenues from remote sellers are included in the year-to-date numbers. Sales tax collections for July - March are $100,000 above the forecast and $212.0 million (3.7%) above the same nine-month point in the prior fiscal year.

□ Individual income taxes chipped in $392.9 million, which is $10.7 million (2.8%) above the monthly estimate and $40.1 million (11.4%) above March 2018 levels. For the first three quarters of the fiscal year, the category is running $67.8 million (- 1.7%) below forecast, and $99.3 million (- 2.5%) below the same period in the prior fiscal year. Competing theories attribute this to the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act and a general economic malaise that includes a lack of real income growth.

□ Corporate taxes generated $54.4 million during March, which is $26.3 million (93.7%) above the monthly estimate and up on a year-over-year basis by $15.1 million (38.3%). With only one-third of Fiscal Year 2019 remaining, the category is running $40.8 million (10.9%) above the December 2018 revised revenue forecast, and $203.7 million (96.8%) above collections through the same period in the prior fiscal year.

□ Riverboat and racino wagering taxes accounted for a $47.5 million boost during March for the state's General Fund, but this silo still underperformed the three-month-old forecast by $2.0 million (- 4.0%). March is the initial month in FY 2019 in which both the riverboat and racino taxes missed the mark. Combined tax revenue from the two categories improved compared to March 2018 by $10.0 million (27%). Through the first nine months of Fiscal Year 2019, General Fund revenue from the riverboat and racino wagering taxes has generated $278.5 million, topping the forecasted amount by $5.8 million (2.0%) and exceeding the July - March accumulation in FY 2018 by $41.8 million (18%).

● After statewide totals for building permits issued in February increased each year from 2015 - 2018 (from 636 to 1,012), February 2019 saw only 920 single-family permits pulled. While February numbers are up by eight percent from January, when 854 permits were pulled, the number of permits pulled in February 2019 are down by nine percent from February 2018 after topping 1,000 for the first time in any February this decade. Indiana builders cite "affordability issues" as a key reason behind the decline.

□ According to the National Association of Home Builders, excessive regulations, a scarcity of buildable lots, persistent labor shortages, and tariffs on lumber and other key building materials are all factors in the ability for builders to create housing at affordable and competitive price points.

● A new analysis of energy jobs data from Clean Energy Trust (CET) and the national, business group E2 (Environmental Entrepreneurs) find that the number of "clean energy" industry jobs in Indiana grew by 3,885 jobs in 2018 to 86,900 such jobs. Hoosier clean energy jobs grew 4.70% in 2018, faster than the regional and national average. Overall, according to the study, Indiana now employs 69,613 more workers in clean energy than in fossil fuels (17,287). Led by an 18% growth in advanced transportation, Indiana's clean energy jobs now comprise 2.6% of all jobs in Indiana with employers expecting a 1.1% growth in such jobs during 2019. Across all industries, clean energy jobs grew 4.7% in 2018, with the bulk (six in 10, or 55,090) of clean energy workers involved in energy efficiency. Advanced Transportation came in second (17,104), followed by Renewable Energy Generation (10,764).

□ Three counties lead Indiana in clean energy jobs: Marion County (15,949), Elkhart County (6,099), and Lake County (5,364). There are 35,174 jobs in Indianapolis and Chicago metro areas combined while 16,343 jobs are found in Indiana's rural areas.

● Ohio settles on a gas tax hike of 10.5¢ per gallon of gasoline and 19¢ per gallon of diesel, down from the 18¢ per gallon sought by the Buckeye State's new Republican governor. Ohio's gas tax had been 28¢ per gallon since 2005 and will jump to 38.5¢ per gallon of gas and 47¢ per gallon on July 1. The new rate is expected to raise $865 million a year in additional revenue to be split 55/45 between state and local governments for roads and the state's public transit systems.

□ Michigan lawmakers continue to debate the stiff 45¢ per gallon increase sought by the Wolverine State's new Democratic governor. Michigan's gasoline tax is currently 26.3¢ per gallon.

□ Indiana, of course, increased the motor fuel tax by 10¢ per gallon (from 18¢ per gallon) starting July 1, 2017, with an escalator indexing the tax to inflation for the seven years, capped at a 1¢ per gallon annual hike.

□ Americans for Prosperity-Indiana highlights the financial burden on Indiana consumers that would result from a federal 25¢ per gallon gas tax hike, finding that Hoosier households would see a new tax burden of $301.75 per year with a such federal gas tax increase. Indiana's combined state and federal taxes and fees per gallon would rise to more than 86¢, the sixth-highest rate in the country.

● The U.S. Army Contracting Command places an order from South Bend's AM General for 648 M997A3 High Mobility Multipurpose Wheeled Vehicle (HMMWV) Ambulances, valued at $185 million . . . Raytheon Company of Indianapolis is awarded a $70,475,000 ceiling, indefinite-delivery/indefinite-quantity Air Force Life Cycle Management Center contract for F-16 engineering services. This contract provides for engineering services, organic depot stand-up support, interim contract support, and production support of the F-16 Center Display Unit. Work will be performed in Indianapolis, and is expected to be complete by February 28, 2025. This award is the result of a sole-source acquisition . . . Raytheon Intelligence, Information and Services of Indianapolis is awarded a $47,378,485 Naval Air Systems Command contract to procure 99 LAU-115 and 100 LAU-116 guided missile launchers for the Navy as well as 62 LAU-115 and 68 LAU-116 guided missile launchers for the government of Kuwait to enable F/A-18 aircraft to carry and launch AIM-120 and AIM-9X missiles. Work will be performed in Indianapolis, and is expected to be completed in July 2022. This contract was not competitively procured.

● Accutech Systems, a software company providing wealth management solutions, plans to expand its Muncie operations investing more than $5.5 million to purchase and redevelop a 40,000 square-foot facility that was formerly a Sears retail store in downtown Muncie, and convert it into a new headquarters facility, planning to add at least 100 new local employees by 2023. The Indiana Economic Development Corporation offers Accutech Systems up to $600,000 in performance-based tax credits. The City of Muncie is considering additional incentives . . . Greenleaf Foods, SPC, a plant-based food company that is a subsidiary of Canada-based Maple Leaf Foods Inc. plans to invest $310 million to construct a manufacturing facility in Shelby County, which is expected to be North America's largest plant-based protein facility. Greenleaf, which makes vegetarian burgers, hot dogs, and other products, expects to create up to 460 new jobs by late 2020 at what is planned as a 230,000 square-foot facility on 57 acres at I-74 and S.R. 44 in Shelbyville (city and county officials purchased a key piece of real estate late last year, placing the land under one ownership group). IEDC offers Greenleaf Foods, SPC up to $5 million in performance-based tax credits, and up to $1 million in training grants. IEDC also offers up to $1.25 million to the community from the Industrial Development Grant Fund to support infrastructure improvements at the new site. The City of Shelbyville and Shelby County approved a total of $2.5 million in additional incentives. Duke Energy also approved additional incentives to offset a portion of the energy costs . . . Denver-based industrial hemp processor PHM Brands LLC plans to invest more than $6 million to open a Michigan City facility for production of cannabidiol (CBD), expecting to create more 30 new jobs averaging $20 per hour in its first phase, ramping up to more than 50 jobs over the next five years. PMH Brands received an industrial hemp research license in February 2018, and chose Michigan City after a site search that included surrounding states and communities . . .

Walmart plans to invest $96 million yet this year in Indiana to remodel 19 of its stores and deploy new technology locally . . . a few months ago we told you about local zoning approval in Carmel for a new five-story, 120,000 square-foot headquarters building for medical practice billing and management software provider Zotec Inc. Now we can flesh out the details of the deal, which includes an investment of almost $47 million in the building and a parking facility to accommodate its local workforce and hiring of another 250 to 300 Hoosier employees by the end of 2022. IEDC will offer Zotec up to $4.15 million in performance-based tax credits, and up to $200,000 in training grants. IEDC also offers up to $500,000 to Carmel from the Industrial Development Grant Fund to support infrastructure improvements at the new site next to U.S. 31. The City of Carmel is considering additional incentives . . . Indiana Michigan Power (I&M) plans an approximate $84 million investment to upgrade the electric transmission network serving customers in Delaware County . . . after a low six-figure investment, Bona Vita Architecture opens a new downtown headquarters this week in Fort Wayne, disclosing it may “potentially” add about 15 new jobs in the next 10 years . . . the Royal Group’s Touchpoint LLC, a manufacturer of boxes and retail displays, plans to invest almost $3 million to renovate and re-equip its Seymour facility, expecting to retain more than 65 jobs and add five more with the help of a pair of 10-year property tax abatements from the Seymour City Council . . . BCforward, a global information technology consulting and staffing firm, plans today to expand its operations in Carmel by investing more than $1 million over three years to establish a Digital Innovation Academy within its headquarters to serve both employees and customers. As part of its growth, the company plans to create up to 300 new jobs by 2021. IEDC offers BCforward, a certified MBE, up to $2.6 million in performance-based tax credits . . . Decatur Plastics Products, a manufacturer of custom injection-molded plastic parts and components, plans to invest $11.4 million over the next five years to expand its operations in Jennings County, adding 100,000 square feet to its campus over two phases of development, and expecting to create up to 70 new jobs by 2021. IEDC offers Decatur Plastics Products up to $475,000 in performance-based tax credits. The City of North Vernon approved additional incentives.

IN Transition

- Nick Goodwin leaves his post as chief strategy officer with the Department of Workforce Development to move to Washington, D.C. Goodwin has also served as deputy legislative director and policy director in the Pence Governor’s Office, handled legislative affairs among other duties during a stint of more than four years in the Professional Licensing Agency, and also spent time in 2010 working for former U.S. Sen. Dan Coats (R).

- Adam Norman moves up within the Department of Child Services to serve as deputy director of the Child Support Bureau, where he will be charged with ensuring that DCS meets all federal and state requirements related to child support services. Norman, who has worked as a deputy prosecutor in Bartholomew and Tippecanoe counties, had served five years with the Child Support Bureau, took a two-year hiatus to work in the private sector, then returned last year to the assistant deputy director position.

- Jason Taylor leaves his post as technical services director for the Indiana Department of Transportation’s Greenfield District to return to the City of Fishers as engineering director.

- Taylor served as assistant director of engineering for the city before joining INDOT’s Central Indiana outpost, and returns to Fishers as the $124 million S.R. 37 corridor improvement project in Fishers and Noblesville heads toward construction.

- Hoosier farmer and agribiz leader Kip Tom is confirmed by the Senate as U.S. ambassador to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and the World Food Program.

IN the Lobby

- Hall, Render, Killian, Heath & Lyman, P.C. files a federal lobby termination for its representation of Aramark Healthcare Technologies, LLC.

- Hobart Hallaway & Quayle Ventures, LLC files a federal lobby registration to lobby Congress on behalf of the Olathe-Kansas-based technology company Garmin International, Inc., on the issues of “Data privacy; FDA regulation of medical devices; GPS and spectrum; tax policy; immigration and workforce; aviation” . . . Hobart Hallaway also files a federal lobby registration on behalf of Microsoft Corporation (yes, that Redmond, Washington-based Microsoft), to lobby Congress on “Spectrum; Privacy; FY20 Appropriations; Technology policy; Cybersecurity; FY20 National Defense Authorization; High-skilled immigration reforms.”

IN Court

- Holly A. Brady of Fort Wayne was confirmed by a 56-42 vote in the Senate Wednesday to serve as judge of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Indiana.

- She is a partner in Fort Wayne’s Haller & Colvin, PC, where she focuses on civil, employment, and labor litigation. Prior to joining the firm in 2007, she was a partner at Theisen, Bowers, & Brady, LLC, and an associate at Barnes & Thornburg LLP, and Gallucci, Hopkins & Theisen, PC. She earned her B.A. from Indiana University-Bloomington and her J.D. from the Valparaiso University School of Law.

INDIANA GAMING INSIGHT

Gaming bill moving to final form

What to expect after Ways and Means, and House floor debate

SB 552 has finally made it through the regular season and into the playoffs, where the players who understand the game, how it needs to be played, and how to please the fans going forward will be those who will direct the outcome. Throw out the regular-season records and performances, because – in spite of those pesky rules – we’re in conference committee deliberations now, and the shape and even content of the bill is being dictated as you read this, given the practical deadline of no later than April 23 (or maybe 24).

Your conference lineup: Senate Majority Floor Leader Mark Messmer (R) of Jasper and Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D) of Anderson, and Reps. Todd Huston (R) of Fishers and Terri Austin (D) of Anderson. Advisors are:

House		Senate
Republicans	Democrats	Republicans	Democrats
Matt Lehman (R)	Ed DeLaney (D)	Jon Ford (R)	Eddie Melton (D)
Ben Smaltz (R)	Earl Harris, Jr. (D)	Jean Leising (R)
Steve Bartels (R)	Ryan Hatfield (D)	Ryan Mishler (R)
Beau Baird (R)	Carolyn Jackson (D)
	Tonya Pfaff (D)
	Greg Porter (D)
	Cherrish Pryor (D)
	Mara Candelaria Reardon (D)
	Justin Moed (D)

Long-time observers have a tough time recalling any conference committee that was home to quite so many advisors (literally covering all the bases, and all the pros and cons).

So what can you expect from conferees –who comprise 14% of the General Assembly and will meet for the first time at 10:00 a.m. Monday, April 22 in State House Room 233? Let’s run through the likely results.

Casinos

Gary License. The conferees will likely allow the inland move off the footprint within Gary in return for a fee that will not be as steep as the $100 million imposed in the House Committee on Public Policy, and could even be trimmed by half from the final $50 million sought by the House. But the lower fee would likely be contingent upon some type of investment minimum, and Spectacle Entertainment, LLC has already committed to a steep Gary inland investment. If Spectacle were to be the sole bidder for a Terre Haute license, the investment requirement could have been exacted there, but that option appears to be off the table.

Look for some way to lower the fee in return for additional or guaranteed investment by Spectacle that would boost the value of its new inland project to both it and government units . . . and there could also be some negotiation over the surrender of the second license that could further be reflected in tax law changes. As Terre Haute’s Sen. Ford explains on WFYI-TV’s statewide public broadcasting television and radio show Indiana Lawmakers that first aired April 12, “I would rather see that money be put into the product, put into the facilities.” Terre Haute’s mayor called the $100 million fee “exorbitant,” particularly on top of another fee for a Terre Haute license.

Big jackpot fuels big sales run

Powerball jackpot, IN sales second-highest

The Hoosier Lottery reported the second highest monthly sales total in its history in March 2019 based on preliminary and unaudited financial results. A $768.4 Powerball Jackpot – the second-highest Powerball jackpot in history and the third-highest multistate game jackpot ever available – was finally hit on March 27, offering retailers close to one full month of a hot ticket run.

March Hoosier Lottery sales totaled $131.8 million, bolstered by scratch-off sales of $92.3 million, exceeding $90 million in monthly sales for only the second time ever – trailing only March 2017, when scratch-off sales hit $95.2 million. The Kentucky Lottery’s $70 million in scratch-off sales was a record there.

The all-time monthly sales record for all Hoosier Lottery products remains January 2016 when revenues totaled $132.5 million due, in part, to the $1.6 billion Powerball jackpot run.

Similarly stellar sales have been seen in jurisdictions across the country, as the Kentucky Lottery enjoyed the best sales month in its history in March ($116.1 million, topping the five-month-old previous record), the Virginia Lottery posted its third-best sales month ever, and Tennessee Lottery sales during the first quarter were its third-highest since inception.

On an installment of WFIU 103.7-FM's Ask the Mayor weekly radio program in Bloomington earlier this month, Mayor Duke Bennett (R) told host Joe Hren that the fees "could be [a dealbreaker], because they just purchased those two licenses, did not know anything about these fees, and you add that on top of their initial investment plus what they're going to have to do to build the new casinos, they're talking about spending $450 million to build two new casinos. It's a significant amount of money."

Conferees will also be called upon to determine a number of gaming positions for a new inland, off-footprint Gary casino, and there will be strong sentiment from East Chicago and Hammond interests to limit that number to something less than the 2,764 "gambling games" – slot machines and table games – that would seemingly be allowed going forward . . . although many seem to be missing out on the nuance here; the combined Gary boats enjoy that cap currently, based on positions in use as of January 1, 2007 under HEA 1540-2015, but they only deployed some 1,680 and 63 table games total headed into April, and we're unaware of any property that's close to busting a cap. Indeed, some other casinos are at less than 50% capacity.

The initial rationale for moving the Gary casinos, the transmodal compact contained in SB 66, has been off the table in actuality since it failed to gain a House committee hearing, but is eligible to emerge again in conference, although it is perhaps more likely to reappear in some limited form in the budget bill than linked again to gaming and inserted in SB 552.

Terre Haute License. The House bill should form the framework for the Terre Haute licensing process, but there remains concern over "expansion" by adding a new license for Terre Haute, and there will be tweaking of the bidding process. After the hearing before the House Committee on Ways and Means on April 11, Rep. Huston told reporters, "As I've said before, that term 'expansion' is used in a lot of different ways. But we are going to allow the operation of a casino in Terre Haute It's really in the eye of the beholder. And I respect both opinions on it."

Terre Haute's Sen. Ford will be a strong conference advocate for both creating a separate license for his community and retaining some type of competitive process for that new Terre Haute license. On WFYI's Indiana Lawmakers show, Sen. Ford explained that competition is something desired locally, and he believes that "competition breeds a better product." He told Alex Modesitt of the Terre Haute Tribune-Star after the Ways and Means hearing, "This is going to be a very fair process. It lets the community get involved and lets the free market decide."

While most view expansion worries as a mainstream media artifice or a relic of the past (and past leaders who were expansion-shy are being outgunned and outnumbered by a new generation), some lawmakers continue to be preoccupied about it, and Spectacle may be able to play upon some of those concerns with their license transfer request, although the relinquishing and "extinguishment" of that second Gary license may help to assuage some of those lingering fears.

The auction language offers lots of room for interpretation, and there seemed to be differing visions of what this would mean in practice during House discussions.

Terre Haute's Sen. Ford spoke to this on Indiana Lawmakers, "There'll be competition. I think maybe the language saying there will be two or three bidders may need to change just because the market is different. There's not as many casinos out there that could actually bid on it," he noted, pointing out that the ownership caps need to be removed to allow for more TH bidders.

While the local panel established to review applications is labeled as advisory, the original licensing process statewide saw locally approved applicants emerge (although arguably in Gary, Trump Casino was not favored, but there were two licenses), and the bidding language may be altered to ensure that the local approval process plays a bigger role in actual decision making.

Bear in mind as well that virtually every casino project changed considerably from granting of the certificate of suitability to Day One of gaming, often dictated by realistic site constraints and by changes in local preferences. The bidding process may see some allowance for non-economic factors, such as the ability to tie a casino into the community fabric, or its national network.

There will also likely be a cap placed upon the number of positions that may be offered at the new casino. While the market will effectively and eventually dictate the "right-sized" numbers, equity (and Orange County!) would suggest that the new property be subjected to a cap similar to that imposed upon other properties, perhaps in the 1,250- to 1,500-position range.

But as Rep. Terri Austin (D) of Anderson, the most senior member of the House Committee on Public Policy, observed of the Eastern Illinois/Western Indiana market on Indiana Lawmakers, "If we don't put something there, someone else will."

Undue Economic Concentration. There seemed to be some confusion through the process among rank-and-file members as to whether limits sought or consideration afforded to "undue economic concentration" referred to (1) the ability of a single owner to control too much of the Terre Haute market; (2) whether one owner would have too much statewide influence in future potential corporate ownership changes; or (3) both.

Expect conferees to look at undue economic concentration from both perspectives, and avoid getting too specific about numbers in the final language. They will likely give some qualitative direction to the Indiana Gaming Commission on how to approach this, but it's still more of a "you'll know it when you see it" thing than one dictated by formula . . . and it may be that corporate culture and casino location dictate whether one owner with 25% of the market has (or seeks to exert) more influence locally, regionally, and statewide politically than another with a 50% or greater state market share (where is Justice Potter Stewart when you need him?!).

Since Terre Haute is in a more discrete market than the "northern tier" or "southern tier" or "Central Indiana," there is less concern about this aspect, particularly given that it is unlikely that the Cook Group will unwind its Springs Valley model to seek to extend its reach into (or protect its northwestern flank from) the Wabash Valley.

However, if reports about Caesars Entertainment Corporation exploring potential acquisition by Eldorado Resorts, Inc., parent company of Tropicana Evansville come to fruition, one company could not only hold five of Indiana's (current) 13 licenses, and prospectively also look to bid on a sixth, in Vigo County. Since Evansville has been seeking subsidies from a Terre Haute casino, one would presume that this would be within the same market, and concentration questions on both a statewide and regional basis could arise.

Hold Harmless and Subsidy Provisions. As a public policy decision, hold harmless dollars and cross-subsidies have never been a politically palatable solution for lawmakers, but have largely existed because of the century of special goodwill that Hoosiers have had for French Lick and West Baden and desire to help the Hoosier horse industry.

A series of individual decisions made over the past 15 years or so have added up to a fabric of sorts that has proven difficult for lawmakers to tear away from – and now has led to what some are seizing upon as precedent for additional protections in the form of “hold-harmless” provisions. Dollars that would have eased the pain for Evansville, East Chicago, French Lick, and Hammond were largely stripped from SB 552 in the House Committee on Public Policy (a West Baden historic hotel fund tithe was reinserted on the House floor on Second Reading).

While individual lawmakers understandably work to protect their respective individual communities (and others seem to conform to Groupthink mentality on the floor with such amendments, particularly those affecting the Springs Valley), legislative leaders (including the Speaker of the House, chair of the House Committee on Public Policy and the chair and co-chair of the Committee on Ways and Means) look at the bigger picture, are not preoccupied with balkanized interests, and are more free market-oriented.

Since conference committee deliberations on this bill are more likely to be guided from the top down – and voted on as a package, up or down, with no ability to amend individual sections – expect virtually all the special subsidies to stay out of the bill.

Terre Haute Sen. Ford, a conferee, specifically told Indiana Public Media's Barbara Brosher, a reporter for WTIU-TV and WFIU 103.7-FM news in Bloomington, after the Ways and Means hearing, “At the end of the day I don't think a Terre Haute casino affects Evansville in the way that some might think.”

That didn't convince Sen. Vaneta Becker (R) of Evansville, who voted for casino gaming in 1993 as a House member, and has worked to protect the Vanderburgh County casino ever since, including via a Senate amendment to SB 552 that created a subsidy for both Tropicana Evansville and the City of Evansville. She told WIKY 104.1-FM in Evansville Wednesday that she will not support the final product without the subsidy language, but that it will probably pass regardless.

One that may stay: a minimal (and capped) annual payment to the hotel fund along the lines of the Davison amendment, and while we expect the Harrah's Hoosier Park Racing & Casino subsidy for Orange County to disappear at the end of 2019, the Indiana Grand Racing & Casino subsidy might last a bit longer, perhaps through the end of calendar year 2021 (or, more likely, the end of Fiscal Year 2020).

Taxes and Free Play. There seemed to be consensus that the House Committee on Ways and Means found the sweet spot on casino tax rates, how to tax and distribute the new revenue that would flow to (and from) the racinos as they get live dealers at table games and become full-fledged casinos, and the timing of everything.

Allowing new table game revenue to become part of racino AGR, changing the Senate 20% tax rate to the House provisions that gave breaks at the lower (first $25 million) and higher rates made sense and offered as much equity as possible to those concerned.

Do not expect lawmakers to get involved in trying to figure out specifics of sorting through the 12% distribution to horsemen; they don't want to get into the weeds (hay?) and would probably prefer to leave it up to the horsemen to figure out how that money is best distributed to help them (and the two Indiana tracks) compete against new/increased purse money at the Ohio tracks from their huge racino takes, and Churchill Downs from their Derby City Gaming historical horse racing machines. The long run of Indiana purses being a cut above is over, and the pumped up AGR from table games will help horsemen address this.

Increasing the promotional play allowance is welcomed by all the casinos, and continues to attract no scrutiny whatsoever from lawmakers (who haven't even inquired into the internal casino market for buying and selling or transferring these tax credits).

The delay in most of the tax changes –including the free play deduction increase – seems to be well-enough balanced against the tax expenditures for the state in the next year, and well-enough explained by fiscal leaders that the extended time frame for these changes to kick in is accepted as reasonable by the industry and should stay intact from the House version.

Meeting Notice. This is one provision to which you need not devote any of your time, because it was simply a bipartisan statement made without any intention of becoming law.

A House Second Reading amendment was attached that would require “All meetings between the governor’s office or a representative of the governor’s office” and a permit holder, operating agent, licensed owner, or prospective Terre Haute license owner “must be a public meeting” subject to Indiana Open Door Act provisions with full notice. The same conditions would apply to the Indiana Gaming Commission.

Do not expect the language of this amendment to survive conference committee deliberations (in fact, this will probably be the first provision excised). This was strictly a vote for show designed to blow off some steam, and for Republicans to gently and obliquely express their disapproval of the Governor’s actions – which appeared to have been perfectly legal.

The measure itself is also effectively unworkable. The language applies to licensees and operators, and not necessarily to individuals; there are no penalties specified for noncompliance or violations; while it applies to applicants for a Terre Haute license, there are technically no such applicants yet because there is no license available; there are no provisions for chance meetings; there is nothing specifically stated about any right to public access (or not) for publicly “noticed” meetings; there is no reconciliation of these provisions with the ability to close economic development meetings; and more. As to the Gaming Commission, this would also seem to be redundant, because the then-brand new Gaming Commission in 1993 passed a resolution barring ex parte contact by a license applicant to anyone with an ownership interest in such an applicant with any member of the Commission . . . and any meeting of the Commission itself must be publicly noticed and open (unless it was an executive session pursuant to items specifically elaborated in state law).

The point’s been made, and there seems to be no underlying rationale for this section remaining in any final law.

Racinos

Live Dealers at Table Games. We all know live dealers are coming (even under current law) to racino table games, but the question is when and how. The current law allows the Gaming Commission to allow live table games upon application in early 2021. The House Committee on Public Policy made it automatic and not discretionary, and other changes ensured it would happen in January 2021.

The only opponents to moving up the date (and delaying some big-bucks economic development in Anderson and Shelbyville hinted by the owner of the tracks and local lawmakers) are those who claim their casinos are impacted by the racinos today. Lawmakers have become much more free market-oriented in recent years, and the thought of foregoing considerable investments for minimal advantage to some other properties went out the window in 2007 when the General Assembly approved “slots at the track” and $500 million in property tax relief dollars and $200 million in direct investment even after weighing a direct threat issued in public testimony to both House and Senate committees (which turned into action) by Belterra Casino Resort to pull the plug on a planned $35 million third hotel tower for which soil testing was already underway.

Watch for the conference committee to maintain the automatic approval of live dealers from the House bill, and to move the date up to January 2020.

Sports Wagering

General Provisions. Hard to believe, but sports wagering has been the forgotten component of the overall omnibus bill, even though it was a pre-session highlight, and contained in a standalone bill. Sports betting simply has attracted little public, and only minimal legislative attention . . . and what has been heard has been largely neutral to positive.

Sports wagering will pass conference, and the only difficult questions involve registration fees and the tax rate, mobile wagering, and use of official data for in-play wagers. We’re assuming – and this may be too big a stretch – that wagering on esports remains out of the final package.

And while the details may be devilish, bear in mind that any sports wagering is not expected to begin until at least September due to the time required by the Indiana Department of Revenue to develop and implement a tax reporting and collection system . . . as well as for the Indiana Gaming Commission to devise appropriate regulations and investigate and license “sports wagering service providers.”

There may be sentiment in conference to simply postpone some of the more complicated or controversial aspects of the genre, and forego in-play wagering for now, allowing more time for industry practice to shake out, and for the Commission to work with the industry and the leagues and sanctioning bodies with an eye toward 2020 implementation of wagering more complicated than wins and losses and point spreads (and there are only two IndyCar races in September, one on September 1).

Mobile Wagering. The most visible aspect of the sports wagering measure was not acceptable to the leaders of the House Committee on Public Policy, who pulled it from the bill.

There seemed to be some sentiment among members of that panel to re-insert it, but it was not amended back in either that panel, upon recommitment to Ways and Means, or on Second Reading on the House floor. This was probably strategic. Backers didn’t want to waken the anti-gamers and those who viewed this as a significant expansion (in addition to the significant expansion created by the establishment of a “14th license” for Terre Haute, and not the fiction of a move of an “unused license” from Patoka Lake or “unused capacity” from Ohio County).

When this issue is addressed in conference, expect the negotiators to drop the facade and add mobile gaming back.

Rep. Huston told reporters after the House Committee on Ways and Means hearing, “I am fine with mobile gaming. That has not been an issue with me.” Meanwhile, Terre Haute Sen. Ford has been widely pushing for mobile wagering, citing the activity in other states as well as the attachment to smart phones and mobile devices among the younger generation.

Ironically, at least a nominal opponent of mobile wagering is Terre Haute Mayor Bennett (who arguably has bigger fish to fry in conference, and will have no influence on this issue). He said on an Ask the Mayor segment earlier this month, “I like the fact they didn’t allow everybody to use their cell phones for sports betting, I think that was too big of a jump into it.”

Taxes and Fees. While no one seemed to publicly complain about the proposed 9.5% tax rate operators would pay on adjusted gross receipts, this rate may be a shade on the high side, and could be adjusted down . . . particularly if mobile gaming is authorized. The mobile gaming component could be subjected to a slightly higher tax rate, allowing the in-person rate to come down. A bifurcated tax rate could end up between 7.5% and 8.5% for brick-and-mortar sports betting, and between 9.0% and 10.5% for mobile wagering, while still allowing enough of an incentive to move Hoosier betting Back Home from offshore operators.

The proposed five-figure application/registration fee didn't seem to draw much beyond a shrug, nor did the six-figure fee (a typo, we were told) that made it to the House Committee on Ways and Means. The registration fee could be bumped up a tad in the low five-figures.

Problem Gambling Fund. The lack of an appropriation for problem gambling was lamented by many until a 3.3% rate on sports wagers was imposed by Ways and Means, with the continuing appropriation universally lauded. "We felt it was important, since we were creating a new form of legalized gaming, sports gaming, that we recognize that that might mean more people who may need addiction-based services," Rep. Huston told David Williams of WISH-TV in Indianapolis after the Ways and Means Committee hearing.

That appropriation stays, and it will be hard to trim, even in conference.

Official Data for In-Play Wagers. Even after locally based IndyCar got involved (on top of the Indianapolis-based National Collegiate Athletic Association and the Indianapolis Colts and Indiana Pacers), there seemed to be no real public talk about requiring the use of official league or sanctioning body data – at least of in-play wagers or prop bets.

Even though there doesn't seem to be any public fervor or regulatory enthusiasm for use of official data – and the operators are certainly not fans, we see this as a jump ball of sorts headed into conference where lawmakers still seem to be uncertain about what is involved in practice (and it could simply be dumped into the lap of the Indiana Gaming Commission to handle through regulations).

If the leagues and sanctioning bodies do get their way, there will undoubtedly be some reins on their ability to charge operators for their services. On the Senate side, lawmakers expressed concern about the effective monopoly power they would have with their data (although some of that discussion was in requiring official data to be used in determining all wagers), and wanted some economic protections for the operators.

This could simply boil down to whether casino lobbyists do a better job in battle than league and sanctioning body lobbyists, while anti-gamers simply root for injuries.

So that's our assessment of how things look headed into conference. Now we'll bring you up to date on how we got there since we were last with you, with our usual obsessively detailed coverage of events in the House Committee on Ways and Means, and Second and Third Reading on the House floor.

The Bottom Line

When you analyze the Third Reading votes in both the Senate and House, it's hard to see how almost any package that emerges from conference – assuming, as we expect, that there will be a final conference report – does not become law.

The Senate vote was 38-11, while the House approved SB 552 on a 78-15 vote. Neither vote was partisan, and only a handful of nay votes came from lawmakers who were anti-gaming and are unlikely to support any gaming "expansion" measure. Much of the opposition came from lawmakers whose districts stood to lose from either an inland, off-footprint Gary move, a new casino in Terre Haute, or bumping up the date for live dealers at racino table games.

Break that down and if the Gary and Terre Haute moves are considered inevitable, there may be enough sweeteners left in the form of lower tax rates for hometown casinos to justify aye votes by some of those who cast symbolic votes against the package in progress on Third Reading. With live dealers due to be implemented fairly soon even absent 552 changes, those who may be opposed for that reason can also find a rationale for supporting the bill thanks to the tax law changes. The absence of hold-harmless provisions would not prove fatal and likely would not affect literally more than a handful of votes in either chamber, even in isolation.

While authorization of mobile wagering may cause anti-gamers to dig in deeper, it is not likely, on its own, to change more than five votes total in both chambers, if that many.

There could be some institutional concerns about both the Governor and Speaker of the House flying a bit too close to the sun with the one operator that stands to benefit the most from the package, and that could derail things in the end game. Watch to see if disease morphs into pushback over Easter Weekend.

The only other danger to 552 would come if the casino/racino sections are separated from the sports wagering, and even then, there doesn't seem to be a sense that one is carrying the other. While some believed at the outset of the session that this "kitchen sink" omnibus bill would sink of its own weight, as it has worked through the process it has been effectively managed and amended, and now almost seems to be too big to fail.

Summing things up on Indiana Lawmakers were Terre Haute Sen. Ford and Rep. Earl Harris, Jr. (D) of East Chicago. Said Sen. Ford, "Everyone will feel a little pinch, and we'll have a good deal coming out of this," to which Rep. Harris added, "You don't get everything that you want, and everybody walks away a little happy."

House Committee on Ways & Means Hearing

SB 552 easily cleared the House Committee on Ways and Means on April 9, but not before some serious surgery, the key elements of which were served up in an amendment at the beginning of the meeting by Co-chair Todd Huston (R) of Fishers who began the morning by reminding panel members and others seeking to impact the measure that the hearing on recommitment was intended to be limited "to the issue of taxation." Rep. Huston explained that "We are not changing policy. We are just putting tax and structure around it."

MOVING INDIANA FORWARD!

Senate Bill 552 means new jobs,
investment and tax revenue.

A YES VOTE

*on Senate Bill 552 will create a variety
of opportunities:*

NEW POSSIBILITIES FOR BUFFINGTON HARBOR

Senate Bill 552 calls for Majestic Star and Majestic Star II to vacate Buffington Harbor, making it possible for the harbor and adjacent real estate to realize its true potential as an intermodal hub, port and logistics center.

A MORE VIABLE LOCATION FOR A GARY GAMING FACILITY

Senate Bill 552 permits one of the properties to relocate adjacent to I-80/94. The subsequent $300 million investment would create 400 new jobs and increase tax revenue by more than $78.75 million annually as compared to that produced by the two existing properties.

A NEW FACILITY AND ECONOMIC BENEFITS FOR TERRE HAUTE

Senate Bill 552 authorizes the relocation of one of the Majestic licenses to Vigo County, which would create 400-500 new jobs, $100 million in economic investment and approximately $24 million in annual tax revenue, while making Indiana increasingly competitive with Illinois within the gaming industry.

*After 25 years of the status quo, it's time
for Indiana to be bold. To take action. To win. It's time to turn Senate Bill 552 into a reality and move Indiana forward.*

Rep. Huston's Amendment #93 was focused on five things: (1) relocation of a casino within Gary; (2) an "opportunity for a Vigo County casino"; (3) sports wagering; (4) additional funding for problem gaming initiatives; and, (5) "some acknowledgment" of tax rates and adjustments for free play tax deductibility. "At the end of the day we want to be competitive with our neighboring states," Rep. Huston said. "We want to see investments in Indiana, not in other states."

The Huston amendment halved the proposed fee for off-footprint relocation of the Gary casino (within Gary) from the $100 million imposed under the amendment authored by House Committee on Public Policy Chair Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn in his committee, to $50 million. The lower relocation fee would be paid to the state General Fund in two equal installments. The first installment would be due upon approval to relocate, and the second installment would be due "one year later."

"We've separated the Terre Haute discussion from the Spectacle discussion," Rep. Huston explained. "If the operator in Gary wants to move, that's their decision based upon the parameters that we provide within the legislation." If a Gary casino chose to relocate, once it "moves into its new location," the owner would be required to surrender one of its two current licenses.

Rep. Huston acknowledges of a Gary license surrender, "that has tax implications, both to the casino and to us" because each of the two current casinos is taxed as a separate entity, allowing the owner to take advantage of lower marginal rates at the bottom end of the revenue chain. With the current graduated caps on Adjusted Gross Revenue, Huston noted that the owner is currently able to shift business between the boats to keep its taxes down. When the licenses are combined, that would add $10 million to $10.5 million ($8.5 million to the State and another $2 million in local tariffs) annually based upon current AGR levels.

"Ongoing, that's a positive for the State and the local community, but at the expense of the operator," Rep. Huston observed. Taxes at a new inland Gary site would be paid on a single comprehensive - and not bifurcated - amount, and that comes at the "expense of the operator and we're acknowledging that expense." He added, "We felt like we needed to acknowledge that, and that's being acknowledged in the reduction in the proposed fee from $100 million to $50 million."

The number of games to be allowed at the relocated inland Gary casino would be capped at the combined total allowed of the two current casino vessels.

Rep. Huston stated clearly that by opening an opportunity to site a casino in Vigo County, his amendment "creates an 11th (sic) casino license." This would be a new license not predicated on what happens in Gary.

There are currently 11 licenses at 10 sites, including the two Gary licenses, one of which would be surrendered if the Gary license owner opts to move off the current footprint within Gary. If the two Majestic Star Casino vessels stay moored at Buffington Harbor, there would be 12 casino licenses in use along with the two racino licenses.

A countywide referendum with the question, "Shall inland casino gambling be permitted in Vigo County?" would be conducted locally, with the option for it to occur in November 2019 or May 2020. The flexibility to hold the referendum next year reflects what we had told you about this being a municipal election year, and no elections taking place in other areas of the county. Rep. Huston said that if the county wanted to spare the additional expense of a sole-issue election in those areas, it could hold the referendum next year as part of the regular primary election.

The amendment creates a Vigo County Inland Advisory Board comprised of Terre Haute's mayor; the president of the Vigo County board of commissioners; an appointee of the Vigo County Capital Improvement Board; a member appointed by the Terre Haute Chamber of Commerce; and one individual selected by the governor. This board would be led by the Indiana Gaming Commission in an effort to offer a competitive bid process for the new license. That license would be up for bids in an "auction process" with a $25 million minimum bid, and the requirement that a local development agreement (LDA) be part of the process.

Rep. Huston says that in fashioning the new license process, he took current language in state law on how the French Lick operating contract was shaped, and "we took the auction idea out of Pennsylvania."

His rationale on the critical point - a novelty for Indiana: "It's very important to me that the Vigo County - the community of Vigo County - has an opportunity to participate in these discussions; that they have an opportunity to find an operator that meets the community's needs. I didn't want it to be done 'to' them, I think it's important that it be done 'with' them. But at the end of the day, as we've noted in this body before, the state is a partner in the gaming discussion. So what we're doing is letting the local community get down to three operators they would feel comfortable with, and then we will auction off the license to one of those three. I want to be clear on this: I don't presume to know what the license value is. I'd like to see it be done in a competitive marketplace. That's for the benefit of the entire State of Indiana because at the end of the day those dollars will flow into the state General Fund."

Sports wagering would have to wait for a September 1, 2019 start date instead of June 30. Huston said he made that change because the Indiana Department of Revenue "will not be ready by July 1, so we moved it," but "it is possible that that date may change, too." The proposed sports wagering tax rate will be 9.5% on adjusted gross receipts, and there will be funding for addition problem gambling services. Of the tax revenue, 3.3% must be deposited into the Addiction Services Fund. "This is a continual revenue stream" that will be used for gambling addiction issues, rather than a one-time appropriation. "I did not want to appropriate one-time money," he explained.

The Sports Wagering Service Provider license application fee will change from $100,000 to $10,000 because that "$100,000 was a typo that needed to be fixed; we're not giving anything up," Huston assured. A person under 21 would be prohibited from making a sports wager. "As the bill currently stands today," it would only allow on-premise and not mobile sports wagering: "that will be a discussion for another date."

“Very little of this money comes in in this biennium,” but would rather be “a continual revenue stream.” One-time dollars in an unknown amount and timing would come if the Gary operator moves locally off-footprint and/or the Vigo County process comes to fruition. “There would be one-time dollars, but I don’t know that amount,” concedes Rep. Huston.

After being “deep in the numbers in the last few days” with state fiscal analysts, Rep. Huston says that “at best we’re talking about maybe $12 million to the state in sports betting – that’s beginning September this year or January 1 of next year – so not a huge sum” and then “as the bill sits today,” another six months of additional table game-related “racino dollars, which is maybe $5 million. So in the most optimistic of scenarios we’re probably talking maybe $15 to $20 million in new revenue across this biennium,” says the panel co-chair.

Rates would not be adjusted under the Huston amendment until after the current biennium. He proposes to lower the wagering tax rate on the first $25 million of adjusted gross receipts for “riverboats” with a total AGR above $75 million from 15% to 10% beginning in Fiscal Year 2022. He would then lower the tax rate for riverboats on the first $25 million of AGR, for riverboats with a total AGR below $75 million from 5.5% to 2.5%, beginning in FY 2022. If the Gary operator chooses to move, he says that silo would likely apply to only one operator at that point (which we presume refers to Rising Star Casino • Resort).

The Huston plan would also eliminate the highest marginal tax rate of $35 million for racinos beginning in FY 2022.

The amendment would also shift the effective date for the proposed increase in the free play deduction (from $7 million to $9 million) from FY 2021 to FY 2022. He explains that this would cost the state an average of $6 million, and “without a bigger pot of money coming in, I felt it was responsible to push it back outside this biennium.”

Huston said that if we were to take the four things that provide additional revenue to the state into account – the move of the Gary casino, a Vigo County casino, table games for the racinos, and authorize sports betting – “To the state we’re looking at anywhere, in probably a best-case scenario, of anywhere from $40 million to $50 million” in new state revenue. After factoring in some $14 million in tax expenditures for increasing the free play deduction and altering the marginal wagering tax rates – important to keep the industry competitive with the states, he says – the state would be “about $20 million ‘to the good’ if all these proposals came to the plate.” He is of the opinion that the legislation should not be enacted unless the state is a beneficiary, as a partner with the industry. “Overall, this is a reasonable way to help modernize, maybe, gaming in Indiana and then also drive economic development,” particularly in Gary and Vigo County. “But at the end of the day, all taxpayers of the state need to be the beneficiaries of this.”

Rep. Huston opened the floor for questions. Rep. Peggy Mayfield (R) of Martinsville asked for clarification on the “lowering of the rates” reduction in wagering tax rates from 15% to 10% for everyone is at the $5 million level – “and then the 2.5% is for the small ones?” Rep. Huston told her, “Currently, with the way the current AGR is, that would be correct.”

Rep. Ed Clere (R) of New Albany asked if his amendment allowing sports bracket tournaments for fraternal organizations as inserted in the House Committee on Public Policy meeting was being removed. He was told by Rep. Huston that this was the case, because “there were some issues and we’ll work through that.” “I hope that we’ll have the opportunity to revisit this,” said a disappointed Rep. Clere, who added that we need to make sure we take care of Hoosier fraternal and veterans organizations.

Rep. Huston said that the amendment also attached in that meeting by Rep. Justin Moed (D) of Indianapolis about local distribution of sports wagering dollars had also been excised.

Huston also made it clear “I’m not doing anything regarding local hold-harmless provisions. At I know the end of the day, I’m not sure what the market’s going to look like before all this takes place.” He said he fully understood and appreciated efforts by colleagues to protect their local communities. However, he continued, “My concern in this is, ‘Tell me what the landscape is going to look like’ as these things take place, and then I’ll have a better idea, we will all have a better idea, and additionally, through this entire discussion, I think we have to understand some of these market shifts probably would have happened anyway.” He believes, however, that by the time the state would see another comprehensive change in the marketplace, we’ll have another budget session. He did not want to address hold-harmless language when “we don’t know the impact who’s going to be where and when,” something that will better known within the next year.

He also added that with the racinos, table game revenues would go into AGR and be part of the purse money and horsemen’s money.

Rep. Greg Porter (D) of Indianapolis, the Ranking Democrat on the panel, asked about the list of the three potential operators to bid on the Terre Haute license. He asked, “How do you decide on those three entities?” Huston said the advisory board led by the Gaming Commission would recommend the three operators with whom they felt “most comfortable” for the auction. He said the Commission needed to lead the process because they will have to vet the operators. He noted that his amendment would also require the Commission to take into account “The impact of any undue economic concentration of the ownership or control of a gaming license” when granting casino licenses.

While Rep. Huston didn’t elaborate as to whether this meant a particular geographic market or statewide, he (and the language) may have been deliberately vague so as to provide commissioners with as much flexibility and discretion as possible. Here is how current ownership shakes out:

Parent	Northern	Southern	Central
Boyd Gaming Corporation	1	1	—
Caesars Entertainment Corp.	1	1	2
Cook Group, Inc.	—	1	—
Eldorado Resorts, Inc.	—	1	—
Full House Resorts, Inc.	—	1	—
Penn National Gaming, Inc.	1	1	—
Spectacle Entertainment, LLC	2	—	—

Would the bidders already be operating in Indiana?, Rep. Porter asked. “Potentially,” replied Huston. Would this be a closed bid or public auction? Huston said it was a sealed envelope bid process in Pennsylvania.

Would there be a best-and-final component? "I want the most transparent process possible," said Huston, who noted that the plans would have to be disclosed before they can go to the auction. The bids must cite the proposed LDA investment, the committee would negotiate on LDAs, and the bidder would detail what the facility would look like, and the "highest bidder wins and they execute upon their promise."

Rep. Sheila Klinker (D) of West Lafayette asked if things other than the "monetary remuneration" aspect – such as use of organized labor and Indiana employees – would be in play at the auction. Rep. Huston told her the financial component would only arise after prospective bidders have turned in their proposals and are chosen as one of the three potential finalists. At the time of the auction, it will be awarded to whomever bids the most for the license.

Rep. Holli Sullivan (R) of Evansville told her colleagues that she had drafted but not offered an amendment about transparency, interposing a third-party facilitator to vet the process. She suggested that this would add another layer, and probably "ensure that the local entities do not have any ownership" in any of the licenses. She also asked Huston what would happen if three bidders did not go to the gate – would the Terre Haute license revert to the State, or perhaps be eligible to shift to another location? Rep. Huston told her that lawmakers would be back in session next year, and address it if necessary, but for now, "it's important that all are invited" to the TH table.

Rep. Ed DeLaney (D) of Indianapolis asked if the bidders would have to detail their building plans and such in proposals. "Absolutely," he was told by Rep. Huston. If they meet the criteria, they will move forward, but will have to submit details. DeLaney continued, and if they pass, they would propose a bid of at least $25 million, then whomever bids the most over $25 million wins the license? "That is correct," said Huston. He said that $25 million was a figure he heard as a good starting point, though "I'm not sure that I know it is the perfect number." I just felt this was the best way to get community involvement without undervaluing the license, he said. Rep. DeLaney labeled this as "a joint venture" with the state "and we're one-half of it."

Huston clarified that at least two bidders must participate. "There has to be more than one bidder." If there is only one, lawmakers will start again next year.

Rep. Bob Cherry (R) of Greenfield asked whether Huston thought the possibility of having a true auction instead of a sealed-bid process would be better. He was told that the option we have chosen here "was very well-received" in Pennsylvania, and "we tried to mirror that." The "auction was something Pennsylvania did" and was considered to be "best practice." Rep. Huston acknowledged, however, that "it would be fun to go see a live auction."

In response to further questioning from Rep. Porter, Rep. Huston said "I struggled with determining the right value" of the license. He went on to say, "The legislature is in a unique position in that nothing can happen without us taking action Frankly put, we provide the ability for someone to receive a gaming license, to move – again, we're kind of knee-deep in all this." He explained, "This is a different scenario, so when we shift the market, when we allow for changes to happen, we have to make sure that those changes are in the best interests of the entire state."

Huston reiterated that a license was the "property of the state," and "If they want to move, that action can only happen with us taking action. And there is a value to that move. At the end of the day, if there wasn't a value to moving, they would stay right where they are." They will make their own decisions, he added.

Rep. DeLaney said he would be interested to see what we have done to the other casinos in a year or two, calling kicking that aspect down the road was "one negative to this proposal." "We all want to protect the industry," he added, but concluded that he was "willing to give up the prophecy for a very rational overall proposal."

Rep. Cherrish Pryor (D) of Indianapolis asked if there was any type of repayment to Spectacle Entertainment, LLC as the owner of the two Gary licenses if it opted to move inland within Gary off the footprint, or if the owner would simply be forced to surrender that second license in Gary. Huston reiterated that they would have to pay $50 million for such a move, and surrender the second license without recompense. When Rep. Pryor suggested that the Gary operator has "purchased" two licenses initially, Rep. Huston again told her that they would be surrendering one "if they were to choose to move." If they chose not to move, "we would maintain the status quo."

Rep. Huston later emphasized if the Gary operator wanted to move, it would have to surrender a license. A move inland off-footprint and a move to Terre Haute are "not interlinked, they should be viewed separately."

Rep. Pryor asked if something was needed in the bill to ensure that legislators come back and address "what we probably know will happen to those communities," and the hold-harmless provisions. "Do we need something in the bill to ensure that we do that? We tend to forget about things. Do we need a trigger to agree to help out communities harmed?" We need something to hold us accountable, she suggested.

Rep. Huston told her he was sure that solons will have ample amount of time to deal with hold-harmless provisions. "I will be transparent in saying that I will not support those as the sponsor of the bill." He noted he didn't even know where we will be in a year, particularly with the only actual relevant change precipitated by SB 552 being just on-premise sport wagering and its "nominal impact." "I am not that interested in trying to figure out hold-harmless provisions right now," he said, but "if a majority of the body supports them, that's fine."

"There's two things within the 'hold harmless' that I think we have to understand," Rep. Huston asserted. "One, there's the argument about economic shift and the impact to the local government revenue. That is one discussion. And then the other discussion is the impact on the local community as far as jobs. Those are at times, two different discussions. As I noted, sometimes ... there can be a shift and the local government doesn't really see much of a change because they are so high above the AGR threshold."

Huston's Amendment #93 was adopted by consent after an hour of explanation and questioning.

Rep. Sullivan offered Amendment #91, telling colleagues, "this amendment has to do with data."

She cited (and praised) the 2009 Legislative Services Agency study of the gaming landscape and impact of moving licenses, and out-of-state competition (prepared for the Kenley-led interim study committee on gaming), and sought an updated version from LSA and the Gameboys to allow lawmakers to make decisions with a “data-driven approach.” Like Rep. Huston, she preferred to see what the market would look like “before we make adjustments and policy changes.”

Rep. Porter asked Rep. Sullivan when this study would take place. “That’s a great question and something I forgot,” she acknowledged. She explained that her amendment asks for the study to be completed “before anything can happen” with the Gaming Commission on the Vigo County license. “It’s a trigger” that would then allow the process to proceed under the Huston Amendment #93 provisions.

“This study is ‘current landscape of the casino licenses where they are,’ that’s what the 2009 study is, it gives us an updated version of that 2009 study, and then it also does – a portion of the study ... is what is the effect of moving licenses around the State of Indiana, and what is the effect of out-of-state competition on current operators in the state.”

Rep. Sullivan denied an implication from Rep. Porter that this was her strategic plan to expand gaming, and described the study as “just truly a snapshot of where we are with our current tax policy before we change it, and current status of the state with the licenses where they are before we change it, and if it changes, we can do another snapshot and compare where we are where we plan to be in the future and hopefully make those decisions on data versus guesstimates.”

Rep. Earl Harris, Jr. (D) of East Chicago questioned whether the proposed study would have to be completed in advance of a move to Terre Haute, but not before a move to land in Gary. Sullivan told him her intent was to take a data snapshot as things are now, as we see movement, and then do another study and data review, after those changes to compare things in the next session and next biennium for hold harmless discussions. She wants the study to guide lawmakers on the right tax rate, live table games, “those kind of decisions.”

Rep. Pryor again questioned if no casino could be moved – even Gary inland – until the study was complete. “Right,” responded Rep. Sullivan, telling Pryor that drafters can work with Terre Haute to insert a date instead of trigger.

Rep. DeLaney questioned the timing of the report, expressing concern that the process could be delayed and “we might find the report nailed to our foreheads.” Rep. Huston acknowledged this could be the case depending upon how the dates work out, “but I think the operators will take their own numbers and base their own decisions based upon their own dynamics.”

One concern that no one mentioned: the 2009 interim study committee report(s) on the gaming numbers and markets were prepared by Dr. Jim Landers, who recently retired as director of the Legislative Services Agency’s Office of Fiscal and Management Analysis to become the Enarson Fellow in Public Budgeting and Financial Management, teaching graduate and undergraduate budgeting and finance courses at the John Glenn College of Public Affairs at The Ohio State University, where he earned his Ph.D.

Dr. Landers, who joined LSA before all the riverboats were in the water, had a special professional affinity for gaming numbers, even authoring professional conference papers and journal articles about Indiana gaming numbers and casino markets . . . and he and Kenley had developed a close professional relationship with Sen. Kenley based upon their mutual interest in deep dives into the gaming numbers (as well as Landers’ understanding of the Ohio markets and political psyche from his time at OSU and six years of working for the Ohio Legislative Service Commission.

The amendment was adopted by consent with the support of Rep. Huston.

Rep. Harris offered Amendment #78, saying it had twin focuses: (1) hold-harmless dollars for East Chicago and Hammond, and Cline Avenue toll bridge subsidies. He reminded his colleagues that he and Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) have been upfront through the process about making this a win not just for Gary but to ensure that other communities gain as well. He said that he would “like to see something in place to ensure that ‘hold harmless’ does not fall off the table, and is not forgotten. We need to protect East Chicago and Hammond,” he said and his hold-harmless language would do just that, kicking in only after the first five percent of loss of revenue. The second part of his amendment dealt with the Cline Avenue toll bridge. He added financial help so the toll from the new public-private partnership venture – slated to open in January, 11 years after the old bridge was shut down without notice, condemned, and destroyed – doesn’t affect the local area, and that the Gary and East Chicago casinos are not hurt by tolls.

“This is not unprecedented; we did a Toll Road freeze,” he reminded his fellow lawmakers.

Rep. Huston told Rep. Harris, “You’ve been awesome” in standing up for his communities, which include parts of East Chicago, Gary, Hammond, and Hobart, but suggested it would require a “massive shift” for the City of Hammond to be affected.

The first Harris amendment failed on a vote of 7-12.

Rep. Pryor offered Amendment #67 which covered contractor participation goals, and would aspire to direct 30% of contract values for the new casino this way: 18% for minority business enterprises, eight percent for women business enterprises, three percent for disadvantaged business enterprises, and one percent for veteran business enterprises. While the amendment was adopted by consent, Rep. Huston noted that City of Richmond v. J.A. Croson Co., 488 U.S. 469 (1989) may have an impact on this issue, and those involved need to make sure that the provision in the amendment does not conflict with the Supreme Court ruling.

Rep. Harris was back with Amendment #92 that he said would make it easier for patrons to access the Gary and East Chicago casinos without having to pay an additional cost to drive there. He noted that the 11-year closure of the old Cline Avenue Bridge has caused considerable rerouting and havoc, and toll subsidies have been offered by the legislature before. This amendment, covering tolls for 10 years, would “help people come in and not [impose] a tax on people who want to come in and do gaming.” The amendment failed on a vote of 7-13.

Undeterred by the first two setbacks, Rep. Harris returned with Amendment #81. "This is about people," he said by way of introduction. "We are here to take care of people." He elaborated that he wanted to help ensure that Ameristar Casino East Chicago employees would not be "left out in the cold" in the event of a Gary casino move inland and subsequent ACEC job cuts. He said his proposal would guarantee that people who lose their positions at Ameristar will be able to move to the new casino if it relocates to the interstate, and that current employees of Majestic Star Casino would also be able to transfer to the new location. The proposal would also lock in training. "Let's ensure that our people don't go from employed to unemployed because of because of a decision that we have made," said Harris, whose father and mother had also represented the same House district and casinos before him earlier in the decade.

Rep. Huston told Rep. Harris "it makes me nervous to get involved in private operations or employment. But I know you are fighting hard for your constituents, and I do appreciate that." Rep. Porter said that Rep. Harris was merely trying to address human infrastructure concerns and holding down the local unemployment rate, lamenting that it "falls on deaf ears" that lawmakers were "trying to help communities." He suggested that the deployment of a legislative "velvet hammer from time to time" would be helpful. The body takes "lots of parochial votes" in every session, and shouldn't be afraid to intervene here.

The Harris amendment failed on a 6-13 vote.

Rep. Pryor called down Amendment #86 that she said tried to provide protection for student-athletes who get injured and are no longer able to play. The Pryor amendment would impose a 10% sports wagering tax directed to a fund that a school will be able to tap into if the injured student-athlete does not have health insurance. Schools would be required to allow them to keep their scholarships. "Very few people have talked about these athletes, particularly the student-athletes," she lamented. "Everybody is going to make money off these kids," Rep. Pryor said. "We need to figure out a way to help these students."

Protections for students injured and no longer able to play would be the beneficiaries of a 10% wagering tax directed to a health care insurance fund for students whose parents don't have insurance to cover them. She said she was "just looking out for those students who nobody seems to be talking about." Rep. Pryor contended that "If we cannot do something to take care of our young people, everybody is going to make money off these kids. Nobody has probably come in here to talk about helping our kids. We need to be helping them."

Rep. Huston observed with some understatement that there was certainly "a lot to unpack in this amendment," noting the debate nationally over the benefit package provided by scholarships. He said that he preferred the current provisions for the direction and distribution of the wagering tax.

The Pryor amendment failed on a 6-14 vote.

The final amendment to be offered came from Rep. Porter. His Amendment #72 would appropriate $3.5 million per year from Indiana Toll Road lease revenues to fund Northwest Indiana Regional Development Authority (RDA) payments by local governments until 2024.

This, he suggested, would address property tax circuit breaker losses in Northwest Indiana, communities such as Gary and Hammond which have been "hammered" by property tax caps.

Rep. Huston reminded panel members that RDA payments from Lake County communities largely come from riverboat revenues now, and the communities have benefited from significant gaming revenues before.

The Porter amendment failed on a 6-13 vote.

Rep. Huston opened the hearing up for public testimony on the bill, requesting that comments be related to the taxation and fiscal impact aspects only.

Matt Bell of the Casino Association of Indiana said that he would pass and instead simply offer his testimony in writing.

Full House Resorts, Inc. Senior Vice President Alex Stolyar led off by asking a "clarifying question" about the Terre Haute bid process and how it would work when two proposals meet the criteria, but offered different investments and different bids above the $25 million minimum.

Stolyar, whose company is the parent of Rising Star Casino • Resort, emphasized how much money (lots) his company had invested in the property and paid in taxes to the state and community (lots more) while remaining "cash-flow negative."

He ran through the math. "We're a public company, so this is all public information. Not to worry here. Of [$51 million spent to buy the property], in the eight years we've operated, we've made back $60.5 million. During that same time, we have paid - we have put - $17 million back into the property. So even after the - not counting the $51 million we spent on the investment - we're cash-flow negative there. Now, over the last two years, our free cash flow has been about a negative $5 million. Over that same two-year period, we have paid $50 million in gaming taxes to Indiana," but "made no profit." "Nobody has paid a greater share of their profits in Indiana back to the state than we have," he told the panel, reminding members that casinos pay taxes on their revenues, and not their profits.

He noted how Ohio had grown an industry with four land-based casinos and seven racinos since Full House purchased the Rising Sun property. While he conceded that his company pays the least amount of wagering taxes because of its low revenue, the rate is not so much tied to the operator as it is linked to the location, and Rising Star finds itself mired "in a very challenged location." He asked rhetorically if any other operator would switch places with Rising Star even with the lower tax rate, and told lawmakers that he would assume none would take up such an offer.

Stolyar explained that the "distressed casino" provision already exists in Indiana tax law and was created to help casinos in situations like his property faces. He asked for a modification "to allow us to better compete in that location." He added that "Indiana gaming is not a free market, and I ask that we all acknowledge this." If it were a free market, his company would be able to move to a new location if it wanted. Let us find away to make profits and be successful, he implored solons. "Our ask is that, if we are going to stay in Rising Sun, that there is a modification to the wagering tax, or you provide other ways to help us succeed," Stolyar concluded.

Ice Miller LLP's John R. Hammond III testified on behalf of Penn National Gaming, Inc. parent company of Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg, and Ameristar Casino East Chicago. Hammond told the panel that Ameristar employed 1,100 people in East Chicago, 900 in Lawrenceburg, and paid $125 million in annual taxes in Indiana. There are 175 to 300 jobs at stake here, Hammond emphasized.

He discussed the Penn National savings thanks to the promotional play credits (just south of $2 million per facility annually). He noted that SB 552 would allow up to 2,764 positions in Gary, and asked legislators to consider limiting that number to the amount currently in use at the two Majestic Star Casino vessels (1,680 slots + 63 table games at the end of March), instead of allowing about 350 more gaming positions than are available to patrons of the area's largest casino, Horseshoe Casino Hammond (although Rep. Huston engaged him in a colloquy about how many of those authorized Horseshoe positions were operational). The number of positions would also be approximately one-third greater than the limits at Ameristar and Blue Chip Casino.

Rep. Pryor incredulously asked Hammond if he wanted to limit gaming, and was told that Penn National wanted to further limit the number of gaming positions authorized for Gary. While Majestic Star would be surrendering the license, they could still maintain the high number of positions. He also noted that not all those positions are currently even in use. "This is a policy discussion," Hammond contended, noting that their competitive position would change if it moves off the current footprint. This change would create "a very, very large casino operation in a changed position," and the largest in Indiana, he calculates.

Eric Miller of Advance America was next in line to testify, but the leader of the social conservative group was not present.

Gary Mayor Freeman-Wilson spoke briefly, explaining that the City of Gary received proceeds from both Majestic Star Casino I and Majestic Star Casino II, and the change from two licenses to one "may cut our cut in half." While there was an advantage to the move to a new location, "I don't want to gain on one hand and lose on one hand," Mayor Karen said. But she obviously didn't do the math. "Because of the combining of the licenses, mayor, you would actually get more," Rep. Huston told her. "Congratulations. you may be the only winner."

Matt Brooks, executive director of the Indiana Council of Community Mental Health Centers was signed up, but was not in the room when his turn arrived.

Ryan Soultz, Boyd Gaming Corporation's vice president of governmental affairs, spoke about the impact of SB 552 changes on his company's Blue Chip Casino (but said nothing about his company's other Indiana property, Belterra Casino Resort). While Boyd appreciated the $1.85 million in tax relief Blue Chip would enjoy, "The tax provisions in this bill do not offset the potential revenue impact we're going to see in Michigan City." Citing the 2009 LSA study, Soultz said Blue Chip would suffer a three percent to five percent revenue change if the Gary casino relocates undermining the stability that has made investment possible, including $10 million now being spent for new meeting facilities as part of an overall $300 million spent on the footprint.

Soultz explained that the State of Indiana has no control over Blue Chip's nearby competition from the Pokagon Band of Potawatomi Indians in New Buffalo, Michigan and South Bend, which pay a much different "tax" - if any - compared to Blue Chip's tab. He said the BCC had "tried to position ourselves as a regional gaming destination," and since the Native American casino in South Bend opened, management had focused on growing business out of Chicago - and performed better than anticipated. Today, however, thanks to SB 552, Blue Chip was "looking at the potential of having perhaps the state's largest operating casino built in an area that would kind of cut off our traffic." "Location matters," he emphasized to Rep. Porter, who asked specific questions about mileage from different sites on the Borman Expressway, and "we have concerns about that traffic being cut off."

After the testimony was complete, Rep. Huston said that he appreciated and respected that individual members were standing up for their respective districts. "There are a lot of parochial and sovereign interests" at stake here, he observed shortly before the committee vote, saying he understood that some may vote in favor of SB 552 just to move it to the floor. "This is a jump ball," he continued. "Do what you feel like is best for your constituency and the state."

Rep. Sullivan said that SB 552 was in a "better place than when it came over from the Senate," removing some layers and adding some transparencies. She said that she would still have to vote nay due to her district's interests and "not knowing where the landscape is hurts our district."

Rep. Harris said that he was focused on the concept that "a win for one city is not a loss for another city. I think we can make sure that happens." There would be "lots of income for some," and we can take care of people. He would vote "yes to move it to the floor" to keep working on it. He said that his colleagues could still "make this even better" and provide help "for cities we are worried about" and ensure that "people are protected."

Rep. Klinker said that in honor of the Mother of riverboat gaming, her one-time roommate, former Sen. Earline Rogers (D) of Gary, she would be a yes vote.

Rep. Porter echoed what Rep. Huston had said, convinced that "we've done some good things and we've done some entertaining things.... and some bipartisan things." He said he looked forward to "robust conversations coming."

The amended bill passed 17-6.

Second Reading on the House Floor

As time was ticking down for Second Reading of bills in the House on April 11, some were speculating that House Speaker Brian Bosma (R), not a huge fan of gaming - and particularly not any measure that has "EXPANSION" written across it in flashing colored Vegas style lights - was prepared to let SB 552 simply die on the calendar, with any necessary pieces resurrected and inserted into other bills.

The way the Speaker structured the agenda that Thursday kept bumping back 552 for consideration, jostling the order of the (nine) Second and (11) Third Reading bills, until it was the last substantive item on the calendar, and at 6:20 p.m., the House finally addressed the measure.

An hour later, the amended measure was engrossed and moved to the Third Reading calendar for April 15. And through it all, Speaker Bosma was not in his traditional post presiding over the House at the rostrum, having turned the gavel over to Speaker Pro Tem Mike Karickhoff (R) of Kokomo.

Speaker Bosma was not presiding because his Indianapolis law firm, Kroger, Gardis & Regas, LLP, was retained last June by the Vigo County Capital Improvement Board and last November by the Vigo County Board of Commissioners, and he felt it appropriate (as he explained in a March letter to the House Committee on Ethics that seemed not to have been released until last week, and was first reported by Niki Kelly of the Fort Wayne Journal Gazette after she found it curious why Speaker Bosma was not presiding) to not participate in related gaming matters. While the Terre Haute Tribune-Star reported the new pact contemporaneously last year, what was not known locally was that “The contract was arranged by Terre Haute businessman Greg Gibson, one of two principal investors in Spectacle Entertainment,” as reported by Kaitlin Lange of the Indianapolis Star on Thursday. Gibson is a CIB member.

While there were 30 amendments prepared for consideration, only a handful were actually called down for votes by their authors. One amendment that was filed caused consternation in the Wabash Valley. Rep. Huston’s Amendment #10 would have stripped all language in 552 regarding a potential casino move to Vigo County, effectively leaving just the tax law and sports wagering changes. This was likely a pre-emptive move aimed at ensuring that he had an arrow in his quiver to fire back at those who may have sought to gum up the Terre Haute works with untenable hold-harmless provisions or an operator selection process that might have been either too perfunctory on one hand, or too unwieldy on the other.

Huston never had to reach into his quiver for that amendment.

The discussion began with Rep. Huston proposing Amendment #1 that clarified the language surrounding a Gary license surrender if a Gary license were to move within the Steel City, off the current footprint. The Huston change specified that in the event of such a move, the “second” license would not merely be relinquished, but it would be terminated. The Huston amendment made it clear the second license would not just “sit in some depository, but the license would be terminated.”

The amendment also specified that the comprehensive study sought by Rep. Sullivan in the Committee on Ways and Means hearing must be completed by September 1, 2019. There were no questions for the author, and the amendment carried unanimously.

Rep. Pat Bauer (D) of South Bend, who was speaker of the House during many of the key gaming law changes through the mid 2000s, offered a strange – and virtually unworkable – amendment that would require “All meetings between the governor’s office or a representative of the governor’s office” and a permit holder, operating agent, licensed owner, or prospective Terre Haute license owner “must be a public meeting” subject to Indiana Open Door Act provisions with full notice. The same conditions would apply to the Indiana Gaming Commission.

Rep. Bauer outlined his concern about the “$20,000” private plane trip taken by the Governor to the Republican Governors Association with Spectacle Entertainment’s Rod Ratcliff last year, just before Ratcliff’s company was “granted two licenses” in the sale of the Gary casinos. He said that there was “speculation that that was done on that plane,” but asked rhetorically, “How would we know? It wasn’t a public meeting; it wasn’t announced.”

He continued, “There is no admission or public statement by anyone on that plane why they were doing or what they were not doing,” and “It could be that nothing happened, they had a pleasant chat and it was all a coincidence. Or some of the things being done here are running, in a way, as a possibility of whatever was decided there,” Bauer added. Rep. Bauer expressed his wonderment at the Committee on Ways and Means – which he once chaired – acting “hither and dither” in slashing the proposed $100 million license fee for Spectacle to just $50 million. He cited the “peculiar timing” of the “$20,000 trip and the next day (sic) getting those two licenses,” and then hearing about change from $100 million in Ways and Means got him thinking again about the situation. He said that these types of situations could be “simply solved” by making any meeting “concerning gaming” with the Governor’s Office and the Governor public. Any meeting with someone who is licensed or seeking a license must be announced 48 hours in advance.

Rep. Bauer noted that when gaming was first debated in the legislature “They were constantly saying, somebody’s going to go to jail from this General Assembly. And the reason they said that is because in every other state, gambling brought legislators to jail.” “I heard it all the time,” he recalled, as he proudly reminded colleagues that “not a single legislator,” nor, “for that matter, not a single governor, has ever gone to jail” for gaming-related actions in Indiana. “You and I should try to preserve that. This is simply trying to make sure there is not even the hint of a private meeting.” “Put it in writing,” and in place today “so this kind of suspicion won’t fall upon the things we do in that area.”

Rep. Huston said that he would accept the amendment, though he did ask “Why now, why today if no one has been indicted?” Rep. Bauer took umbrage to that comment, and began ranting about “the rock and roll show you put on in that Way and Means Committee” hearing.

As members started shouting objections, Speaker Pro Tem Karickhoff – a member of the Committee on Ways and Means – banged the gavel, asking those in the chamber to “dial it down a little bit,” as one member asked for a ruling from the chair on whether Rep. Bauer was improperly casting aspersions on the motives of fellow members. Bauer gruffly apologized after a brief time out that also served to cool emotions.

When debate resumed, Rep. Alan Morrison (R) of Brazil trekked to the front of the chamber to lament “how we treat gaming in this state” vs. other business. He said that we “punitively charge them to do business” here, while other industries get subsidies. He was not happy with “the way that we treat gaming so differently” when they are “a big part of this state.” He concluded, “I think it is bad policy and sets a strange precedent.”

The House then voted 61-28 in favor of the Bauer amendment, with nine members excused for assorted reasons, and two not voting.

A majority of Republicans voting (32-28) joined all Democrats who voted in approving the Bauer amendment, effectively showing their opprobrium for the Governor's actions.

Rep. Steve Davisson (R) of Salem called down his Amendment #5, which dealt with the West Baden Historic Preservation Fund. He wanted to move a chunk of the French Lick Resort • Casino wagering tax dollars back into the Preservation Fund until the casino hits $100 million in AGR or the Fund hits $25 million. He noted that the two historic Orange County hotels are "treasures," and that the Cook family spent $500 million on preservation and renovation to make the property the "main economic driver in Orange County." Rep. Davisson said that it was "very important that we take care of these treasures and make sure they're kept very well." He explained that $12.8 million had been spent on repairs since 2010, with $7.5 million reimbursed and $5 million flowing in from other sources.

Rep. Huston told Rep. Davisson that while he appreciated his advocacy and support for his district, the proposed changes that would flow from SB 552 will take multiple years to play out, while this Davisson-proposed change will move General Fund dollars immediately. Huston reiterated that the legislation contains lots of different moving parts and impacts. These are General Fund dollars at stake, he reminded the chamber, and we should think about where they are appropriated. He said he was "hesitant" about making any such changes today.

Rep. Shane Lindauer (R) of Jasper rose to express his "respect" for Rep. Huston before telling him that "We differ on this." He reminded the Central Indiana lawmaker that everyone says "French Lick is different. It's different from all the other casinos," and its revenues are distributed differently than any other casino. A percentage of what the Springs Valley casino earns is funneled back to the West Baden fund overseen by the Department of Natural Resources, and the Davisson amendment contains a pair of "circuit breakers" to prevent over funding. These are not just regular hotels, he told colleagues. Rather, they have special historical constraints. He noted how the historic and aging nature of the property made many repairs difficult, expensive, and time-consuming.

House Committee on Ways and Means Chair Tim Brown (R) of Crawfordsville came to the microphone to defend his co-chair, Rep. Huston. The funding being diverted by the Davisson amendment was state General Fund revenue - money that could go for schools, Medicaid, higher education, and the Division of Child Services - "that's where it's coming from."

Rep. Steve Bartels (R) of Eckerty, whose district actually includes the French Lick casino, told the House that the body has constantly changed funding and allocation percentages and this amendment had both triggers and circuit breakers tied to it. "These hotels are historic places," he said, contrasting it to the Indiana State Museum in Indianapolis which receives state funding, and the Davisson amendment provides tools to fund the living museums.

Rep. Ed DeLaney (D) agreed that "this is a different facility and it's one that draws tourists and fame to this state this is a unique asset for this state." He observed that lawmakers were lowering rates for some casinos under 552 already, and the Davisson proposal offered "a creative approach to solve a unique problem for a unique facility."

Rep. Davisson closed by referring to a 2003 state commitment that money flowing to this account would grow from $1 million to $3 million, labeling his proposal not a huge amount of money to "keep our obligation."

His amendment passed on a 55-45 vote.

Rep. Harris offered Amendment #16, similar to one he had proffered in Ways and Means that would help hold Hammond and East Chicago harmless for potential future revenues lost to an inland Gary casino, and subsidize tolls for the forthcoming new Cline Avenue Bridge replacement. He noted he was the only House member to represent all or parts of East Chicago, Gary, and Hammond, "which means I have been in the middle of all of this fun for months." He reminded colleagues that hold-harmless language had been removed from the bill after it came across the Rotunda from the Senate. Rep. Harris asked to help make SB 552 "a win-win for all."

Rep. Huston asked the body not to support the Harris amendment. He said he struggled with "hold harmless" and the moving of dollars back and forth, and felt it important to remain "consistent on local issues."

Rep. Lisa Beck (D) of Crown Point joined Rep. Harris in support. She reviewed some of the bridge's history (which she seemed to conflate with the 1982 Cline Avenue Extension collapse tragedy) calling it "a very tender issue in lake County; I can't tell you how often it comes up." She called the assistance "really important to residents of Northwest Indiana."

Rep. Smaltz told the chamber that "if it was a hold harmless," it was removed by the Committee on Public Policy and it should stay out. Nothing happening now should trigger "hold harmless," he suggested.

Rep. Pryor contended that just as French Lick and West Baden "is a unique situation," so to is what is happening in Lake County. East Chicago "will be drastically affected" by an inland Gary casino, she stated. Do something now to mitigate the negatives, she implored House members, or the community will have to wait and "they will have to convince us later" as we've seen with Gary and its issues. "We've been very reluctant to help a lot of communities in Lake County," she added.

Rep. Harris closed debate by explaining that the hold-harmless dollars would only be triggered after the first five percent of revenue was lost.

The Harris amendment was defeated on a 30-60 vote.

Rep. Harris then offered a similar proposal, Amendment #18, that dealt exclusively with the new Cline Avenue Bridge tolls. He said he didn't want to make it harder for people to come into Ameristar, and noted as well that Mayor Freeman-Wilson had agreed that bridge access will help the Gary airport.

Rep. Huston told the body that he wanted to remain consistent on the local dollars, and asked for the defeat of the Harris amendment, which was voted down on a voice vote.

As the House action turned into a reprise of the Ways and Means debate, Rep. Pryor served up an amendment mirroring her attempt in committee to protect student-athletes.

While lots of money is at stake, she reminded House members that “one voice not heard” is that of student-athletes. Everyone involved should have some type of benefit, Rep. Pryor contended, and one part of this would be to require universities to guarantee a four-year college education even if someone is injured as a student-athlete. “We want the best for our kids.” The other part of her amendment provided that if a student was injured or hurt while participating in a collegiate sport, “they will have their insurance covered.” That funding would come via a wagering tax administered by treasurer of the state, with the Indiana Commission on Higher Education responsible for parceling out grants. She called this a “very small step that we can provide for the student.”

A point of order requested about her amendment being germane was ruled well-taken.

House Majority Floor Lehman asked the House to consider his Amendment #30. He noted that Ways and Means members determined that the proper fee to charge the license-holder for moving off-footprint within Gary was $50 million, and his amendment says that if the operator moves to the inland Gary site, pays the $50 million fee, and then chooses to transfer or sell that license in the first five years, the operator would pay another $50 million. He explained, “If they choose to either transfer or sell that license in the first five years of their approved operations, then they would pay $50 million” - “so it locks them into that position for at least five years.”

On a division of the House (a non-recorded count from the rostrum), the Lehman amendment passed by a 57-30 vote.

Rep. Harris returned with another familiar amendment, joking that he was now hoping at least to go “one-for-three” for the day with his amendments. This was his staffing proposal that would offer first right of refusal for employment at a new Gary location to current Majestic Star Casino employees and then to Ameristar Casino East Chicago employees who lose their jobs because of the new competition. The proposal also offered training support. Amendment #24 was supported by Rep. Huston, and in closing, Rep. Harris noted that Spectacle was also in favor. He did not strike out with this proposal, which passed on a voice vote.

Rep. Mayfield offered an amendment that would expand upon the Huston extinguishment of the second Gary license if not moved to Terre Haute. Her amendment proposed that if a license holder conducted no operations for one year, effectively leaving their casino mothballed or in limbo, the license would revert to the State and be extinguished. Rep. Huston supported her amendment.

Rep. Eberhart asked why it was necessary. Mayfield responded that while the Gaming Commission can revoke a license, a license can remain in limbo, but can still be owned until the State takes it. She was aiming to extinguish such licenses “so there is no mothballing of a license.” Pressed by Eberhart about what licensees might find themselves in such a situation, or whether she had something more specific to offer, Rep. Mayfield conceded, “I have nothing ... no sir.”

Rep. Morrison asked what she meant by “extinguish,” and was told that it would mean no one could ever use that license again, and we would reduce our count by that license.

So “now is a good time to start decreasing revenue on purpose?” asked an incredulous Morrison. Mayfield said it would not be decreasing dollars, but when pressed by Morrison about how that could be when she was saying there was never another chance that another party could purchase the license, she acknowledged that there “could be a possibility.” She explained that she was attempting to address “some of the concerns about the expansion of gambling” by potentially reducing the number of licenses, and that to bring such a license back into circulation, applicants would be required “to come back here and have a very public debate on adding another license.”

Rep. Morrison spoke on the amendment, reminding colleagues that 20+ years ago Indiana decided to be a gambling state. We now have the fourth-highest gaming tax revenue of any gaming state in the country, he observed. “Whether or not you like it, it’s what we do,” he said of this public policy, and it’s “incumbent upon us to set up the best structure” for gaming. Even if a licenses were simply laying dormant “it’s not very prudent, that’s for sure,” and certainly “not a good idea for the state.”

Rep. Terry Goodin (D) of Austin asked Rep. Mayfield if she could provide him a definition of what “being closed means.” He asked what happens if a casino closes but a gift shop remains open, or a slot machine is in use. “I had not actually tried to define that,” replied Rep. Mayfield. She said that if a location decides it’s not making money, and decided to “literally close it, no more employees, and they’re done” or abandons the facility and just leaves was what she had in mind. “I had envisioned an abandoned site.” “I think we need to be a little more refined” in the definition retorted Goodin, saying that if just a limited retinue of retail or gaming was occurring, under the Mayfield amendment they could make the case that “You can’t close us down. That’s something we really need to think about,” Rep. Goodin cautioned.

Rep. Chris Judy (R) of Fort Wayne - whom we can never recall having spoken on a gaming measure - asked the author what would happen if an operator were building a new facility and it takes longer than a year. “I had not addressed that, I admit that,” said a flustered Rep. Mayfield, who then withdrew her amendment.

Rep. Eberhart called down Amendment #4, which he said would removes the “hold harmless” dollars for Orange County which had been in effect since 2015 because the two racinos and French Lick “functions the same as hold harmless” provisions looked upon with askance by Ways and Means members. “If it crows like a rooster, it’s a rooster,” Eberhart asserted. He explained that French Lick was siphoning off $1.25M per year per facility “in perpetuity” from the racinos, and “we don’t have live table games” as originally envisioned in 2015. His measure would end the tithe by Harrah’s Hoosier Park Racing & Casino at the end of the year. Look at a map from Anderson to French Lick, he told colleagues. There should be no impact at all from gaming activity in Anderson.

His language would allow payments from Indiana Grand Racing & Casino in his hometown of Shelbyville to continue two years, until the end of 2021 because one could make a “slight argument” that there is “some impact” from that racino, so he would allow the Springs Valley some time to transition out and wean themselves off that fee.

Eberhart noted that House Committee on Public Policy Chair Smaltz had called hold harmless “bad public policy” and removed it, and “I agree,” he continued, questioning why the state should countenance requiring “one private entity pay another private entity for perceived harm” – here to a community, and “that might even be more egregious.” He pointed out that the House had just provided French Lick with the ability to access $3 million more from the General Fund via the Davisson amendment, so maybe they don’t need it now. He questioned, “Where does this stop?” Rep. Eberhart then pledged to work with everyone in conference on this, and withdrew his amendment.

Rep. Sullivan offered Amendment #3, saying that she had wanted to offer an amendment in committee providing for a third-party facilitator for the Vigo County local license negotiations, but Rep. Huston had answered her concerns with the establishment of a formal advisory board. The amendment simply specified that advisory board members cannot hold an interest in any gaming operation.

Rep. Huston supported the amendment, which was attached via voice vote, and that wrapped up the evening’s Second Readings at 7:20 p.m., with a few hours still remaining before the deadline.

Third Reading on the House Floor

Third Reading debate on April 15 consumed just under a full hour, and featured a lot of lawmakers expressing assorted concerns with SB 552, but wanting it moved on so they could be sorted out in conference.

Rep. Huston took three minutes to outline the bill that “deals with gaming regulations in the State of Indiana,” which he said accomplished five basic things:

- (1) Establishes a process for on-premises sports wagering, including a 9.5% tax rate
- (2) Directs 3.3% of sport wagering tax dollars to the addiction services fund
- (3) Allows a Gary casino to move from Buffington Harbor “to the interstate,” and requires the operator to make two $25 million payments and surrender the second Gary license
- (4) Establishes a process for Vigo County to “receive a license,” replete with community input to vet the operator, who would be chosen in an “an auction to be led by the Gaming Commission for a license”
- (5) Casino tax rate changes effective in 2021

He noted that Thursday Second Reading amendments were added, ensuring additional funding for the West Baden historical hotel fund; a “public process” for meetings involving the governor and Indiana Gaming Commission and “gaming interests”; allowing employees who lose their jobs from a Gary casino shift inland within the city special consideration under a Harris amendment; and a Sullivan amendment that provided “clarity on who can serve” on the local commission in Terre Haute vetting the applicants. Huston thanked his fellow cosponsors, Reps. Lehman, Porter, and Austin.

Rep. Morrison was first to rise to address the bill, stating up front that he would support and vote for it, but complaining that there was much about it that needed to be fixed.

Rep. Morrison expressed his respect for the work that Rep. Huston had done on the bill, and said that following “a lot of great conversations” between the two, they had “agreed to disagree” because “the process will work itself out and we’ll get to the place where want to be” after conference. He mentioned that he had lived for 16 years in Vigo County before moving east to Clay County, and that Terre Haute and environs had “taken it on the chin a little bit” over the years, but their “trajectory is on the way up.”

Morrison told newer legislators that five years ago he had offered an amendment to an Eberhart bill paving the way for a Wabash Valley casino that he eventually pulled back, but that showed he had been “talking about [this] for quite a while.” The original 1993 rationale for riverboat gaming was to promote economic development, and economic need helped determine where lawmakers first put them. For Vigo County and Terre Haute, “tourism is a big part of our portfolio,” and a casino “can certainly help add to that.” “Obviously, the job creation is huge,” he added, with a casino bringing 800 direct jobs and more in spin-off employment.

While he had said that he would support the measure, “Unfortunately the way this bill is written now, I don’t think a 14th license will make it through the process. I don’t think this will happen. We have cornered Vigo County into basically not being able to get this casino.” Rep. Morrison continued, “I think the language in the Senate is more effective,” saying he would work toward changes in conference.

As for the Second Reading amendments, “We made a mistake on some of them,” pointing specifically to Rep. Davisson’s Orange County-specific change. “Folks, we have to stop subsidizing French Lick and West Baden,” he said. “It makes no sense to me the fact that we’re taking money from private companies and sending it to another community across the state to fund programs, and now to an actual hotel – the precedent there is strange to me. I think the policy is not good.” He hoped that the Senate takes this and other amendments out.

As for the sports wagering components, Morrison noted that he had worked for this for four years – “I was one of the first legislators in the country to start working on this.” The bill was, however, in his view “missing a major component of it, and that’s the mobile part.” Eight states have sports wagering, and all have mobile gaming, although Mississippi only allows mobile gaming on premises. “We’re better than Mississippi. We shouldn’t adopt a policy that they have which has decreased their revenues from sports gaming by more 50 percent. And I understand that it’s not all about dollars, but it’s a lot about dollars,” and mobile gaming needs to return in conference.” He continued, “When we take this back over to the Senate, I certainly think we need to take a look at how the mobile language can get back into the bill and make sports wagering a very worthwhile endeavor for this bill and for the state.”

The Morrison bottom line: “I will vote yes, but I think the bill has a lot of work (ahead).”

Rep. Justin Moed (D) of Indianapolis said that he wanted to delve into a provision not talked about a lot.

Rep. Moed probed the license limits under current law with Rep. Huston, using Huston to acknowledge the point that under the bill as structured, “there is no cap” on licenses, and the Gameboys could approve one operator for all 14 licenses. Rep. Huston tried to explain that the Commission has some authority to regulate it, and an appropriate number of licenses will be discussed in conference. Huston enlightened Rep. Moed about national industry trends toward consolidation within operators, and he wanted a new law to “give as much flexibility as possible.” “It’s a pretty large policy change,” Moed told him, and solons “need to look at as we move forward. Essentially every license could be owned by one single casino operator.” Like Rep. Morrison, he said he would support the bill now because it includes provisions we need, but warned of the “very big public policy change” with respect to busting the cap, adding “I hope this comes out in conference.”

Rep. Mara Candelaria-Reardon (D) of Munster came to the well to “rise in opposition.” She was one of two lawmakers specifically mentioned a few weeks ago by Hammond mayors as one of the lawmakers he was counting on to rally opposition to the measure. “I just really believe that an investment in the current location like the others invested in their location, would be the fair thing to do. The community that I represent, of Hammond, Indiana, had an operator that invested millions and millions of dollars in their current location, building roads, investing in the facility. That hasn’t happened in Gary. That didn’t happen in Gary. None of these locations in the industrial communities that they’re located in had ideal locations like on a highway. I don’t think it’s fair to change the rules in the middle of the game and benefit and choose one community over another. Hammond, Indiana followed all the rules. Hammond did the right thing, and now Hammond’s going to suffer because the rules are going to be changed by this body, and I would ask you to vote no.”

Rep. Kevin Mahan (R) of Hartford City offered the afternoon’s longest set of comments, delivered from the perspective of a businessman and former county sheriff who was plucked by the Daniels Administration to become the founding superintendent of the Indiana Gaming Commission’s division of gaming agents.

He told colleagues that some of the things he had heard about the bill and industry “have been kind of disturbing to me.” While he respected people for their own opinions, he was concerned about factual matters related to working in or owning a casino, noting a “lot of conversation about integrity.” As he said Rep. Bauer “correctly pointed out” on Second Reading, “no legislator has been indicted on account of gaming legislation since 1993, when this General Assembly passed riverboat gaming [and] the same is true about Indiana’s gaming companies and their executives,” many of whom, Rep. Mahan said, he and his agents had investigated in background and follow-up licensing investigations that even assessed whether “the applicant is of good moral character and will be a credit to the Indiana gaming industry.” Based upon the detailed background investigations required of all those involved in the industry and his own experience in working with and regulating many of them, “I would urge you not to let your vote be swayed by unsubstantiated rumors, most likely initiated by opponents of Senate Bill 552. It’s patently unfair to perpetuate rumors about the character and conduct of a person or persons who have withstood the rigorous Gaming Commission vetting process, but don’t have a voice in this House to defend themselves.”

Rep. Mahan echoed the words of others when he urged support of the bill, but acknowledged the work still to be done. He wanted colleagues to frame their decision making in this way: If these laws were not on the books, would we do this this way? “I am going to suggest that we wouldn’t.” He noted his work in the insurance and auction business as well as gaming, and noted, “I cannot think of any industry that is more heavily regulated than the gaming industry and the State of Indiana ought to be very proud of this.” He also praised some of the operators for their proactive stances, noting that Blue Chip Casino got ahead of Native American gaming expansion nearby, spending “hundreds of millions of dollars more money” with its expansion before the 1997 Michigan casino debut, while “in East Chicago, they held off; they waited.”

He then spoke to the concerns raised by industry competitors about cannibalization. “I always said it will be real interesting when some of the other states catch on. But you know, these people that are out in the hall talking about cannibalization, they didn’t care much about cannibalization when they brought in their competition across the state line that took a lot of money from the State of Indiana,” a pointed reference to Penn National Gaming, Inc., Caesars Entertainment, Inc., and the former Pinnacle Entertainment, Inc., an ownership universe that accounted for seven of the state’s 13 properties.

He spoke about how “some home-grown Indiana businessmen who care about this state” want to reinvest in the state, and while he was appreciative that the fee for the off-footprint Gary casino move within the city was slashed from $100 million to $50 million in committee, he was still concerned about the surrender provision and hold harmless discussions that required cross-subsidies that wouldn’t fly in the insurance business he is involved in, nor in any other business in Indiana “but that’s what we do because we put ‘gambling’ after it.” He related his personal experience in fixing up and flipping a commercial apartment building early in his career and discovering later that the taxes, fees, and related costs effectively left him unable to reinvest and spend in his community anywhere near what he had expected to be able to do.

Rep. Mahan continued, “I just want to remind you that we have some homegrown Indiana businessmen what care about this state, they want to do great things for this state. They want to employ a lot of people. And I think when we’re sitting here talking about – let’s call it what it is, a tax, $50 million, plus we’ll take your license – I just sit here and think we’re possibly sitting here passing over dollars to pick up dimes.”

Rep. Harris then rose to tell fellow members what an “honor it is to represent the district I represent” – which included parts or all of Hammond, East Chicago, and Gary, and told them that “If you do this correctly, can be a win for all three cities.” While he appreciated their help in the prior week with his amendments, there was “more we can do to make this a win-win-win,” including holding Hammond and East Chicago harmless and subsidizing the Cline Avenue bridge. He urged everyone to “take another look at those amendments” in conference.

Rep. Eberhart took to the well to first tell Rep. Moed, “I’m sure that the (U.S.) Department of Justice would have something to say if there was just one company that owned 14 licenses here in Indiana. There are certain federal laws that would come into play as well.”

While Rep. Eberhart's contention that the feds would be picky about such concentration was well-taken, it is the Federal Trade Commission that undertakes a review of large mergers and acquisitions under the Hart-Scott-Rodino (HSR) Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976, and not the Department of Justice (Indiana transactions have seen some delays over HSR concerns in the past, although not in recent years . . . and your favorite newsletter's proprietary data has been used by the FTC in the past to help them sort through markets).

The Shelbyville Republican thanked Rep. Huston for his work on the bill having been "more than accommodating ... and hope to continue that dialogue" moving forward. He said that he would back the bill "today," but wanted to use conference deliberations to iron out some additional changes. "I'm happy with the provisions that are in the bill; they're not perfect. There's work to be done on each of the main provisions of the bill."

Eberhart was particularly concerned with the impact of one provision on his district.

Rep. Eberhart explained, the Senate bill as it came over, moved up the date for live dealers for table games in Anderson and Shelbyville "to an immediate date. That date was taken out by Chairman Smaltz and he did do some good things with it. He did change the enabling language for the live table games from a 'may' to a 'shall,' which is important - I appreciate that - and we moved it up from March 2021 to January of 2021, so it does give some certainty to live table games to the racinos, but I do still think that the right public policy is to move that date up even further." He noted that 650 jobs, up to $30 million in wagering taxes to the state, million of dollars in more investment, and millions in additional property taxes would result "just by making that change. That's a lot, and that's what were going to forego if we continue to delay that implementation."

He reiterated statements that he had made both in the House Committee on Public Policy and on the floor that "the only reason that Indiana Grand and Hoosier Park doesn't (sic) have live table games now is for just one reason, one reason - and that's the threat of Governor Pence's veto back in 2015. The provision was in that bill that would have given live table games immediately to the two racinos. It was taken out due to that threat of the governor. The reason for that threat: The governor didn't feel comfortable to have that during his two terms of governor. He only served one term. He's in D.C. now, as we all know, so there's no longer a threat for us. There was no 'grand compromise.' You will hear folks talk about some big compromise that was put together in 2015 on this issue. It's just - that's inaccurate. There was only one reason that it did not happen - and again, that was the threat of a veto from Governor Pence. We don't have that threat now. We don't have a threat of a veto from our current governor."

Rep. Eberhart elaborated, "The Senate overwhelmingly supported SB 552 and sent it over here with live table games to happen immediately, and that was changed, again, as I mentioned. They also sent that bill over to us in 2015 with live table games, so obviously they feel strongly that that provision should happen now. I had an amendment back in 2015 that was put into that bill, where 76 of us voted for it, so I think the appetite is clearly within this body for that to happen again." "Let's support the bill [and] take a long look at it in conference committee" and address these concerns."

Rep. Bob Morris (R) of Fort Wayne told the chamber about his "amazing" experience chairing the interim study committee that looked into how to revive the city that "fell upon hard times," and how he had promised Mayor Freeman-Wilson he would "do everything that I could to help her community." The big development opportunity is the proposed intermodal port, and the impediment to the "great potential" at Buffington Harbor, according to a world-renowned architect, was the "two boats that are corking the port." They need to be moved, and "where they get moved to is up to us," Rep. Morris said, adding that "The mayor would like to see one of the licenses go to 80-94." He asked, "what can we do today to help the City of Gary ... What is best for the State of Indiana? What is best for the people of Indiana on where these licenses go? What is the State of Indiana going to make the most money off of? How are the people going to benefit most where these licenses go?"

Then Rep. Morris continued (with a bit of revisionist history), "So a company comes in and purchases these two licenses that have been in bankruptcy for three years. they've been sitting there for three years and this group of investors came in and decided to take a risk, to move these licenses. And as they've researched cities from north to south, and east to west, it's been decided that one of the licenses will go in Terre Haute, Indiana. That's where this private business wants to put one of these licenses. The other license is going to stay in the City of Gary. Now we have the port freed up."

"Ladies and gentlemen of the House, we need to do what is correct for the people of Indiana on these licenses," concluded Rep. Morris. "The City of Gary and the people of Gary are asking us to move these boats."

Rep. Carolyn Jackson (D) of Hammond, one of the other lawmakers that Hammond Mayor McDermott was counting on, came forward to thank Rep. Huston for his work on the measure, but cautioned the House, "This bill is far from ready to be passed." She lamented that so many things were left out of the bill related to Hammond, or not even considered. She added, "I would definitely like to see Gary prosper, but not [on] the backs of East Chicago and Hammond." Rep. Jackson claimed that a new intermodal facility at Buffington Harbor would mean trains of 1,400 cars or more "will shut our city down" and disrupt emergency fire and ambulance service. "I urge you to not support this bill."

Rep. Austin came forward to call for House members to drop their balkanized concerns and think about the greater good. "I completely sympathize with my colleagues who are concerned about the impact this is going to have on their communities, but I'm also going to ask you to take a statewide view for a second."

"Right now, gaming is the fourth greatest source of revenue in our state, (with) 12,000 employees, and that includes the lottery and everyone else. Charity gaming alone is about a $400 million industry in this state," she educated her colleagues.

Rep. Austin also referred to the "wild west when it comes to sports gaming," with 18 states considering regulation and management. "If we kill this bill today, it's likely to be another 18 months before we're likely to do anything in regards to sports betting," she intoned.

"And this is a statistic that should make your hair stand on end," said Rep. Austin prefacing word that the American Gaming Association conservatively estimates that Hoosiers are already spending some $300 million annually on illegal sports betting that we "can't get our arms around ... unless we pass a bill." The illegal wagering comes with no consumer or athlete protections, regulation or taxation. She acknowledged of SB 552 that "It is a total, total work in progress at this point. It is going continue to undergo some significant changes. But if we kill this bill today, we have no chance to manage sports betting." She said that as the home to the National Collegiate Athletic Association and several professional sports teams, "we need to have some sort of framework in place" to address this new form of gaming.

She asked colleagues to "keep your reservations in your mind. But I hope that you'll see that passing this thing is the next important step to trying to get our arms around - not just the boats, where the discussion has been dominated - but the truth is, this new form of gaming that's about to be introduced in Indiana, that we have got to get a handle on, because I guarantee you all of our surrounding states are taking action to do something as we speak," said Austin.

Rep. Bauer came to the front of the chamber to ask a question of Rep. Huston about what establishments would be allowed to conduct sports betting. Rep. Huston seemed to think he was asking about on-premise vs. mobile wagering, but both ultimately worked through things so that Rep. Bauer understood it was just the casinos and racinos that could offer sports wagering, and Rep. Huston communicated that only on-premise wagering would be allowed as SB 552 currently stood. There was no discussion about whether on-premise wagering would include the satellite wagering facilities.

Rep. Vanessa Summers (D) of Indianapolis then came forward. "Okay, here we are again," she started, noting that she was one of a dwindling number of lawmakers who was a member of the legislature at the beginning of casino gaming. "We're pregnant; we can't be a little bit pregnant," she said. "We have gaming in Indiana and need to do what we can to help." She recounted the quest of former Rep. Charlie Brown (D) and Rep. Vernon Smith (D) of Gary over the years to try to help lift up their city. "They need this," she admonished the House. "You cannot let a people die."

Rep. John Bartlett (D) of Indianapolis also spoke of his experience with Rep. Morris on the study committee that looked at Buffington Harbor. He noted that the railroad companies that were once at odds have now come together, resolving their differences, and everything was on pace for the intermodal facility if the boats could be moved. He referred to the largesse that would follow from the new economic development, suggesting that "With that kind of income, they could then fix the Cline Avenue bridge." Of course, the new bridge, a public-private partnership project, is scheduled to be completed by January.

Majority Floor Leader Lehman left his front row seat to hint that his colleagues were "hopefully wrapping it up" for the day on the measure. He recalled that when he and Reps. Smaltz and Huston began to parse through it, they were faced with an immediate "parade of folks with interests" that proceeded to run through a list of the winners and losers.

"I went into this," Lehman said, as he explained he has with all the gaming bills he has reviewed in his six years on the Committee on Public Policy, with one thing in mind: "I don't care who, I don't care when, and I don't care where. I care about the State of Indiana. What is good public policy for the State of Indiana. We've heard a lot of people say, 'We need to change this,' 'We need to change that,' 'My town is gonna be hurt,' 'This town is going to be hurt. What is good public policy for the State of Indiana? This is a big lift. There's a lot of expansion in this, I know there is. But is it good public policy? I think some of it is. We will be take this to conference" where Rep. Huston will help reshape it. "I hope we all can filter this through what is good public policy solely for the State of Indiana."

Rep. Huston closed. "You know, this is probably the most challenging bill I'll carry, only because there's a lot of interest in it, and nobody is wrong. There's folks that philosophically just don't like gaming. There's folks that this has a huge impact to the communities. And there's issues regarding the state, maximizing the value to the state that gaming does provide and many, many good points were made. And I think uniformly, I get the fact that this bill is not in perfect shape. I've tried and will continue to work with members of the entire body to figure out how we get this into better shape. One of the things I do want to note is we have tried to narrow the focus of this to those five components I talked about at the beginning: The sports wagering, the sports wagering infrastructure, making sure if we expand - if there's new gaming in the State of Indiana, that we're getting dollars towards the addiction services fund. That we talk about and we think about what was discussed here in this body, in Public Policy, in Ways and Means. I mean, frankly, some of the best discussions I think we've had as a body has been around this issue, both thoughtful, and folks sharing both genuine concerns and thoughtful solutions. How we deal with the process in Terre Haute and Vigo County and then thinking about how we broaden out an infrastructure that strengthens what is - Representative Morrison noted on Thursday and others have noted today is a very important, frankly, aspect, and not just the state revenue source but an economic driver for our State. One of the great challenges of this is that you're dealing with both new investments and investments that have already been made, and we need to talk, and I'll continue to talk to Rep. Moed about the license cap. We've got some language in the bill that deals with what's referred to as 'undue economic concentration.' Rep. Eberhart noted the federal concerns, and I want to certainly make sure we address that. But the fundamental thing is if we keep it moving, what's driven this entire process for me is both the dialogue and the fact of 'How do we do all of this to maximize value to all of the taxpayers across the State of Indiana by certainly recognizing also those most dramatically impacted?'"

Huston then thanked his cosponsors, Reps. Lehman, Porter, and Austin.

The measure passed the House 78-15 (seven members were excused). Both Republicans and Democrat supported it by more than 2:1 margins. The four Democrats who opposed it were all from areas that would have been hurt by a new casino. Two of the 11 Republicans who opposed it were in the same boat (so to speak), while seven of the Republicans who voted against it fall into the anti-gaming category, and one Republican opponent may simply have voted against it because of some of the fiscal issues and questions.

The only Wabash Valley lawmaker to vote against SB 552: anti-gaming Rep. Bruce Borders (R) of Jasonville. "I've always said and still believe that gambling is economic development for people who are bad at math," he told the Terre Haute Tribune-Star. "And ultimately what often happens with these places is it comes in with all the excitement and the bling and you get a great turnout initially. But later what happens is ... they become a regressive tax on the poor. I do not, and will not support the expansion of gaming in Indiana."

The three other Terre Haute lawmakers all backed the bill. Rep. Tonya Pfaff (D) of Terre Haute (whose brother serves on the Terre Haute City Council) told the paper, "I think it's very important that Vigo County has the opportunity to have a casino. What I believe is we need the opportunity to let voters decide. From what I've heard, all kinds of cities in Indiana want a casino and we need to at least have that choice." Rep. Bob Heaton (R) of Terre Haute agreed. "I think it could be an economic driver for the area. And when I talk to people they seem all seem to be in favor of it, of course I'm sure there are people who aren't," he said. "But based on the referendum language in there, the people in Vigo County will get to make that decision for themselves." Rep. Morrison told the Trib-Star basically what he said on the floor: "As 552 sits right now, even though I'm voting for it, there is a lot wrong with it and it'll be a big lift to change some of it."

● Caesars Entertainment Corporation – as we hinted to you in March would be the case – names Tony Rodio as the new CEO of the conglomerate. Rodio, Affinity Gaming's CEO since October, was president, CEO, and a board member of Tropicana Entertainment, Inc. for seven years before the sale of the parent company of Tropicana Evansville to Eldorado Resorts, Inc. in late 2018 (ironically, Eldorado is one of two entities reported to be making a play for a Caesars takeover). Rodio was also general manager of Argosy Casino Lawrenceburg and then Hollywood Casino Lawrenceburg, from October 2008 until May 2011, overseeing the $336 million conversion from the original riverboat ... and giving him an understanding of the Cincinnati market (and Indiana dual-casino operator Penn National Gaming, Inc., which owned the Lawrenceburg property). Rodio's Affinity, with Z Capital Partners, also made a takeover bid in October for Full House Resorts, Inc., parent of Rising Star Casino Resort, giving him an even more intimate inside peek into Indiana's gaming industry.

□ Writing Thursday for Seeking Alpha, veteran gaming industry observer Howard Jay Klein explains that "Rodio is a four-decade gaming pro who guided Icahn's Tropicana Entertainment from a frazzled, dated collection of so so casinos, to a company stout enough to attract a $1.85bn sale to the very smart Eldorado Resorts and the Gaming and Leisure Properties. It was a win-win"

□ The Caesars board also announced the formal creation of a Transaction Committee to oversee "the Company's evaluation of ongoing efforts in creating additional shareholder value," confirming that the world's largest casino company is open for offers, if not up for grabs. Eldorado Resorts, and billionaire Tilman Fertitta (Golden Nugget) are said to be the two with access to Caesars books as they perform their respective due diligence in preparation for likely bids.

□ With all the street talk surrounding the "undue economic concentration" provisions related to ownership in SB 552, we thought we would run the numbers on what a Caesars buyout by Eldorado would look like for the Hoosier gaming market:

● As part of a legal action far from the borders of Indiana, on April 8, the U.S. Department of Justice released a new memorandum clarifying that state lotteries were not intended to be addressed in the Justice Department's controversial reversal of course on the federal Wire Act re-interpretation released earlier this year. Attorney General Curtis Hill (R) was among a bipartisan cadre of 25 attorneys general that we told you last month had sent a letter expressing states' concerns to the feds, and asking Justice officials to clarify the recent legal opinion regarding the meaning of the Wire Act and its effect on lotteries. The AGs contended that the latest Wire Act interpretation could reach beyond the realms of sports gambling and into areas traditionally controlled by the states, potentially jeopardizing state lotteries.

□ "I welcome the Department of Justice's clarification of the January 2019 Wire Act memorandum," General Hill said. "The Hoosier Lottery plays an important role in funding various programs in Indiana. Deputy Attorney General (Rod) Rosenstein's clarification of the Department's position is a move in the right direction."

● The state's new revenue collection forecast – the bipartisan parameters upon which the Fiscal Year 2020-2021 budget will be shaped – was released Wednesday, and the numbers show a downturn in gaming tax collections for the current fiscal year compared to both the most recent (December 2018) forecast, and modest, but steady growth going forward. One caveat: this does not, obviously, account for nay potential changes from SB 552.

FY	12/2018 Forecast	04/2019 Forecast	Growth Over Prior Year	Difference - 12/2018 to 04/2019 Forecast
2019	$ 411.5M	$ 414.2M	-$ 18.0M - 4.2%	$ 2.6M 0.6%
2020	$ 415.4M	$ 417.9M	$ 3.7M 0.9%	$ 2.5M 0.6%
2021	$ 417.6M	$ 420.9M	$ 3.0M 0.7%	$ 3.3M 0.8%

● Indiana reeled in $47.5 million during March for the state's General Fund from the riverboat and racino wagering taxes, underperforming the most recent (December 2018) forecast by $2.0 million (- 4.0%). March is the initial month in Fiscal Year 2019 in which both the riverboat and racino taxes missed the mark. Combined tax revenue from the two categories improved compared to March 2018 by $10.0 million (26.7%); a similar rate of growth occurred in January. Through the first nine months of Fiscal Year 2019, the riverboat and racino wagering taxes generated General Fund revenue of $278.5 million, topping the forecasted amount by $5.8 million (2.1%) and exceeding the accumulation during the first three quarters of FY 2018 by $41.8 million (18%).

□ Riverboat wagering collections aggregated to $36.0 million for March, which is $1.8 million (- 4.7%) below the monthly estimate rendered just three months earlier, but $7.0 million (24.3%) above actual revenue in March 2018. Fiscal year-to-date performance has now improved compared to the same nine months in the prior fiscal year by $33.0 million (20.3%) and the numbers are running ahead of the most recent round of expectations by $2.4 million (1.2%).

□ Racino wagering collections accrued to $11.5 million for March, which is $200,000 (- 1.7%) below the monthly estimate yet $3.0 million (35.2%) above revenue in March 2018. Through the first three quarters of Fiscal Year 2019, revenue from the racino wagering tax has grown by $8.8 million (11.9%) compared to the same July-March period in FY18 and has outperformed the forecast by $3.4 million (4.2%).

□ Riverboat admissions taxes for March totaled $1.3 million. Because of a change in how and when they are collected, there were no such collections in March 2018. Through the first nine months of Fiscal Year 2019, riverboat admissions taxes total $8.5 million, up by $900,000 (11.8%) from $7.6 million during the first three quarters of FY 2018. Estimate fiscal year-to-date admissions tax dollars of $9.4 million through March are running $900,000 (- 10.0%) below expectations.

● One of the highlights of the recent State of the City address by East Chicago Mayor Anthony Copeland (D) was this enthusiastic line: "Did I say Cline Ave bridge? The bridge will reopen in January 2020!!!!" The bridge was shut down on an immediate emergency basis in mid-November 2009, despite carrying some 30,000 vehicles daily, including many to the Gary and East Chicago casinos. The Indiana Department of Transportation soon thereafter demolished the Cline Avenue elevated span, diverting traffic - including that from the Arcelor Mittal steel mill - through city streets. Some 11 years later, the span will reopen as a toll route under a unique public-private partnership.

● The Hobart City Council unanimously approved a resolution endorsing the ability of Spectacle Entertainment, LLC to move one of its Majestic Star Casino licenses to an off-footprint site within Gary and free up space at Buffington Harbor for a new trans-modal facility. The selfish motive for Hobart: The closer the land-based casino would be to I-94 and I-65, the more it would mean for commercial development on the west side of Hobart.

● Chicago's mayor-elect will be the latest in a line of Chicago mayors to lobby lawmakers in Springfield for a Windy City Casino. "The sad reality is if we don't do something about this, we're going to continue to lose tens of millions of dollars every single year to Indiana and Wisconsin. And that makes no sense to me," Mayor-elect Lori Lightfoot (D-IL) told reporters at mid-month. "We've got to have serious conversations about a casino in the city of Chicago and elsewhere."

Southern Market News . . .

● The new market leader in the Cincinnati market, the land-based downtown Cincinnati casino, will soon have its third different brand in just six or so years, after opening in March 2013. JACK Entertainment LLC enters into contracts to sell its JACK Cincinnati Casino and Greater Northern Kentucky's Turfway Park to Hard Rock International and VICI Properties for $780 million, pending regulatory approval. VICI will simultaneously enter into a favorable triple-net leased fee agreement with Hard Rock International, and Hard Rock will be responsible for the operations at both properties. JACK Cleveland Casino and JACK Thistledown Racino will remain JACK Entertainment properties.

□ The property opened as a Horseshoe-branded property, a joint venture between Caesars Entertainment Corporation and Dan Gilbert's Rock Gaming, before transitioning to the JACK label in June 2016, as part of Rock Gaming's rebrand.

□ When the deal closes late this year, look for the Cincinnati casino to expand its entertainment offerings, and Turfway (in Florence, Kentucky) to add historical horse racing machines.

● Former Cincinnati Bengals star defensive back Adam "Pacman" Jones accepted a plea negotiation in Ohio County Circuit Court and was sentenced by Judge James D. Humphrey to serve two weeks in the Dearborn County Jail with credit for four days that he already had served after his February arrest at Rising Star Casino • Resort on assorted charges after he was found to be capping his table game bets. He must also serve one year of probation.

□ Jones pleaded guilty to a single Felony 6 charge of cheating at a gambling game and one Misdemeanor A charge of resisting law enforcement (fleeing). Other charges - including Felony 6 Intimidation; Felony 6 Battery Against a Public Safety Official; Misdemeanor A Theft; a second Misdemeanor A Resisting Law Enforcement (forcibly resisting); Misdemeanor B Disorderly Conduct; and Misdemeanor B Public Intoxication - were dismissed.

● In a just-filed Form 14A proxy statement, Full House Resorts, Inc. management discusses its Rising Star Casino • Resort, and boasts that "Today, Rising Star is in better physical shape than it has been in for many years."

□ Full House Resorts President and CEO Dan Lee tells shareholders, “We’ve also been focused on cost controls. We recently reevaluated our longstanding strategy of operating our buffet with service for three meals per day, seven days per week. Buffets require high volume levels to be efficient. Many of the buffet customers are ‘comped’ by the casino, but operating a buffet during slow periods is a very expensive way to serve free food to a handful of customers.” Lee adds, “We are now renovating an older adjoining restaurant to operate as a ‘Bistro’ during lunch and dinner periods. We expect that many of its guests will be comped casino customers, but the Bistro will offer a better meal experience for our guests at a lower cost to the casino. We will still operate the buffet during lunch and dinner on weekends, and we will strive to offer a great experience during those busy periods.”

□ On the lodging side, Lee tells shareholders that a little bit of Las Vegas has come to the Ohio River. “Our hotel now charges a $10 resort fee, as is common for many hotels in recent years. The resort fee now includes a free breakfast buffet, but not the same type of buffet as the full-service buffet we have been offering. The new free breakfast buffet is similar to that offered by many mid-priced hotel chains, where guests serve themselves coffee, waffles and various cereals and pastries. Our guests are still receiving a ‘comped’ buffet of sorts, but the resort fee significantly mitigates the cost to provide it.”

□ Lee also confirms something we told you he was pondering recently. “We’ve also re-evaluated our policy of operating our casino’s table games 24 hours per day, seven days per week. In the early morning, the staff required to operate the table games pit sometimes outnumbers the customers. Mathematically, it is also now difficult to earn a profit on a $5 blackjack game. Using relatively new technology, we can offer a table games-like experience with new forms of slot machines. We are installing a cadre of these new machines in our casino near the table games pit so we can continue to accommodate customers seeking to play table games at non-peak hours.”

● Indiana Democratic Party Chair John Zody seeks an investigation into reports that Governor Eric Holcomb (R) flew on a private jet “owned (sic) by Spectacle Entertainment” to Republican Governors Association (RGA) meetings to a pair of political events, but did not disclose either flight as contributions on his 2018 campaign finance report. Democrats say the Governor’s campaign previously justified not disclosing the flights because Gov. Holcomb did not directly benefit. However, on the dates of the trips, Democrats claim, “thousands of dollars of direct contributions were made to the governor’s campaign and the Indiana Republican Party.”

□ In a pair of statements, Zody called upon the Indiana Election Division “to notify Holcomb he filed a defective report” and the Indiana Inspector General to “determine whether Holcomb accepted the flights as gifts in violation of state ethics rules [since] Holcomb contends his flights were not political contributions”

□ Hammond Mayor Tom McDermott, Jr. (D) devoted a few minutes of his weekly paid political radio show on WJOB 1230-AM in Hammond April 12 to knock the Governor over the RGA flights. As the WJOB website summarized it, “Mayor Tom McDermott says Indiana governor has committed a felony, wonders if it will be recognized.”

□ Mayor McDermott crystallized the Governor’s argument as the RGA was the beneficiary, and thus it was up to RGA to file any required reports. “So it’s no big deal,” suggested Mayor Tom, “using the governor’s logic,” for him to donate $1 million to the Democratic National Committee “and take $700,000 to make some contributions to Democrats.” He said “If I did that, the FBI would be knocking on my door.” As to the House floor vote on the amendment offered by Rep. Pat Bauer (D) of South Bend to open gubernatorial and regulatory meetings to public notice, hizzoner says “The Governor even pissed off his supermajority.” The mayor – an attorney (as is the show’s host, Kevin Smith) whose wife is a Lake County judge – added, “He circumvented the law. RGA didn’t get flown all over the country. That’s a felony, guys, that’s a level 6 felony committed by the Governor. Our governor should know better and he broke the law, and it’s a fact he committed a felony this is a Level 6 felony.”

● Mayors Karen Freeman-Wilson (D) of Gary and Duke Bennett (R) of Terre Haute visited the State House with little notice Thursday afternoon to implore lawmakers in conference committee to focus on the economic development of their respective cities when making decisions regarding SB 552. “We want to be clear about reminding everyone how important this economic development is,” Mayor Bennett said. The duo gave media less than a 30-minute heads-up for the joint availability, quickly arranged to help shift the conversation Inside the Limestone (and Back Home in individual districts over the holiday weekend) from casino interests driving the process helped by friendly executive and legislative branches leaders.

□ Mayor Bennett acknowledged “all the drama ... and all the conversation. “We are really just trying to reframe it a little bit in a way,” he said of the noise, “Because it seems to be there is a lot of discussion out there about a variety of things, and this has always been about economic development for us.” He went on to explain that he and his fellow chief executive “want to continue to make sure that everyone stays focused on the economic development opportunities, not only in Gary and Terre Haute, but the entire State of Indiana.” “We will not only benefit (in the Wabash Valley), but the state will just by changing how gaming licenses work and their impact on economic development, “It’s about a $75 million impact for the state of new revenue if we can get both of these casinos done,” Bennett added. His bottom line: “We’re trying to get everybody to stop and just pause for a minute and think about the most important part of this bill.”

□ Mayor Freeman-Wilson also flipped the switch on the narrative, trying to get lawmakers to turn their collective gaze away from the “shiny object” of casinos and back to the nuts and bolts of economic development. “For us this has never been primarily about the casino,” she asserted Thursday afternoon. “It has always been about the ability to develop Buffington Harbor into the North American Intermodal Gateway.” She reiterated, “We know the demand is there. We have seen that in our preliminary studies,” and sought to remind those involved in the process that “It doesn’t just create economic opportunity for the city of Gary. It creates it for all of Northwest Indiana.” When pressed for details about the proposed port, she was vague, but insisted “We do have a plan. We have done the first phase of the study. We have interested parties.” she continued, “There really is a demand for that area. It is a demand from industrial interests We believe that it is best as an industrial quarter.” But in the end, she added. “I’m not at liberty to name the entities” who are pursuing opportunities in the Buff.

□ When reporters asked about the concerns dominating the mainstream media headlines (and some of the State House gossip) last week – and that particular day – Mayor Bennett responded that both officials and business interests “are always going to have conversations about what’s best for Indiana,” adding, however, that “at the end of the day, I trust everyone involved with the process to make the right decisions and do the right thing.”

□ Asked specifically about the ability of the casino interest to open doors, Mayor Karen replied, “They don’t have any more access than everyday citizens.”

● John Waggoner’s HMS Global Maritime, a New Albany-based marine management and operations company which handled maritime work for some of the initial Indiana riverboat casinos as (very) long-time readers may recall, is expanding its Floyd County operations, using state and local incentives to help create up to 50 new jobs by the end of 2022. The company is renovating and equipping a 10,000 square-foot historic building in downtown New Albany.

□ The new HMS Floyd County facility will house a training and customer service center for American Queen Steamboat Company, which will accommodate 200 to 300 hospitality and hotel trainees annually. Construction is underway, and the new facility is expected to be fully operational by the fall of this year.

Hoosier Lottery

● The Hoosier Lotto jackpot for Saturday, April 20, grew to $34.9 million, a $500,000 jump over the previous jackpot, and the second $500,000 jackpot improvement for the first 20 days of April after all of March only saw two such bottom-line boosts. These have been the only four $500,000 increments of the year to date. The draw on Wednesday, March 6 had marked the first time in more than seven years (since February 18, 2012) that the Hoosier Lotto jackpot topped $30 million, a key psychological number for casual players.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot is the largest up for grabs since the matrix was revised in May 2014, topping the $25.5 million jackpot of October 14, 2017. This jackpot is now the largest available in Indiana in almost 12 years (having topped the $34.50 million jackpot hit on February 18, 2012 and a similar-sized jackpot that was won on October 30, 2010), but still significantly lags that one: the record $54.5 million collected on November 7, 2007. Second place is closer: $42.0 million (won on June 5, 1999). The current jackpot has been growing since February 10, 2018, unclaimed for more than 13 months.

□ The Hoosier Lotto jackpot reigned as the nation's fourth-largest domestic jackpot from the $24.2 million December 19 draw until January 2, trailing the two multistate draw games and California's SuperLotto Plus . . . but after the California jackpot was hit, the Hoosier Lotto jackpot was third domestically, and the top non-multistate game from January 24 until the draw dated April 10. That's when the Golden State game posted a $34 million jackpot compared to Indiana's $33.7 million stake - illustrating the power of $1 million increments in each draw, sometimes five times as much as Indiana was offering each time out. For the April 20 draw, the California jackpot hit $37.0 million to Indiana's $34.9 million.

● Silver Express in Indianapolis maintains the lottery sales lead for a seventh consecutive month, and continues its remarkable run of not having been lower than first or second statewide since a third-place finish back in November 2015. But there's a new face in second place: MCR Short Stop in Portage, its highest place in the rankings since we started monitoring retailer sales in detail back in 2013. Troy Foods Inc. in Indianapolis, which had placed first or second in each month since it transitioned from Buck's Market ownership in the mid-July 2018 buyout (and it had largely been on the podium with Silver Express for years before the change), dropped to third place in February and remained there in March. Silver Express had held the top spot statewide during a strong run from December 2015 through October 2017 and again from January through April. Troy had jumped from 10th to first in August following the July ownership flip. The Troy Foods predecessor, Buck's, had finished second in March 2018. K & D Marathon in Hammond moves up to fourth place after three consecutive months in fifth. Indianapolis now has posted back-to-back months without a win-place showing. Until February, the last time that happened was in July 2018. Before that, the last time Indianapolis failed to post a win-place showing was back in December 2017.

Top 10 Hoosier Lottery Retailers - March 2019 Sales Rank

10 (-) Jerry's Burger Dairy - Fort Wayne	-	-	-	-	-	-

□ Grand Food Junction in Fort Wayne, which ended February in second place statewide, its highest showing since we began tracking retailers in detail in 2013, falls all the way to seventh place in March, about on par with its sixth-place March 2018 performance. Plainfield Dairyland in Plainfield falls off the top 10 list for the first time since April 2017. The Hen in Terre Haute also drops off the top 10 list after a brief (February) reappearance. Plainfield Dairyland started the fiscal year with a second-place July finish, dipped to a disappointing ninth statewide starting 2019, and only moved up one notch in February. Back on the list for the first time since June 2018 is Jerry's Burger Dairy in Fort Wayne, and the eighth-place March finisher, Munster Citgo, is among the top 10 retailers in the state for the first time.

□ Only four different counties are represented among the top 10 retailers, down from six in February and seven in January, and the smallest number of counties earning top 10 honors that we can recall. Four continue to be found in Marion County. Allen County returned to the multiple outlet list in February after dropping off in January, and places three on the list in March, with two from Lake County and one from Porter County. After the top three December retailers hailed from Marion County - a phenomenon we had not seen since August - that slipped to the top two spots in January, and first and third in February and again in March.

□ Here's your deeper dive into the historical March retailer rubric:

● As the Hoosier Lottery approaches its 30th anniversary late this year, former Gov. Mitch Daniels (R) - who oversaw the lottery for eight of those years, and contracted out its management - uses his regular Washington Post op-ed space to suggest that lotteries "manifest all the elements of 'bad taxation.'" He relates story about how "as a new governor confronting a chronically unbalanced budget and a massive debt owed to schools, universities and localities, I sought to lighten a fiscal brainstorming session by saying, 'Hey, I know a great new revenue source. We'll put the state in the cigarette business. We'll call 'em 'Hoosier Smokes.' The margins will be terrific and the take enormous.' My teammates looked properly shocked, but then I confirmed that, of course, I was kidding, but wanted to make a different point: The state already operates a lucrative, high-margin business that promotes addictive, often self-destructive behavior and preys primarily on poor people. It's called the lottery."

□ The Purdue University president writes that “the spread and growth of state lotteries as a public-finance tool has never stopped troubling me. I recognize that my view is an isolated one. Among the many ways that governments extract money from the public, lotteries are uniquely popular across income, social, geographic and political spectrums. I once proposed a plan not to end the Hoosier Lottery but merely to cap its revenue at current levels and devote the monetized value of their future growth to making community college free to young people of moderate means. Republicans were unenthused, and Democrats were actively opposed. The bill went nowhere. As far as I can tell, the result would have been the same in most other states.”

□ Daniels cites high odds, double taxation “by the lottery itself and by the taxes on any winnings,” and “severe regressivity” in making his case. He notes that “As a percentage of income, the money spent by low-income people is 10 times that of wealthier residents who play the lottery.” And, he adds, “If the nature of lottery taxation is a bit deceptive, the way it has been marketed is an outright con job. In state after state, lotteries were sold as benefiting education” (though not in Indiana).

□ Speaking to the odds, Indiana’s former chief executive laments – as he did during his tenure in office – “If my Syrian-immigrant grandfather had offered odds that crummy in the numbers game he ran out of his pool hall, he’d have been chased out of Monessen, Pa. I used to point out to fans of the lottery system, ‘The Atlantic City mob let you keep 92 percent.’ Here’s a modest suggestion: States should consider reducing their skim of the wagers; at 73 percent, even Massachusetts’ leading payout seems unfairly skimpy. No state would go broke sharing a little more of the take; in only nine states do lotto revenues amount to even 3 percent of total state receipts.”

□ He concludes by turning to a former Indianapolis staple to reinforce his point: “My sources tell me that the long-standing enterprise called ‘pea shake,’ a traditional form of numbers gambling prevalent for decades in my Indiana hometown’s inner-city neighborhoods, is down to two operators and likely to close up shop soon. Local law enforcement has played a part, but competition from the Hoosier Lottery is cited as the biggest reason. By all accounts, a pea-shake player had a shot at 80 percent to 90 percent of the pot. Wouldn’t it seem that our public servants could give their suckers at least that fair a shake?”

● The Indiana Supreme Court unanimously denies transfer in Parsley, II v. Indiana, No. 18A-CR-72, the strange odyssey we’ve chronicled for you over the past few years involving Jackie Harold Parsley, II and the extended Parsley clan in a case involving fraud perpetrated on the Hoosier Lottery.

● The Tax Foundation releases a ranking of state lottery tax withholdings, and finds that among the 35 states that tax lottery winnings (California and Delaware do not tax such lucre), only Pennsylvania (3.07%) and North Dakota (2.90%) have a lower such rate than that of Indiana (3.23%).

IN Horse Racing & Racinos

● Indiana Grand Racing & Casino kicked off its 17th season of Thoroughbred and Quarter Horse racing April 16.

□ Indiana Grand will operate under a slightly adjusted post time schedule in 2019. Racing on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Fridays will begin at 2:15 p.m. with Saturday racing set for 6:15 p.m. The season in Shelbyville extends through Wednesday, November 6.

□ In addition to the Pick 5, implemented during the 2018 racing season, Indiana Grand will offer a new wager in 2019. The Quarter Horse Pentafecta will be offered on each Quarter Horse race and will include a carryover. The 10¢ wager debuted opening night.

● On April 2, the House dissented from Senate amendments to HB 1196, the Indiana Horse Racing Commission’s technical amendments bill. Rep. Bob Cherry (R) of Greenfield, the bill’s author, and Rep. Terri Austin (R) of Anderson were named as House conferees, joined by Reps. Sean Eberhart (R) of Shelbyville; Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn (chair of the House Committee on Public Policy in which the bill was heard); and Justin Moed (D) and Vanessa Summers (D) of Indianapolis. The Senate conferees were the Senate sponsors, Senate Committee on Public Policy Chair Ron Alting of Lafayette (whose panel heard the bill), and Senate Democratic Leader Tim Lanane (D) of Anderson. Senate advisors were Sens. Vaneta Becker (R) of Evansville, Greg Taylor (D) of Indianapolis, and Ron Grooms (R) of Jeffersonville. The conference committee held its first meeting on Thursday, April 11, with Reps. Cherry, Austin, and Summers, and Sens. Alting, Lanane, and Taylor present.

□ Rep. Cherry, the conference committee chair, expected to be able to circulate a bill draft by the end of the day, not alluding to much of substance, but saying that some things pertaining to horses and audits would be moved into SB 552, the omnibus gaming bill. He said he wanted to use the meeting for input on the bill, and opened up the floor for testimony.

□ Brian Elmore of the Indiana Horsemen’s Benevolent & Protective Association led off, and told panel members, “I feel like I’m talking to friends.” He argued for inclusion of live table game dollars in the formula for distribution of wagering revenues horse welfare – citing a “moral obligation” to these “majestic athletes” to “repurpose them” after their careers are over, and the need to promote “backside benevolence” and enhance lives of many individuals with medical, dental, and eye care – many of them in the country on H-2B visas. He relieved the incident a few years back at Indiana Grand Racecourse in which a jockey, following a strange string of circumstances that day, ended up being run over by another horse in a race, and passing away from his multiple injuries. The benevolence dollars helped to fund his medical care and return his body to his family out of the country. “Horse racing is a dangerous sport,” he said. Elmore reminded lawmakers that “any change, whether legislative or regulatory, creates uncertainty.” He explained that the tracks may face a crisis situation if Indiana loses mares, and their numbers in Indiana have been down since 2010. He said that “we must change that to survive” the “fierce competition” that we face from surrounding states. He also told solons that “We currently have a shortage of Thoroughbred horses,” and requested that they “allow the Thoroughbred Breed Advisory Committee to do their job.” When Elmore asked the panel to move up the date for live dealers at racino table games to January 1, 2020, Rep. Cherry reminded him that this issue was “not [within] the purview of this committee.”

□ Krieg DeVault LLP's Mike McDaniel spoke on behalf of the Indiana Standardbred Association. He confirmed that the industry was not only "alive and well," but Standardbreds are a billion-dollar industry in Indiana and continue to thrive. He asked that table game revenue from live dealers be allowed to flow the same way to purses and horsemen as slot revenue. He said "that is critical" to helping the agribiz industry continue to grow. He also concurred with the call by HBPA's Elmore to move up the date for live dealers at table games.

□ Kelli Waggoner of KWK Management Group appeared on behalf of the Indiana Thoroughbred Owner's and Breeder's Association, and she told lawmakers that ITOBA was among the groups that "appreciate what you're doing in this bill." She answered questions from Sen. Lanane on distribution of live dealer table game revenues as with slot dollars.

□ Also appearing was Michael Phelps, part of a husband-wife veterinary services team, who had also testified on HB 1196 earlier in the process. He noted that breeders must plan now for what will happen three years down the line in breeding. He said that slot wagering revenues are currently fairly distributed; people have "done their jobs and they've done it well." He also noted that the push to get money into the sired program puts some breeders out of business. Rep. Cherry assured him that the dollars would not be going to sired program exclusively, that the legislature should have some control, and reiterated his support for a balance of breed programs, saying "both sides are important."

□ The entire initial meeting consumed just 30 minutes.

● Rep. Sean Eberhart (R) of Shelbyville spoke to the Shelby County Chamber of Commerce legislative luncheon on April 5 with some of his local legislative colleagues in attendance, and he addressed the issue of live dealers at the racinos in the hometown of Indiana Grand Racing & Casino. As is often the case, lawmakers may be a bit more candid with their constituents about events in Indianapolis than they might be in the State House, and we thought you'd be interested in what he had to say . . . including an interesting reference to Vice President Mike Pence (R), as well as to Rep. Ben Smaltz (R) of Auburn, chair of the House Committee on Public Policy, on which Rep. Eberhart serves.

□ Rep. Eberhart explained to local civic leaders, just as he has so many times to his legislative colleagues in committee settings as well as on the House floor, "In 2015 we adopted live table games, but it would not become active until 2021. And I explained this in committee: The only reason we did not get live table games back in 2015 was just one reason, and one reason only, and that was then-Governor Pence, who decided that he did not want to have what he termed 'an expansion of gaming' to happen under his watch. And so he assumed he was going to get elected a second term as governor, which now we know that did not happen. I'm not sure that would have happened if he wouldn't have went on to be vice president. But he's not our governor, and so to me that agreement is null and void."

□ The Eberhart conclusion: "We should move up the date for live table games, and the bill that came over from the Senate contained an immediate move-up on that date."

□ Eberhart continued the narrative. "When that bill went to public policy, of which I'm a member, the chairman of the committee decided that he wanted to have his say on the bill - which again, you're in a powerful position as a chairman of a committee. You can kill the bill, you can change the bill, so sometimes you've got to give the chairman a little leeway, knowing that you have the chance to change the bill at a later date. So the chairman in his infinite wisdom - insert sarcasm there, if you may - decided that he did not want to move up live table games to an immediate date, and so he took that provision out. I did negotiate as part of taking that provision out - I did negotiate the fact that we'd change the language to say that once the date rolled around in 2021 that we will immediately have table games, and that there would be no Gaming Commission approval needed. Which the potential was there that we could quite possibly not get it in 2021 if we did not get the Gaming Commission approval. So we did get the language changed to say it absolutely will happen in 2021, but we still have to wait until 2021."

□ Preempting questions from his audience, Rep Eberhart continued, "Now some will say, 'Well, why did you let that go through that committee, why did you let them change that?' Sometimes its better to let things happen at the committee level knowing that you've got a chance to change it at a later point in time, And we're going to have that opportunity to change that on the Second Reading which will probably be end of next week. We'll have a chance - I'll have a chance - to stand up in front of all of my colleagues and to talk about moving that date back up to immediately. I'll have a chance to get a vote on it and hopefully I'll have chance to move that date back up." He concluded, "I know folks have called me and are concerned and disappointed, but this is a long process. We have two or three more steps where we can address this bill and other bills."

IN Bingo and Charitable Gaming

● Sen. Erin Houchin (R) of Salem filed a motion to dissent in the Senate on Wednesday over her SB 393, the annual charity gaming night license legislation that saw some significant changes in the House.

GAMING BILL SEES MORE CHANGES, SOME REVERSIONS: A conference committee has made further changes to this session's major gaming bill (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). Immediately noticeable is that the bill has been shifted over to a House bill, HB1015, in order to fit the constitutional guidelines. Making a return to the bill is the mobile aspect of legalized sports wagering, allowing the practice to take place through smartphone apps. The committee also further dialed back the fee required for one Gary casino to move to Vigo County. Initially added in a House Committee, the fee had been lowered first from $100 million to $50 million, and is now set at $20 million with a 5-year payment option. In addition a tax credit has been added for the casino operator who would surrender their current license in that move, totaling $40 million over several years. The construction of a casino in Vigo County will still be subject to a bidding process, but the conference committee added that the winner would need to make a $100 million investment in Terre Haute. Also noteworthy: this (potentially final) version of the bill would allow racinos to host live-dealer games as soon as January or July 2020, instead of July 2021 - still later than the Senate's first version of the bill which would have allowed such operations starting July of this year.

DISSENT WITHDRAWN ON CIB BILL: The author of the Marion County Capital Improvement Board bill, Sen. Ryan Mishler, withdrew his motion to dissent on Monday to changes made earlier this session to his bill in the House (Curry, Howey Politics Indiana). That means the bill, SB7, will stand as-is for one final vote in the Senate and won't be amended by a conference committee. The House version had made significant changes to the legislation, namely dropping all provisions dealing with the construction of new hotels in downtown Indy, extending certain taxes to provide funding to the CIB through 2045, and relaxing the requirements that the Indianapolis soccer team Indy Eleven would need to meet in order to build its public-private stadium. If passed by the Senate, the CIB bill would immediately head to Gov. Eric Holcomb for his consideration. SB7 is eligible for voting during today's session, scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m.

CARMEL CLERK-TREASURER ACCUSES BRAINARD OF HARASSMENT: The mayor of Carmel is facing some serious allegations about sexual harassment from another elected official. Carmel Clerk-Treasurer Christine Pauley is speaking out after what she describes as an inappropriate email from Mayor James Brainard. 13 Investigates obtained the email at the center of the controversy at Carmel City Hall (Jefferson, WTHR-TV). Pauley told Eyewitness News it's been hard to do her job because of the mayor's reportedly unwanted attention. "It created a very difficult work environment," she said. Pauley claims the city's top elected official has crossed the line with sexual advances. Pauley is upset about a March 26, 2016 email from Brainard inviting her on a secret getaway to Rome. "I have a peer who am I suppose to work with and looked to as a mentor who I have presenting these types of emails to me," said Pauley. "It's inappropriate. It's inappropriate," Pauley said. Carmel Community Relations Director Nancy Heck shared the photo with Eyewitness News calling it proof Pauley didn't feel harassed by Brainard. She said she met with the mayor about the Pauley issue. "The clerk-treasurer is leaning in close with her hand on his back whispering in his ear. That was on May 2, during a national campaign stop," said Heck. "It seems clear at city hall they were interested in developing a relationship more than professionally," Heck said.

BUTTIGIEG 3RD IN IOWA GRAVIS POLL; SURGES IN NH: Gravis Marketing has released its first 2020 Iowa Caucus poll and finds Joe Biden and Bernie Sanders tied atop the field with the Pete Buttigieg running 5 points behind (Howey Politics Indiana). Behind Biden, Sanders and Buttigieg are Harris and Warren at 6%, O'Rourke at 5%, Booker and Klobuchar at 4%, Delaney at 2% and everyone else at or below 1%. While the exact numbers will vary throughout the state at various precincts, the important threshold is 15% which is the lowest possible viability threshold for a precinct caucus. Biden and Sanders both have measurable support across all age groups, but Biden is the strongest among those over 65 while Sanders is strongest among 18-29-year-old caucus goers. Interestingly, the O'Rourke and Buttigieg don't register any support among the 18-29 block. Sanders and Biden register in the double digits through most ideological groups. Among those with a post graduate degree, Buttigieg takes 22% with Biden, Sanders and Harris tied at 11%. A Granite State Poll has Sen. Bernie Sanders of neighboring Vermont leading in the battle for the Democratic presidential nomination. The University of New Hampshire Granite State Poll also shows former Vice President Joe Biden a distant second, with South Bend, Indiana Mayor Pete Buttigieg surging to third (Fox News). And the survey, released Monday, puts Republican President Trump far ahead of his declared or potential primary rivals in New Hampshire's GOP presidential primary, which will be held next February. According to the poll, 30 percent of likely Democratic primary voters in the Granite State say they'd back Sanders, the independent from Vermont who's making his second straight run for the White House. Sanders crushed eventual nominee Hillary Clinton in the state's 2016 Democratic primary. Biden, who's expected to launch his White House bid this week, is at 18 percent, with Buttigieg at 15 percent.

RIVALS SEEKING DIRT ON BUTTIGIEG: Caught off guard by his sudden surge, Pete Buttigieg's rivals are scrambling to find vulnerabilities and lines of attack that can be used against him, five officials with opposing Democratic primary campaigns and Republican political groups tell NBC News. The situation is different than with Bernie Sanders, Elizabeth Warren and Joe Biden, Democrats who have long been on the national scene and were widely expected to run for president.

Potential rivals and GOP campaign groups have spent years hunting for dirt — known in political parlance as "opposition research" — that could be deployed against them. Major political groups had entire books of "oppo" ready to go by the time those candidates entered the race. In contrast, Buttigieg was on nobody's radar as a serious presidential contender until a few weeks ago. As a millennial who has never held an office higher than mayor of a midsize town, his record is largely unexamined. Now his competitors are rushing to file a flood of Freedom of Information Act requests, according to officials, collecting everything he's ever said in public or posted on social media, and poring over years-old budgets from South Bend, Indiana, where he's served as mayor since 2012. One official from a rival Democratic presidential campaign described Buttigieg as "a 37-year-old kid mayor, who nobody knows anything about." "Our competitors can run their campaigns how they want," said Lis Smith, Buttigieg's top communications adviser. "We're less interested in politics as usual and more focused on getting Mayor Pete's hopeful message of generational change out there."

TRUMP POLL NUMBERS DIVE: The split decision in public opinion — a decline in views of Trump's job performance but fewer voters wanting Congress to pursue impeachment — mirrors the report itself, which clears Trump and his campaign of criminally conspiring with the Russian government to boost his election but which documents numerous, embarrassing examples of Trump's efforts to stymie the investigation (Politico). "President Trump's approval rating has dipped to its lowest point of his term in the immediate aftermath of the redacted Mueller report release," said Tyler Sinclair, Morning Consult's vice president. "This week, 57 percent of voters disapprove, and 39 percent approve of the president's performance — a net approval rating of -18 percentage points, compared with 55 percent who disapproved and 42 percent who approved — a net approval rating of -13 percentage points — one month ago in the aftermath of Attorney General [William] Barr's summary of the Mueller report to Congress."

ONLY 34% SUPPORT IMPEACHMENT: Only 34 percent of voters believe Congress should begin impeachment proceedings to remove the president from office, down from 39 percent in January in the Morning Consult Poll (Politico). Nearly half, 48 percent, say Congress should not begin impeachment proceedings.

SEN. YOUNG 'DIGESTING' MUELLER REPORT: U.S. Sen. Todd Young says he is still "digesting details" of the report of Special Counsel Robert Mueller (Howey Politics Indiana). Amy Grappone, Sen. Young's director of communications told HPI on Monday, "Sen. Young is approaching this matter with utmost seriousness and is still digesting details of the voluminous report. He looks forward to discussing it with colleagues on both sides of the aisle when the Senate is back in session and will make further comments as appropriate." Young told John Krull of the Statehouse File last week, "There's absolutely no question among Republicans or Democrats, certainly with whom I dialogue, that Russia interfered with our election — that they engaged in a disinformation campaign to further divide the American people. I think we all have to acknowledge that they succeeded," Young said.

NRA CONVENTION TO HAVE HUGE IMPACT: Signage and banners are going up around the Indiana Convention Center as the city prepares to host the 148th Annual Meeting of the National Rifle Association (NRA). Officials expect 75,000 attendees to pass through the turnstiles of the 4-day event leaving behind an economic impact estimated at $35 million (CBS4). "We had our Harvard economist do a real healthy look at very conservatively how are we estimating economic impact," said Chris Gahl, Senior Vice President of Visit Indy. "And so we've seen a decrease in all of our top ten conventions in terms of the economic impact based solely on a refinement to the way we calculate." The last time the NRA was in town in 2014, the estimated economic impact was $55 million. Vice President Pence and President Trump will address the NRA's membership Friday inside Lucas Oil Stadium following up the president's last appearance in Indianapolis before the FFA during its annual convention last year.

ENTITLEMENTS BARREL TOWARD INSOLVENCY: The financial condition of the government's bedrock retirement programs for middle- and working-class Americans remains shaky, with Medicare pointed toward insolvency by 2026, according to a report Monday by the government's overseers of Medicare and Social Security (AP). It paints a sobering picture of the programs, though it's relatively unchanged from last year's update. Social Security would become insolvent in 2035, one year later than previously estimated. Both programs will need to eventually be addressed to avert automatic cuts should their trust funds run dry. Neither President Donald Trump nor Capitol Hill's warring factions has put political perilous cost curbs on their to-do list. The report is the latest update of the government's troubled fiscal picture. It lands in a capital that has proven chronically unable to address it. Trump has declared benefit cuts to the nation's signature retirement programs off limits and many Democratic presidential candidates are calling for expanding Medicare benefits rather than addressing the program's worsening finances.

HPI DAILY ANALYSIS: While Republicans appear to be rallying around President Trump in the wake of the Mueller report, here we are about 18 months out from the 2020 election and he's at 37% approval. That's a major problem for his reelection. The Morning Consult Poll also showed only 34% supporting impeachment. If Democrats go down that path, President Trump will likely be reelected. - Brian A. Howey

MUELLER HAS BIG MONEY LEAD IN SOUTH BEND: South Bend voters will see eight names on the Democratic ballot for mayor in the May 7 Primary Election, but two candidates have stood out from the pack in raising money for their campaigns (Parrott, South Bend Tribune). James Mueller outpaced the field by a hefty margin, raising nearly $245,000 between Jan. 1 and April 12, according to campaign finance reports that candidates were required to file by Monday. That was followed by Jason Critchlow's $139,000. Critchlow's campaign spent slightly more than Mueller's, about $98,000 compared to $91,000 spent by Mueller — meaning Mueller was left with about $153,000 cash on hand, compared to Critchlow's $40,000, entering the campaign's final weeks. Other candidates trailed in terms of fundraising: Lynn Coleman reported raising more than $19,000, with nearly $11,000 of that coming as a transfer from his failed congressional campaign in 2016. Regina Williams-Preston raised about $16,600, while Oliver Davis raised about $15,300. Mueller said his fundraising lead shows that "we're getting our message out." "I didn't have a lot of name ID and hadn't ever run for public office before this," Mueller said. "I'm proud to have a lot of support from folks who realize this is a critical moment in our history and we need to keep building on the progress."

BUTTIGIEG GIVES MUELLER MORE THAN $100K: "Pete for South Bend," a holdover from Buttigieg's mayoral and Democratic National Committee chair campaigns, gave James Mueller's campaign $54,500 — $50,000 cash and $4,500 worth of polling service (South Bend Tribune). Three people each gave Mueller $5,000: Michael Browning, chairman of Indianapolis-based Browning Investments; Bob Urbanski, retired South Bend businessman and longtime local Democratic Party funder; and Chris Murphy, 1st Source Bank chairman and CEO. Other relatively large contributions came from Luis Montestruque, president of EmNet, who gave $3,500. EmNet is the company that developed the city's "smart sewer" technology. Mueller also received a combined $6,000 in individual contributions from executives at American Structurepoint, the Indianapolis-based engineering firm contracted by the city for the Buttigieg administration's downtown Smart Streets project. The company's political action committee also gave Critchlow $1,500.

HOGSETT HAS HUGE CASH ADVANTAGE OVER MERRITT: Democratic Mayor Joe Hogsett outraised his top Republican challenger, state Sen. Jim Merritt, by a nearly three-to-one margin in the first quarter of the year, according to new campaign finance reports (Colombo, IBJ). Hogsett pulled in $769,022 from the beginning of January to April 12, while Merritt raised $266,939 during that period. Hogsett's take gives the Democrat an even greater fundraising edge for the fall municipal election when the two will likely compete head to head, assuming Merritt is successful in the May primary election for Republicans. With the first-quarter results, Hogsett's cash-on-hand total is $3.88 million, which the Hogsett campaign says is a "record cash-on-hand figure for any mayoral pre-primary filing in the history of Indianapolis." Meanwhile, Merritt's cash-on-hand figure is $223,960. That's substantially less than the Republican challenger raised in roughly the same amount of time in 2015, when then-candidate Chuck Brewer raised $671,730 from Jan. 1, 2015, to April 1, 2015.

MAYOR BRODERICK POSTS $222K: The four candidates seeking to replace Democrat Thomas Broderick Jr. as mayor of Anderson have raised a total that's 10% of the incumbent's funds. The campaign finance reports were due at the Madison County Clerk's Office at noon Monday (de la Bastide, Anderson Herald-Bulletin). Broderick started the reporting period that runs from Jan. 1 through April 19 with $180,827 cash on hand. The Broderick campaign reported spending $11,765 leaving a cash balance of $222,234. Longtime Republican farmer Herb Likens contributed $5,000 to Broderick's campaign. The campaign received a $1,000 donation from Greg Winkler, executive director of the Anderson Economic Development Department; $750 from John Paugh, president of Carter Express; $500 from John Brand; and $5,000 from the Unified Group. Broderick's opponent in the Democrat Party primary on May 7 is Terry May. May reported itemized contributions of $2,552 and unitemized donations of $3,350. May's campaign has spent $4,344 leaving a cash balance of $1,558. The campaign received $2,069 from Dan's Fish, $1,280 from Ann Chamberlain and $995 from C&H Signs. On the Republican primary ballot, there are three mayoral candidates.

SMITH TRAILS GARDNER IN GOP MONEY RACE: Former Mayor Kevin Smith, Madison County Auditor Rick Gardner and JobSource Director JoAnna Collette are all seeking their party's nomination (Anderson Herald-Bulletin). Gardner's campaign reported contributions of $8,387 and expenditures of $8,008, leaving cash on hand of $381. Gardner has spent $7,437 on the campaign. Smith reported starting the year with $2,109 for the campaign and received donations of $3,744. The campaign has $4,400 currently after spending $1,453. Collette has provided all $1,800 for her campaign and has spent $1,491, leaving a balance of $309.

BIDEN CAMPAIGN LAUNCH DELAY: Joe Biden's plans are in flux again. If the former vice president does launch his presidential campaign this week, it won't involve a trip to Charlottesville, Va., and plans for potential public events in Pennsylvania are also uncertain, according to sources familiar with his plans (Philadelphia Inquirer). Even Biden's widely anticipated entry into the race grew unclear Monday, with the Atlantic reporting that a planned video announcement Wednesday was being pushed back.

BUTTIGIEG SAYS TRUMP 'DESERVES' IMPEACHMENT: South Bend Mayor Pete Buttigieg says President Trump "has made it pretty clear he deserves impeachment." The Democrat candidate for president said that in a town hall event with Anderson Cooper on CNN last night. But he also said that he will "leave to the House and Senate to figure that out." Several prominent Democrats in Congress have been stoking the fires of impeachment talks regarding President Trump and accusations against him that he obstructed justice in the Russia investigation. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi appeared to pump the brakes on those talks after a conference call with her fellow Democrats Monday. Though Buttigieg said that impeachment talks are for lawmakers in Congress, he plays a particular role in the matter. "My role in the process is trying to relegate 'Trumpism' to the dust bin on history," Buttigieg said at the town hall. "To me there is no more decisive way to do that, especially to make Republicans abandon this deal with the devil they've made, than by an absolute thumping at the ballot box."

BUTTIGIEG DEFENDS SOUTH BEND TAPE STANCE: Pete Buttigieg on Monday defended several decisions he made as mayor of South Bend, Ind., that critics have said negatively impacted communities of color in the city (The Hill). Speaking at a CNN town hall event, Buttigieg stood by his decision to demote South Bend's first-ever African-American police chief for secretly recording one of his white officers. There are allegations that white officers on the South Bend police force used racist language in the recordings. The South Bend City Council subpoenaed Buttigieg to obtain the recordings, but the mayor's office refused to turn the tapes over, arguing in court that a judge must decide if they can be made public. "These tape recordings were made in a way that may have violated the federal wire tap act ... I'm not going to violate it even though I want to know what's on those tapes like everybody else does," Buttigieg said.

BUTTIGIEG CAME OUT BECAUSE HE WANTED TO DATE: South Bend, Ind., Mayor Pete Buttigieg said on Monday that he came out because he wanted to date, and that doing so meant he eventually met his current husband (The Hill). "Frankly, I came out because I wanted to date," Buttigieg said at a CNN town hall when asked by host Anderson Cooper about whether he would have been different had he come out publicly at a younger age. "If dating had been available to me in my 20s I'm not sure I would have gotten that much done," Buttigieg then joked. Buttigieg has said he came out publicly at 33.

PETE SAYS 'GOD DOESN'T HAVE A POLITICAL PARTY': Pete Buttigieg opened up about his faith Monday night, expressing confidence that he will be able to unite many different groups of people because "God does not have a political party." During a CNN town hall in New Hampshire Monday, the South Bend, Indiana, mayor was asked how he planned to unite conservatives, moderates and liberal Christians. "It can be challenging to be a person of faith who's also part of the LGBTQ community and yet, to me, the core of faith is regard for one another," Buttigieg said. "And part of God's love is experienced, according to my faith tradition, is in the way that we support one another and, in particular, support the least among us."

MAYOR PETE BRINGS HIS PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN TO DYNGUS DAY: After an early morning signing of the ceremonial kielbasa order and the traditional renaming of a pair of streets, Mayor Pete Buttigieg stepped onto the stage at the West Side Democratic & Civic club for the eighth and final time as the city's mayor (Bauer, South Bend Tribune). On a day rich in local political history, South Bend saw yet another presidential candidate visit during Dyngus Day. In 1968 it was Robert Kennedy. This time it was Buttigieg himself — a week removed from his formal presidential announcement — who was putting his stamp on the celebration steeped in Polish culture, kielbasa and beer. "At this point, I'd like to welcome POTUS Pete ... Polish POTUS Pete," boomed the voice of Tim Hudak, the apron-clad president of the West Side Democratic & Civic Club. "This is an honor and a privilege to have our next POTUS, coming from here in South Bend, Indiana. We are finally on the map." Amid chants of "Pete" and flanked by a bank of television cameras far larger than in years past, Buttigieg took the stage and noted that the Monday after Easter in South Bend has "touched national politics in so many ways." In a brief address, Buttigieg hit on elements of his stump speech, but emphasized the impact and message he said South Bend has had on him and will have on his campaign for president. "In so many ways, South Bend is our message. This is the story of a city that changed its future, changed its trajectory," Buttigieg said. "And we did it through honesty and we did it through decency. We didn't go around promising we could turn back the clock, I didn't go around saying only I can fix it."

BUTTIGIEG SEEKING RACIAL DIVERSITY: After watching Mayor Pete Buttigieg's presidential campaign kickoff speech last Sunday, Barack Obama's former political strategist was impressed, tweeting, "Who knows where it goes, but this is not a thing. It's real." But about an hour and a half before that, David Axelrod had tweeted something else: "Crowd seems very large, very impressive but also very white — an obstacle he will have to overcome" (Parrott, South Bend Tribune). He followed three minutes later with, "And by obstacle I mean deficiency. He will need to build out his coalition in a very diverse party." Axelrod's observation has helped spark national media attention on whether Buttigieg can appeal to enough minority and working-class voters to win a Democratic presidential nomination. Those outlets also are scrutinizing Buttigieg's record and relationship with the city's black community. Michael Patton, president of the NAACP's South Bend chapter, praised other recent appearances by Buttigieg, such as his speech before the National Action Network, a New York-based civil rights group. But the mayor has to push further, Patton said. "He's been touching the places where African-Americans are listening and watching," Patton said. "Somehow he has to get on the ground and touch some of those scenarios as well, for people of color to feel him. He's got some work to do. ... That's going to be imperative. He's got to win us."

HARRIS CALLS FOR IMPEACHMENT: Democratic 2020 hopeful Kamala Harris wants the House to impeach President Donald Trump, but doesn't necessarily expect it to be a successful effort (Politico). "I believe Congress should take the steps towards impeachment. But I want to say this, because it doesn't end there," the California senator said on a CNN-hosted town hall Monday. "I'm also a realist. ... I have also witnessed folks in the United States Congress, and in particular in the GOP, who have been presented with many reasons to push back against this president and they have not."

WARREN INTRODUCES STUDENT DEBT PROPOSAL: Presidential candidate Elizabeth Warren on Monday unveiled a sweeping proposal to erase student loan debt for millions of Americans and make public college free for millions more, a plan that could distinguish her from the rest of the Democratic field (Washington Post). Warren is the first Democratic candidate to release a detailed policy to tackle the high cost of higher education for people who want to go to college and those who are still paying for it. Her plan would wipe away up to $50,000 in student debt for borrowers with an annual household income of less than $100,000, an estimated 42 million Americans. It also would cover tuition at all two- and four-year public colleges, while expanding federal Pell Grants for low-income students by $100 billion and creating a $50 billion fund for historically black colleges and universities.

General Assembly

BUDGET VOTE TODAY: Indiana lawmakers are nearing final decisions on how much more money will go toward school districts as teachers have been pushing for significant pay raises (AP). The Republican-dominated Legislature must agree on a new two-year state budget before ending this year's session, possibly as early as Wednesday. Republican budget plans have proposed increases of about 2.5% in base funding for K-12 schools. Hundreds of teachers have attended rallies seeking greater funding increases, while Republican state schools Superintendent Jennifer McCormick said GOP Statehouse leaders gave a "false promise" on teacher raises. Votes could come Tuesday on a proposal legalizing sports betting and allowing new casinos in Terre Haute and Gary. Legislators could also approve financing toward $295 million in public subsidies for renovation of the Indiana Pacers' arena in downtown Indianapolis.

GAMING BILL '99% DONE': A potential deal on a gambling bill would legalize sports betting in Indiana in time for football season. Senate Majority Leader Mark Messmer's proposal moves Gary's casino downtown and allows one in Terre Haute. It turns Anderson and Shelbyville's racetracks into full casinos a year ahead of schedule, with live dealers allowed alongside video terminals starting next year (Berman, WIBC). And it legalizes sports betting July 1 -- but you still couldn't bet on the Cubs-Pirates game that night. The Indiana Gaming Commission would still have to finalize rules for sports bets, including who provides the data to determine whether a bet is a winner. Messmer says the commission expects to be able to do that within a few months. The bill would allow bets to be placed by smartphone, though they'd still have to be funneled through a casino. The bill lowers a fee for the Gary casino move to $20 million. The House had initially proposed $100 million, then cut that figure in half. Messmer says other states have charged a fee when casinos move to what's expected to be a more lucrative location, but those fees have ranged from $5 million to $30 million. And Spectacle Gaming, which bought Gary's Majestic Star Casinos earlier this year, would receive a $40 million tax credit for surrendering one of Majestic Star's two casino licenses. Both the fee and the tax credit would be spread over five years. Messmer says the bill is "99% done," but says there could be some final tweaks before House and Senate leaders sign off on the proposal and clear the way for final votes in the full House and Senate.

LAWMAKERS NEAR FINAL GAMING BILL DECISION: Lawmakers are nearing the ultimate version of this session's major gambling bill (Smith, Indiana Public Media). The biggest pieces of the gaming bill remain intact: Gary casino operator Spectacle Entertainment could move one of its two licenses to a new facility in a more desirable location in the city. It would have to pay $20 million, over five years, to do that. The bill would also clear the way for a new casino in Terre Haute. If that happens, Spectacle must forfeit its second license. But there's a new provision, says Sen. Mark Messmer (R-Jasper). Spectacle would get a $40 million tax credit for giving up that license. "They're giving up real dollars and they're getting real dollars," Messmer says. The final measure would also legalize and tax sports betting statewide -- including mobile gambling on sporting events.

CHAMBER OPPOSES PRUITT, POWER MORATORIUM: The Indiana Chamber of Commerce is responding to Rail Point Solutions LLC and its lobbyist Scott Pruitt, former U.S. EPA administrator, regarding the proposed two-year moratorium on large power plants coming online (Howey Politics Indiana). The provision was stripped from Indiana Senate Bill 472 on April 11. Pruitt and Rail Point Solutions, a subsidiary of Hallador Energy, had requested the Indiana Chamber review its stance against the provision and made that public over the weekend. Indiana Chamber President and CEO Kevin Brinegar: "Not one person we've talked to or heard from -- except for Scott Pruitt and Rail Point -- thinks the moratorium will benefit ratepayers. "The new language and explanation provided by Pruitt did not sway our energy policy committee (comprised of representatives of member companies from around the state) or our thinking that the moratorium is simply a bad idea. "If the two pending projects before the Indiana Utility Regulation Commission are halted after significant planning and preliminary approval, Hoosier ratepayers will feel the pain. The moratorium likely would cause financing issues for all utilities in Indiana. And higher capital costs for energy producers means higher rates for businesses and homeowners. "We believe the moratorium is dangerous policy and are informing legislative leaders that the Indiana Chamber remains staunchly opposed to reviving it in the budget or any other bill."

JUSTIFIED FORCE BILL HEADS TO GOVERNOR: One significant firearms bill is headed to the governor while another regarding training teachers that carry in schools is still in negotiations. The House and Senate gave final approval to House Bill 1284 on Monday. The House vote was 64-17, and the Senate vote was 37-7 (Kelly, Fort Wayne Journal Gazette). The bill has several key provisions. First, it protects those who use justified force against someone committing a felony from frivolous lawsuits. This includes use of a firearm but also any other use of force. The legislation extends Indiana's four-year firearms permit to five years and makes the cost free. There is still a lifetime gun permit with a fee. It also allows parishioners attending church on a property that also shares a school to carry weapons if the property owner agrees. Rep. Jim Lucas, R-Seymour, referenced the church bombings in Sri Lanka this weekend and said "churches are often soft targets and need to be protected."

GUN RIGHTS BILL GIVES IMMUNITY: Self-defense protections would extend to lawsuits under a bill headed for Governor Holcomb (Berman, WIBC). The bill gives you immunity from being sued if you shoot someone who's committing a violent crime. If a prosecutor doesn't file criminal charges, a lawsuit would have to persuade a judge at the outset that there's a good reason to sue you anyway. Seymour Representative Jim Lucas (R) says the bill was prompted in part by a 2017 case of a woman honored by her local police department for shooting someone who pulled a gun on an officer, but is still trying to fend off a lawsuit. Indianapolis Representative Ed DeLaney (D) warns it's unprecedented to equate a decision not to charge someone with proof that the use of force was justified. And Indianapolis Senator Greg Taylor (D) complains the immunity law means people have more protection than cities have from being sued over the use of deadly force. The bill also abolishes the fee for gun licenses, except for lifetime licenses. And it carves out an exception to Indiana's gun-free school law. Indianapolis Senator Jack Sandlin (R) says that law wrongly bans houses of worship which operate schools from allowing guns elsewhere on the property. The bill would allow guns in the church or temple portion of the property, unless the church opts to ban them. Lucas says the Easter church bombings in Sri Lanka are a reminder that churches are "soft targets."

FIRE DISTRICT BILL IN CONFERENCE COMMITTEE: Indiana legislation heading into a conference committee today in Indianapolis seeks to add more protections for fire protection districts that could have part of their territories annexed by nearby municipalities (Rollins, Bloomington Herald-Times). The proposed bill would not prevent cities from annexing territory in fire protection districts. It would, however, help annexed properties in many of those fire districts remain a part of the district, including properties in newly added areas of the district.

PELOSI SAYS DEMS DIVIDED ON MUELLER REPORT: Speaker Nancy Pelosi, acknowledging that the Democrats are divided over new findings from Robert S. Mueller III, appeared to urge her caucus to hold off impeaching President Trump for now, even as she denounced his "highly unethical and unscrupulous behavior," which she said "does not bring honor to the office he holds" (New York Times). In her first extended comments since the release of the special counsel's report last week, Ms. Pelosi counseled caution to Democrats as she tested for cracks among Republicans. In a letter to colleagues, she said, "Congressional Republicans have an unlimited appetite for" the "low standards" set by President Trump. "The G.O.P. should be ashamed of what the Mueller report has revealed, instead of giving the president their blessings," she wrote.

PELOSI PUMPS BRAKES ON IMPEACHMENT: Speaker Nancy Pelosi on Monday rejected calls to launch impeachment proceedings against President Donald Trump despite new voices in her caucus calling for the House to take that step in the aftermath of special counsel Robert Mueller's report (Politico). "We can investigate Trump without drafting articles [of impeachment]," she said during a call with House Democrats ... "We aren't going to go faster, we are going to go as fast as the facts take us."

NADLER SUBPOENAS MCGAHN: House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerry Nadler issued a subpoena to former White House counsel Don McGahn as part of a House-led obstruction investigation into President Donald Trump (Politico). The subpoena comes just days after special counsel Robert Mueller's report revealed that McGahn witnessed and testified about potential obstruction of justice by Trump.

CRIME: NEW SKETCH IN DELPHI HOMICIDES - Authorities released video Monday of a man suspected of killing two Indiana teenagers two years ago and urged the public to scrutinize the footage, which shows the man walking on an abandoned railroad bridge the girls visited while out hiking the day they were slain (Indiana Public Media). The Indiana State Police also released a new sketch of the suspect, which State Police Superintendent Doug Carter said was produced thanks to "new information and intelligence" collected during the investigation into the killings of 14-year-old Liberty German and 13-year-old Abigail Williams. During a briefing in the girls' hometown of Delphi, he said that a composite sketch that was previously released based on accounts from eyewitnesses who believe they saw the man is now secondary to the new sketch. Carter said investigators believe the man is between the ages of 18 and 40, and that he either lives or lived in Delphi or regularly visits or works in the area. He vowed that police will solve the case and, during the briefing, he addressed the suspect directly. "We believe you are hiding in plain sight. For more than two years, you never thought we would shift gears to a different investigative strategy, but we have," he said.

JUSTICE: WYLER TO HEAD PRO BONO GROUP - Evansville attorney Scott Wylie, who presently serves as the Executive Director of the Volunteer Lawyer Program of Southwestern Indiana, has been chosen to serve as the Interim Executive Director of Indiana's proposed statewide pro bono civil legal aid organization. Wylie, who has been with VLP in Evansville since 2007 and has served as its full-time administrator since 2017, will also continue in that position (Howey Politics Indiana). He began his new duties on April 17, 2019. Part of the Indiana Coalition for Court Access' efforts to enhance the availability of civil legal aid services for low income Hoosiers, Wylie will coordinate the creation of a statewide infrastructure to support the thirteen existing pro bono agencies in the state. The agencies coordinate the volunteer efforts of attorneys and other legal professionals. In 2017, Indiana attorneys reported providing 442,585 in free or reduced fee services to improve access to civil legal aid services in areas such as family law, domestic violence, assistance to veterans, and protection of seniors.

HEALTH: 20 MUMPS CASES AT IU - The mumps outbreak at Indiana University's Bloomington campus has grown to include twenty students (WIBC). Specifics on all but one of the confirmed mumps cases were available Monday afternoon, according to Dr. Beth Rupp, Medical Director of the IU Health Center. "Out of the 19 [students], sixteen of them have recovered and are back at classes. Three of the cases are still in isolation right now," Rupp said. The "vast majority" of the infected students were vaccinated, according to Rupp.

EDUCATION: BSU'S MBA PROGRAM IN TOP 30 - Ball State University's Miller College of Business has been recognized as one of The 30 Best Online MBA Degree Programs by MBA Central. The website details 30 programs across the nation and praises Ball State's program for its variety and affordability. The website considered the schedules, business curriculum, and return on investment opportunities of online MBA programs (Inside Indiana Business). To find the Top 30 Online MBA Degrees offering the most value, MBA Central ranked over 500 degrees in the areas of affordability support services and quality of classes.

INDOT: I-65 CLOSURES IN DOWNTOWN INDY - Construction work will affect your drive downtown starting this weekend (WTHR-TV). The work has also changed to include the closures beginning at 9 a.m. on Fridays instead of 9 p.m. and extending until 6 a.m. on Mondays. The work will be done in four segments with the northbound lanes first: Crews will first work on segments one and two. They include lanes of I-65 from Southport Road to I-465 and I-65 from I-465 up to the South Split. Work on those two segments will begin April 26 and the northbound lanes will be completely closed.

Segment three should begin sometime in Early May and that includes the area from I-65/I-70 at the South Split to the North Split. At least one lane will stay open during that time. Segment four should also begin in May and will close I-70 westbound from the South Split to Belmont Avenue. All lanes in one direction will be closed. Once those segments are done, crews will then begin working on southbound lanes. That work will run from 7 p.m. on Fridays until 3 p.m. on Mondays. The hope is that work will begin in June and run through August.

CLIMATE: MOST BELIEVE IN WARMING - A statewide survey says the majority of Hoosiers believe climate change is happening and most support efforts to lessen its effects on Indiana. More than 1,000 people responded to the Indiana University Environmental Resilience Institute's survey earlier this month (Indiana Public Media). 65 percent of Republicans in Indiana support some kind of action to prepare Indiana communities for climate change. "If there's anything hopeful about this particular finding it's for people to say, 'Oh, maybe things are less polarized than they appear to be.' In reality, maybe there is more room for people to talk to each other," he says. While 80 percent of survey respondents think climate change is happening, they underestimated their fellow Hoosiers and suspected only a little more than half agreed.

MEDIA: HOOSIER AG TODAY BUYS MICHIGAN NETWORK - Zionsville-based Hoosier Ag Today, a farm radio network with more than 70 affiliated radio stations, has announced its acquisition of ownership and management of the Michigan Agriculture Information Network (McLaughlin, Inside Indiana Business). Hoosier Ag Today will take over program production and distribution on May 6. As part of the deal, programs will continue to be referred to as the Michigan Ag Information

Network. "We decided several months ago we would take as much time as necessary to find an organization who would care for Michigan agriculture, and our radio partners, the way we do," Pat Driscoll, Michigan Ag Information Network, said in a news release. "It is with great pride, and a huge sense of relief, that someone so close to home ... and so close to our family for decades ... will be taking the helm. Gary Truitt and his Indiana-based team have layers of special connections to this state's agriculture and the Driscoll family."

WHITE HOUSE: PENCE ISN'T RELEASING HIS TAX RETURNS - Vice President Mike Pence has filed three tax returns since taking office, but he hasn't publicly released any of them (Wall Street Journal). As Democrats fight with President Trump about his unreleased tax returns amid a key deadline Tuesday, the vice president's decision to keep his own recent tax documents under wraps has gotten far less attention. It is just as much of a break from his predecessors: Going back to Walter Mondale in the 1970s, all have disclosed their returns. Mr. Pence released 10 years of returns through 2015 during the presidential campaign. Mr. Pence's office has said that he is following Mr. Trump's lead by refusing to release returns until audits are finished and has repeatedly declined to answer questions about the status of the audits. A spokeswoman said Monday Mr. Pence plans to release all tax returns before the 2020 election, provided they are no longer under audit.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP DISMISSES IMPEACHMENT THREAT - President Trump said he is "not even a little bit" concerned about impeachment as House Democrats prepared to discuss their next steps later Monday in the wake of the special counsel's Russia report (Wall Street Journal). The report, released Thursday with portions redacted, detailed what it says were attempts by Mr. Trump to control special counsel Robert Mueller's Russia investigation and blunt its fallout. It contained examples of instances in which aides, including then-White House counsel Don McGahn, didn't carry out Mr. Trump's directives related to tamping down the probe. Mr. Trump, who called some of the information in the report "bullshit" last week, also on Monday dismissed the report's findings that his aides sometimes ignored his direction. "Nobody disobeys my orders," the president responded when asked by a reporter to comment on whether staff ignored his directives.

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP SAYS 'NO ONE DISOBEYS MY ORDERS' - There is a narrative forming about the Mueller report. It says President Trump would be in a lot more trouble right now if those around him actually did what he told them to do. By essentially ignoring the boss on potentially obstructive acts, the narrative holds, these aides may have saved Trump from himself (Washington Post). Needless to say, this is not the kind of narrative a proud man like Trump prefers. So, he did what he always does on stuff like this: Deny it, no matter how ridiculous that denial might be. "Nobody disobeys my orders," Trump assured Monday morning at the White House Easter Egg Roll. How wrong he is. Let us count the ways. The Mueller report includes many instances of aides declining to carry out Trump's orders; The Washington Post's James Hohmann recapped them on Friday. But it's worth running through which ones actually involved orders that aides disobeyed. (For the purposes of this post, we're not including mere suggestions, such as when Trump pressured then-Attorney General Jeff Sessions to un-recuse himself and when Trump urged then-FBI Director James B. Comey to take it easy on Michael Flynn.)

WHITE HOUSE: OIL PRICES SURGE AFTER TRUMP'S IRAN ORDER - Oil prices surged to a nearly six-month high after the Trump administration said it would end waivers that allow countries to import Iranian oil, part of a U.S. campaign to deprive Iran of a major source of revenue (Wall Street Journal). Monday's swift market reaction, coupled with stern objections from at least two countries—China and Turkey—that will be adversely affected, ran counter to Trump administration assurances that its latest move against Iran would have relatively few broad international repercussions. The administration last year withdrew from the 2015 international nuclear agreement with Iran and reinstated sanctions against Tehran, threatening punitive measures against countries that continued to purchase Iranian oil.

WHITE HOUSE: CAIN WITHDRAWS AS FED NOMINEE - President Donald Trump said Monday that he would not nominate Herman Cain to the Federal Reserve after the former GOP presidential candidate asked him not to (Politico). Senate Republicans had warned the White House against naming the businessman and 2012 presidential hopeful to serve on the body's board of governors. "My friend Herman Cain, a truly wonderful man, has asked me not to nominate him for a seat on the Federal Reserve Board," Trump tweeted. "I will respect his wishes. Herman is a great American who truly loves our Country!"

WHITE HOUSE: TRUMP/PENCE SCHEDULE - President Trump will participate in a photo op with the White House News Photographers Association award recipients at 11:45 a.m. in the Oval Office. He will have lunch at 12:30 p.m. with VP Mike Pence in the private dining room. Trump will swear in Interior Secretary David Bernhardt in the Roosevelt Room at 3:45 p.m.

SCOTUS: TRANSGENDER CASE TO BE HEARD - The Supreme Court announced on Monday that it would decide whether a federal law prohibits employers from discriminating against gay and transgender workers (New York Times). The law, Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, forbids employment discrimination based on sex. The question for the justices is whether that language bars discrimination based on sexual orientation or transgender status. Most federal appeals courts have interpreted the law to exclude sexual orientation discrimination. But two of them, in New York and Chicago, recently issued decisions ruling that discrimination against gay men and lesbians is a form of sex discrimination. The Supreme Court agreed to hear the case from New York, Altitude Express Inc. v. Zarda, No. 17-1623, along with one from Georgia that came to the opposite conclusion, Bostock v. Clayton County, Georgia, No. 17-1618.

TERROR: U.S., INDIA WARNED SRI LANKA - U.S. and Indian security services warned the Sri Lankan government of a possible attack weeks before a devastating series of bombings killed at least 290 people at churches and tourist hotels on Easter Sunday (Wall Street Journal). Sri Lanka government officials said some of the suicide bombers and others arrested were linked to an obscure radical Islamist group known as National Thowheeth Jamath, a group the government singled out to police for monitoring as a possible threat after the foreign security services issued their warning. The sophistication of the Easter-morning attacks indicated to Sri Lankan and international terror experts that whoever carried them out likely had help from experienced international terrorists, perhaps even al Qaeda or Islamic State, Sri Lankan officials said.

CITIES: SNYDER CHARGES PROSECUTORIAL MISCONDUCT - Convicted Portage mayor James Snyder is claiming prosecutors played games with two potential witnesses, scaring them from taking the witness stand on his behalf (Russell, NWI Times). In the latest filing in U.S. District Court over the weekend, Snyder's defense team contends Assistant U.S. Attorney Jill Koster's statement "The government does not believe that they have been truthful," regarding Steve and Bob Buha's grand jury testimony was enough to scare them off from testifying at trial. The brothers owned Great Lakes Peterbilt. Snyder was convicted of taking a $13,000 bribe from the brothers in exchange for steering more than $1 million in garbage truck bids to them. "When a friend tells you that you are untruthful, you blush. If a spouse says it, you prepare an apology. But when a federal prosecutor says, 'I believe your story is untruthful,' it has an inescapable import. That statement is no different than saying, 'If you repeat the story I heard you say before, you are committing a felony punishable by up to five years in prison,'" reads Snyder's latest reply to the government's response in his motions for the judge to either set aside the jury's verdict and acquit him or grant him a new trial.

CITIES: EVANSVILLE TO STUDY GOLF COURSES - The city is hiring a consulting firm to help determine the future of its municipal golf courses (Evansville Courier & Press). City Council approved $47,000 from local income tax funds Monday for a six-month study to be conducted by National Golf Foundation Consulting. City Controller Russ Lloyd Jr. said the study would help the city create a plan for the courses to break even financially or make a profit. There are four municipal public golf courses fringing around the city's core residential area: Fendrich, Helfrich, McDonald and Wesselman Par 3. The courses are all currently operating at a deficit. "We're looking at what we can do to rectify the deficit," said Brian Holtz, executive director of the Evansville Parks Department. "We're also looking into the future and how golf will look in the community."

CITIES: INDY COUNCIL PASSES BLOCK 20 PROJECT - The City-County Council's Metropolitan and Economic Development committee on Monday unanimously approved a request for up to $7 million in developer-backed bonds for a pair of downtown real estate projects near the Athenaeum in the Mass Ave Arts District (Shuey, IBJ). The approval sends the two-site Block 20 project to the full City-County Council, which is expected to consider the project at its May 13 meeting. Block 20 consists of developments on two sites: a four-story mixed-use complex and parking garage directly east of the historic Athenaeum building and an office and retail redevelopment about two blocks away, at 602 N. Park Ave. The project at 428 N. East St., next to the Athenaeum, would include at least 76 apartment units along with 6,000 square feet of retail space and a 255-space parking garage. A large portion of the retail space is expected to house a restaurant. The apartments would range from 450 square feet to 1,200 square feet each with rents from about $1,000 to $2,500 per month.

CITIES: HOGSETT TO DECLARE NEW DEVELOPMENT ZONE - Indianapolis Mayor Joe Hogsett will join neighborhood leaders to announce the designation of the Brookville Road and Irvington Plaza Economic Development Area on April 23. The Department of Metropolitan Development staff takes the lead on these efforts to strategically stimulate economic development in areas of the city that have signs of potential (Howey Politics Indiana). The designation, which is defined in Indiana code, is designed to attract or retain permanent jobs, increase the property tax base, and improve the economic health of the area. Designation of Economic Development Areas increases the chances of obtaining state and federal grants, tax credits, and potentially Opportunity Zone investments. Prior Economic Development Area designations include North Midtown, the airport, and the West Washington Street Corridor. These designations require approvals by the Metropolitan Development Commission, Metropolitan Economic Development Committee, and the City-County Council. The proposal goes before Metropolitan Economic Development Committee for approval tonight.

COUNTIES: ST. JOE LIBRARY HIRES CONTRACTOR - One of Chicago's oldest construction contractors has been selected as construction manager for the St. Joseph County Public Library's $36 million to $38 million renovation and expansion of the downtown library (South Bend Tribune). The St. Joseph County Public Library board on Monday selected Bulley & Andrews LLC for the Main Library project. Debra Futa, executive director, told board members Bulley & Andrews was the low bidder and the top of four finalists who bid on the project. Bulley & Andrews bid $1,585,000 for the job of construction manager. The bid was lower than the three other finalists who submitted bids: Core Construction of South Bend, Miller-Davis Co. of Kalamazoo and Panzica 2 of South Bend.

Republicans tout 'historic' budget

GOP says teachers will get pay hike; gaming deal reached

By JACOB CURRY

INDIANAPOLIS – The 2019 General Assembly session ended Wednesday after nearly four full months of negotiation, success, and disappointment, culminating with what Republicans described as a "historic" budget. Coming into the year, there were some clear, pressing challenges that would top priority lists at the Statehouse: Passing a working $34.6 billion biennial budget, addressing the growing crises in Indiana education, getting Indiana off the list of states without a meaningful hate crime statute, and pushing through bills on gaming and the CIB.

The General Assembly successfully fulfilled its constitutionally mandated duty for this session, passing a biennial budget late Wednesday that came out of conference committee had most of the key numbers – K-12 tuition support increases, DCS funding, and several grants – at compromise levels in between their House and Senate. That clear compromise was an unusually smooth process of working out the two chambers' differences, though as always there were plenty of hard choices involved as the last item up for vote in both the House and Senate

A yield of incompetence

By BRIAN A. HOWEY

NASHVILLE, Ind. – Last winter over a plate of Cajun cookin' at Yat's, I compared notes with U.S. Rep. Jim Banks on the Russia collusion investigation by Special Counsel Robert Mueller. My expressed hope was the report would either absolve President Trump of conspiring with the Kremlin with compelling certainty, or that it would be so damning that his political support within the Republican Party would collapse and we would have President Mike Pence.

That was the scenario in July 1974 with President Nixon. Democrats were heading toward impeachment, but Republicans held until the U.S. Supreme Court ordered the tapes released, which revealed Nixon as a conspiring cover-up liar. It was Republicans Hugh Scott, John Rhodes and Barry Goldwater who delivered the news to Nixon that the gig was up.

The Mueller report landed in the middle of my two best/worst case scenarios. It absolved President Trump and his campaign of conspiring with the Russians. On the obstruction scenario, Mueller punted, sending the matter to Congress, which is ill-equipped to referee this question. By the time it would even get into trial mode, the 2020 election will be at hand and it will be the American people who render the ultimate verdict on President Trump's campaign

Most Republicans snapped quickly into line, professing the lack of collusion. As Banks observed on Twitter, "No collusion. No obstruction. Let's get back to work, @SpeakerPelosi."

In a more lengthy statement, Banks bought into the "witch hunt" Trump had oft described, but noted something Trump has yet to acknowledge in the post-Mueller world, which is that the Russians successfully assaulted the 2016 U.S. presidential election. "Mueller's report proved what the president has said all along, but every American should be more outraged than ever before by findings in the Mueller report that show without a shadow of a doubt Russia sought to meddle and disrupt our election process," Banks said. "President Trump has been exonerated from the witch hunt over collusion, but now I hope he will swiftly turn his sights to show leadership in holding Russia accountable for attacking our American institutions. Congress as well should shift away from bogus investigations and instead turn toward passing tough measures to address Russia's activities and taking action to make the lives of every Hoosier and American better."

Not all Hoosier Republicans took the default "witch hunt" stance. U.S. Sen. Todd Young's comms director, Amy Grappone, said in a statement to HPI, "Sen. Young is approaching this matter with utmost seriousness and is still digesting details of the voluminous report. He looks forward to discussing it with colleagues on both sides of the aisle when the Senate is back in session and will make further comments as appropriate." Young told John Krull of the Statehouse File last week, "There's absolutely no question among Republicans or Democrats, certainly with whom I dialogue, that Russia interfered with our election — that they engaged in a disinformation campaign
